GOD SPAKE ALL THESE WORDS.

I.

THOU shalt have no other gods before me.

II.

THOU shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in Heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth: Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them: for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me; and shewing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments.

III.

THOU shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain: for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

IV.

REMEMBER the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work: But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: In it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: Wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath-day, and hallowed it.

V.

HONOUR thy father and thy mother; that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.

VI.

THOU shalt not kill.

VII.

THOU shalt not commit adultery.

VIII.

THOU shalt not steal.

IX.

THOU shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor

X.

THOU shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that is thy neighbor's.

THOU

Shalt love the LORD thy GOD with all thy Heart and with all thy Soul and with all thy Mind. This is the first and great Commandment. And the second is like unto it THOU shalt love thy Neighbour as thyself. On these two Commandments hang all the Law and the Prophets.

PREFACE.

The Holy Scriptures, for their various and matchless excellences, have won the admiration and veneration of the wise and good of all ages and countries that have been blessed with their light.

Study the Holy Scriptures. Therein are contained the words of eternal life. They have God for their author, salvation for their end, and truth without any mixture of error for their matter.

The Scriptures contain, independently of a divine origin, more true sublimity, more exquisite beauty, purer morality, more important history, and finer strains both of poetry and eloquence, than could be collected within the same compass from all other books that were ever composed in any age or in any idiom.

The two parts of which the Scriptures consist (the Old and New Testaments) are connected by a chain of compositions (the prophecies) which bear no resemblance in form or style to any that can be produced from the stores of Grecian, Indian, Persian, or even Arabian, learning. The antiquity of these compositions no man doubts, and the unstrained application of them to events long subsequent to their publication is a solid ground of belief that they were genuine predictions, and consequently inspired.

The intimate connection between the Old and New Testament is thus strongly marked. The writings of the Old and New Testaments are to be considered as one work, written, it is true, by different persons at different times, but dictated by the same spirit. They relate the uniform conduct of God to his people, and the divine proceedings under the new dispensation bear a strict conformity to those under the Old; they are parallel, and therefore reference is frequently made to rites, ceremonies, circumstances and events that are exactly similar in both, and may be justly styled "Books that are medicines of the soul, not to read which is the cause of all evils."

But the Holy Scriptures, notwithstanding their superlative excellence, are in many places "hard to be understood and "hard to be interpreted," which the ignorant and unstable of all ages and countries are apt "to wrest to their own destruction," "deceived themselves, and deceiving others." 2 Pet. 3 : 16; Heb. 5 : 11; 2 Tim. 3 : 13. "Ye do err," said our blessed Lord, "not knowing THE SCRIPTURES." Matt. 22 : 29.

The real difficulties of Scripture originate from sundry causes:

1. The ancient languages in which they were written—the Hebrew of the Old Testament and Greek of the New—have long, very long since, ceased to be spoken. But a living language abounds in niceties of construction which expire with it and are irretrievably lost. Like the life-blood, they cannot be transfused into another language.

2. The Oriental phraseology, imagery, manners and customs differ widely from those of our age and country, and are apt to be misunderstood.

3. The miscellaneous form of the sacred books, detached from each other, without apparent connection or continuity, and seldom with any express reference to each other.

4. The history, laws and customs of God's chosen people, the Jews, and of the several heathen or foreign nations with whom they were connected by alliance or by vassalage, are all blended together, and intermingled with the prophecies relative to both. These prophecies are often obscure and enigmatical, and this was wisely ordered, lest a clearer exposure might prove detrimental to the prophets themselves, and also to the people for whose information they were intended.

5. Times and seasons are not critically marked in Scripture by reference to any fixed or established era or standard of computation, but by a vague and indefinite measure of time, generations, reigns, priesthoods, etc.

6. The want of a correct standard text.—The Hebrew and Greek Scriptures do not accurately agree or critically correspond in all points, and the variations create no small embarrassment to the translator, the commentator, the chronologer and the historian in selecting the best or the most unexceptionable readings throughout.

7. The imperfections of all the received translations.—The authorized translation, under the auspices of King James I., published in 1611, is unquestionably superior to all its predecessors. It is not sufficiently close and uniform in rendering the originals; and though a good popular translation, in the main, of admirable plainness and simplicity of style, yet it is not calculated to convey precise and critical information in difficult and mysterious passages, of the prophecies especially and poetical parts of Scripture; even in the Gospels, those perfect models of historical narration, mistranslations occur, originating from ignorance of or inattention to the peculiar force of the Greek article.

1. Scripture is its own best interpreter. The same incidents, the same sentiments and the same expressions and phrases are frequently repeated in the same or in different books. What is obscure and unintelligible, perhaps, in one passage, is frequently cleared up satisfactorily either by the context or by parallel passages in the same or in different books. The New Testament especially is the noblest comment on the Old, of "the spirit" always, of "the letter" often. 2 Cor. 3 : 6.

2. The collations of Hebrew manuscripts and the ancient versions, the Greek of the Septuagint, the Latin Vulgate, the Chaldee Targums or Paraphrases, the Syriac Version, the Arabic, etc., all furnish copious sources of correction and emendation of the received texts. The most valuable sources, indeed, are the ancient versions, framed from manuscripts of a much earlier date than any of the present, few if any of which can boast an antiquity of more than fifteen hundred years.

3. In addition to the Chaldee Targums, we find that the Jewish historians and antiquaries Philo and Josephus, and the Rabbinical comments, often furnish valuable explanations of the languages, rites and customs and of the literal and figurative interpretation of Holy Writ.

4. Within the last three centuries, and especially in the course of the present, the learned languages have been more skillfully studied, and large accessions have been made to the general fund of sacred literature in all its various branches by the researches of the learned and the discoveries of travelers in all quarters of the globe. During the past six years nearly five thousand square miles of Palestine have been surveyed, accurate maps of the country made, and the sites of three-fourths of the cities and towns mentioned in the Bible determined in accordance with scriptural readings. Photographs have been taken of ancient cities, ruins, mountains and places of great interest to the Christian world.

"Many run to and fro" in quest of information with restless curiosity, and "labor unabashed" to "increase knowledge" in general and "scriptural knowledge" in particular. And we are assured by the unerring word of prophecy that "it shall be increased until the time of the end," or full disclosure of the PROVIDENTIAL HISTORY of mankind.

The paramount excellence, therefore, the importance and the difficulty, of the ORIGINAL SCRIPTURES, have given birth to a greater number and variety of helps, expositions, commentaries, concordances, etc., than any other books that ever were written in any age or in any language. But amidst all the endless variety of scriptural helps we may search in vain for a history of the Bible which shall be plain and clear even to the unlearned, and yet concise, correct and critical; competent to arrange all the scattered events in a regular and lucid chronological and geographical order; to trace the connection between the Old and the New Testaments throughout; competent to expound the mysteries and precepts of both intelligibly, rationally and faithfully; evangelical, but not sectarian; without adding to or diminishing from the Word of God; to unfold and interpret the whole grand and comprehensive scheme of "the prophetic argument," from Genesis to Revelations, all admirably linked and closely connected together, subsisting in THE DIVINE MIND "before the foundation of the world" (1 Pet. 1 : 20; Rev. 13 : 8), and gradually revealed to mankind at sundry times and divers modes and by degrees during the patriarchal, Mosaical and Christian dispensations as they were able to bear it (Heb. 1 : 1); competent to solve real difficulties and reconcile apparent dissonances, resulting from the obscurity of the original text, or from inaccurate translations; to silence skeptics, infidels and scoffers by exposing the weakness and inconclusiveness of their objections and cavils; to defend the institutions of the primitive Church against schismatics and levelers; and in fine to copy as closely as possible the brevity and conciseness, yet simplicity and plainness, of gospel style; such a history of the Bible is altogether a desideratum in the annals of sacred literature. It has been our aim to present such concise scriptural helps and illustrations to the study of the Holy Bible as will meet the wants of biblical students, teachers and Christian readers of all denominations.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Bible is a great preacher. It teaches more infallibly and quite as persuasively as human lips. We need not undervalue the ordinance of human preaching, yet in many a case the Bible has reached a heart which human words never would have reached, and there are many souls which have been left alone to the written Word of God for the food of their highest and dearest life. The emigrant, bending over his solitary Bible; the soldier or sailor on his nightly watch; many whom business or necessity has taken away from the abodes of men, where there is no church, no ordinance, and the preacher's voice is never heard; the sick man in the solitude of his chamber, to whom the privileges of the sanctuary are denied—they all draw from their Bible their soul's daily food, and all their spiritual strength.

THIS magnificent Bible is printed from large face pica type. The marginal references are believed to be in larger and more readable type than any other Bible published in this country, and is specially adapted for family devotion, and will supply the wants of Bible readers who could not be suited in this particular other than with the English Editions.

THE Text has been very carefully read and compared with the Oxford and American Bible Society's Standard, and is believed to be correct in every particular. The Psalms in metre are used by special permission. The plates from which this Bible is printed are Electrotyped, or copper-faced letter; making them much more durable than the ordinary Stereotype plates.

A COMPLETE PRONOUNCING BIBLE DICTIONARY, profusely illustrated, is also included, together with a History of the Books of the Bible, with numerous engravings, and comprehensive Helps to the Study of the Bible. The introduction of a series of full page engravings illustrative of remarkable scriptural events, embracing in all several hundred representations of Jewish and Egyptian Antiquities, Biblical Scenery, Manners and Customs of the Ancients, Natural History, &c. &c., forming a valuable and comprehensive series of pictorial illustrations of the text, and enhancing the general appearance and artistic claims of this over all other Family Bibles.

THE growing interest manifested in Biblical research, and in Christian labors among all religious denominations in the present age, is unprecedented. In their labors to Christianize the world, with the assistance of GOD'S HOLY WORD, good men are untiring. The recent explorations in and around the Holy Lands have been prosecuted with energy and zeal, exhuming undeniable proofs of the divine origin of the Holy Scriptures, and affording material for illustrating by fine engravings valuable information with regard to the early Christians, which a quarter of a century since was unknown; and it has been the aim of the Publishers of this edition to avail themselves of these researches, especially of the explorations made in Palestine.

IN perusing this sacred book, may we not fervently repeat the words of the Psalmist: "Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes; and I shall keep it unto the end." "The entrance of thy word giveth light; it giveth understanding to the simple; order my steps in thy word."

AN INTRODUCTORY HISTORY

OF

THE MANUSCRIPT AND EARLY PRINTED EDITIONS

OF THE HOLY BIBLE.

THE Bible is the word of God. In it he makes known to man his character and will. It is given by inspiration of the Holy Spirit, and is profitable to all, teaching men what to believe, showing them in what they are wrong, instructing them in what is right. Although written by men, God directed them what to write and how to write, that as a rule of faith and guide to practice it might be perfect. A knowledge of this book is more to be desired than fine gold, for in understanding, believing and obeying it there is great reward, both here and hereafter.

Every person who can should have a Bible and read it daily, praying God to teach him rightly to understand it, to believe and obey its precepts. It will be life to his soul and wisdom to salvation.

In the study of this book of God it becomes us to inquire what is the thought, idea or truth which the writer or speaker desires to place before us. It is not what we can force by our ingenuity or our fancy from his words, but what was "the mind of the Spirit" who inspired his pen. Some portions of the sacred word admit of more than one sense or one application; but it may be taken as a general principle that the Spirit of God had some leading truth to make known in every passage, and for this truth we should search as for hidden treasure, and when we have found it esteem it as a pearl of great price.

It is admitted that the New Testament contains richer and fuller communications of the divine plan of redemption than all prior revelations; therefore the Old Testament must be read in the light of the New, for the Old is prophetic of the New, and the New is but the fulfillment of the Old. By this plan we may "realize all the deep harmonies between the earlier and the later dispensation. In the light shed by prophecy, the two covenants seem no longer disunited. The Old Testament, as it 'telleth of Christ that should come,' blends insensibly into the New, that 'telleth of Christ that is come,' and both are parts of one divine whole."

The general diffusion of the Bible is the most effectual way to civilize and humanize mankind; to purify and exalt the general system of public morals; to give efficacy to the just precepts of international and municipal law; to enforce the observance of prudence, temperance, justice and fortitude; and to improve all the relations of social and domestic life.

It is a grand subject for meditation to behold in our modern societies the love of the holy doctrines of the gospel advancing with the progress of philosophy and of political institutions, so that the nations which are most advanced in civilization and in liberty are also the most religious, the most truly Christian.

A despotic government may subsist, and perhaps prosperously too, without the Bible; a republic cannot. A republic cannot, like a despotic government, be sustained by force. She cannot, like the despot, tame her children into heartless submission by the bayonets of a mercenary army; her bayonets are reserved for the invading foe.

Human laws labor under many imperfections. They extend to external actions only. They cannot reach that catalogue of secret crimes which are committed without any witness save the all-seeing eye of that Being whose presence is everywhere, and whose laws reach the hidden recesses of vice and carry their sanctions to the thoughts and intents of the heart. In this view, the doctrines of the Bible supply all the deficiencies of human laws and lend an essential aid to the administration of justice.

Not only does the Bible inculcate, with sanctions of highest import, a system of the purest morality, but in the person and character of our blessed Saviour it exhibits a tangible illustration of that system. In him we have set before us—what, till the publication of the gospel, the world had never seen—a model of feeling and action adapted to all times, places and circumstances, and combining so much of wisdom, benevolence and holiness that none can fathom its sublimity, and yet presented in a form so simple that even a child may be made to understand and taught to love it.

The Holy Scriptures are designed to satisfy the wants of the soul by showing how man may be reconciled to God, and so renew his spiritual life; and they furnish the means for the culture of an intellectual and moral nature in harmony with the new state.

One of the strongest desires of our nature is to know ourselves and our future destiny. In all the ages of which there are any records we find that thoughtful souls have felt this desire, and the only true source of knowledge and consolation that has been written and preserved for our use is that which has come down to us in the care of the Hebrew race.

In this book we find an idea of the one God and of the divine purposes in the work of creation and providence; of the fall and redemption of man. Viewed as a whole, the several parts of the work, from Genesis to Revelation, depend upon and sustain each other, because they are all necessary to the completeness of the design.

Divine wisdom must always select a proper instrument to do its required work; and we may therefore believe that the proof of the divine origin of the Scriptures does not depend on the character or fitness of any of the writers.

There is a peculiar superhuman spirit appearing in the truths and precepts of this priceless record—in the purity and justice of its moral distinctions; its moral law, which is the only correct standard in morals; its account of the divine solicitude for the sins of men and the means used to promote upright conduct; its clear ideas of the mercy of the divine Father; its wonderful analysis of the character of man, his state of sin and the change necessary to salvation; the peculiar character of redeemed souls; the certain punishment of wrong-doing; its divine promises and their influence on the heart; its consolations in trials and sufferings; and its preparation for death. All of these truths and statements, which are above and beyond the reach of unaided human reason, combine to stamp its divine origin and compel our reverence.

The books composing the Holy Bible were written in different ages, from Moses to John (B. C. 1650 to A. D. 90—a period of more than seventeen hundred years), by men who were specially prepared for the work by direct inspiration from the divine Source of all knowledge.

The several books bear a uniform and unvarying testimony in support of each other by quotations, by the express recognitions of the prophets, evangelists, apostles and the Lord Jesus himself, thus convincing us that in all ages, from that of Moses to the present, the best men have believed in its Divine origin, and have acted accordingly.

The Hebrews were exceedingly careful about these writings, as an examination of their very complete system for their preservation and interpretation will show.

There are references to the writing and reading of the law in the Old Testament, in every age, beginning with Moses. It was read for instruction publicly in the desert of Sinai, at Kadesh, at the crossing of Jordan, at the great assembly on Ebal and Gerizim, at Shiloh, at the dedication of Solomon's temple, the reform under Hezekiah, and more particularly in the case of the collection of the whole Old Testament by Ezra, who arranged it in the order that is still preserved.

This settlement of the canon in its present form is dated from the close of the captivity in Babylon.

While the Hebrews were in Assyria, captives, their language fell into disuse, being neglected for the Chaldæan in popular use. This made it necessary to appoint teachers of the law of Moses, whose duties were to preserve a knowledge of the Scriptures and the language in which they were written. Ezra was the chief of this class in the later years of the captivity. He returned to Jerusalem from Babylon with the exiles, where he completed his great work of compiling, or rather arranging in chronological order, the sacred books, for which service he was called the second Moses, and was dignified with the title of scribe (in Hebrew sofer).

When Nehemiah formed the Great Synagogue, the Scribes were recognized as a distinct order in the nation, and seats were given to a number of them in the general assembly among the ruling elders.

The work of this body of learned and devout men was: 1. To make the only copies of the sacred Scriptures that were allowed to be used; 2. To count the letters in every book, and the number of times that each letter occurred in each book and in all the books; 3. To read the "law" in public on the Sabbath and festival days; 4. To lecture to their disciples (students of the law) on the meaning of the Holy Scriptures; 5. To arrange the liturgy for public worship; 6. To form the traditions; 7. To protect the law by by-laws which directed how to copy, keep and interpret the holy writings; 8. To correct any accidental errors in the original text; and 9. To add to the sacred canon the books of the prophets and of the poets.

The writings were not added to the text of the Scriptures, but were put on the margin, near the text which they explained or corrected.

Their rules may be judged of from two specimens: 1. Except every one do keep them (the Scriptures) whole and undefiled, without doubt he shall perish everlastingly; and 2. Except a man believe them faithfully, he cannot be saved.

This order of learned and devout men continued as a distinct class from B.C. 458, the end of the captivity in Babylon, to B.C. 300, when the order became extinct at the death of Simon the Just.

A parallel historical witness is found in the sect of the Samaritans, who separated from the Jews after the captivity (being composed of Jews and Chaldæans), built a temple on Mount Gerizim, made a new creed, and copied the Pentateuch only out of the law for their own use. The mutual hatred between the Samaritans and Jews put it out of the case to suppose that there could have been a collusion between them to add to or change a single word or letter of the sacred writings, and both parties strove to convince the world that their particular copy of the law was the more ancient. They differ but in a very few particulars, which may all be accounted for chiefly as errors of the copyists.

Succeeding the Scribes were certain teachers of the law who were called Sages, Wise Ones, Elders and Doctors (Tanaim). Their duties were almost identical with those of the Scribes whom they succeeded.

So from age to age, as society changed or new circumstances arose, the interpretations of the Scriptures were changed to suit the new state of things. The writings of the Scribes were explained by the Doctors, and these by later teachers, when a vast mass of writings accumulated, which formed what is called the Talmud. The Talmud is composed of two parts, the Mishna, which is the oral law, and the Gemara, the traditions.

The Doctors were very important and influential in the nation. It was among them that Joseph and Mary found the child Jesus explaining the simple truth of the Scripture in contrast to the misty and almost blind superstition of the commentators. The order of the Doctors continued as a distinct body from B.C. 200 to A.D. 220.

The Pharisees were a sect of patriotic and devout Jews, whose idea was to make Israel a nation of priests in fact, as well as it was in their law as written by Moses, and it was the duty of each member to strive, by religious study and preparation for the office of a Rabbi (teacher), to become a priest in spirit, although not of the house of Levi, believing that "God had given to all men alike the kingdoms, priesthood and holiness." They assumed the duty of special guardians of the Holy Scriptures.

The Essenes were simply intensified Pharisees, adding to their duties and professions the self-denial of a life of celibacy, and their example and influence were most beneficial to the nation. They also were jealous custodians of the Scriptures.

These various orders of learned men cared for the Holy Books during a period of more than seven hundred years, ending about three hundred years after Christ. Since that time the Jews have continued the care of their sacred writings with the same jealous watchfulness, believing that the Messiah has not yet appeared, and that his coming may possibly be near at hand.

These writings so carefully preserved were in the Hebrew tongue, and it is interesting to know how they have been translated into other languages, and especially into English.

The first translation from the Hebrew into any other language, that is recorded, was in Chaldee, which was made at the time the law was read to the king of Persia. The original of this has been lost. The oldest which has been preserved is that which was made at Alexandria in Egypt, B.C. 260, and is called the Septuagint, from a supposition that it was made by seventy translators.

The next in order of time was made by Onkelos, in Chaldee, A.D. 150. The same author, whose name in Greek was Aquila, also translated the Old Testament into Greek, A.D. 160. This work was evidently intended to correct the errors of the Septuagint, which was made by several persons, some of whom were not equal to the task; besides, the state of public opinion at the time permitted the translators to give the general sense of the original instead of following the literal text.

The Septuagint was also corrected by Theodotion, and about the same time (second century) Symmachus made a version in Greek for the use of the Ebionites, which is correct, pure and elegant in style and diction.

In the time of the Apostles there were many copies of the Gospels for the use of the Church in the different cities, in the languages of the localities—Greek, Latin, Hebrew, Syriac, Coptic, Ethiopic and Arabic—but the authors of these works are now unknown.

The Ethiopic version was written in the sacred Jeez, the dialect of Axum, in the fourth century. The Coptic and Memphitic versions were made soon after, and the Coptic is now in use in Egypt.

The Syriac (called Peshito, single, literal) was made from the Hebrew and Greek about A. D. 200, and had become almost obsolete as early as the fourth century. The work included the whole Bible, with the Apocrypha.

Paul of Tela made a version of the Septuagint at Alexandria, A. D. 617, which was extremely literal, every Greek word being rendered by one in Syriac.

The Thebaic version in the common dialect of Egypt was made in the third century, but soon fell into disuse, especially among scholars, who preferred the more elegant Coptic.

The Gothic version was made about A. D. 383, by Ulphilas. There is a copy of the original edition in Upsal, Sweden.

The great works of Origen consumed twenty-eight years of his life, and consist of homilies and commentaries, written with every evidence of scholarship and untiring research, extended into all Bible lands. He first arranged four versions on the same page for comparison of the text of each with the others as to correctness, as follows:

1. Septuagint; 2. Aquila; 3. Symmachus; 4. Theodotion. Afterward he added two others, making what is known as the Hexapla (six parts). Some portions of the Gospels were in eight versions. The whole work comprised nearly fifty volumes folio, of which only a very few pages are in existence now.

The Veneto Greek version is dated A. D. 875.

Tertullian (born A. D. 160, died 245) describes a Latin version of the Gospels which had influence to a great degree on the popular speech, elevating it to a high standard of excellence.

It is only possible that the Old Testament had been translated into Latin before the crucifixion, but there is no record of such a fact, although indirect evidence may be seen in the similarity of style of the Old and New Testaments as they are found in the version which was used before Jerome's was made.

The extensive influence of the Scriptures in the early ages may be gathered from the remark, so often repeated, that the whole Bible could be gathered from the writings of the early centuries, so copious were their quotations.

The great scholar who above all others succeeded in making the most valuable version of the Scriptures in the Latin tongue was Jerome, whose name as written in Latin was Eusebius Hieronymus Sophronius (born A. D. 329 at Stridon, died 420 at Bethlehem). He was a student and a traveler from his youth, and a patient gatherer of knowledge serviceable in his great undertaking in all parts of the Christian world. His version was for more than eight centuries the great bulwark of the Church in the west of Europe, as the Septuagint was of the Church in the east. His work has not come down to us entire, for the present Vulgate (Douay Bible) has in it the work of many hands.

The work of translating the Bible in Germany was begun about the year A. D. 860, in a poetical narrative of the Life of Jesus, by Otfried of Weissenburg. Psalms, Canticles and Genesis were also done in metre soon after. A poetical version of the historical books appeared in the thirteenth century.

Luther's version was made by the assistance of Melancthon, Aurogallus, Bugenhagen, Jonas and Creuziger, although the greater part of the work was done by himself, from A. D. 1522 to 1534. It is a monument to the great learning and ability of the leader of the Reformers.

There are also versions in Low German (1533), Danish (1550), Swedish (1526), Icelandic (1540), by Thorlak Skuleson (1644), Dutch (1648) and Pomeranian (1588).

The Reformed Church published one in 1579, and another for the Swiss in 1665, and the Synod of Dort one in 1637.

The Vulgate was translated into German at Leipsic in 1527.

Christopher Sower printed a Bible in German at Germantown, Pa., in 1743, which was the first Bible printed in America next to Eliot's Bible in the Indian language.

The first recorded translation of the Bible in the English tongue was the work of Caedmon, who rendered the whole Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, into alliterative verse, A. D. 680. Soon after this Aldhelm, Bishop of Sherborne, rendered the Psalms into verse. Bede translated John's Gospel (A. D. 735), and Alfred the Great (died A. D. 901) wrote or published the four chapters of laws from the book of Exodus, because he desired that "all free-born youth of his kingdom should be able to read the English Scriptures" (as well as be educated generally). He had a book of extracts from the Psalms and other books made for use in his family.

The oldest version of the Anglo-Saxon Gospels is called the Durham Book, of which a specimen copy is now extant, dated A. D. 688.

The Normans were no friends to education in the English tongue, and did not translate the Scriptures, but tried to educate the people in religious matters by the use of miracle-plays and pictures. Only a few works on the Scriptures are dated in their age, of which we have still remaining three versions of the Gospel, and the Ormulum, a metrical paraphrase of the Gospel history in alliterative verse.

In the thirteenth century there occurred a religious revival, when the Bible was translated into Norman-French.

The reformer Wycliffe (born 1324, died 1384) rendered into English almost the entire Bible, "So that for Cristen men may some dele know the text of the Gospel, with the comyn sentence of olde holie doctores." This great work was an important element in opening the way for the Reformation.

Tindale devoted his whole life and his great learning and eminent abilities that "a boy that driveth a plough" might know more of the Scriptures than the great body of the clergy then knew (A. D. 1520). He said that "The properties of the Hebrew tongue agree a thousand times more with English than with the Latin." This work of translating the Bible into English was bitterly opposed by the Roman Catholics as long as they had any power in England or influence in Europe, and their wishes were seconded by King Henry VIII., who threw Tindale into prison, when, after several years of confinement, he was condemned to death by the Emperor Charles V., and was put to death at Villefort, near Brussels, in 1536, and his body burned to ashes.

Tindale's idea was that every part of the Scriptures had one sense only, and he kept that always in view, translating from the original Hebrew and Greek. Even his enemies have admitted that his work was excellent. Its language is pure, appropriate and clear to the understanding. Evidences of great learning and research give it a pre-eminent position among the enduring monuments of human intelligence and skill. Tindale has been justly honored with the title of the father of our English authorized version.

It is mournfully interesting to record in memory of his learned and faithful assistants that one of them, John Fry, was burned at the stake for heresy, on account of his share in this work of translation, at Smithfield, London, in 1552, and another, the Monk William Roye, was put to death for the same offence, in Portugal, in 1553, while a third, Miles Coverdale, a priest, barely escaped death, and even while in prison, for this same matter, edited an edition of the Bible in 1535, which was dedicated to the king of England. In his preface Coverdale declared that he "had not changed so much as one word for the benefit of any sect, but had with a clear conscience purely and faithfully translated out of the foregoing interpreters, having only before his eyes the manifest truth of Scriptures." This was the first edition of the entire Bible that was printed in English, and was also the first authorized version. It was published in six volumes, folio, with marginal notes and cross-references, and illustrated with many wood-cuts.

Lord Cromwell, secretary to Henry the Eighth, vicar-general in church affairs, favored this edition, and by the king's authority published a decree, commanding "every person or proprietary of every parish church within the realm should, before the first of August, 1536, provide a book of the whole Bible, both in Latin and English, and lay it in the choir, for every man that would to look and read therein."

Tindale's version was edited by the martyr John Rogers, who prudently assumed the name of Thomas Matthewe as a disguise, because of the enemies of Tindale, whose intimate friend he was. This edition followed Tindale's version as far as the end of Chronicles, and that of Rogers for the rest. Many wood-cuts embellished both the Old and New Testaments, the book of Revelation having one to each chapter.

Cranmer presented a copy of it to Lord Cromwell in 1538, asking his intercession with the king for the royal authority, which was granted. A royal proclamation also informed the people that it had pleased the king to permit and command that the Bible, printed in the English language, should be used for instruction in every parish church.

The Roman party still opposed the printing of the Bible in English with all their might, and especially its free distribution and use by the people, but the friends of the Reformation were encouraged, and the people all over England attended in crowds to hear the book read.

Henry the Eighth sanctioned an edition, and asked permission from Francis the First to print it in France, and this having been granted, the work was forwarded under the care of Coverdale, until the enterprize was defeated by the Inquisition, and the whole edition of 2500 copies was ordered to be burned. A few copies were saved, with the type and presses, and the work was completed in England in 1539.

Henry the Eighth's supremacy and freedom in church matters from the Pope of Rome was settled by Parliament in 1534, the year in which the Church of England was established, and from that time the work of translating and printing the Bible in the English language has been a powerful aid in the work of the great Reformation.

Although the Roman party, led by Gardner, Bishop of Winchester, opposed the measure, both in public and in private, yet the king favored it, on account partly of the great influence of Queen Ann Bullen. An edition was printed by Whitchurch and Grafton, with a frontispiece of great beauty, designed by Holbein.

A corrected reprint of Matthewe's Bible was issued by Richard Taverner in 1539, under the patronage of Lord Cromwell, to whom the king granted the exclusive privilege of printing English Bibles for five years.

After the death of Lord Cromwell, in 1540, the Roman party gained such strength that Parliament was influenced to pass a law abolishing Tindale's version, because it was said to have been "full of errors and to produce many evils, heresies and mischiefs, destructive of the harmony and peace of the realm." Under this act Grafton was imprisoned, fined a large sum, and released only under a heavy bond that he would not print or sell English Bibles.

The king's proclamation also prohibited the having or reading Wycliffe's, Tindale's and Coverdale's versions.

Under Edward the Sixth the restrictions against having and reading the Bible in English were removed, and it was ordered that parsons and others in the church service should have the Scriptures in both Latin and English, with the paraphrase of Erasmus in English, and also that the mass should be said in English.

The Liturgy was completed and established by act of Parliament in 1549.

Romanism was restored to power by law under Queen Mary in 1553, John Rogers was burned at the stake, and many Protestant scholars and divines were driven into exile, when they went to Geneva, where they entered into the spirit of translation with an increased vigor in 1559.

An edition of the whole Bible (omitting the Apocrypha) was printed at Geneva in 1560, in English, which is called the Geneva Bible, and it held the popular favor for sixty years, only giving way to the authorized version of King James. A Bible Dictionary was added to it in 1578. A curious feature in it was an attempt to give the Hebrew names of persons in English letters, as Heva for Eve, Izhak for Isaac, Jeremidhu for Jeremiah.

Matthew Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury, published the "Bishop's Bible" in 1568, in one volume folio, in which there were a number of wood-cuts, maps and copper-plate engravings of interesting places and things, both in the Old and the New Testaments, and the Apocrypha.

At length, in 1582, the Roman Church yielded to the popular demand for the Scriptures in English, and issued the Douay (doo-à) version, translated from the Latin Vulgate, and not from the original Greek. The historian Fuller said that "the Douay Bible was a translation which needed to be translated," and also that "its editors by all means labored to suppress the light of truth under one pretence or another."

The Old Testament was translated by William Allen (Cardinal), Gregory Martin and Richard Briston, and published at Douay in 1610, the New Testament having been published at Rheims in 1582. The notes were supplied by Thomas Worthington, and the whole has continued until the present time in favor and authority in the Roman Church as its standard version in English.

King James the First, in 1604, on the motion in Hampton Court Conference having been made by Dr. John Reynolds, a Puritan, selected fifty-four scholars and divines, of whom forty-seven served in making a new translation.

There were among them men of various parties, as of the High Church, Andrews, Barlow, Montague, Overal and Saravia; of the Puritans, Reynolds, Chaderton and Livlie; and of those who were of no church party, Henry Saville and John Boyse. These men were all distinguished for piety and eminent learning in Oriental languages.

There were no records of the meetings of the translators preserved, so far as known, but their rules for proceeding with their work were published.

When each company had met together to examine and agree upon the readings of the text, "one of the party would read the translation, while the others held in their hands some version of the Scriptures in either one of the learned tongues, and if any error or fault was noticed they spoke; if not, he read on." The work was completed in three years. The introduction and argument of each book were written by Thomas Bilson, Bishop of Winchester, and Dr. Smith. The preface was the work of Dr. Miles Smith, who was afterward Bishop of Gloucester. In this he says, "We, building upon their foundation that went before us, and being holpen by their labors, do endeavor to make better that which they left so good, no man, we are sure, hath cause to mistake us. They, we persuade ourselves, if they were alive, would thank us." And he also said that "it was their aim, not to make a new translation, nor yet to make of a bad one a good one, but to make a good one better, or out of many good ones one principal good one."

The work was completed and published in 1611, with the following title:

"The Holy Bible, conteyning the Old Testament and the New, newly translated out of the Originall Tongues, and with the former Translations diligently compared and revised by his Majestie's speciall Comandement. Imprinted at London, by Robert Barker, Printer to the King's most excellent Majestie. 1611."

The only pay these men received for their long and faithful service was thirty pounds to each one of the six editors who made the last revision, by the Company of Stationers. The king would not pay out of his own treasury, and only gave a shadowy promise of 1000 marks (about $4000), by an invitation to the archbishops and bishops to collect money from those willing to contribute; but nothing came of it.

The Authorized Version, published under the sanction of King James the First in 1611, from which this Bible is a copy, without change, except in a few cases of orthography, such as original for "originall," as it stands in the title of 1611, has been everywhere commended for its faithfulness to the original Hebrew and Greek Scriptures, its pure and forcible English, its plain but dignified forms of expression, and its idiom, true to the genius of our tongue, as all that can be desired.

Its chief value to the English-speaking world is its pure English, which dates from a time before the introduction of the vast number of words from the modern languages, which more often obscure the meaning than help to a clear idea of what is in the mind. Addison, the eminent critic, says, "The translators of the Bible were masters of the English style, far fitter for that work than any we see in our present writings." The best writers, from that day to this, have clothed their choicest thought in its pure idiom, so that its influence may be traced all through English literature.

Of the manuscripts it may be said that there is not the least question as to the antiquity of any one of the specimens. They have lain hidden from sight for several centuries, and "in various out-of-the-way places, in different parts of the world. They were found in the dirty and neglected chambers and cells of the monks. From the dusty and long-neglected cells of the monasteries near the Natron Lakes, and at Thebes, Egypt; from the forgotten and long closed-up rooms in the Greek monasteries in Albania; from the libraries on Mount Athos, where it was noticed that the ignorant monks had for ages used the almost priceless volumes for seats; from the Crimea, and from Odessa, where there is a Bible Society which has collected valuable specimens from all over the Eastern World; from the Jews in China, Malabar and India; from Mount Sinai; and in some of these places they had been forgotten for centuries, and were in some instances covered with the dust of a thousand years, putting the case beyond all possibility of imposition, forgery or collusion."

Evidence derived from documents could not go any farther, and our reason is satisfied and our faith quickened.

While the printing of the Bible is a means of making copies that are as free from error in a thousand copies as in one, still this uniformity is not in itself a proof of correctness, for the printed text is but a copy of some ancient manuscript, and if there was an error in that it is of course repeated in the printed text. So it has been the special object of some of the best scholars and critics, during the last half century, to collect ancient manuscripts, compare their readings, balance the probabilities in favor of one or another text by every known guide in criticism, until, from the multitude of various readings, errors of copyists and additions by commentators have been cleared out, and a text left which is believed to be almost, if not exactly, as written by the authors, or at least such as was received by the Church and the scholars as the text in the early ages. The authority in matters of faith and doctrine is not here a subject of discussion, it being the work of the preacher and theologian.

We may now conclude that the best men in all ages, from the time of Jeremiah to the present, a period of nearly twenty-four centuries, have believed the Pentateuch to be a divinely-inspired history and code of laws, and have added from time to time other books which they believed were equally entitled to reverence, such as the Prophets, Psalms and the New Testament, while they have, at the same time, rejected many books that have been offered as having an equal claim to divine inspiration. Some of the rejected works, such as those in the Apocrypha, are valuable as matters of history, and as evidence of the literary standards of their age, but they seem to lack the internal evidence that they are the work of the Divine mind.

THE EARLIEST EDITIONS OF THE BIBLE PUBLISHED IN AMERICA.

Prior to the American Revolutionary war, the country was supplied with Bibles in the English language from England. At the time of American independence, but two editions of the Bible had been printed in the United States. The first was translated into the Indian language by John Eliot, and printed by Marmaduke Johnson, Cambridge, Mass., 1661, small quarto.

The first Bible printed in this country in a foreign language was that of Christopher Saur, in the German language, in Germantown, Penna., in 1743, quarto size, the type for which was obtained from Germany. One thousand copies were printed.

The first Bible printed in English was published by Robert Aitken, at Philadelphia, in 1782, 12mo size.

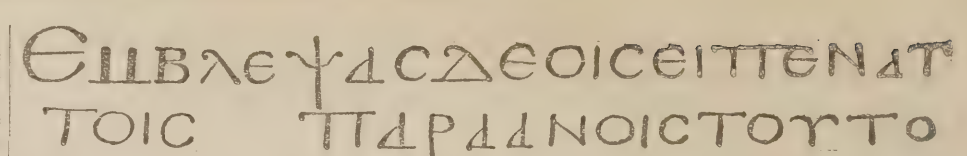
The first folio and quarto editions in the English language were printed and published by Isaiah Thomas, at Worcester, Mass., in 1791.

Isaac Collins also printed and published a quarto edition, bound in two vols., at Trenton, N. J., in the same year.

William Young, printer, Philadelphia, published editions of the Bible in 1791–92, 18mo size.

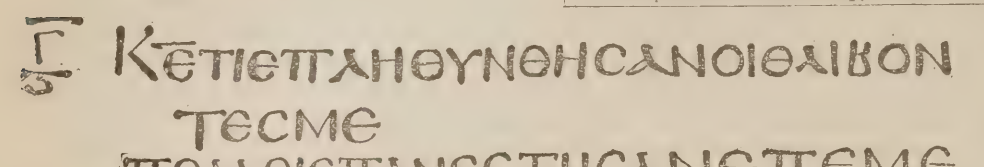
Hodge and Campbell, New York, printed a self-interpreting Bible in forty numbers folio in 1792. The name of George Washington, President of the United States, heads the list of subscribers.

Berriman & Co., Philadelphia, published editions of the Bible in 1796, folio.

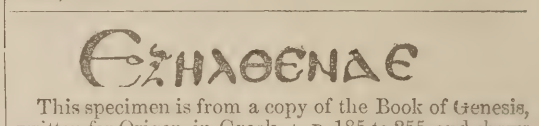


John Thompson, Philadelphia, 1798, printed and published a beautiful edition folio (Hot Press) in forty numbers.

Mathew Carey, 118 Market street, Philadelphia, published his first edition of the Bible, quarto, in 1801. He continued publishing Bibles with and without engravings, printing several editions annually until 1820.

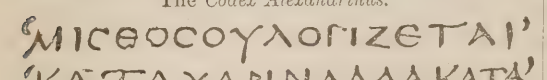


Samuel Etheridge published a quarto edition, with engravings, in Charlestown, Mass., in 1803.

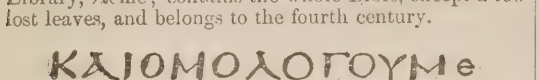


B. & J. Collins, New York, published the first stereotyped quarto edition of the Bible in this country in the year 1816.

The oldest version in any language of which there is a record is the Septuagint, written in Greek, at Alexandria, Egypt, B. C. 286–280. The oldest known copy of this version is written on thin vellum, contains the whole Bible, and is dated in the fifth century; now in the British Museum, and is called



This specimen is from a copy in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, a palimpsest, and belongs to the sixth century. It is from the Gospel of Matthew, xix. 26.



This specimen is from a copy of the Book of Genesis, written for Origen, in Greek, A. D. 185 to 255, and shows a very neat and clear text, as well as all the others.

The Codex Alexandrinus.

The Codex Vaticanus is a manuscript in the Vatican Library, Rome; contains the whole Bible, except a few lost leaves, and belongs to the fourth century.

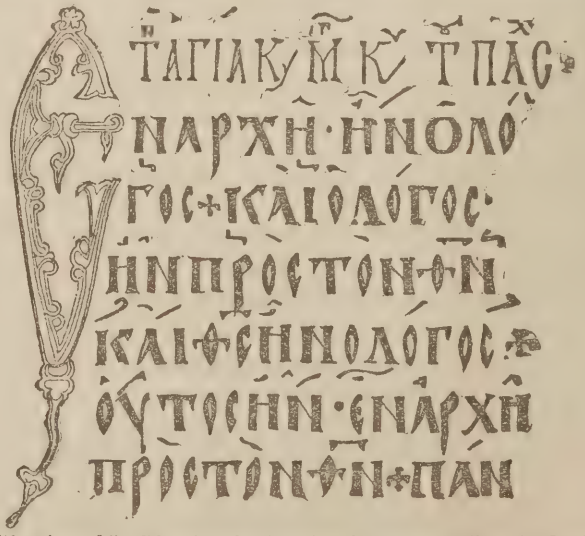
The Codex Sinaiticus was found in the Convent on Mount Sinai, and belongs to the sixth century, but is a copy of one of an earlier date. Besides the Old and New Testaments, it has the Gospel and Epistles of Barnabas and the Epistle of Hermas. Fragments of the Gospel are contained in a palimpsest MS. in a library at Wolfen-buttel, Germany, where the ancient Greek letters have been scraped off, and a modern text written over them, but not entirely obliterating the ancient writing. The first specimen is from Luke i. 6. The next is one which was found at the Convent on the Natron Lakes, Egypt, and is Luke xx. 9, 10, with a work of Severus of Antioch over it. It is dated A. D. 550. Both the specimens of writing are fine examples of the art. The great price of writing material, skins, parchment, vellum or cloth and papyrus, caused the loss of many old books, whose letters were erased to make room for some new work.

The oldest Hebrew MS. known is dated A. D. 489; is a roll, and was found in the Karaite Synagogue in the Crimea. The specimen given here is from a Pentateuch, written originally on a roll of leather, preserved in Odessa, and was brought from Darbend, in Daghestan. It was corrected in A. D. 580, and was therefore written before that time. The text is from Malachi iv. 6.



As a specimen of the ancient Hebrew letter used about the time that Paul was a pupil of Gamaliel, here is a copy from a gravestone in the Crimea, of the year A. D. 6. This style of letter is like that on the coins of the Maccabees, B. C. 139, and other coins down to A. D. 130.

(On a gravestone at Simpheropol, Crimea.)

"This is the grave of Buki, son of Isaac, the priest; may his rest be in Paradise! [Died] at the time of the deliverance of Israel, in the year 702 of our captivity" (i. e. A. D. 6).

The oldest printed Hebrew Bible (Old Testament) was issued at Soncino, Italy, A. D. 1487, in folio. The Complutensian Polyglot was published at the expense of Cardinal Ximenes in 1514–1522, in 6 vols. folio, and sold at fifteen dollars. The last specimen on this page is Greek, from the text of John i. 1, 2, and is dated A. D. 995. The initial letter is in blue and red colors, and is very finely "illuminated." The first book printed was the Bible, in Latin; and the splendid pages of the Mazarin Vulgate, printed by Gutenberg and Faust in 1455, at Mainz, are not surpassed at this day as specimens of typography. And the style of the letter has not been improved upon since that time for elegance of shape or distinctness.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES

OF THE

TRANSLATORS AND REFORMERS

AND OTHER

EMINENT BIBLICAL SCHOLARS

DESCRIBING THE FATE OF THESE LEARNED MEN

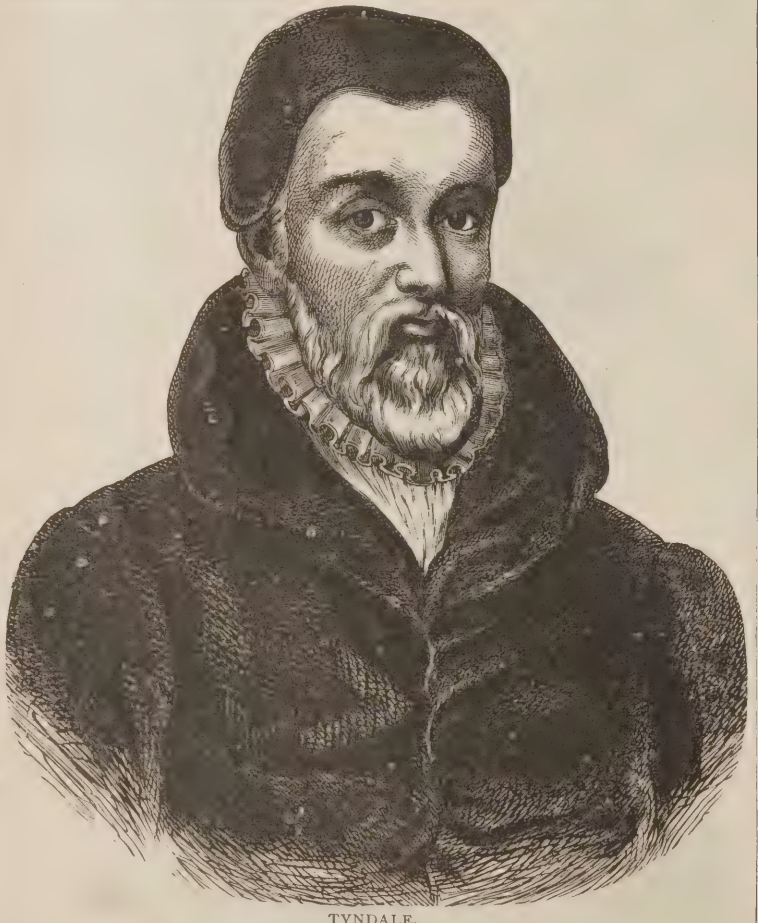
WHO RENDERED

THE BIBLE INTO THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

By Rev. WILLIAM F. B. JACKSON.

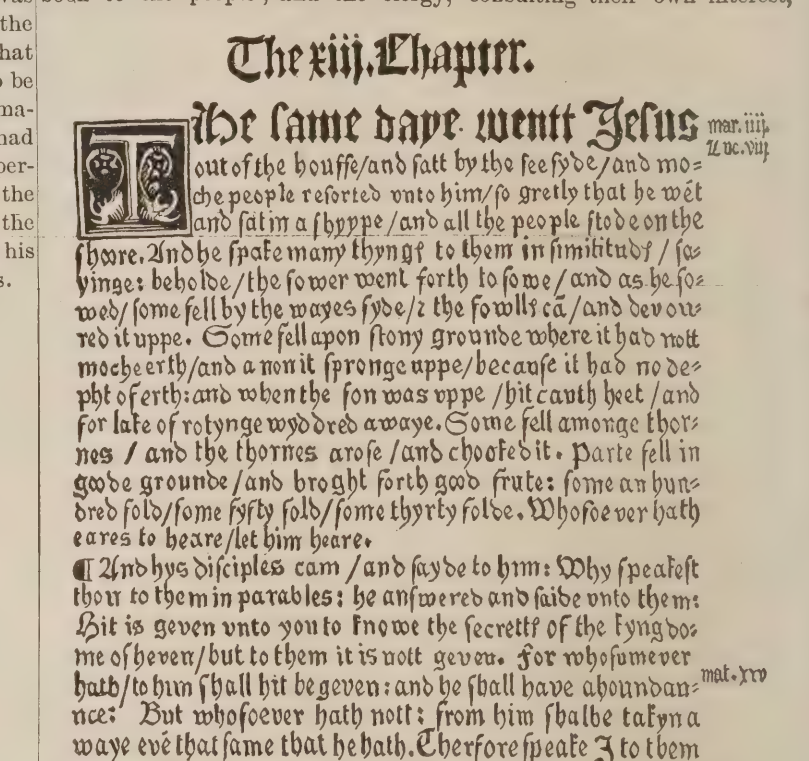
Entered, according to Act of Congress, in the year 1875, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.

JOHN WYCLIFFE.—In the year 1324, or about that time, according to the conjectures of all his biographers, Wycliffe was born, in the parish bearing the same name, in Yorkshire, England. His name has been spelled in nearly twenty different ways; but we have followed the custom of the Editors of his Bible, published first by the University Press at Oxford, 1850. Nothing is known of his childhood or early youth. In the year 1340, at the age of sixteen years, he was admitted as a student at Queen's College, Oxford, which was then first founded. He was soon transferred from this to Merton College of the same University, which from having been longer established, possessed superior advantages, and at that time could boast of having connected with it some of the most learned men of the age. The college students at that period devoted most of their time to the study of scholastic theology and civil law. Wycliffe took high rank as a scholar. Even the Roman Catholic historians confess that he was a subtle disputant, and second to none in philosophy. He did not, however, confine himself to the prescribed studies. He carefully read the writings of the fathers, and although the Sacred Scriptures were then almost entirely neglected by the ecclesiastic, Wycliffe devoted much time to their study. About the year 1360 he appears as a bold and successful assertor of the rights of the University against Mendicant Friars, who had become so numerous and powerful at Oxford as almost to threaten the entire ruin of the University. Their endeavor was to lead young men who had entered Oxford to be educated, to leave the University for the Monastery, and so powerful was their influence that, it is said, the number of students was reduced from thirty thousand to six thousand. In testimony of their gratitude for his services, and in compliment to his talents, the University made him, in 1361, Master of Baliol College, and presented him to the living of Fillingham, which he afterwards exchanged for that of Ludgershall. Four years after, in 1365, he was appointed Warden of Canterbury Hall in Oxford, by Archbishop Islip, its founder. The diploma conferring this honor declares Wycliffe to be "a person in whom his Grace very much confided, and on whom he had fixed his eyes for that place on account of the honesty of his life, his laudable conversation and knowledge of letters." Islip died the next year, and Bishop Langham was raised to the See of Canterbury. He was a monk and was strongly attached to the religious orders which Wycliffe had so boldly censured. His dislike to the Reformer was so great, that he deprived him of the office which the founder of the college had conferred on him. An appeal was made at the Court of Rome; but after a delay of four years, the Pope confirmed the action of the Archbishop.



In 1372 Wycliffe was appointed, by the Chancellor and Regents of the University Professor of Divinity. This was the greatest honor which they could offer him, and it shows conclusively the high estimation in which he was then held. He was soon called upon to take part in the controversy which was being waged between the Court of Rome and the English Sovereign. The Pope had demanded annual payment of 1,000 marks, as tribute money, and as an acknowledgement that the sovereignty of England was under the authority of the successor of St. Peter. Edward the Third had for several years declined to make these payments, and it was now threatened that his Majesty would be cited to appear for trial before the Sovereign Pontiff. Edward appealed to Parliament, who resolved to resist the charge by force, if necessary, and Wycliffe maintained and defended the rights of the King against the Pope. In 1374 Wycliffe was sent to the Continent upon an embassy to the Pope, to treat concerning the liberties of the Church in England. He remained abroad two years, carefully studying the policy of the

JOHN WYCLIFFE.



Pontiff, and returned to England more thoroughly convinced of the gross corruption of the Romish Church; while his zeal in exposing her errors and vices was considerably increased, and his opportunities for spreading his views were very great. Wycliffe's doctrines gave so much offence to the clergy of the Romish Church, that in 1377 he was summoned to appear before a convocation which met in St. Paul's Cathedral in London, to answer for his heresies; but the assembly broke up in confusion without taking measures against him. But later in the same year the Pope commanded that he should be arrested, and kept in security till further orders. The University was enraged, and debated whether to receive the Pope's messenger or dismiss him disgracefully. But Wycliffe concluded to meet his accusers face to face, at a Synod appointed for the purpose at Lambeth, in January, 1378. Whether they would have silenced the Reformer or not, is uncertain, for during their deliberations a mandate from the queen mother forbade their proceeding against him, and he was dismissed with the simple command to abstain from preaching his doctrines in future. About this time he was engaged in translating the Bible. His writings abound with sound Protestant views on the supreme authority of the Scriptures as a guide to faith and practice; but his enemies took advantage of some disturbance which they unjustly charged to his teaching, and he was banished from the University in 1382, retiring to his living at Lutterworth where he died in 1384. The translation of the Bible was the chief and crowning glory of his life, and the lever by which the Papal power in Great Britain was overthrown. We are confident that an impartial examination of his claims will confirm his right to be called the most important agent in producing the Protestant Reformation. More than a century before Luther was born, Wycliffe had planted the seeds of the Reformation, and with great boldness and perseverance had promulgated those principles which were to shake the Romish Church to its centre. He was the "Morning Star of the Reformation," the pioneer and patriarch of Protestantism, and his name should have the highest place on the roll of its honored heroes.

TYNDALE.

WILLIAM TYNDALE.—To no mere man does the world owe more, than to William Tyndale, the chief of the English Reformers. He was born (probably) in 1485, the year in which Henry VII. came to the throne; there is some doubt with regard to the exact time. The Romish Church was never to appearance more firmly established in England than at this period. The King made close alliance with the Pope, and all classes seemed content in submitting to his authority. But the foundations of the Church were, nevertheless, insecure; the period of its worst oppressions and abuses was running out, and the man who was to do more than all others to overthrow its influence in England was already born. The materials for the narration of Tyndale's early life are scanty. The first notice we have is of his being sent to Oxford, where, says Foxe, "he increased as well in the knowledge of tongues and other liberal arts, as especially in the knowledge of the Scriptures, whereunto his mind was singularly addicted." In 1517 or 1518, he left Oxford for Cambridge, where he remained as a student for a year or two, leaving in 1520 for Gloucestershire, his native county, than which there was no part of England more under Papal dominion; nowhere were the abuses of the Church more flagrant, or the ignorance of its ministers more extreme. Tyndale's bold rebukings of these things made him extremely unpopular, and being secretly charged with holding heretical opinions, he was summoned before his bishop, who reproved him severely; whereupon he left the county for London, hoping to be able to execute a desire, which had long been in his heart, of translating the New Testament. Wycliffe's, the early English translation in existance, had become obsolete. The Bible was a sealed book to the people; and the clergy, consulting their own interest, strove to keep it so. They perverted its teachings to their own support, they wrested its meaning to their own purposes, and they darkened its truth with the mist of their own sophistry. But Tyndale found, to use his own words—"not only was there no room in my Lord of London's palace to translate the New Testament, but also that there was no place to do it in all England." So, in January, 1524, a voluntary exile, alone and unsupported, he left London for Hamburg, where for more than a year, he labored on his translation. In May, 1525, he went to Cologne, in order to print his translation there. But Cochlaeus, the noted controversialist, who happened to be in Cologne at this time discovered that the printing was going on, and determined to stop it. He prevailed upon the city authorities to interdict the printer from proceeding, while he wrote to Henry, to Wolsey, and to Fisher, Bishop of Rochester, to warn them against the translation, that they might keep this "most pernicious article of merchandise" from entering the ports of England. So Tyndale leaves for Worms, then a Lutheran city, where the printing is finished—one edition containing the commentary of the translator, the other the simple text. By the spring or summer of 1526, copies of these editions must have been in England, where prohibition was violently made against them by the ecclesiastical authorities, and all persons were warned, under pain of excommunication to deliver up "all such books as contained the translation of the New Testament." But the attempts to suppress them were not entirely successful, and the number of readers increased, both in England and abroad, though the authorities burned all the books they could obtain.

Meanwhile Tyndale still remained at Worms, writing tracts and treatises against religious abuses in the Catholic Church, and in favor of the Reformation, and these also were circulated in England. In 1529 the Bishop of London summoned a convocation of the clergy, and its session ended with the issuing of a proclamation against the "importing, printing, reading, or teaching of specified books," in the English tongue, as well as in Latin and other languages, replete with the most venomous heresies, blasphemies and slanders, intolerable to the ears of any good Christian man, and reviewing the penalties of previous enactments against heresy. In noble pre-eminence among the books proscribed were all the publications of Tyndale. But the proclamation had little effect to prevent importation and study of these books; and early in 1530, Tyndale published a translation of the five books of Moses, and a work of his own with the ominous title, "The Practice of

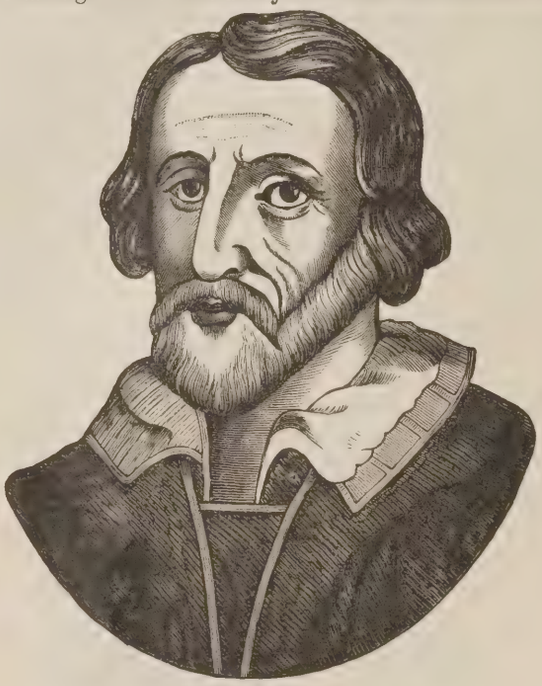
MILES COVERDALE.

Prelates." It was intended as an exposition of the means by which the Church had acquired temporal power, and of the grasping spirit of the prelacy. As may be imagined, the enemies of Tyndale desired to have him in England, and in their power; and at the command of Henry VIII. and Cromwell, overtures were made to induce him to return. But his prudence would not let him. Meanwhile, many persons who had read his books, and adopted his opinions, were burned in England, and still a great demand existed for his translation of the New Testament. In 1535 he was actively engaged at Antwerp in revising the translation and issuing new editions of it. His residence being ascertained, persons were sent over to accomplish his arrest. By an act of treachery he was decoyed to Brussels, and conveyed to the Castle of Filford, or Villefort, where he was closely confined. As soon as the English merchants had learned of this outrage, they applied officially to the Court of Brussels for the release of Tyndale, and afterwards letters were sent out from England by Cromwell, with regard to his release. But they were all of no avail, and the last hope of aid had now expired. After he had remained in prison for more than a year, an advocate was offered to him, but he refused to have one, saying that he could make answer for himself. No account of his trial remains; but after much reasoning when no reason would serve, he was condemned to death. There was no timid doubt, no faithless fear in him. On the 6th of October, 1536, he was led forth to die. He was bound to the stake, and his last words were, "Lord, open the King of England's eyes?" He was strangled, and his body was then burned.

To a man like Tyndale, death could have come only as a blessing from God. The sorrows, the trials, the toils of life were over. The reward had come. A life like his deserves special remembrance in these days. The times in which we live are so happy, so free from religious persecution, that we are likely to forget our blessings from their very commonness. There is but little opportunity for the exercise of the self-devotion and faith of the Reformation, we are likely to have the worthless substitute instead of the priceless original. There can be no better remedy for this than to honor the true virtues in the lives of the martyrs of the past. We give on the preceding page a fac simile of Tyndale's first New Testament, which will be interesting to our readers, from the antique beauty of its typography.



MILES COVERDALE.—This man is chiefly famous, because under his direction, in 1535, the first translation of the whole Bible ever printed in English was completed. It is supposed to have been printed in Zurich, and was issued in folio, and dedicated to Henry VIII. In the dedication, the translator tells his Majesty, that the Pope gave him the title of Defender of the Faith, "only because his Highness suffered his Bishops to burn God's Word, the root of faith, and to persecute the lovers and ministers of it;" but at the same time intimates his conviction, that the title will prove a prophecy, "that by the righteous administration of his grace, the faith shall be so defended, that God's Word, the mother of faith, shall have its free course through all christendom, but especially in his grace's realme." Coverdale was born in Yorkshire, about 1486, and became an Augustine Monk. When he translated his Bible he was in exile for his reforming principles. Being allowed to return to England, he was made Almoner to Catherine Parr, the last wife of Henry. He was made Bishop in Edward VI's reign, but lost his place, and was imprisoned when Mary came to the throne. At the King of Denmark's request he was set at liberty, and permitted to depart from the kingdom, to which he afterwards returned upon the accession of Elizabeth. He was greatly attached to the principles of the Puritans, and therefore would not accept of his Bishopric. A small living was given to him, from which he was afterwards deposed because his principles were obnoxious to the ruling powers. He died in great poverty, in the year 1569; a sad fate for a man universally esteemed for his piety, his Scriptural learning, and godly diligence in preaching God's Holy Word.

BISHOP CRANMER.

THOMAS CRANMER.—This prelate, one of the most eminent that ever filled the See of Canterbury, was born July 2, 1489, at Aslacton, in Nottinghamshire. At the age of fourteen he was admitted to Jesus College, Cambridge, where by his diligence and ability he soon acquired a very high reputation, and quickly obtained a fellowship and the degree of M. A. The former he soon lost by marrying; but upon the death of his wife, which happened soon after their marriage, he was again admitted fellow of his College—a very unusual thing, and an evidence of the high esteem in which he was held. By Cardinal Wolsey he was offered a fellowship at Oxford, which he declined; and in 1523, he took the degree of D.D., and was appointed theological lecturer and examiner; in both of which positions he rendered essential service to the cause of learning and religion. About this time he was called upon to give an opinion on the subject of King Henry's divorce from Catharine, when he said the subject must be narrowed down to the question, as to whether a man could marry his brother's wife, which was to be decided by Scripture in England, as well as at Rome. Cranmer produced a work upon the subject, which so completely coincided with Henry's opinion, that the King made him Archbishop of Canterbury, and in this position he decreed a divorce between Henry VIII and Catharine, and confirmed the king's marriage with Anne Boleyn. These acts excited the enmity of the pope, who threatened excommunication; but Cranmer set him at defiance, and immediately began to interest himself in the Reformation. He very soon procured an act of Parliament which abolished forever the pope's supremacy in England, and declared the king sole head of the Church. His next objects were the translation of the Scriptures into English, and the dissolution of the monasteries. The high rank to which he had attained naturally made him many enemies, who sought his ruin; but he was protected by the king, who appointed him one of the executors of his last will, and one of the regents of the kingdom. Upon the death of Henry, in 1546, Cranmer crowned the young king, and during the short reign of that monarch was very zealous in promoting the Reformation. In 1553 he shewed himself adverse to the settlement of the crown on Lady Jane Grey, though, upon the death of Edward, he avowedly espoused her cause, and became a member of her council. But Mary came to the throne, and Cranmer was in disgrace, while his friends urged him to seek safety in a foreign country. But for the Reformation's sake he would not leave. He was soon arrested for high treason in espousing Lady Jane Grey's cause, was convicted, and lost his see. He asked for pardon, and it was granted only that he might be tried for heresy, of which he was also convicted. Now that the pope's party were again in the ascendancy, he was most cruelly treated, and, scared by the prospect of death, he signed a recantation of his religious principles. But his enemies were not satisfied with his recantation, but demanded his life also, and a writ was signed for his burning. Being asked before a council to make a last profession of his faith, he renounced his recantation, and said that the hand which signed it should be first punished. Enraged at this unexpected declaration, the mob dragged him to the stake, and here his resolution was undaunted. He stretched forth his right hand into the flame till it was consumed, saying, "This is the hand that wrote it, therefore it shall first suffer punishment!" In a short time he died, repeating the words of the martyr Stephen, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Such was the end of Thomas Cranmer, in the 67th year of his age. He was a man of great candor and a firm friend. He rather excelled in great industry and good judgment, than in quickness of apprehension. He was truly hospitable, frequently entertaining large numbers of his poor neighbors.

VENERABLE BEDE.—Bede, usually entitled the Venerable Bede, was born at Sunderland, and died at Jarrow, a convent on the right bank of the Tyre, in the year 733, aged sixty-three. His writings were numerous, including translations of portions of the New Testament; but his most famous production was his "Ecclesiastical History of the English," written in Latin. A touching anecdote is told of his dying hour. He had not completed his version of St. John's Gospel, and the heavy shades of death were gathering upon him. His boy-scribe reminded him, that one chapter was yet untouched; and the dying man nerved himself to the task, till exhaustion required relief. Still the boy hung round him, saying, "Dear Master, one sentence remains yet unwritten." "Write quickly," was the reply: as the last words flowed from his lips upon the parchment page, the scribe said, "It is done." "Well," said Bede, "thou hast spoken the truth; all is ended. Take my head in thy hands. I would sit where I have been wont to pray, there to call upon my Father." So, resting upon the floor of his cell, chanting "Glory be to the Father and to the Son," his soul was wafted on as by wings of angels into the presence of that Spirit, who was the last breath upon his lips.

JOHN HUSS.

JOHN HUSS.—This eminent Reformer derived his surname, as was common in those days, from his native village of Hussinetz, in the southwestern corner of Bohemia. The memorials which have come down to us of his early life are very scanty, such only as could be gathered from the short and simple annuals of the poor. He is said to have been born on the 6th of July, 1373. At the age of sixteen he went a poor boy to the University of Prague, where he was made a Master of Arts in 1396. In 1400 he was appointed preacher at the University Chapel of Bethlehem, a church recently built and endowed by two wealthy Bohemians, for the preaching of the gospel in their native tongue. For an honest, ardent man, burning with desire to spread God's truth, this was a commanding position; and Huss filled it so well that he made an enemy of the Archbishop of Prague, who at last succeeded in having him banished to his native village. Here he passed his time probably in the study of Wycliffe's writings, which had been sent over from England, or which a young student of Prague, named Jerome, had brought with him. The good seed, falling into his honest and good heart, brought forth fruit, and led him to undertake a translation of certain books of the Old and New Testaments into the vulgar tongue. Upon the death of his enemy, the archbishop, Huss returned to Prague, and began again his zealous attacks upon the abuses of the Church. He was an earnest speaker; we quote from his sermon. "Not willing that the blood of souls should be required at my hands, I traced, as I was able, in the Holy Scriptures, the future dangers impending over the souls of men." The people were in his favor, and the entire kingdom became more and more filled with his doctrines, till soon great disturbances arose. The clergy were aroused and Huss was compelled once more to retire to the country. But he was n t allowed to live in peace. The Council of Constance was convened in 1414, and he was summoned before it, to answer to the charges brought against him, having been promised the safe conduct, or passport of the Emperor Sigismond. But the Emperor proved false to his word, and the council were determined to condemn him. He was declared a heretic, given the opportunity to recant and sentenced to be burned at the stake. On the 6th day of July, 1415, just as he had completed his forty-second year, he was led forth for the burning. He was bound to the stake, fagots and heaps of straw were piled around him, and another offer was made him to recant, which he boldly rejected. The fire was set, and as it enwrapped him he was heard to say thrice,—"Jesus, son of the living God, have pity upon me!" His ashes were scraped together and thrown into the Rhine; but his followers dug out the precious earth where he was burned, and sent it to Prague.

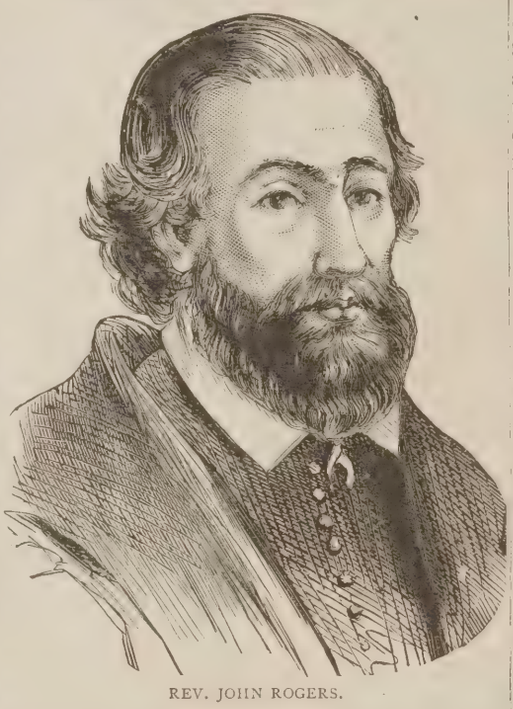
BISHOP LATIMER.



HUGH LATIMER.—This man, the son of a respectable Leicestershire farmer, was born about the year 1470. At the age of fourteen he was sent to Christ's College, Cambridge, where he was distinguished for his rapid proficiency in the studies of the place. Here he took his degrees and was ordained, being at the time a very zealous Romanist. He was greatly alarmed, while at the University, at the prevalence of Lutheran opinions and violently combatted them. But upon meeting a pious clergyman, a Mr. Thomas Bilney, who from reading Luther's works, had become a secret friend of the Reformation, Latimer's feelings were changed, and he was compelled to acknowledge the errors in which he had been educated. He inveighed against Romish superstitions and observances, and so became obnoxious to the generality of the clergy, who endeavored to ruin him, and would certainly have done so, had not King Henry been one of his friends. He was very popular as a preacher, his very popularity with the people made him only the more hated by the bigoted among the clergy. He was frequently arrested by command of the bishops, and ordered to give up his views. But he did not accede to their demands. After the passing of the bloody statute, or the act of the six articles, Latimer protested against it by his conduct, resigned his bishopric, and retired into the country, intending here to pass the remainder of his days. But an accident compelling him to come to London for surgical assistance, he was seized and imprisoned in the Tower during the rest of King Henry's reign. On the accession of Edward VI. he was set at liberty, and being now one of the most eloquent preachers of the age, he was appointed to deliver the Lent sermons before the king, in the first three years of his reign. He preached, wherever he was found to be most serviceable, till Popery was re-established in the reign of Queen Mary, when he was cited to appear before a council in London. He immediately obeyed, was loaded with reproaches, and committed to the Tower, where he bore his sufferings with true Christian humility. Being treated with great cruelty, and urged to give up his opinions, he so steadfastly refused that he was excommunicated, and afterwards condemned to death, together with Ridley. Even the fear of death did not make him falter. The time of execution was the 16th of October, 1555, and the place was on the north side of the city of Oxford, near Baliol College. Ridley was dressed in his bishop's robes, and Bishop Latimer wore his prison garb. The fire was speedily kindled, and at the sight of the flames Latimer exclaimed, "Be of good cheer, Master Ridley, and play the man; we shall this day light such a candle, by God's grace, in England, as I trust shall never be put out." Such was the glorious and triumphant end of Hugh Latimer, who had been indefatigable in the discharge of the duties of life, and who exhibited the most astonishing firmness and composure in the several trials to which he was exposed for expounding evangelical doctrine.

NICHOLAS RIDLEY.—This eminent English prelate was descended from an ancient family in Northumberland, and was born early in the sixteenth century. He was educated chiefly at Cambridge University, where he took his Master's Degree in 1525. He was soon after ordained priest, and went to the Sorbonne, in Paris, for further education, remaining on the continent till 1529. He had been brought up a zealous adherent of the Pope, but on his return to England, and while he was senior proctor of Cambridge University, the question of the Pope's supremacy in England was debated. Ridley had been an earnest student of the Scriptures, and was well qualified to give an opinion upon the subject; and through his arguments the University came to the following resolution:—"That the Bishop of Rome had no more authority and jurisdiction derived to him from God, in this kingdom of England, than any other foreign bishop." In 1540 he was made one of the King's Chaplains, and also presented with a prebendal stall in Canterbury Cathedral. While here he employed all his talents in exposing the abuses of Romanism, and charges were brought against him by his enemies; but the King and Cranmer were in his favor, so the charges came to naught. The Bishop of London, Bonner, having been deprived of his position, Ridley succeeded to the Bishopric in 1549-50, and soon after he directed that the altars in the churches of his diocese should be removed, and tables put in their place for the celebration of the Lord's Supper; to take away the false belief which the people had, of sacrifices to be offered upon altars. In 1552 he visited the Princess Mary, and offered to preach before her, but being a steadfast papist, she would not listen to him. Upon the death of Edward VI., Ridley attempted to set Lady Jane Grey, on the throne; failing in this, he was compelled to ask pardon of Mary, which she refused to grant. He was committed to the Tower, and after eight month's imprisonment conveyed to Oxford, where he was, on the 1st of October, 1555, condemned to death for heresy. The 15th of the same month was the day set for his execution, when he and Latimer were led out to die at the same time. "Be of good heart, brother Latimer," he said, "for God will either assuage the fury of the flames, or else give us strength to endure them." Being asked to recant his opinions, he steadfastly refused, and died with great composure amid the cruel flames. He was unquestionably one of the most eminent instruments in promoting the cause of the Reformation. In private life he was the pattern of all virtues; his temper was excellent; his manners affable and agreeable; and of the benevolence of his heart he gave abundant proofs in his great liberality to the poor. Besides this, he was very learned, his memory was great, and he had such a fund of general knowledge withal, that he deserved to be compared to the best men of his age, as his works, sermons, and sundry disputations in both the Universities well testified.

REV. JOHN ROGERS.

JOHN ROGERS.—This eminent divine and martyr was born in Lancashire, in the year 1500, and was educated at Cambridge, where he took a very high stand in scholarship. Being sent as Chaplain to the factory at Antwerp, he rendered important assistance to Tyndale and Coverdale in their work of translating the Bible into English. In the year 1537, a famous edition of the Bible was issued in folio, and from the name affixed to it as that of the supposed editor, it is usually called Matthew's Bible. It was printed abroad, at the expense of the English printers, Richard Grafton and Edward Whitchurch, and was set forth with the King's most gracious license." It is now generally conceded that Rogers was the real editor of this work, for to him Tyndale had bequeathed parts of his Old Testament in manuscript. Its New Testament is Tyndale's over again, its Pentateuch is slightly varied, and the rest of the Old Testament differs but little from Coverdale. John Rogers sealed his testimony to the truth with his blood. In the reign of Edward VI. he returned to England and was made a prebend in St. Paul's Cathedral. On Mary's accession to the throne, such a bold, outspoken adherent to the faith of the Gospel could not fail to give offence; and at last he had the glorious privilege of ascending to heaven in a chariot of fire, leaving a blessed memory which will be honored wherever the English Bible is read. He was burned at Smithfield, on February 4th, 1555, the first martyr of the reign of bloody Mary. He had been previously taken to Bishop Bonner to be degraded; he craved one petition from the Bishop—that he might speak a few words to his wife and children before he was burned; this was denied to him. "Then" said he, "you declare what your charity is."

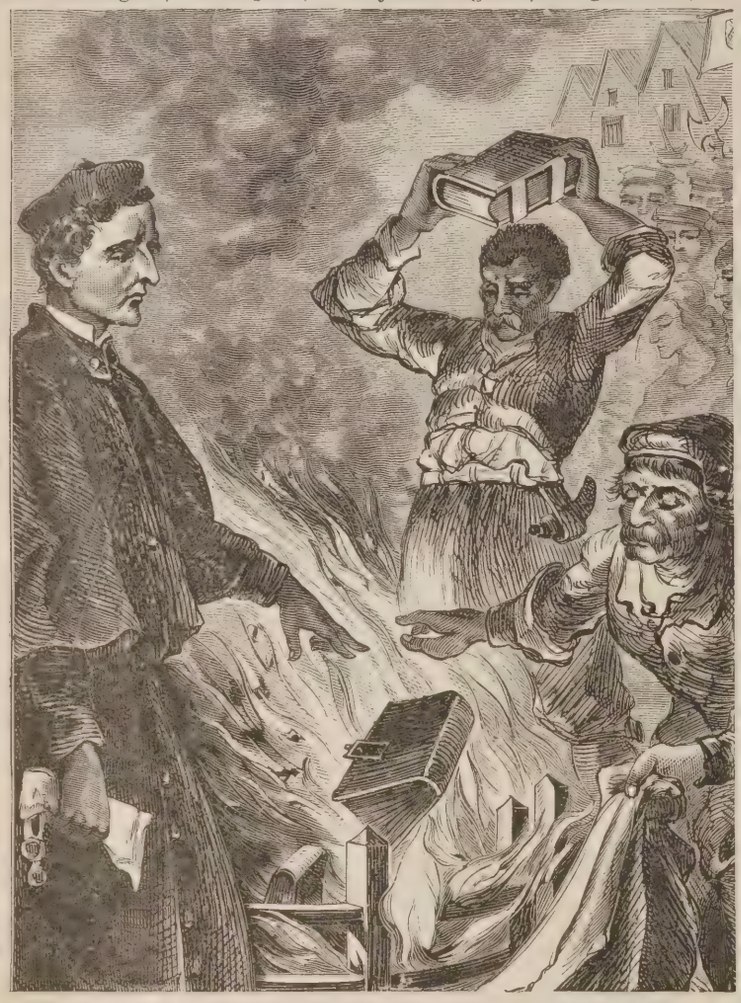
LAURENCE SAUNDERS.—Although the most earnest efforts were made during Queen Mary's reign to hinder the preaching of the Gospel, and the truth seemed almost to be crushed to earth, still there were some devoted preachers who feared not to risk their lives in Christ's cause. One of these was the Rev. Laurence Saunders, who was a man born of good parentage, and educated at Eton and at King's College, Cambridge. After his graduation he engaged in trade, but when the Reformation in the reign of Edward VI. began, he resigned his mercantile pursuits, obtained a license and began to preach. Being a man of much ability he was very popular, and was appointed by the authorities as lecturer in the College at Fotheringham, and afterwards to a position in the Cathedral of Litchfield,—from here he went to an important parish in London. On Sunday, October 15th, 1553, Mr. Saunders delivered a sermon from his parish pulpit, which created so much excitement that he was arrested on the afternoon of the same day, by the order of the Bishop of London. His imprisonment lasted for one year and three months, during which time he wrote several letters to the leading Reformers, Cranmer, Latimer, and Ridley, to his wife, and to other friends, upon the subjects so dear to his heart. He was summoned for examination before the Queen's Council, Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, and other Bishops being present. He claimed liberty of conscience as against the usurped authority of the Bishop of Rome, and all other abuses; and being threatened by the council, he exhorted them to beware of shedding innocent blood, though he would accept the will of God, whether it were for life or death. They were unable to prevail upon him to recant his doctrines, and so excommunicated and degraded him, and sentenced him to be executed. On the 8th of February, 1555, he was led forth to execution, going barefooted, and in an old gown. Even at the stake they could not conquer his determination to preach the blessed Gospel of Christ. Going to the stake he embraced it, and said, "Welcome the cross of Christ, welcome everlasting life!" Soon the fire raged around him, and he fell asleep in Jesus.

IN a brief summary of the history of the Reformation, as a distinct, well-defined, aggressive force, we have to consider only the period of about one hundred and thirty years, between the dates 1517 and 1648. Between these limits the Reformation invaded every nation in Europe. In England, the temper of an untamed people backed the imperious will of Henry to revolt against the hated supremacy of Rome. Here it was no new quarrel. The power of the Pope had been strictly bounded, long before, by king and baron; while Wickliffe spoke to the better heart and conscience of the nation, and his truth continued long after his ashes had floated out to their "vast and wandering grave." In France we have the story of long and bitter conflict, and a doubtful victory of despotism at the end. First, the gradual joyous spread of a tenderer, deeper, freer faith, through hymns and popular chants; then a long, silent, peaceable endurance, for forty years, of the tyranny that strove to exterminate it; then the sudden blazing out and long rancor of religious wars, and the wholesale series of assassinations which we call the Massacre of St. Bartholomew. But it is in Lower Germany and along the Lower Rhine, among the numerous populations of the industrious poor, that the new faith finds its warmest disciples. It was in the Christian hymns that rose amidst the hum of daily toil, that kept time to the darting of the shuttle and the pulses of the loom, that swelled from vast congregations, floated in the manly tones of the way-faring laborer, it was in these Christian hymns, and sacred melodies, and oft-quoted words of Holy Writ, that the vital religion of the time became blended with all affections and tasks of home, and sanctified the daily lives of thousands.

REV. LAURENCE SAUNDERS.

It would also be interesting to sketch the group of remarkable men who from time to time bore the standard that Luther first set flying. Melancthon, the gentle, scholarly associate, the clear and and refined intellect, whose feebler personality is so dominated by the intensely vitalized will of the great Reformer; Carlstadt, the radical, who takes at one grasp what he can take of the new doctrine, and puts it to its plainest uses; Calvin, ascetic, in ill health, and exile, who follows out the Reformed faith with thorough consistency, as heroic a man as ever lived, and as true as steel when the faith is to be proved by any act or suffering of his own; the clear-headed and true-hearted Zwingli, who fell for the faith on the field of battle:—these, and a host of other names, throng upon the memory, and inspire us with renewed devotion to God's truth as revealed in Holy Scripture, and in the lives of His suffering servants.

MARTIN LUTHER.—Everybody knows the story vividly outlined, in even the most meagre sketch, of that first uprising of the free intellect in rebellion against spiritual usurpation and tyranny. The cheery, fair-complexioned boy, born at Eisleben, Saxony, in 1483, nursed on the breast of poverty, earning his nightly penny in the street-chorus of Christian hymns; the youth, startled by his companion's sudden death to "a horrible dread of the last day, craving with his very marrow that he might be safe;" the recluse student, coming upon his copy of the Holy Scriptures as a new and infinitely precious treasure; the pious monk, already looked on as the likely leader of a reform in Christian morals, on that journey to Rome which he "would not have missed for a thousand florins," climbing the Santa Scala painfully on his knees among the retinue of pilgrims, and struck as with a flash by these words of St. Paul, The just shall live by faith; the key ever after to his religious life; the "young doctor, fresh from the forge, glowing and cheerful in the Holy Ghost," withstanding to his face the impudent monk Tetzel, and raising a storm of revolutionary passion with his ninety-five Theses on Indulgences; the brave reformer, resolute in his defiance of the enthroned Lie that tyrannized over the soul of Christendom; the condemned and sentenced heretic, standing unbaffled before the powers of the Empire and the Church at Worms, and uttering his defence in those electric words, the assertion for all time of the liberty of the Christian conscience; the prisoner in the "Patmos" of Wartburg, fighting face to face with Satan, scattering with unseen hand from those friendly towers the words brave and timely that make his name a power among the people, and carrying on the great work that identifies his strong homely idiom with the language of the people's Bible;—these pictures have been stamped indelibly on the history of the time, and they bring fresh to our thought nearly all that is worth remembering in the first few years of the great revolutionary era. In the year 1522 Luther began his colossal work, the translation of the Scriptures. His own account of his purposes is brief but clear. "I translated not only John's Gospel, but the whole New Testament, in my 'Patmos.' But Melancthon and I have begun to revise the whole of it, and it will by the blessing of God, do us credit. . . . . We wish the work to be distinguished by the simplicity of its style." The first efforts of printing had been employed in the promulgation of the Scriptures; and Germany possessed translations of parts of the Bible so far back as the year 1477. But they were few, repulsive to the eye, and, from their rudeness, scarcely less repulsive to the understanding. We can imagine, then, with what delight Luther's translation was welcomed. Matthew's Gospel was first published; then Mark's; then the Epistle to the Romans. The entire New Testament appeared so early as 1522. To promote the circulation, the volume was made as cheap as possible; and the parts were also published separately. Luther's still more arduous labor, the translation of the Old Testament was instantly begun. And he thus writes on the 2d of November, "In my translation of the Old Testament I am only in Leviticus. It is inconceivable how much writing letters, business, conversation, and many other things have interrupted my progress. I am now determined to shut myself up and use dispatch, so that the five books of Moses may be sent to press by January. We shall print them separately, after that we shall proceed to the historical parts of Scripture, and lastly to the Prophets. The size and price render it necessary to make these divisions in the publication."



MARTIN LUTHER.

The Romish advocates were up in arms on the appearance of a work which has always been fatal to the delusions of Rome; but it was received with joy by the people, and Luther saw it spread to the borders of the land. This translation still stands at the head of all the German versions. Its simplicity, force and dignity have had no rivals, and like our own authorized version, it is appealed to as the finest example of the old national tongue. By reason of it, if for nothing else, Luther still leads his nation. Even now his name is in Germany what Washington's is in America, and is in like manner revered by liberal and conservative alike. His translation of the Bible united the two jarring dialects, the Swabian and the Frankish, into one great speech, and thus, says Bunsen, "preserved the only unity which in our days remains to the German nation, that of language, literature, and thought." Though, since these words of Bunsen's were written, German unity has been brought about in another way.

The twenty-five years that elapsed between Luther's release from the sheltering towers of Wartburg and his death, were years of an incessant struggle, in which he stands always in the front rank, to receive the scars and bruises of the fight. His words are "half-battles." "They say," he writes, "that these books of mine are too keen and cutting. They are right. I never meant them to be soft and gentle. My only regret is that they cut no deeper." Erasmus shrinks from the stern warfare his satire has done its share in kindling, and Luther says of him, "He has attacked the Pope, and is now drawing his head out of the noose." He says again, "I care not about being accused of violence. It shall be my glory and honor henceforth to have it said how I rage and storm against the Papists. I will leave them no rest from my curses till I sink into my grave. . . . Yet I keep towards all the world a kind and loving heart. Often in the night, when unable to sleep, I ponder in my bed painfully and anxiously how they may be won to repent before a fearful judgment overtakes them. But it seems that it must not be." With his fiery, positive, self-centred faith, Luther was sorely troubled at the religious dissension and chaos of opinions that followed the course of the Reformation; "Many think," said he, "that my path is on roses; but God knows how far my heart is from any such feeling." He says "at times I am merry, at times I am sad. . . . . I hold that a great darkness will follow this gospel light, and that soon after the last day will come." From the first, people heard him gladly. "Where I found one for the Pope, I found three for you," said Miltitz, in the first year of the controversy. Shouts of sympathy, welcome, and good cheer greeted him in the very streets of Worms. Printers spread his tracts in large numbers, cheaply, neatly, accurately; while those of his opponents they charged double the price for, and sent them out full of blunders. German soldiers proclaimed him Pope before Clement's own face, in the streets of Rome. Theologians of free spirit looked to him as their undaunted leader. The oppressed peasantry were sure of his large-hearted sympathy in the helpless struggle for their rights against feudal chiefs. But at every hand he had cause of tumult, anxiety, and grief. "Where our Lord God builds a church," said he, "the devil builds a chapel close behind it." So wore on his troubled and stormy life through the conflict of those five and twenty years, till the 15th of February, 1546, when he fell asleep gently, with his last breath commending his spirit to the "Lord of Truth," and testifying in death his reliance on the faith whereby he had lived.

THE BURNING OF THE BIBLES.—The first English translation of the New Testament, 12 mo., from the original Greek was printed in Antwerp, (1,500 copies) in 1526. Bishop Tunstall and Wolsey, went abroad to destroy the nest, as they thought, of this viper's brood. At Antwerp, an English merchant offered them all they wished to buy, even to the last copy. The Bishop caught at the bait. "Gentle Mr. Packington," he replied, "do your diligence, and get them; and with all my heart I will pay for them, whatever they cost you; for the books are naught, and I intend surely to burn them at St. Paul's Cross." Packington's speech to Tyndale is equally quaint. "William, I know thou art a poor man, and hast a heap of books by thee; for which thou hast endangered thy friends and beggared thyself; and I have gotten thee a merchant, which with ready money shall despatch thee of all thou hast."—"Who is he?"—"The Bishop of London."—"O, that is because he will burn them."—"Yes."—"I am the gladder," said Tyndale, "for these two benefits; I shall get money to bring myself out of debt, and the whole world will cry out against the burning of God's Word; and the overplus of money shall make me more studious to correct the said New Testament, and newly to imprint the same; and I trust the second will much better like you than the first." So the books were burned in great quantities at St. Paul's Cross the same year. But a single copy of this edition is believed to be extant, and that in the Baptist Library in Bristol, England. In 1529–30 other copies were printed which found their way into England to such an extent that Dr. Stokesly, then Bishop of London, caused all the New Testaments and many others of Tyndale's works which he bought up should be brought to St. Paul's Churchyard and there burned, which was done in May, 1531. In 1534 Tyndale had prepared and printed in Antwerp a second enlarged and more perfect edition of the New Testament, 8vo. A copy of this edition is now in the British Museum. In 1538 Coverdale and the English printer Richard Grafton, had 2,500 copies of the Bible, printed in France in the English language; the whole edition was seized and condemned to the flames, a few copies only being saved.

CARDINAL WOLSEY.—Thomas Wolsey, was the son of a butcher at Ipswich, Suffolk, and born there in 1471. He finished his education at Magdalen College, Oxford, and after he had taken his degrees, he became Master of the school dependent upon that College, where he had under his tuition three sons of the Marquis of Dorset, by whom he was presented with the living of Lexington, in Somersetshire, into which he was inducted in 1500. His advancement was very rapid, first as domestic chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and afterwards as Chaplain to the household of Henry VII. His manners were those of the true courtier, very insinuating, and he rose rapidly in the King's favor, who consulted him on all occasions, and showered positions of dignity upon him. His preferments, civil and ecclesiastical, very speedily succeeded one another, and even profusely accumulated; till finally in 1515, he was made a Cardinal. Thus promoted, his pride and love of pomp kept pace with his rank. He kept great trains of servants, and the sons of noblemen were among his menials, while his equipage and furniture were of the costliest kind. His connection with Bishop Bonner cannot be lost sight of, a man whose character stands out in deeds of blood as long as the remembrance of Christian Martyrs are cherished. But his fall was approaching, and the first step to it was the divorce of Henry VIII. from Catherine. Anne Boleyn, on her marriage with the King, employed her influence in effecting Wolsey's downfall. He lost the favor of the King, who caused him to be indicted for treason, and to be conducted to London for trial. On his way from his palace at York to London, he was seized with a disorder which obliged him to stop at Liecester. His disorder in a few days terminated his life, in the 60th year of his age. Shortly before he expired, he closed a conversation with the constable of the Tower, which related to the King, with this memorable exclamation, "Had I but served God as diligently as I have served the King, he would not, in my grey hairs, have given me over to my enemies." Thus he sunk to the grave, a victim to tyranny, but to a tyranny which he himself had formed; exhibiting an instructive example to all future ministers of the insecure possession of power and wealth, acquired by extortion and oppression; and of the folly of placing confidence in princes governed by conceit, caprices and personal ambition. Still, he had lived long enough to be the means of great injury to the cause of the Reformation. If persecution of God's ministers, and burning of God's Word could have destroyed the truth, it would have perished during his brief career, so strong was the opposition he made to it. But God overruled his wickedness, and "made the wrath of man to praise Him."

REVELATION, INSPIRATION AND AUTHENTICITY OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.

By Rev. F. W. Farrar, B.D.

THERE are in the book of Exodus several passages of sublime significance in which Moses is represented as having communed with God on the summit of Sinai. There were thunders and lightnings and a thick cloud upon the mountain, and it "quaked greatly" and "the voice of the trumpet sounded long, and waxed louder and louder." But the sight of all this majesty and the awfulness of that supernatural thunder was more than the sinful nation could bear: "And they said unto Moses, Speak thou with us, and we will hear: but let not God speak with us, lest we die. And the people stood afar off, and Moses drew near unto the thick darkness where God was."

After a sojourn of forty days in the mount, and after witnessing the apostasy of his people, Moses once more returned to speak with God, and he said, "I beseech thee, show me thy glory." And Jehovah answered him, "Thou canst not see my face: for there shall no man see my face, and live. Behold, there is a place by me, and thou shalt stand upon a rock: and it shall come to pass, while my glory passeth by, that I will put thee in a clift of the rock, and will cover thee with my hand while I pass by: and I will take away my hand, and thou shalt see my back parts; but my face shall not be seen."

In this passage, so full of deep reverence, in spite of its fearless and startling anthroponiorphism, we see a distinct indication that it was God's purpose in the old dispensation to reveal himself in a manner wholly different from that which we should have expected. It might have seemed to us that the Creator would have vouchsafed to his creatures a knowledge of his ways—not mediately, but immediately; not individually, but universally; not partially, but completely; not demonstrably, but decisively; not progressively, but at once. In all these respects our anticipations are reversed. It is a part of God's revelation to us that his ways are not as our ways, nor his thoughts as our thoughts. One of the very stamps of the authenticity of his revealed will is the manner in which it runs counter to everything which man's unaided imagination could have invented respecting him. Until the fullness of time was come he spoke to many men; he made known his purposes to them in many fragments and many methods. To Adam he spoke by a voice in the garden, borne "upon the wind of the evening;" to some of the patriarchs by immediate intuition; to Abram by inward utterances, by angelic appearances, and by the vision of a smoking furnace and a burning lamp; to Jacob as an awful presence in the intense agony of prayer; to Joshua as the captain of the Lord's host; to his chosen people by Urim and Thummim and by dreams, and above all by the voice of his prophets. Then came a pause of wellnigh four hundred years, in which, as the Jews believed, they had no new indication of God's will, unless it were from chance voices and mysterious incidental sounds, Last of all, when the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son—the brightness of his glory, the express image of his person—to reveal him as he had never been revealed before, and thenceforth for ever to shed forth his Holy Spirit into the hearts of all his children.

Such has been the order of God's revelations; and the record of those revelations is contained in Holy Scripture.

The record is marked by all the peculiarities and partakes of all the diversity which characterize the order and method of the revelation which it perpetuates and enshrines. The Old Testament comes before us as the fragmentary literature of a chosen people, the New as the fragmentary archives of a sacred evangel. We possess in the Bible a collection of books separated from each other by hundreds of years, written by men in every variety of rank and position, and addressed to a nation under every circumstance of prosperity and adversity. Now a single Eastern emir is called out of an idolatrous world to preserve alive the knowledge of the one true God; now a lawgiver is selected to deliver in the wilderness, to a perverse nation of slaves and fugitives, a moral code of unequaled majesty; now prophets and kings speak to that nation in its purity or its apostasy, in the zenith of its splendor or on the eve of its desolation; now priests or captives console its melancholy exile or inspirit its feeble resuscitation; now a little band of unlearned and ignorant men record the words and life of its divine and rejected Messiah; now a converted Pharisee preaches that new gospel with an intense wisdom and fire; now a Galilean fisherman closes the book of revelation with words of perfect beauty and visions of unutterable love. In one volume there is an epitome of all the best and highest and most sacred truths which God has revealed to man; and those truths are deep as the heart of man and varied as his life.

Yet all this infinite diversity is, like the diversity of nature, merged in a yet more marvelous unity. Kings, warriors, prophets, historians, poets, exiles, shepherds, gatherers of sycamore-fruit, fishermen, tax-gatherers, "we do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God." Whether we read the passionate pleadings of an afflicted Chaldean noble or the rhythmic utterances of a great Mesopotamian sorcerer, whether it be the cynical confessions of a sated worldling or the pathetic cry of a guilty and repentant king; whether it be the exultant thanksgiving for some splendid deliverance or the impassioned denunciation of some intolerable wrong; whether it be the stately music of some gorgeous vision or the brief letter of an aged prisoner recommending the forgiveness of an unprofitable slave,—we feel that there reigns throughout a divine coherency, an unbroken unity; we feel that the long history is also a symbol and a prophecy, that each writer was but the instrument—often the wholly unconscious instrument—of purposes loftier than his own, and the utterer of language often deeper than he himself could understand; we feel that in the Old Testament the New is prefigured, in the New the Old fulfilled. From beginning to end we recognize the truth that though God is in all history never had any nation a history so significant as that of this nation; none have ever known as these knew or taught as these teach the holiness of God and the majesty of man.

Once more we feel an essential difference in many respects between all other books and those of which the Scriptures are composed. If we take up any uncanonical or Apocryphal book of the same people, they often fill us with astonishment mingled with contempt, and we feel that there is hardly one such book which, had it been admitted into the sacred canon, would not have given us a violent and painful shock. And if we take in hand the very richest, loftiest, deepest utterances of wisdom, whether Christian or pagan, we find not only that they never surpass this book, but even when its lessons were before them, and its wisdom had been instilled into them from childhood, they never equal it. The very best of these bear upon their pages the glaring proofs of human infirmity and human sin; but this book, when accepted in its completeness, when regarded in its true unity, seems, even in what might appear to be its weakest places, to transcend all human imperfections, and even in its most perilous narratives to be exempt from every human stain. Through other books the gust of passion and emotion sweeps with uncontrollable mastery; this, because "the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets," never, even in its most passionate passages, escapes beyond the true limits of a holy self-control. Other literatures depend for their power on the gifts of human genius and the splendor of human eloquence; this seems to rise superior to the aid of genius; and though it surpasses all other eloquence of oratory or song, it stands in no apparent need of such adornment. Other books appeal mainly to their own times and nations; this is equally dear to any nation in every age. They depend for their chief power and beauty upon the language in which they are written; this is easily and universally translatable with no real evaporation of the divine message which it contains. They appeal mainly to separate classes or to isolated intellects; this is "universal as our race, individual as ourselves." They are either for the aged or for the youthful, for the learned only or only for the ignorant; this, while inexhaustible to the learned, is intelligible to the ignorant: it neither sates the aged when familiar nor tires the young when new. It has shallows which the lamb can ford and depths which the elephant must swim. It is, to borrow the image of the greatest of the Latin Fathers, a great sea, whose smiling surface breaks in refreshing ripples at the feet of our little ones, but into whose unfathomable depths the wisest may gaze with the shudder of amazement and with the thrill of love.

And that this book does not stand on the same level as other books—that, in comparison with all other previous or contemporaneous literatures, it is sacred and they profane—all Christians are agreed. They are agreed, too, that it is not written by man's unaided wisdom. Many parts of it contain a history of events and actions which, to an extent that can be predicated of no other history, were evidently ordained by God as a distinct indication of his nature and his will; many parts of it reveal to us directly and apart from all allegory or metaphor the thoughts of God so far as the Infinite may be comprehensible to the finite; many, again, furnish us with hopes and promises which give a new impulse and a new dignity to life such as were never attained by human insight or even dimly shadowed forth in human words. All this is summed up in the one expression that the Bible was written by divine inspiration. This, too, is an expression accepted in all Christian communities, as similar expressions were by the Jewish. By St. Paul the Scriptures are called hallowed because given by God, holy as reverenced by men. The terms "God-inspired," "borne by the Spirit," or simply "inspired," are applied by the Fathers to the writers; and the books are rarely quoted in the early literature of Christianity without some qualifying adjective expressive of their sanctity, divinity or inspiration. The Church, in every age and every nation, has ever felt that the Holy Scriptures are indeed a tree of life, and that "the leaves of that tree are for the healing of the nations."

The broad and general meaning of the words "revelation" and "inspiration" admits of no doubt. By "revelation" we imply either the process by which God makes himself known to man or the knowledge thus obtained; and all such revelations have been completed and perfected by Christ, the Word of God, who declared and manifested his Father to mankind. By "inspiration" we mean that influence of the Holy Spirit which, when inbreathed into the mind of man, guides and elevates and enkindles all his powers to their holiest and noblest exercise. It is, if we may apply to it the language which Jesus the son of Sirach applies to wisdom, "the brightness of the everlasting light," "the breath of the power of God, and a pure influence flowing from the glory of the Almighty; which, being but one, can yet do all things; and remaining in herself, yet regenerateth all other powers, and maketh all things new," and, "in all ages entering into holy souls, maketh them friends of God and prophets." And since neither in Scripture nor by the Church is the nature or limit of inspiration further defined; since all Christians, and even many who are not Christians, are fully agreed that "Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary for salvation;" since, if the knowledge were in reality necessary for us, we should hardly have been left without further and more definite guidance; since "God judges that he may teach, not teaches that he may judge,"—might it not be well to accept this belief in the simplicity with which we have received it, and to avoid all further discussion of it as due to that spirit of system, that idolum theatri, that fruitful source of error and of bigotry, which has done such infinite damage to the cause of Christian charity and the conceptions of Christian faith?

The sacred writers themselves expressly claim divine inspiration and unhesitatingly and unequivocally assert that the Scriptures are the word of God. All the prophets in the Old Testament speak most decidedly of themselves and their predecessors as declaring not their own words, but the word of God. They propose things, not as matters for consideration, but for adoption; they do not leave us the alternative of receiving or rejecting, they do not present us with their own thoughts, but exclaim, Thus saith the Lord, and on that ground claim our assent. The apostles and writers of the New Testament also speak respecting the prophets of the Old Testament "as holy men of God, who spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." These writings are expressly affirmed to be "the oracles of God," and it is declared that "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." Our Saviour himself expressly recognizes them on various occasions as the infallible word of God and of divine authority. The sacred writers of the New Testament also adopt language which in its most obvious meaning claims the attention of their readers to their own instructions as to the word of God; and they also thus attest and sanction one another's writings in the most unequivocal manner.

The matter contained in the Scriptures requires a divine inspiration. Setting aside for a moment the prediction of future events and the excellency of its doctrines and morality, and merely admitting the veracity of the sacred writers (which we have every reason to do), we must admit that much of the information contained in the Bible absolutely required a divine revelation. The history of the creation, part of that of the flood, etc., as related in the Scriptures, could have been known to God alone. Mysteries relative to a trinity of persons in the Godhead, the nature and perfections of God, the covenant of grace, the incarnation of the Son of God, his mediatorial offices and redemption through his blood, justification, adoption, sanctification, and eternal blessedness in him, and the offices of the Holy Spirit the Comforter,—these, and many others of a like nature, God only could either comprehend or discover. Mysteries, therefore, in the Scriptures, rather confirm than invalidate their inspiration; for a book claiming to be a revelation from God, and yet devoid of mystery, would by this very circumstance confute itself. Incomprehensibility is inseparable from God and his works, even in the most inconsiderable, such, for instance, as the growth of a blade of grass. The mysteries of the Scriptures are sublime, interesting and useful; they display the divine perfections, lay a foundation for our hope, and inculcate humility, reverence, holiness, love and gratitude. What is incomprehensible must be mysterious, but it may be intelligible as far as it is revealed; and though it be connected with things above our reason, it may imply nothing contrary to it. Hence, it may be confidently inferred from these matters contained in the Scriptures that they were given by inspiration of God.

The scheme of doctrine and morality contained in the Bible is so exalted, pure and benevolent that God alone could either devise or appoint it. In the Scriptures alone, and in such books as make them their basis, is the infinite God introduced as speaking in a manner worthy of himself, with simplicity, majesty and authority. His character as there delineated comprises all possible excellence without any intermixture; his laws and ordinances accord with his perfections; his works and dispensations exhibit them; and all his dealings with his creatures bear the stamp of infinite wisdom, power, justice, purity, truth, goodness and mercy harmoniously displayed. While the supreme Being is thus described as possessed of every perfection, unbounded and incomprehensible in his essence and nature, and as the Creator, Governor and Benefactor of his creatures, the Scriptures represent man in a lapsed state, a rebellious and fallen being, alienated from God and goodness, averse by nature to all that is good and amiable and prone to everything that is sinful and hateful, and consequently exposed to the eternal wrath of God. The Scriptures, however, do not leave us in this wretched state, but they propose an adequate remedy for all our diseases and an ample supply for all our wants. They show us how to be delivered from the dominion and awful consequence of sin, and how human nature may be truly improved and perfected through the obedience, death and mediation of the only begotten Son of God.

The harmony of the sacred writers fully demonstrates that they wrote by the inspiration of the Spirit of God. Other historians continually differ from each other; the errors of the former writers are constantly criticised and corrected by the later, and it even frequently happens that contemporary writers contradict each other in relating a fact that happened in their own time and within the sphere of their own knowledge. Should an equal number of contemporaries of the same country, education, habits, profession, natural disposition and rank in life, associating together as a distinct company, concur in writing a book on religious subjects of even less extent than that of the Bible, each furnishing his proportion without comparing notes, the attentive reader would easily discover among them considerable diversity of opinion. But the writers of the Scriptures succeeded each other during a period of nearly sixteen hundred years; some of them were princes or priests, others shepherds or fishermen; their natural abilities, education, habits and occupations were exceedingly dissimilar; they wrote laws, history, prophecy, odes, devotional exercises, proverbs, parables, doctrines and controversy, and each had his distinct department; yet they all exactly agree in the exhibition of the perfections, works, truths and will of God, of the nature, situation and obligations of man, of sin and of salvation, of this world and the next, and, in short, in all things connected with our duty, safety, interest and comfort, and in the whole of the religion which they have promulgated, they all were evidently of the same judgment, aimed to establish the same principles, and applied them to the same practical purposes.

The multitude of miracles, which only the infinite power of God could effect, wrought in confirmation of the divine mission of the writers of the sacred Scriptures, affords us a most convincing proof of their inspiration. It has been already seen that the narrations of these miracles were published very soon after the time and at the places in which they were said to have been wrought; that they were performed in the most conspicuous manner before very great multitudes, enemies as well as friends; that they were of such a nature, appealing to the very senses of men, as totally precluded the possibility of deception; that public ceremonies which have been observed in all ages were instituted in memory of several of them; that the reality of them as facts was admitted even by the most determined enemies of divine revelation.

The astonishing and miraculous preservation of the Scriptures from being either lost or corrupted is an overwhelming instance of God's providential care and a constant sanction and confirmation of their truth and divine authority, continued by him in all ages of the Church. While the histories of mighty empires and innumerable volumes of philosophy and literature, in the preservation of which the admiration and care of all mankind seemed to conspire, have been lost and forgotten in the lapse of time, the sacred Scriptures, though far more ancient, and though hated and opposed by Satan and his agents in all ages, who sought with the deadliest hatred to cause their very memory to perish from among men, have come down to our own time entire and genuine, free from every material error and nearly in their original purity. With great wisdom, God, for their preservation, ordered an original copy to be deposited in the holy of holies (Deut. 31 : 26), appointed the careful and frequent reading of them both in public and private, and that every Hebrew monarch should write out a copy for his own use. Deut. 17 : 18. With astonishing kindness and wisdom has he made the various contending parties who had access to the Scriptures—such as the Jews and Israelites, the Jews and Samaritans, the Pharisees and Sadducees, the Jews and the Christians, and the various sects and parties of Christians—mutual checks upon each other for almost three thousand years, that they might not be able either to extirpate or corrupt any part of them; and by quickly multiplying the copies both of the original and translations as well as the readers of the Scriptures, he rendered it absolutely impossible to falsify them in anything important without causing the corruption to start up in every copy dispersed through the world and in the minds of almost every reader, than which supposition nothing can be more absurd and monstrous.

The prophecies contained in the sacred Scriptures, and fulfilling to this day, which form a species of perpetual miracles, challenging the investigation of men of every age, fully demonstrate that they are divinely inspired. Almost every historical passage of the Bible is a narrative of something antecedently foretold, and the New Testament is little else than a relation of the fulfillment of the prediction and types of the Old Testament relative to Jesus Christ and his Church. According to the prophecies in these books, the latest of which was delivered eighteen hundred years ago, and some of them three thousand years ago, the descendants of Shem and Japheth are ruling and enlarged, and the wretched descendants of Ham are still the servants of servants (Gen. 9 : 25, 27); the posterity of Ishmael have "multiplied exceedingly" and become "a great nation" in the Arabians, yet living like "wild men" and shifting from place to place in the wilderness, "their hand against every man, and every man's hand against them," and still "dwelling," an independent and free people, "in the presence of all their brethren, and in the presence of all their enemies;" the family of Esau has become extinct, "cut off for ever," so that there is none "remaining of the house of Esau;" "the sceptre has departed from Judah;" Nineveh is so completely destroyed that the place thereof cannot be known; Tyre has become "like the top of a rock, a place for fishers to spread their nets upon."

These, and many other events fulfilling ancient predictions very many ages after they were delivered, can never be accounted for except by allowing that He who sees and "declares the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done" (Isa. 45 : 21), thus revealed his secret purposes, that their accomplishment might prove the Scriptures to be his word. The prophecies also, though written by different men in different ages, have yet a visible connection and dependency, an entire harmony and agreement with one another, forming altogether a prophetical history of the world, as to the grand outlines, from the beginning of time to the consummation of all things, and accompanied with such a distinct notation of order, place and time as has been justly termed the geography and chronology of prophecy. As one prediction received its accomplishment others were given connecting prophecy with history, till the Revelation of St. John concluded the whole, and events have hitherto in every age and nation exactly corresponded with these predictions. So many extraordinary and improbable events which have occurred through so many ages and in so many nations, as foretold in the Scriptures, could only have been made known by the omniscient God himself, and must convince every rational mind that "the prophecy came not of old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." 2 Pet. 1 : 20, 21.

There are in almost every one of the sacred writers the clearest possible traces of an intense individuality, and these are the most distinctly marked in those whom we regard as the greatest of them all—in a David and an Isaiah, in a St. Paul and a St. John. Their style rises and falls as the great gusts of passionate emotion sweep over their mortal spirits, even as the melodies of the wind-harp rise into a scream or die away into a murmur with the rising and falling of the wind. In the Psalms of David we see the reflection of every mood and passion of his soul—the prostration of its grief, the fire of its indignation, the agony of its repentance, the dawning of its hope, the intensity of its despair. The portraiture of the living, breathing, sinning, suffering, hoping, repenting, triumphing man is impressed on every line and page. Nor is it otherwise with St. Paul. His words are a "perpetual battle," and so instinct are they with the whole being of the man that they have been compared to living things with hands and feet.

The style and language in which the Holy Scriptures are written are evidently human. They deliver to us inestimable messages, but often "with stammering lips and an uncertain tongue." The separate books differ from each other, according to all human judgment, in eloquence, in insight, in grandeur—nay, even in originality. Some of the sacred writers closely reflect the influence of the thoughts and expression of others. The later and minor prophets show unmistakable indications of the extent to which their minds and thoughts had been influenced by their greater predecessors: St. Jude echoes not only the thoughts, but even the very words and illustrations, of St. Peter.

The Scriptures are not written in any universal language. Even if they were, all language is inadequate to the full expression of the human mind; it is at best but an asymptote to thought. But much more is it certain that although the Bible admits of translation far better than any other book, yet when its thoughts are transferred from one language to another, much of their beauty and delicacy may be lost, something of their meaning and accuracy must be evaporated, in the process. The translator of Ecclesiasticus apologizes for seeming to come short of some words which he had labored to interpret; for, he wisely adds, "the same things uttered in Hebrew, and translated into another tongue, have not the same force in them."

Scripture is not God's only revelation to mankind; on the contrary, it is one of the priceless blessings which Scripture bestows upon our race that it both refers us to other sources of revelation and alone teaches us to interpret them. "In the deepest meaning of the essential and only truth," says Stier, "all things in the world are only variously embodied words of the Creator, inasmuch as by his mighty word alone they are upheld in being; hence, the same words in Scripture signify both 'word' and 'thing.'" "God does not," says Luther, "speak grammatical vocables, but true essential things. The sun and moon, Peter and Paul, thou and I, are nothing but words of God."

For instance, God is revealed to us in history. With God facts are lessons. Amid the wildest tumults of national confusion his voice is heard. Amid the most intricate perplexities of human designs his hand guides the crashing wheelwork of human destiny. His Spirit is in the wheels; and unless the Spirit moves, the wheels move not. No man can study the history of any nation without hearing a great voice rolling across the centuries which proclaims a law older and more majestic than any human legislation. Such Psalms as the one hundred and fifth, one hundred and sixth, the one hundred and thirty-fifth, the one hundred and thirty-sixth, and indeed many others, are all but comments on that one divine truth which is the only real philosophy of history, that "he is the Lord our God, his judgments are in all the earth."

Once more, God makes himself known by inward intuition, and above all by the voice of conscience to the mind of man. This is clearly and emphatically stated by the sacred writers in all ages: "There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding." "The spirit of man is the candle of the Lord." This, too, is referred to by St. Paul as a direct source of inspiration. "For," he says, "when the Gentiles, who have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves: which show the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness."

The extraordinary success which has attended Christianity, which is founded on the sacred Scriptures, while it proves the truth of the facts which they detail and demonstrates the fulfillment of the prophecies they contain, is a continued miraculous proof of their divine origin. Other religions have owed their extension and prevalence to the celebrity of their founders, to the learning of their advocates, to their conformity to the prejudices and passions of men, to the energy of the secular arm, or even to the power of the sword, but Christianity was totally destitute of all these advantages (if such they may be termed) either to recommend or enforce its reception in the world. Its Founder was put to an ignominious death by the common consent of his countrymen; its original promulgators were twelve illiterate men wholly devoid of every kind of worldly influence; its doctrines were opposed to the principles and practices of the whole world, deeply rooted by inclination and firmly established by extensive custom, by long-confirmed laws, and by the high and universal authority of nations. Yet by the simple preaching of the gospel, Christianity triumphed over the craft, rage and power of the infuriated Jews, over the haughtiness, policy and power of the Roman empire, over the pride of learning and the obstinacy of ignorance, hatred, prejudice and lust, over the hardened inclinations, deep-rooted customs and long-established laws of both Jews and pagans, so that, notwithstanding every conceivable form of opposition, within a few years after Christ's ascension it prevailed, in a greater or less degree, in almost every corner of the Roman empire, and in the countries adjacent, and multitudes, at the hazard of every temporal loss or punishment, readily believed, constantly adhered to and cheerfully and strictly practiced its pure and holy precepts. Nor has the success of Christianity been confined to the early ages only; for during the period of eighteen centuries, notwithstanding innumerable persecutions, together with the wickedness of professors and the inconceivable villanies and base indifference of the clergy, it has been more or less successful in reforming the hearts and lives of multitudes in almost every nation under heaven, and we may assert that even at present there are many thousands who have been reclaimed from a profane and immoral course of conduct to sobriety, equity, truth, purity and piety, and to an exemplary behavior in the relative duties of life. Having been "made free from sin, and become the servants of God, they have their fruit unto holiness;" and after "patiently continuing in well-doing" and cheerfully bearing various afflictions, they joyfully meet death, being supported by the hope of eternal life, "as the gift of God through Jesus Christ;" while they who are best acquainted with them are most convinced that they have been rendered more wise, holy and happy by believing the Bible, and that there is a reality in religion, though various interests and passions may keep them from duly embracing it. This would, indeed, be far more apparent were the gospel more generally or fully believed and obeyed. Did all men believe and obey the Bible as a divine revelation, were repentance and renunciation of all vice and immorality, universal or even general, combined with the spiritual worship of God, faith in his truth and mercy through the mediation of his Son and the fruits of the Holy Spirit, as visible in every true believer, they would form the bulk of mankind into such characters and would produce such effects as the world has never yet witnessed.

We believe, then, with an unfeigned heart fervently that Holy Scripture was given by inspiration of God; that in it is contained all that is necessary for salvation; that it is the most priceless boon which God has accorded to us, because it is the fullest and clearest revelation of his will and purpose toward us and toward our race—of the duties of our life here and our hopes in the life hereafter. We believe that more clearly than in history, more loudly than in nature, more thrillingly than in conscience itself, we hear therein the voice of God, and that if its accents had not been vouchsafed to us those other voices would have sunk, first into lamentable uncertainty, finally into absolute silence. And as regards the method of its deliverance, we have seen a multitude of facts, both external and internal, which lead us to believe that it was analogous to the deliverance of those truths which are vouchsafed to us from other sources; that it was only supernatural as the deepest facts of our spiritual experience are supernatural, and only miraculous as any communications must be miraculous whereby the finite is enabled to comprehend the teaching and will of the infinite. We believe that in reading it we are reading the will, the message, the dealings of God as they were made manifest by the light of his Spirit to the minds of the messengers whom he selected, but that these messages were not, for the most part, revealed by openings of the heaven and unearthly voices in the air, not by signs and wonders to startle and overwhelm, not by shocks of visible manifestations sudden and violent, but by spiritual agencies analogous to, though far intenser than, those whereby, in all ages, God, who is the God not of churches only, but of all mankind, has inspired and illuminated the hearts of men.

Genuineness of the Scriptures.

The books of the Old Testament have always been received as genuine by the Jews, and those of the New Testament by Christians, from the earliest period to the present time; and in addition to the earlier books being cited or alluded to by subsequent sacred writers, we have ample evidence afforded of the genuineness of the Old Testament by Jewish translators and writers, and that of the New by a regular succession of Christian writers, who quote or allude to a number of passages as we now read them, from the times of the apostles to the present hour; nor was their genuineness ever impugned by the most determined and acute Jewish or heathen adversaries or heretics.

The language and style of writing, both in the Old and New Testaments, prove them to have been composed at the time and by the persons to whom they are ascribed. Their diversity of style proves them to have been the work of various authors; and competent Hebrew scholars have shown that the difference of character and style of the language in the Old Testament, as well as the introduction of certain foreign words, can only be accounted for by the supposition that they were composed at different and distant periods, and by the authors to whom they are attributed, while the Greek, in which the New Testament is written, which is intermixed with many Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac and Latin words and idioms, accords only with the time, situation, country and circumstances of the persons to whom it is ascribed.

The moral impossibility of their being forgeries is an additional evidence of their genuineness; for it is impossible to establish forged writings as genuine in any place where there are persons strongly inclined and well qualified to detect the fraud. Now, if the books of the Old Testament be forgeries, they must have been invented either by Gentiles, Jews or Christians. But they could not have been invented by the Gentiles, because they were alike ignorant of the history and sacred rites of the Hebrews, who most unquestionably would never have given their approbation to writings invented by them, nor yet to any fabrication of the Christians, by whom, it is evident, they could not have been forged, as they were extant long before the Christian name had any existence; and it is equally certain that they were not invented by the Jews, because they contain various difficult laws and precepts, and relate all their idolatries, crimes and punishments, which would not have been inserted if they had been forged by them. Equally impossible is it that the books of the New Testament were forged, for the Jews were the most violent enemies of Christianity; they put its Founder to death, and both Jews and Gentiles persecuted his disciples with implacable hatred. Hence, if the New Testament had been forged, the Jews would certainly have detected the imposture, and the inhabitants of Palestine would not have received the Gospels, nor the churches of Rome and Corinth acknowledged the Epistles addressed to them, if they had not had sufficient evidence of their genuineness. In fact, these arguments are so strong that if we deny the genuineness of the sacred writings, we may, with a thousand times more propriety, reject all the other writings in the world as spurious.

With regard to the Old Testament, the original manuscripts were long preserved among the Jews, who were always remarkable for being most faithful guardians of their sacred books, which they transcribed repeatedly, and compared most carefully with the originals, of which they even numbered the words and letters. That the Jews have neither mutilated nor corrupted these writings is fully proved by the silence of the prophets, as well as of Christ and his apostles, who, though they bring many heavy charges against them, never once accuse them of corrupting one of their sacred writings, and also by the agreement in every essential point of all the versions and manuscripts (amounting to nearly one thousand one hundred and fifty) which are now extant, and which furnishes a clear proof of their uncorrupted preservation. In fact, the constant reading of their sacred books (which were at once the rule of their faith and of their political constitution) in public and private, the numerous copies of the original as well as of the Septuagint version, which was widely spread over the world, the various sects and parties into which the Jews were divided after their canon was closed, as well as their dispersion into every part of the globe, concurred to render any attempt at fabrication improbable and impossible before the time of Christ; and after that period, the same books being in the hands of the Christians, they would instantly have detected the fraud of the Jews if they had endeavored to accomplish such a design, while the silence of the Jews (who would not have failed to notice the attempt if it had been made) is a clear proof that they were not corrupted by the Christians.

Equally satisfactory is the evidence for the integrity and incorruptness of the New Testament. The multiplication of copies, both of the original and of translations, into a variety of foreign languages, which were read not only in private, but publicly in the religious assemblies of the early Christians, the reverence of the Christians for these writings, the variety of sects and heresies which soon arose in the Christian Church, each of whom appealed to the Scriptures for the truth of their doctrines, rendered any material alteration in the sacred books utterly impossible, while the silence of their acutest enemies, who would most assuredly have charged them with the attempt if it had been made, and the agreement of all the manuscripts and versions extant, are positive proofs of the integrity and incorruptness of the New Testament, which are further attested by the agreement with it of all the quotations which occur in the writings of the Christians from the earliest age to the present time. In fact, so far from there having been any gross adulteration in the sacred volumes, the best and most able critics have asserted and proved that even in lesser matters the Holy Scriptures of the New Testament have suffered less from the injury of time and the errors of transcribers than any other ancient writings whatever, and that the very worst manuscript extant would not pervert one article of our faith or destroy one moral precept.

Authenticity of the Sacred Writings.

The sacred writers had the very best means of information, and could not be deceived themselves. They were, for the most part, contemporary with and eye-witnesses of the facts they record; and those transactions which they did not see they derived from the most certain evidences and drew from the purest sources. Thus, in the four last books of the Pentateuch, Moses had a chief concern in all the transactions there related, and the authors of the subsequent historical books, as Joshua, Samuel, Ezra and Nehemiah, as well as the prophets Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel and Daniel, relate those events of which they were witnesses; and when they relate events that took place before their own times, they refer to certain public documents and annals, then extant, which might be appealed to by their readers. In like manner, the writers of the New Testament, as Matthew, John, Peter, James and Jude, were the immediate disciples of our Saviour, his constant attendants and companions throughout his ministry, eye-witnesses of the facts and miracles and ear-witnesses of the discourses they relate, and the other sacred writers, as Mark and Luke, though themselves not apostles, yet were the contemporaries and companions of apostles, and in habits of society and friendship with those who had been present at the transactions they record, as St. Luke expressly affirms in the beginning of his Gospel: "Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed amongst us; even as they delivered them unto us, which, from the beginning, were eye-witnesses and ministers of the word, it seemed good to me, also having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee, in order, most excellent Theophilus, that thou mightest know the certainty of those things wherein thou hast been instructed."

As the sacred writers could not be deceived themselves, so they neither could nor would deceive others. They were so many in number, and lived at such a distance of time and place from each other, that it was utterly impossible for them to carry on any forgery or fraud without being detected; and the writers of the New Testament in particular were plain, honest, artless, unlearned men, in very humble occupations of life, and utterly incapable of carrying on such a refined and complicated system of fraud as the Christian religion must have been if it was not true. The principal facts and events themselves are of such a nature as totally precludes the possibility of imposition—facts which appeal to the very senses of the men to whom the histories were first addressed. Thus Moses could not have persuaded a body of six hundred thousand men (to whom he appeals for the truth and reality of those facts, Deut. 11: 2) that they had seen rivers turned into blood, frogs filling the houses of the Egyptians, their fields destroyed by hail and locusts, their land covered with palpable darkness, their first-born slain in one night, the Red Sea forming a wall on the right hand and left for the passage of the Israelites, but overwhelming their enemies, a pillar of cloud and fire conducting them, manna falling down from heaven for their food, water gushing out of the rock to quench their thirst, and the earth opening and destroying his opponents, if all these things had been false. Nor could the evangelical historians have succeeded in persuading their countrymen and contemporaries that a man whose death was public and notorious was risen again from the dead, that darkness had covered the land at the time of his execution, and that there had been an earthquake at the moment of decease, if all these events had not taken place. And as it is thus evident that the sacred writers could not possibly impose upon others, so it is equally certain that they would not make the attempt. The whole tenor of their lives demonstrated, as even their bitterest enemies have confessed, that they were men of piety and integrity, and they could have no possible motive to induce them to propagate a deliberate falsehood. They sought neither riches nor glory, and their writings bear the most unequivocal marks of veracity, candor and impartiality. They use no panegyric or flattery; they offer no palliation for their own frailities and follies; they conceal nothing, they alter nothing, however disgraceful to their heroes and sovereigns, to their own nation or to themselves. How, then, can they be supposed capable of so gross an imposition as that of asserting and propagating the most impudent fictions? The writers of the New Testament especially could gain by it neither pleasure, profit nor power. On the contrary, it brought upon them the most dreadful evils, and even death itself. If, therefore, they were cheats, they were cheats without any motive and without any advantage—nay, contrary to every motive and every advantage that usually influences the actions of men. They preached a religion which forbids falsehood under pain of eternal punishment and misery, and yet, on this supposition, they supported that religion by falsehood; and whilst guilty of the basest and most useless knavery themselves, they were taking infinite pains and enduring the greatest labor and suffering in order to teach mankind honesty. This is a mode of acting so contrary to all experience, to all the principles of human nature and to all the motives of human conduct as to exceed the bounds of belief, and to compel every reasonable being at once to reject such a supposition as absurd and monstrous. Hence the facts related in the Gospels and Acts of the Apostles, especially even those evidently miraculous, must be true; for the testimony of those who die for what they assert, and of which they are competent judges, is sufficient evidence to support any miracle whatever.

The authenticity of the Old and New Testaments is further attested by the principal facts contained in them being confirmed by certain commemorative ordinances of great celebrity, which have existed among the Jews and Christians from the time the events took place which they are intended to commemorate to the present day, wherever Jews or Christians are to be found. Such, among the Jews, is circumcision, the seal of the covenant with Abraham, their great progenitor; the passover, instituted to commemorate the protection of the Israelites when all the first-born of the Egyptians were destroyed and their deliverance from bondage in Egypt, which was the immediate consequence; the feast of tabernacles, instituted to perpetuate the sojourning of the Israelites for forty years in the wilderness; the feast of Pentecost, which was appointed fifty days after the passover to commemorate the delivery of the law from Mount Sinai; and the feast of Purim, kept in memory of the deliverance of the Jews from the wicked machinations of Haman. Now, all these institutions, which have been held sacred among the Jews in all ages since their appointment, and are solemnly and sacredly observed among them to this day, in whatever country they sojourn, bear the most unequivocal testimony to the truth of the facts which they are designed to commemorate, and which facts are inseparably interwoven with the history and laws, and even morality and propheey, of the Old Testament. In like manner, the principal facts of the Gospels are confirmed by certain institutions which subsist to this day among Christians and are the objects of men's senses. Such is the initiatory right of baptism, which is performed in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, by which those submitting to it renounce every other religious institution and bind themselves to the profession of the gospel alone; the Lord's Supper, kept in commemoration of the life, sufferings, death, resurrection and the promise of the second coming of the Founder of their religion; and the observance of the first day of the week as a sacred festival in honor of Christ's resurrection from the dead. Now, as these monuments perpetuate the memory, so they demonstrate the truth, of the facts contained in the gospel history beyond all reasonable doubt, because, unless the events of which the Christian rites are commemorations had really taken place, it is impossible to conceive how these rites could have come into general use. If Jesus Christ never lived, nor taught, nor wrought miracles, nor died, nor rose again from the dead, it is altogether incredible that so many men, in countries so widely distant, should have conspired together to perpetuate such a series of falsehoods by commencing the observation of the institution of baptism, the Lord's Supper and the Lord's day, and it is equally incredible that by continuing to observe them they should have imposed these falsehoods on posterity.

The wonderful establishment and propagation of Christianity throughout the world is a most convincing proof of the authenticity of the New Testament, and consequently of that of the Old Testament, with which it is intimately and inseparably connected. Before the second century was completed the Christian doctrine—unaided by any temporal power, protected by no authority, assisted by no art, not recommended by the reputation of its author, not enforced by eloquence in its advocates, but by the force of truth alone—had triumphed over the fiercest and most determined opposition, over the tyranny of the magistrate and the subtleties of the philosopher, over the prejudices of the Gentiles and the bigotry of the Jews, and extended its conquests over the whole Roman empire, which then comprised nearly the whole known world.

In addition to the evidence already given of the authenticity of the sacred Scriptures, it is to be observed that many of the facts and circumstances recorded in them are confirmed by the accounts of ancient heathen authors, which demonstrates their perfect agreement with the most authentic records extant. Thus in the Scriptures of the Old Testament the first origin and creation of the world out of chaos; the completion of this great work in six days; the formation of man in the image of God and his existence in a state of innocence; his fall and the introduction of sin into the world; the longevity of the antediluvians; the destruction of the world by a deluge; the circumstance of the ark and the dove; the building of the tower of Babel; the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah; many particulars relating to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Joseph and Moses; the departure of the Israelites from Egypt and their miraculous passage of the Red Sea; the giving of the law and Jewish ritual; the fertility of Palestine; the destruction of the Canaanites by Joshua and the Israelites; Jephthah's devoting his daughter; the history of Samson; the history of Samuel and Saul; the slaying of Goliath by David; many remarkable circumstances respecting David and Solomon; the invasion of Israel by Shalmaneser and deportation of the twelve tribes; the destruction of Sennacherib's army; the defeat of Josiah by Pharaoh-necho; the reduction of Jerusalem and captivity of Jehoahaz;—these facts and others of the same kind are confirmed by the testimony of profane authors, and even some of them by traditions which still exist among heathen nations, and others by coins, medals and other monuments. Not less striking and decisive is the testimony of both Roman historians and Jewish writers to the truth of the principal facts detailed in the New Testament.

The testimony of our adversaries to the truth of the miraculous parts of the sacred history is the strongest possible confirmation of the truth and authority of the whole. Add to this that in the sacred history, both of the Old and New Testaments, there are continual allusions and references to things, persons, places, manners, customs and opinions which are perfectly conformable to the real state of things in the countries and ages to which they stand related, as represented in the most authentic records that remain, while the rise and fall of empires, the revolutions that have taken place in the world, and the grand outlines of chronology, as mentioned or referred to in the Scriptures, are coincident with those stated by the most ancient and creditable writers extant.

Such are the principal evidences, both external and internal, direct and collateral, of the authenticity and credibility of the sacred Scriptures; and when the number, variety and extraordinary nature of many of them are considered, it is impossible not to come to the conclusion that the sacred writings contain a true relation of matters of fact as they really happened. If such a combination of evidence is not sufficient to satisfy every inquirer into truth, it is utterly impossible that any event which passed in former times, and which we did not see with our own eyes, can ever be proved to have happened by any degree of testimony whatever.

HISTORY OF THE NATIONS MENTIONED IN THE SCRIPTURES.

PHILISTINES, MIDIANITES, EGYPTIANS, PERSIANS, SYRIANS.

I. Canaan lies between lat. 31° and 33° 30′ N., and long. 35° and 37° E., being bounded on the north by Lebanon and Phœnicia, on the east by the mountains of Arabia, on the south by the wilderness of Zin, Idumea and Egypt, and on the west by the Mediterranean and the land of the Philistines. Its length, from the city of Dan to Beersheba, is about two hundred miles, and its breadth, from the shores of the Mediterranean to the eastern borders, about ninety. The Canaanites, the descendants of Canaan, son of Ham, and the original inhabitants of the land, were divided into seven principal nations, the Amorites, Hittites, Jebusites, Girgashites, Canaanites, Perizzites and Hivites, and formed themselves into almost as many kingdoms as they had cities. These nations, who inhabited various portions of Canaan (see on Deut. 7 : 1), made trade and commerce the primary objects of pursuit; these naturally introduced riches; and riches produced luxury and dissipation. Their numbers increased exceedingly, and in the course of time they sent colonies into almost all the islands and maritime provinces of the Mediterranean. Forsaking the worship of the true God, they became addicted to the grossest idolatry and were abandoned to every wickedness and abomination, for which God punished their kingdoms of Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah and Zeboim, first by the ravages of Chedorlaomer and his allies (Gen. 14), and ultimately with their total destruction by fire and brimstone from heaven. Gen. 18; 19. The rest of the Canaanites were suffered to continue for four hundred and forty years longer, when, the measure of their iniquity being full, God delivered them into the hands of the Hebrews. Num. 21 : 21–35; 32; 34; Deut. 2 : 26–37; 3 : 1–20; Josh. 6; 21. Such Canaanites as escaped the sword or were not driven from the land were subjected to the most abject and degrading slavery or rendered tributary to their conquerors; but these, having seduced the Israelites to a compliance with their idolatries, recovered a considerable part of the strongest places in the country. They even formed themselves into a mighty kingdom in Galilee, which, governed by Jabin, oppressed the Israelites with great severity for twenty years. Their army, however, was defeated, and probably their kingdom destroyed, by Barak, though such as still remained probably assisted the Midianites and the Philistines to oppress the Israelites. Judg. 1–6; 10; 13; 1 Sam. 4; 13; 31. Nor were they finally subdued till the reign of David and Solomon, who reduced them all to the condition of slaves, the latter employing one hundred and fifty-three thousand six hundred in the most servile parts of his work, in building the temple, palace, etc. 2 Sam. 5 : 6–9; 1 Chron. 11 : 4–8; 1 Kings 5 : 15, 16; 9 : 20, 21; 2 Chron. 2 : 17, 18; 8 : 7, 8.

II. The Philistines were part of the posterity of Mizraim, the second son of Ham (Gen. 10 : 14; 1 Chron. 1 : 11, 12), who, leaving Caphtor, or the north-eastern part of Egypt, settled at an early period in a small strip of territory along the shore of the Mediterranean in the south-west of Canaan, having expelled the Avites, who had before possessed it. Deut. 2 : 23; Amos 9 : 7; Jer. 47 : 4. As early as the time of Abraham, Isaac and Ephraim they were a powerful people, in possession of several considerable cities, and even at that period discovered their enmity to the Hebrews. Gen. 20; 21; 26; 1 Chron. 7 : 21. Though Joshua allotted their territories to the tribe of Judah, they long retained the fortified cities of Ashkelon, Ashdod, Ekron, Gaza and Gath, which constituted their five satrapies or lordships. They were perhaps the most inveterate enemies the Israelites had to encounter, never losing an opportunity of doing them a mischief. They frequently conquered and held them in bondage; and though Samson, Samuel and others were raised up to deliver the Israelites out of their hands, yet they continued to maintain their independence till the time of David, who entirely subjected them. Judg. 3 : 31; 13–16; 1 Sam. 4–7; 13; 14; 17; 18; 31; 2 Sam. 7 : 5; 8 : 1; 1 Chron. 14 : 8–17; 18 : 1. Toward the latter part of his reign they attempted to revolt (2 Sam. 21 : 15–22; 1 Chron. 20 : 4–8), and not long after the division of the Hebrew monarchy they renewed the war with the ten tribes. 1 Kings 15 : 27; 16 : 15. They joined in the grand confederacy against Jehoshaphat to their own damage (2 Chron. 20; Ps. 83 : 7–18), but under his son Jehoram they ravaged the kingdom of Judah and sold multitudes of the Jews to the Edomites and Greeks. 2 Chron. 21 : 16, 17; Amos 1 : 6; Joel 3 : 6. Although Uzziah king of Judah had reduced part of their country, they again took up arms in the days of Ahaz, and seized upon part of Judea (2 Chron. 26 : 6; 28 : 18; Isa. 9 : 12); but about twenty years after, Hezekiah reduced the whole of their country to the brink of ruin. 2 Kings 18 : 8; Isa. 14 : 29–31. Not long after, they were attacked by the Assyrians (Isa. 20 : 1), and to expel their troops Psammiticus, king of Egypt, reduced Ashdod by a siege of twenty-nine years. Nebuchadnezzar, provoked with their attempts to assist the Tyrians, desolated their country, burnt their cities and murdered their inhabitants. Jer. 47; Ezek. 25. Under the Persian government they recovered in some degree their former consequence; but Alexander the Great, having destroyed Tyre, B. C. 332, marched against their cities, which were then garrisoned with Persian troops, took Gaza by storm and murdered or sold its inhabitants, and placed Macedonian garrisons in all their fortified cities. About B. C. 148, Jonathan, the brother and successor of Judas Maccabæus, subdued the whole country of the Philistines (1 Macc. 10 : 69–89), and about fifty years afterward Alexander Jannæus burnt Gaza and incorporated the remnant of the Philistines with such Jews as he placed in their country.

III. The Amalekites, according to the Arabian historians, were descended from Amalek, a son of Ham, and resided on the south and south-west of Canaan, between the Dead Sea and the Red Sea. Gen. 14 : 7; Num. 24 : 7, 20; 1 Sam. 15 : 7; 27 : 8; 1 Chron. 4 : 39, 40. They were very formidable enemies to the Israelites, whom they greatly annoyed in their march from Egypt to Sinai, to punish which God not only enabled Joshua to obtain a signal victory over them, but enjoined the Hebrews to exterminate them from the earth. Ex. 17 : 8–16; Deut. 25 : 17–19. The following year they assisted the Canaanites against the presumptuous Israelites (Num. 14 : 45), and in the time of the judges they first assisted the Moabites, and then the Midianites, against Israel, on both which occasions they shared the miserable fate of their allies. Judg. 3 : 13; 6 : 6. At length Saul was appointed to destroy them utterly, which he effected by cutting off the greater part of them (1 Sam. 14 : 48; 15), and a few scattered bands of those who escaped this destruction, having attacked and pillaged Ziklag, were completely destroyed or routed by David. 1 Sam. 30 : 1–20. After Haman the Amalekite, who by his enmity to Israel drew down ruin upon himself and friends (Esth. 3 : 7–9), there is no further mention of them in the histories of mankind.

IV. The Midianites were the descendants of Midian, the fourth son of Abraham by Keturah. Part of them inhabited the country near the north-east point of the Red Sea, where Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, was prince or priest, but the greater part of them dwelt on the east of the Dead Sea, their capital being Midian, on the river Arnon, Gen. 25 : 2–6; 37 : 25; Ex. 2; 3; 17. These northern Midianites were either allied or subject to the Moabites, and their women were peculiarly instrumental in seducing the Israelites to idolatry and other crimes. In consequence of this wickedness, Phinehas, the son of Eleazar the high priest, marched against them with a thousand men from each tribe, and executed the vengeance of Heaven by the almost utter extinction of the nation. Num. 22 : 4, 7; 25; 31; Josh. 13 : 21. They afterward, however, recovered so much of their former strength as to render the Israelites their tributaries and greatly to oppress them for seven years. From this bondage Gideon delivered his countrymen, and almost annihilated the Midianites, whose few surviving remnants were probably incorporated with the Moabites or Ammonites. Judg. 6–8.

V., VI. The Moabites and Ammonites were the descendants of the incestuous offspring of Lot. Gen. 19 : 30–38. The former dwelt on the east of the Dead Sea, northward of the Midianites, and along the banks of the river Arnon, in a tract of country whence they had expelled the Emim, a gigantic aboriginal race who were of the offspring of Ham. Deut. 2 : 10, 11. The Ammonites had their residence north-east of the Moabites and east of the Reubenites and Gadites, in the territory of which Rabbah was the capital, and which they had wrested from the gigantic Zamzummim, another part of the descendants of Ham. Deut. 2 : 18–22; 3 : 11. They were violently hostile to the Israelites, whom they terribly oppressed at various times; but after being successively conquered by Ehud (Judg 3 : 13–30), Jephthah (Judg. 10; 11) and Saul (1 Sam. 11), they were wholly subdued by David. 2 Sam. 10–12; 1 Chron. 18–20. For about one hundred and fifty years they continued subject to the Israelites, and after the division of the kingdom fell to the share of the ten tribes. After the death of Ahab the Moabites rebelled, but were severely chastised by his son Jehoram, and their country nearly ruined. 2 Kings 1 : 1; 3. Both nations united in the confederacy against Jehoshaphat, when their armies perished in the attempt. 2 Chron. 20; Ps. 83. The kings of Israel being no longer able to retain them in subjection, Uzziah and Jotham, kings of Judah, conquered and made them tributary, but it appears they regained their freedom during the unhappy reign of Ahaz. 2 Chron. 26–28. While the Assyrians ravaged the kingdom of Israel, the Ammonites and Moabites seized on the cities near them and murdered the inhabitants in the most inhuman manner, but soon afterward the Assyrians seized their wealth, burnt their cities, murdered or carried captive many of their people and desolated their country. After the death of Esarhaddon, king of Assyria, they again asserted their independence. They ungenerously triumphed over the Jews when oppressed and carried captive by the Chaldeans, but they were soon involved in the same calamity by Nebuchadnezzar, in revenge for their assisting the Tyrians when he passed through Syria in his way to Egypt. After the destruction of the Babylonian empire by Cyrus they returned to their territories, and successively became subject to the Persians, Greeks and Romans. After the captivity they took every opportunity to distress the Jews, till Judas Maccabæus, provoked with their insults, particularly during the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, invaded the Ammonites with a small force, routed their armies, burnt their cities and made slaves of their wives and children (1 Macc. 5), and about seventy years afterward Alexander Jannæus reduced the Moabites into a state of slavery to the Jewish nation. After the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans all the tribes around Judea were denominated in general Arabians, and before the end of the third century the Moabites and Ammonites were not known as distinct people.

VII. The Edomites or Idumæans were the descendants of Edom or Esau, who possessed themselves of the country originally occupied by the Horites, the descendants of Ham, who appear to have been finally blended with their conquerors. It was a mountainous though fertile tract on the south of Judah, extending from the southern end of the Dead Sea to the Red Sea, and including the mountains of Gebal, Seir and Hor, and the provinces of Uz, Dedan, Teman, etc. Gen. 25 : 25, 30; Deut. 2 : 12. Like their ancestor Esau, the Edomites were fond of hunting and war, and while the Israelites groaned under Egyptian bondage they became a powerful nation under their kings and dukes. Gen. 36. They appear to have applied themselves with great success to trade and commerce, their principal ports being Elath and Ezion-gaber on the Red Sea; and for upward of four hundred years they maintained their independence, till the time of David, who entirely conquered them, slew several thousands and compelled the rest to become tributaries and servants, placing garrisons among them to secure their obedience. Gen. 25 : 23; 27 : 29, 37, 40; 2 Sam. 8 : 14; 1 Kings 11 : 15, 16; 1 Chron. 18 : 12. Notwithstanding the attempt of Hadad to revolt, they continued subject to Judah for about one hundred and fifty years, being governed by viceroys or deputies appointed by the kings of Judah. 1 Kings 11 : 15–22; 22 : 47; 2 Kings 3 : 7. They revolted, however, from Jehoram, king of Judah, and ultimately succeeded in rendering themselves independent (Gen. 27 : 40; 2 Chron. 21 : 8–10), though afterward Amaziah and Uzziah terribly ravaged their country, the former taking Petra, their capital, the latter taking Elath, on the Red Sea. 2 Kings 14 : 7; 2 Chron. 25 : 11, 12; 26 : 2. Subsequently they invaded the south of Judah and slew and took prisoners a number of the inhabitants, but they were quickly punished for their cruelty by the Assyrians, who ravaged Edom and destroyed Bozra, their capital. When Nebuchadnezzar besieged Jerusalem, the Edomites joined him and incited him to raze the city to its foundations. This cruel and implacable conduct, however, did not long go unpunished, for about five years after the capture of Jerusalem, Nebuchadnezzar conquered Edom and rendered it a desolate wilderness. When the Chaldean monarchy was dissolved, they re-collected themselves; and while part of them were incorporated with the Nabathean Arabs, others seized upon the southern parts of Judah. Judas Maccabæus attacked and defeated them several times, killed no fewer than twenty thousand at one time and twenty thousand at another, ravaged their country and took and dismantled Hebron, their capital, and about thirty years afterward his nephew, John Hyrcanus, wholly reduced them, obliged them to become proselytes to the Jewish religion and incorporated them with the Jewish nation. Before the sacking of Jerusalem by Titus, a body of Edomites deserted the Jews and got off laden with booty, but since that period their very name has perished from among the nations. Jer. 25; Obad.

VIII. The Egyptians, or Mizrim, were the descendants of Mizraim, the son of Ham. Gen. 10 : 6, 13. Their country, which lay on the north-east of Africa, west of the Red Sea, and south-west of Canaan, was about seven hundred miles in length from north to south, being one long vale till where the Nile, which ran through the middle of it, was divided into several streams and emptied itself into the Mediterranean. It is extremely fertile in consequence of the annual overflowing of the Nile, and is said to have contained twenty thousand cities, the principal of which were No, Zoan, On or Heliopolis, Noph or Memphis, Migdol, Pithom, Rameses and Tahpanhes. Not long after the dispersion from Babel their monarchy was founded by Mizraim, which, according to the calculations of Constance Manasses, continued sixteen hundred and sixty-three years, till the conquest of Egypt by Cambyses (B. C. 525). Their kings usually had the surname of Pharaoh, under one of whom Joseph by his prudence saved the nation from the terrible effects of a famine of seven years' duration. Gen. 41–47. Their cruel oppression of the Israelites drew upon them ten fearful plagues, and at last their first-born were slain in one night and their army drowned in the Red Sea. Ex. 1–14. From this period no intercourse subsisted between the Egyptians and Israelites till the reign of Solomon, who, having married a daughter of Pharaoh, established a considerable trade between the countries. 1 Kings 3 : 1; 7 : 8. In the reign of Rehoboam, the son and successor of Solomon, Shishak, who it seems first united Egypt under one king and widely extended his empire in Asia and Africa, invaded the kingdom of Judah and despoiled the temple of its treasures. 1 Kings 14 : 25–28; 2 Chron. 12 : 1–9. In his absence his brother rebelled; and after his death his large empire fell in pieces, and Egypt itself bent under the Ethiopians. Provoked with their attempts to assist the Jews, the Assyrians under Sennacherib invaded Egypt about B. C. 712, and ravaged the country for three years. Nah. 3 : 8–10. After the death of Tirhakah the Ethiopian (B. C. 685), twelve princes seized upon the country; and after a civil war of fifteen years, Psammiticus, having conquered his competitors, ascended the throne of Egypt. Notwithstanding all his efforts to restore the power and felicity of the nation, his wars with the Assyrians in Palestine and his provoking two hundred thousand of his troops to retire into Ethiopia greatly weakened the country. Isa. 18–20. About B. C. 610, Pharaoh-necho, his son, attempted to extend his power on the ruins of the Assyrian empire, and took Carchemish, on the Euphrates, and rendered the Jewish nation tributary. But Nebuchadnezzar (B. C. 606) defeated his army, retook Carchemish and pursued the Egyptians to the frontiers of their country. Nebuchadnezzar, provoked with the Egyptians for attempting to assist the Jews and Tyrians, invaded their country (B. C. 572), murdered the inhabitants or drove them out of the land, burnt their cities and seized on their wealth and idols; and returning to Babylon, he left Amasis, who had rebelled against Pharaoh-hophra, king of Egypt. For about forty years this once populous country continued almost utterly desolate. The Chaldean empire being dissolved, the Egyptians, under Amasis, attempted to recover their freedom, but Cyrus, marching his troops into their country, obliged them to acknowledge his authority. After his death they again revolted from the Persian yoke, but Cambyses invaded and dreadfully ravaged their country and wholly subdued them (B. C. 525). They again (B. C. 487) shook off the Persian yoke, but were subdued by Xerxes, who rendered their bondage more grievous. Instigated by Inarus, king of Libya, whom they had acknowledged their sovereign, they again revolted (B. C. 460), but were reduced by Artaxerxes Longimanus after a dreadful war of six years. About B. C. 413, Amyrtæus, who had some time reigned in the fen country, attacked the Persian garrison with fury and drove them completely out of Egypt. After the Egyptians had struggled with the Persians for liberty about sixty years, a furious intestine war between Nectanebus and a Mendesian prince exhausted their strength, when Artaxerxes Ochus, taking advantage of it, invaded and ransacked their country and made it a Persian province (B. C. 350). When Alexander the Great marched into Egypt (B. C. 332), the Egyptians, weary of the Persian yoke, readily submitted to him as their powerful deliverer. For about three hundred and twenty-three years after this they were governed by the Grecian Ptolemies, under four or five of whom their country bade fair to recover its ancient splendor. The Romans next annexed it to their dominions in the form of a province (B. C. 30), and in A. D. 640 the Saracens, under Omar, conquered it and established the Mohammedan delusion, which has obtained there ever since. About A. D. 970 the Moslem caliph of Cyrene wrested it from the caliph of Bagdad, and he and his descendants governed it two hundred years. About 1171, Saladin the Kurd craftily seized it, and he and his posterity governed it for eighty years. It was next ruled by the Mamelouks, or slave usurpers, for two hundred and seventy-five years, and in 1525 it was annexed to the Ottoman empire, of which it still forms a part, being governed by a pasha and twenty-four begs, or chiefs. Thus has Egypt been the "basest of kingdoms," and has not been governed by "a prince of the land of Egypt" for upward of two thousand years. Jer. 25; 46; Ezek. 29; 32.

IX. The Ethiopians or Cushites were the descendants of Cush, the eldest son of Ham. They are supposed to have resided for many ages in Susiana, or Chusistan—i. e., the land of Cush (Gen. 10 : 6, 7; 2 : 13)—a district in the south-east of Babylon, and west of Persia. Being a roving and enterprising race, they extended their settlements westward into Arabia, and dwelt for some time about the eastern branch of the Red Sea (Hab. 3 : 7; Num. 12 : 1), whence they crossed over to Africa and occupied its southern coast, and gradually penetrated into Abyssinia, south of Egypt. Esth. 1 : 1; 8 : 9; Jer. 13 : 23. During the civil war which happened in Egypt after the death of Shishak, Zerah the Ethiopian appears to have seized on that kingdom. 2 Chron. 14 : 9–13. About B. C. 727, So or Sabacon, another Ethiopian, reduced Egypt a second time, and entered into a confederacy with Hoshea, king of Israel, against the Assyrians. 2 Kings 17 : 4. When Egypt was invaded by Sennacherib (B. C. 710), Tirhakah, king of Ethiopia, came to the assistance of his kinsman Sevechus or Sethon, and caused the king of Assyria to raise the siege of Pelusium and to retreat into Judea, and in a few years (B. C. 703) he succeeded to the throne of Egypt and reigned sixteen years. When Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, and Cyrus and Cambyses, kings of Persia, severally ravaged Egypt, the northern parts of Ethiopia shared the same fate, but the latter, in vainly attempting to penetrate into the interior, lost the greater part of his army. Since this period the Romans, Saracens and Turks have frequently harassed the northern Ethiopians, and the savage nations from the south have at times almost desolated their country. Ever since the conversion of the eunuch (Acts 8 : 26–39) Christianity has been known, and for about fourteen hundred years has had a civil establishment in Ethiopia, though it is disgraced by ignorance and superstition. Neither the repeated attempts of the Saracens or Turkish Mohammedans, nor those of the Roman Catholics, have ever been able to establish in it their respective delusions.

X. The Syrians or Aramites were the descendants of Aram, the son of Shem, and of Nahor, the brother of Abraham. Gen. 10 : 22, 23; 22 : 21, 22; 1 Chron. 1 : 17. Their country lay on the north-east of Canaan, between lat. 33° and 38° N. and long. 35° and 39° E., being bounded on the north by Mount Taurus, which separates it from Cilicia, on the east by the Euphrates, on the south by Arabia Deserta, and on the west by the Mediterranean. Anciently it appears to have extended beyond the Euphrates and included Mesopotamia, and it was divided into the several petty kingdoms of Damascus, Hamath, Geshur, Rehob, Zobah, Ishtob and Maachah. They were subdued by David (B. C. 1040) (2 Sam. 8–10; 1 Chron. 18; 19), but about sixty years afterward, Rezin, a servant of Hadadezer, erected a kingdom for himself at Damascus, which quickly extended over all Syria west of the Euphrates and proved a terrible scourge to the kingdom of Israel, and even to the kingdom of Judah. Hired by Ahaz, king of Judah, Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria, took Damascus, and transported the Syrians into Media. After the fall of the Assyrian empire they returned and repeopled their country, and part of them assisted Nebuchadnezzar against the Jews, but not long after, on some provocation, he marched his troops into Syria, burnt Damascus, Hamath and other chief cities, and transported the inhabitants to his eastern dominions. Under Cyrus they once more returned and rebuilt their cities, and became subject to him and his successors. Syria was again subdued by Alexander the Great, and on his death (B. C. 323) it was erected into an independent monarchy under the Seleucidæ. It continued to be governed by its own sovereigns till, weakened and devastated by civil wars between competitors for the throne, it was finally reduced by Pompey into a Roman province (about B. C. 65), after the monarchy had subsisted two hundred and fifty-seven years. The Saracens, in the decline of the Roman empire, next became masters of Syria (about A. D. 622), and it became a frequent scene of war between them and the Christian emperors of Constantinople. Toward the end of the eleventh century the Seljukian Turks wrested it from the Saracens, and erected one of their four kingdoms at Aleppo and another at Jerusalem. When the crusading armies poured into Asia, it became the grand theatre of the contest between the armies of the Cross and the Crescent, and its plains were deluged with Christian and Moslem blood for about a hundred years. The battle of Tiberias (A. D. 1187) made the illustrious Saladin master of Syria, and it remained subject to the sultans of Egypt till 1517, when Selim I. overthrew the Mamelouk dynasty; and Syria and Egypt became absorbed in the Ottoman empire.

XI. The Assyrians were the descendants of Ashur, the second son of Shem, and formed one of the most ancient kingdoms of the world. Their residence was on the banks of the Tigris, and comprised all the territory which lies between Media, Mesopotamia, Armenia and Babylon. According to some authors, the ancient Assyrian empire was founded by Ninus or Belus (B. C. 2059), and lasted till the reign of Sardanapalus, the thirty-first sovereign from Ninus (B. C. 820, or according to others, B. C. 747). The first king of Assyria mentioned in Scripture is Pul, supposed to have been the father of Sardanapalus, who invaded Israel in the days of Menahem. 2 Kings 15 : 19. Tiglath-pileser, supposed to be the same as Arbaces the Mede, succeeded to the throne of Assyria, and, invited by Ahaz, slew Rezin, king of Damascus, and carried the Syrians and part of the Israelites into captivity (B. C. 740). 2 Kings 15 : 29; 1 Chron. 5 : 26. Shalmaneser prosecuted the war which his father had begun, and having invaded the territories of Hoshea, king of Israel, reduced Samaria and laid the country under tribute (B. C. 728). 2 Kings 17 : 3. Hoshea having refused to pay the tribute he again invaded Israel, took Samaria, and carried the ten tribes captive into Media (B. C. 721). 2 Kings 17 : 4–6, 40; 18 : 9–12. Sennacherib, his son, provoked by Hezekiah's refusal to pay the tribute which Ahaz, his father, had promised, prepared to subvert the kingdom of Judah, but was pacified by Hezekiah's submission, accompanied by valuable presents. But contrary to their treaty, he again invaded Judah, and took all the fortified cities except Jerusalem, which he invested; but the angel of the Lord slew his whole army, consisting of one hundred and eighty-five thousand men, in one night; and returning to Nineveh with the utmost precipitation and terror, he was murdered by his two sons while sacrificing to Nisroch (B. C. 706). 2 Kings 18 : 13–37; 19; 2 Chron. 32; Isa. 36 : 37. Esarhaddon, his son, united the kingdom of Babylon to that of Assyria; and having invaded Palestine, he carried away the remains of the ten tribes and planted a colony of foreigners in Samaria (2 Kings 17 : 24–41; Ezra 4 : 3, 9, 10), and also carried Manasseh, king of Judah, captive to Babylon. 2 Chron. 33 : 11; Isa. 39 : 4–7. Saosduchinus, or Nabuchodonosor, the son and successor of Esarhaddon, having conquered Arphaxad, king of the Medes, despatched Holofernes into Palestine with an immense army; but that general was slain and his army wholly discomfited before Bethulia, in the manner related in the book of Judith. Saracus, or Chinaladanus, who succeeded Saosduchinus (B. C. 648), having rendered himself obnoxious to his subjects by his effeminacy and the little care he took of his dominions, Nabopolassar, satrap of Babylon, and Cyaxares, son of Astyages, king of Media, conspired against him. They besieged him in Nineveh, which they took and utterly ruined (B. C. 612); and thus subverted the Assyrian empire, which, from the days of Tiglath-pileser, had existed about one hundred and thirty-five years. They then partitioned his dominions between them, Nabopolassar becoming master of Nineveh and Babylon, and Cyaxares having Media and the adjacent provinces; and from this time history makes no more mention of the Assyrians.

XII. Chaldea or Babylonia, anciently called Shinar, of which Babylon was the metropolis, was situated between 30° and 35° N. lat. and 43° and 48° E. long., being bounded on the north by Assyria and Mesopotamia, on the east by Persia, and on the south and west by Arabia. The Chaldeans, or Chasdim, appear to have sprung from Arphaxad. Gen. 11 : 28. How long the ancient kingdom of Babylon, founded by Nimrod (B. C. 2233) (Gen. 10 : 9, 10–14 : 1), continued, we cannot certainly determine; but on the dissolution of the ancient Assyrian empire by the death of Sardanapalus, Nabonassar, or Belesis, ascended the throne of Babylon, and again founded the Babylonian monarchy. Isa. 39 : 1, 2. After a succession of several kings, Esarhaddon, by some means or other, reunited Chaldea to the Assyrian empire (B. C. 680), which he and his successors retained nearly sixty years. At length, Nabopolassar, hereditary satrap of Babylon, rebelled against the king of Assyria, as before stated, and rendered himself king. Nebuchadnezzar, having routed the troops of Pharaoh-necho at the Euphrates and taken Carchemish, succeeded his father (B. C. 605); and having raised a formidable army of Chaldeans, Scythians and others, he subdued the Syrians, Jews, Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites and part of the Arabs. Enraged that the Tyrians had withdrawn with their riches after he had besieged them thirteen years, he wreaked his vengeance on the Philistines and Egyptians, who had assisted them, and terribly alarmed, if he did not ravage, Ethiopia and Libya. He returned to Babylon laden with spoil; and having given himself up to idolatry and pride, he was punished with a temporary alienation of mind, as related in Dan. 4, and died after a reign of forty-three years (B. C. 562). He was succeeded by his son Evil-merodach, who reigned little more than two years, being put to death by his own relations. Neriglissar, his sister's husband, and one of the chief conspirators, reigned in his stead; and after a short reign of four years, being slain by the Medes and Persians in battle, he was succeeded by Laborosoarchod, a wicked and inglorious prince, who was put to death by his subjects for his tyrannical conduct and crimes. He was succeeded by Belshazzar, called also Nabonadius and Labynitus, the son of Evil-merodach and grandson of Nebuchadnezzar; but Cyrus having taken Babylon, after a siege of two years, Belshazzar was slain in the assault on his palace; and with him terminated the Babylonian empire (B. C. 538).

XIII. The Medes were the descendants of Madai, son of Japheth (Gen. 10 : 2), and inhabited the tract of country which lies between the Caspian Sea and Armenia on the north, Persia on the south, Assyria on the west, and Parthia and Hyrcania on the east. It was first raised into a kingdom by its revolt from the Assyrian monarchy under Arbaces; and after it had for some time enjoyed a kind of republican government, Deioces, by artifice, procured himself to be called king and made Ecbatana his capital (B. C. 700). After a reign of fifty-three years, he was succeeded by Phraortes (B. C. 647), by Cyaxares (B. C. 625), and by Astyages (B. C. 585); in 560 B. C., Cyrus reigned with Darius; after which Cyrus became master of Media and Persia.

XIV. The Persians or Elamites were descended from Elam, the eldest son of Shem (Gen. 10 : 22), and originally inhabited a small province east of Susiana, west of Caramania, south of Media, and north of the Persian Gulf. Previous to the time of Cyrus, Persia was subject to the Assyrian and Chaldean monarchs. He was heir to the Persian crown by his father Cambyses, and to the Median by his mother Mandane; and having, with his Medo-Persian troops, conquered the three powerful kingdoms of Lydia on the north, Egypt on the south and Babylon in the centre, with immense spoil, he founded the Persian empire (B. C. 536), which became under him and his successors one of the most considerable and powerful kingdoms of the earth. Artaxerxes Longimanus, having succeeded to the Persian throne, by his numerous conquests extended the empire from India to Ethiopia, married Esther and made Mordecai his chief minister. Esth. 1–10. The Persian monarchy subsisted for upward of a century after this period, till the unfortunate Darius Codomannus was overthrown by Alexander the Great, who conquered the whole Persian empire and erected that of the Greeks (B. C. 331), with whose history that of the Persians became blended.

About B. C. 250 the Parthians, a people probably of Scythian origin, erected a powerful kingdom in Persia under Arsaces, which continued about four hundred and eighty years, extending sometimes from the Indies to the Hellespont, and was long the terror of the Roman empire. About A. D. 229 the government was transferred to another nation, or at least another family, and proved a terrible scourge to the Christian emperors of the East. Ever since A. D. 634, Persia has been a distinguished scene of shocking miseries, oppression and crime under the Saracens, Seljukian Turks, Tartars, Turkomans, Sophis and modern usurpers.

XV. The Greeks, comprehending the Athenians, Spartans, Eolians, Ionians, Dorians, etc., were the descendants of Javan, the fourth son of Japheth. In the first periods of their history they were governed by monarchs, and there were as many kings as there were cities. The monarchical power gradually decreased, and the love of liberty established the republican government; and no part of Greece except Macedonia remained in the hands of an absolute sovereign. They gained many splendid victories over the Persians and gradually penetrated into their territories, and about B. C. 332, under Alexander the Great, they erected an empire of their own upon the ruins of the Persian, less opulent and showy, but much more powerful and warlike. Some time after the death of Alexander his dominions were divided into four parts, one part going to each of his remaining generals, and Greece fell to the share of Cassander. For some time it submitted to the successors of Alexander, and at last, after a spirited though ineffectual struggle in the Achæan league, it fell under the power of Rome and became one of its dependent provinces, governed by a proconsul (B. C. 168). On the division of the Roman empire (A. D. 338), Greece fell to the share of the emperor of the East, and its territories were dreadfully ravaged by the Goths, Huns, etc. For about four hundred years the Grecian empire has been subject to the Ottoman Turks.

XVI. The Romans, who derive their name from their capital, Rome, were descended from Japheth by his son Javan or Gomar. From an obscure and base origin, and from small beginnings and slow progress, they at length conquered almost every nation, and Rome became "the mistress of the world," her empire extending about twenty-six hundred miles from north to south, and three thousand miles from east to west. Seven forms of government were successively adopted. For upward of two hundred years from the foundation of Rome (B. C. 753) they had kings. From the expulsion of the Tarquins (B. C. 509 to B. C. 44) they were governed by consuls, tribunes, decemvirs and dictators, in their turns. After this, to A. D. 476, they were ruled by emperors, pagan and Christian, and from that period to A. D. 556 they were governed by Gothic kings. After they had been ruled by a race of princes remarkable for the variety of their characters, the Roman possessions were divided into two distinct empires by the enterprising Constantine (A. D. 328). After having been frequently ravaged by the Goths, Huns, Alans and Vandals, the Western empire began to be divided into ten kingdoms (A. D. 480). Justin II. totally abolished the distinguished honors of Rome (A. D. 566), reduced it to a level with the neighboring states, and made the exarch of Ravenna the deputy governor. The Romish bishop, having obtained an imperial mandate declaring him universal bishop (A. D. 606), began to grasp at civil power; and in A. D. 756 he actually became prince of Rome and the territories adjacent, and restored to that city part of its ancient privileges.

SECTS AND ORDERS MENTIONED IN THE SCRIPTURES.

PHARISEES, SADDUCEES, PATRIARCHS, PROPHETS, PRIESTS, ETC.

The Pharisees most probably derived their name from perushim, in the Chaldee dialect perishin and perishaya, and in Syriac pherishai, which signifies persons who are separated from others, which name they assumed because they pretended to a more than ordinary sanctity and strictness in religious observances. Thus in the Acts of the Apostles (16 : 5) they are said to be ακριβεστατη αιρεσις, "the most exact sect" of the Jewish religion, and Josephus, himself a Pharisee, says that this sect was thought, ευσεβεστερον ειναι των αλλων, to be more pious and devout than others, and to interpret the law with greater accuracy. In another place he says they boasted that from their accurate knowledge and observance of religion they were the favorites of Heaven, and contended that God was in strict justice bound to bless every Jew, to make them all partakers of the terrestrial kingdom of the Messiah, and to justify and make them eternally happy. It is very uncertain when this sect sprang up, though Godwyn, upon what authority does not appear, makes Antigonus Sochæus its founder, about three hundred years before Christ. Dr. Lightfoot thinks that Pharisaism rose up gradually and was long before it came to the maturity of a sect, though when that was he does not pretend to say. It is certain that in the time of John Hyrcanus (about B. C. 180) the sect was not only formed, but made a considerable figure; and toward the latter end of his reign, from their numbers and influence in society, they showed themselves, as a political party, to be haughty, insolent and intolerant. In the reign of King Alexander Jannæus and in the time of our Saviour it would appear that the great mass of the common people, attracted by their exterior sanctity, their zeal and their religious mysteries, were Pharisees. With respect to their tenets, they ascribed some things to fate, but held that other things were left in a man's own power, so that he might do them or not, or that all things were decreed by God, yet not so as to take away the freedom of the will in acting; they believed in the existence of angels and separate human spirits, and in the immortality of the soul, the resurrection of the dead—at least of good men—and a future state of retribution to all men, which, however, it would appear from Josephus, was to be accomplished by means of a metempsychosis or transmigration similar to that of the Pythagorean philosophy. The leading distinction of character in this sect, however, arose from their holding the traditions of the elders, which they not only set upon an equal footing with the law of God, but in many cases explained away the latter by the former. And thus, by their bigoted attachment to these traditions, "they made the commandment of God of none effect." Matt. 15 : 6. They were exceedingly fond of external mortification and affected every species of austerity, but there was a disgusting ostentation, self-conceit and hypocrisy in everything they did. If they made long prayers and gave alms to the poor, it was "to be seen of men" and that they might more easily "devour widows' houses." If they were scrupulously observant of rites and ordinances, of washing of hands and of cups, vessels and couches (Matt. 15 : 2; Mark 7 : 3, 4), if they fasted twice in the week and gave tithes of all that they had, even of "mint, cummin and anise," it was to the neglect of "the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith," and to lay the foundation of empty boasting, that they might say, in the fullness of the pride of their heart, "God, we thank thee, that we are not as other men are!" Matt. 23 : 23; Luke 18 : 11, 12. Their hypocrisy and ostentation in affecting a peculiar dress—long robes, deep fringes and broad phylacteries—as well as their eagerness to obtain the chief seats in the synagogues and to be saluted in terms of deference and respect in the market-places, were so conspicuous as to merit the severe censure and reprehension of our Lord.

The Sadducees most probably derive their name from Sadok, a pupil of Antigonus Sochæus, president of the great Sanhedrin about two hundred and sixty years before Christ, who inculcated upon his scholars the duty of serving God out of pure love to him, and not in a servile manner, under the fear of punishment or with the hope of reward. Sadok, misunderstanding this spiritual doctrine, concluded that there was no future state of rewards and punishments, and accordingly taught and propagated that error after his master's death. Hence they held that "there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit" (Matt. 22 : 23; Acts 23 : 8), and that the soul perishes with the body at death; they rejected all traditions, adhering strictly to the letter of Scripture, but preferring the books of Moses; and they denied the superintending providence of God, and held that man enjoyed the most ample freedom of action, having the absolute power of doing either good or evil as he thought proper, and having his prosperity or adversity placed within his own control, being respectively the effects of his wisdom or folly. Josephus says "they were a set of men churlish and morose toward each other, and cruel and savage to all besides;" but perhaps this account is not without a tincture of Pharisaical misrepresentation, as it does not appear corroborated by his own history. Though, if they were excited to good or deterred from evil, it must have been by the prospect of advantages or sufferings that usually follow in the present life as a natural consequence ordained by God, yet it must not be inferred that they were wholly a profligate and licentious people; for as Basnage observes, "their desire of enjoyment in this world kept them within the bounds of duty, and a great many would not concern themselves about eternal felicity provided they could be happy in this life." But certainly those who were disposed to be vicious would be encouraged, instead of being checked, by their lax principles. In point of numbers the Sadducees were an inconsiderable sect, but their numerical deficiency was amply compensated by the dignity and opulence of those who embraced their tenets, who were persons of the first distinction.

The Essenes, as Godwyn supposes, probably derive their name from the Syriac eso, in Pael asi, to heal or cure; for Philo calls those who lived a contemplative life Θεραπευται, physicians, not, as Godwyn says, because they studied physic, but because they applied themselves to the cure of the diseases of the soul. These Therapeutæ are distinguished from those whom Philo calls Practical Essenes, who were employed in the labors of husbandry and the mechanical arts, though only in such as belonged to peace. Both classes were exceedingly abstemious in their diet, their food being plain and coarse and their drink water. Their houses were mean, their clothes made of undyed wool, which they never changed till worn out, and they neglected all bodily ornaments and would not so much as anoint themselves with oil. They lived in societies and had all their goods in common; they were very exemplary in their morals, and were most rigid in their observance of the Sabbath. They held, among other tenets, the immortality of the soul (though they denied the resurrection), the existence of angels and a future state of rewards and punishments, and believed everything to be ordered by an eternal fatality or chain of causes. We have no guide to enable us to discover the origin of this sect, though it is probable it began a little before the time of the Maccabees, when the faithful Jews were forced to fly from the cruel persecution of their enemies into deserts and caves; and by living in these retreats many being habituated to retirement, which thus became more agreeable to them, they chose to continue in it, and formed themselves into recluses. Though they are not expressly mentioned in any of the sacred books, yet it is supposed they are alluded to in two or three passages. Thus St. Paul is supposed to refer to them in the Epistle to the Colossians (ch. 2 : 18, 21, 23), where what is said of "a voluntary humility" and "neglecting the body" is peculiarly applicable to the Essenes.

The Patriarchs, πατριαρχαι, from πατρια, a family, and αρχη, a head or chief, were properly the fathers or heads of families, and the term is especially applied to the progenitors of the human race, as Adam, Seth, Enosh, etc., and to those of the Hebrews, as Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and the twelve sons of the latter. They were at once the fathers, kings and priests of their numerous families in all their widely-extended branches.

The Elders in Scripture usually denote the senators, or seventy members of the Sanhedrin (Greek συνεδριον, from συν, with, and ἑδρα, a seat), or great council of the Israelitish nation, who were chiefly elderly men, and after the establishment of Christianity the pastors and teachers of the Christian Church were so called.

By Judges, in the common use of the word, magistrates in general, whether superior or inferior, are intended, but it frequently denotes those temporary supreme rulers whom God raised up to reform religion and deliver his people before the appointment of kings.

Israelites was the proper name of all the posterity of Jacob or Israel, and became appropriated to the ten tribes only after their revolt from the family of David.

The Jews, or Judeans, yehudim, were properly the posterity of Judah, but after the division of the nation into two kingdoms the term was applied to all the subjects of the kingdom of Judah, whether Levites, Benjamites or others, because the tribe of Judah formed the greater part of it, and also because their kings were of that tribe.

Hebrews, in the full extent of the word, denoted all the posterity of Abraham the Hebrew; but in the time of the New Testament a Hebrew or a Hebrew of the Hebrews (Phil. 3 : 5) denoted a lineal descendant from Abraham, without any intermixture of Gentile blood or language, in opposition to proselytes and Hellenists or Grecians.

The Hellenists, Ἑλληνισται, or Grecians, as our translators render, were those Jews who lived among the Greeks and spoke their language, many of whom were descended from parents one of whom only was a Jew. Acts 6 : 50; 9 : 29; 16 : 50.

The Proselytes, προσηλυτοι, so called from the obsolete verb προσελευθω, to come to, were persons of another nation, who came and were incorporated into the Church of Israel. The Hebrews called them gairim, strangers or sojourners, in opposition to natives. Hence the son of a proselyte by the father's side was termed ben gair, the son of a proselyte; by the mother's side, ben gairah, the son of a proselytess; and by both parents, by the artificial name bagbag. The Jews speak of two kinds of proselytes, one called toshevim, inhabitants, or gerey shuâr, proselytes of the gate, and the other gerey tzedek, proselytes of righteousness. The former did not embrace the Jewish religion, but were suffered to live among the Jews under certain restrictions; the latter became complete Jews, and were in all respects united to the Jewish Church and nation. There appears, however, no foundation for such a distinction in Scripture, which seems to recognize those only as proselytes who fully embraced the Jewish religion.

The Priests were the ministers of God in the sanctuary, exclusively of the race of Aaron, who alone officiated in the more solemn acts of offering sacrifices, burning incense and blessing the people. The high priest was the chief ruler of the Church of Israel, who alone was allowed and required to enter the most holy place. The second priest, or sagan, was, as is generally supposed, he who was appointed to officiate for the high priest in case he was in any way disqualified. The chief priests were the heads or principal persons of the twenty-four orders into which the sons of Aaron were divided by David.

The Levites were the descendants of Levi by Gershon, Kohath and Merari, who were in many respects servants to the priests, though often teachers and magistrates in Israel.

The Nethinim were so called from nathan, to give, because they were given to the Levites for servants, to do the meaner and more laborious offices, being the descendants of the Gibeonites, who were condemned by Joshua to the service of the tabernacle.

The Nazarites were persons separated to the service of God in a peculiar manner.

The Rechabites, who have improperly been classed with the Nazarites, were Kenites of the family of "Jonadab the son of Rechab," from whom they derived their name.

The Prophets, or Seers, were extraordinary ministers of religion whom God raised up to reveal his will to mankind, to reform Israel and to predict future events. The sons of the prophets were persons educated in the schools of the prophets which were instituted by Samuel, from among whom God frequently called men to the prophetic office, who on many occasions were extraordinary teachers of true religion when the priests and Levites neglected their duty.

The Scribes during the reign of David, Solomon and other kings were secretaries and officers of state (see 2 Sam. 8 : 17; 20 : 25; 1 Kings 4 : 4; 2 Kings 19 : 2; 22 : 8), but from the time of Ezra, who was himself "a ready scribe in the law of Moses," to the time of our Lord, they appear to have been under an order of learned men selected from the tribe of Levi, whose professed object was to expound and enforce the law of God.

The Lawyers, νομικοι, appear to have been an order of the scribes who professed to be skillful in the law of Moses, and to resolve any doubts or difficulties concerning it. See Matt. 22 : 35; Mark 12 : 28; Luke 10 : 25; 11 : 45, 46.

The Doctors were, as their appellation διδασκαλοι imports, teachers, and presided over the numerous schools that were instituted for the instruction of youth.

The Rabbis, or Masters, appear to have been teachers of a higher order, the most celebrated of whom had disciples who reverenced their authority and propagated their tenets with zeal. The Jewish writers make the following distinction between rab, rabbi and rabban or rabboni: Rab, they say, was the title of such as had been educated and taken their degree in some foreign Jewish school; rabbi was the title of such as were educated in Judea, who were accounted more honorable than the others: and rabban was the highest title, which was never conferred on more than seven persons, namely, R. Simeon, five of his descendants, and R. Jochanan. See Matt. 23 : 7; John 20 : 16,

The Tirshatha was the governor of the Jews appointed by the Persian kings subsequent to the Babylonian captivity.

Tetrarchs were princes or kings of the fourth part of a former kingdom.

Centurions were officers in the Roman army commanding a hundred men.

The Publicans were tax-gatherers under the Romans, who were, on various accounts, particularly odious to the Jews.

The Apostles, Αποστολοι, were persons selected by Jesus Christ to be witnesses of his life and death, and especially of his resurrection, and the depositaries of his holy doctrine, and were sent as his ambassadors to make known his religion by preaching and writing to all nations and all ages.

Evangelists.—Though the term Ευαγγελισται is now restricted to the writers of the four Gospels, it simply signifies preachers of the gospel, ευαγγελιον, and is applied in the New Testament to those persons who appear to have acted as the assistants of the apostles in propagating the gospel, and whom they accordingly sent on particular commissions, and especially to establish and regulate those churches which they had planted, as well as to plant new churches.

The word Bishops, Επισκοποι, properly denotes overseers; and though the same persons are in many places called both bishops and elders, yet it is generally and with great probability supposed that after a time the bishops became the superintendents, not only of the churches, but of the pastors also, each in a limited district.

The Deacons, Διακονοι, or ministers, were persons appointed by the counsel and direction of the apostles to take care of the poor and the secular concerns of the churches, from whom, however, it seems evident the evangelists and elders were frequently chosen and sent forth.

THE PERIOD FROM THE CLOSE OF THE SACRED CANON

OF THE

OLD TESTAMENT UNTIL THE TIMES OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

THE JEWS SUBJECT TO THE KINGS OF BABYLON.

Artaxerxes Longimanus, king of Persia, who in his twentieth year had commissioned Nehemiah to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, being dead, was succeeded, after the short reigns of Xerxes II. and Sogdianus, by his son Darius Nothus (B. C. 423). In the eleventh year of this prince's reign died Eliashib the high priest, after having filled the sacred office for thirty-four or forty years, and was succeeded by his son Jehoiada, or Joiada, the father of that Manasseh whom Nehemiah forced to retire to Samaria on account of his attachment to his idolatrous wife. It is uncertain how long Nehemiah lived at Jerusalem after his important reformations, but after his death Judea seems to have been added to the prefecture of Syria and wholly subject to the governor of that province, under whom the high priest dictated and enforced such general laws of policy as he thought proper. Darius Nothus was succeeded on the Persian throne by Artaxerxes Mnemon (B. C. 405), in the thirty-fourth year of whose reign, Jeshua being appointed by Bagoses, the Persian governor of Syria, to supersede his brother Johanan, or Jonathan, who had succeeded his father Joiada in the high priesthood, was slain by him in the inner court of the temple. For this atrocious act the governor imposed a fine of fifty drachms on every lamb that should be offered in sacrifice, the total amount of which has been calulated at somewhat more than one thousand seven hundred pounds per annum.

The payment of this fine, however, continued only till the death of Artaxerxes Mnemon, which happened seven years after (B. C. 359); which having made a change in the governorship of Syria, he who succeeded Bagoses in that province no longer exacted it. But the Jews were not long allowed to enjoy a state of peace and prosperity in the reign of Ochus, who succeeded Artaxerxes; for in the eighth year of his reign, having subdued the greater part of Phœnicia, which with Lesser Asia and Syria had revolted on his accession to the throne, he marched into Judea, besieged and took Jericho and carried away a great number of captives, part of whom he sent into Egypt and settled the rest in Hyrcania, along the shores of the Caspian Sea. After an interval of ten years (B. C. 341) died Johanan the high priest, in the eighteenth year of Ochus, and the thirty-second of his pontificate, and was succeeded by his son Jaddua, who held it twenty years. About three years after this event the Persian monarch was poisoned by the eunuch Bagoas, who placed the late king's youngest son, Arsaces, or Arses, on the Persian throne; but being also poisoned by the same Bagoses about three years afterward, he was succeeded by the unfortunate Darius Codomannus. He had not long ascended the throne before the infamous Bagoas, finding he was not one who would answer his purpose, resolved to remove him by the same means he had used to destroy his two predecessors. But Darius, being apprised of his design, made him drink the poisonous draught he had prepared for him, and thereby became firmly settled in the kingdom without further difficulty.

JEWS UNDER ALEXANDER THE GREAT.

At this eventful period, Philip, king of Macedon, having been killed by Pausanias, his son, Alexander the Great, at the age of twenty, succeeded to his throne, and caused himself to be appointed general of the Grecian forces against the Persians. With an army consisting of only thirty thousand foot and five thousand horse, he crossed the Hellespont and passed into Asia (B. C. 334); and having within a few days after put to flight the immense army of Darius, about five times the number of his own, at the river Granicus, he speedily made himself master of all Asia Minor. The next year Darius advanced to meet him with an army of six hundred thousand men; but instead of waiting for his opponent on level ground, where he might have brought his numerous forces into action, he led his army into the narrow passes of Cilicia, near Issus, where he was utterly defeated by Alexander. The battle of Issus was followed by the reduction of all Syria and Phœnicia; and Alexander marched into Judea to punish the Jews for granting the Tyrians supplies of provisions and refusing them to him during the siege of Tyre. While he was rapidly advancing to the metropolis, the high priest Jaddua, as well as the great body of the people, by sacrifices, oblations and prayers, humbly besought God to avert the threatened danger. It being communicated to Jaddua in a dream that he should go and meet the conqueror in his pontifical robes at the head of all the priests in their proper habits, attended by a numerous body of the people dressed in white, he ordered the gates of the city to be thrown open, and marched in solemn procession to an eminence called Sapha, which commanded a prospect of the temple and of the whole city.

As soon as the king approached the venerable pontiff he was struck with profound awe at the spectacle, and hastening forward saluted him with a religious veneration. While all stood amazed at this behavior, Parmenio asked the reason of such unexpected homage; to which Alexander replied that it was not offered to the priest, but to his God in grateful acknowledgment for a vision with which he had been favored at Dio in Macedonia, in which this very person, and in this very habit, appeared to him, promising him the empire of Persia. Having kindly embraced Jaddua, he entered Jerusalem and offered up sacrifices to God in the temple, where the high priest having shown him the prophecies of Daniel which predicted the overthrow of the Persian empire by a Grecian king, he went thence with greater assurance of success, not doubting but he was the person meant in the prophecies. At his departure he granted the Jews, at the request of Jaddua, the free exercise of their religion and laws, and exemption from the payment of tribute every seventh year, in which, according to their law, they neither sowed nor reaped. Egypt having quickly submitted to the conqueror, he built Alexandria and settled there multitudes of Jews, whom he allowed the same privileges as his Macedonian subjects. Rejecting all the overtures of Darius, the following year he marched against him; and coming to a decisive battle at Arbela, he routed his immense army of about one million one hundred thousand men, and Darius, being forced to fly for his life, was soon after assassinated by the treachery of Bessus. Having thus, according to the prophecies of Daniel, completely subverted the Persian empire, he rapidly extended his conquests from the Euphrates to the Indus, and from the Caspian Sea to the Southern Ocean; and about six years afterward, in the thirty-second year of his age and the twelfth of his reign, he died at Babylon, either in consequence of excessive drinking or from having been poisoned (B. C. 323).

JEWS SUBJECT TO THE KINGS OF EGYPT.

After the death of Alexander and the murder of all his family, his empire was at length divided into four kingdoms, among his four remaining generals. Cassander had Macedonia and Greece; Lysimachus had Thrace, Bithynia, etc.; Seleucus Nicator had Syria, Armenia and other Eastern countries; and Ptolemy Lagus had Egypt, Libya, etc. In the first partition of the empire, Palestine, with Cœle-Syria and Phœnicia, had been given to Laomedon of Mitylene, one of Alexander's generals, and had also subsequently been confirmed to him; but having been deprived of the latter two by Ptolemy, the Jews, over whom Onias son of Jaddua was then high priest, refused to submit to this new master, from their religious sense of the oath of allegiance which they had taken. In consequence of this, Ptolemy marched into Judea, took Jerusalem and carried one hundred thousand of them captive to Egypt (B. C. 320); but there, considering their loyalty to their former conquerors, he used them so kindly, even promoting them to places of trust and power, that many followed them of their own accord. About six years afterward (B. C. 314) he was deprived of Judea, Cœle-Syria and Phœnicia by Antigonus; and having again made himself master of these provinces, he immediately afterward lost them by the defeat of Cilles, one of his generals (B. C. 312). They continued in the possession of Antigonus till his defeat and death at the battle of Ipsus by the confederated forces of Ptolemy, Cassander, Lysimachus and Seleucus (B. C. 301), after which they were assigned to Ptolemy along with Egypt, Libya and Arabia. Some time after the recovery of Judea by Ptolemy died Simon the Just, son of Onias, and high priest of the Jews, in the ninth year of his pontificate (B. C. 292), and was succeeded by his brother Eleazar. He was distinguished for his wisdom and virtues, and is said to have completed the sacred canon of the Old Testament.

Ptolemy Philadelphus having succeeded his father on the throne of Egypt (B. C. 284), the Jews found in him as generous a protector as they had experienced in Ptolemy Soter. During his reign was made the important translation of the Old Testament into Greek afterward called the Septuagint Version, which event has tended more to disseminate the knowledge and confirm the authenticity of the sacred Scriptures than any other which happened from the time of their completion to the commencement of the Christian era. Antiochus Theos, having succeeded his father Antiochus Soter, son of Seleucus, on the throne of Syria (B. C. 261), maintained a long and sanguinary war with Ptolemy Philadelphus, which they at last agreed to terminate by a treaty of marriage, in which it was stipulated that Antiochus was to divorce his wife Laodice, and marry Berenice, Ptolemy's daughter (B. C. 249). But on the death of Philadelphus, about two years afterward, Antiochus put away Berenice and recalled Laodice, who, fearing another change, caused him to be poisoned, cut off Berenice, her son and all her Egyptian attendants, and placed her own son Callinicus on the throne. Ptolemy Euergetes, who had succeeded his father on the throne of Egypt, and had hastened to the assistance of his sister Berenice with a large force, in revenge for her death slew Laodice and subdued all Syria and Cilicia; and returning to Egypt laden with spoil, he passed through Judea, and offered many sacrifices in the temple at Jerusalem as a grateful acknowledgment to the God of Israel for his late successes. Callinicus, two years afterward, in attempting to recover his dominions from Ptolemy, was overthrown in battle; but the latter, hearing that his brother, Antiochus, was preparing to join Seleucus against him, came to an agreement with him, and peace was concluded between them for ten years (B. C. 243).

The Jews at this time were subject to Ptolemy, and Judea was taxed at the annual tribute of twenty talents, the withholding of which by the avaricious pontiff Onias II., who had succeeded his uncle Manasseh, would have proved the ruin of his country had it not been for the wisdom and prudence of his nephew Joseph (B. C. 226). Seleucus, having been killed in Parthia, where he was a prisoner, by a fall from his horse, was succeeded by Seleucus Ceraunus (B. C. 225), who, two years afterward, being poisoned, was succeeded by his brother Antiochus the Great. Not long after died Euergetes king of Egypt, and his son Ptolemy Philopator ascended the throne (B. C. 221); and Antiochus, taking advantage of the accession of this profligate prince, seized upon Cœle-Syria, and after a truce returned and defeated the Egyptian forces (B. C. 218). In the spring of the following year Ptolemy marched against him with a powerful army, defeated his numerous forces at Raphia, and forced him to retreat to Antioch. On the retreat of Antiochus all the cities which had been taken by force opened their gates to the conqueror, to whom they sent presents and promised allegiance. Ptolemy, having thus regained these provinces, made a progress through them; and coming to Jerusalem, he offered a great number of victims and made some valuable presents to the temple. But having been hindered from entering the holy of holies by Simon the high priest, who had succeeded his father Onias II. in the high priesthood the year before, he departed to Egypt full of rage against the Jews; and having there deprived them of the privileges they enjoyed, he assembled multitudes of them together at Alexandria to be devoured by wild beasts, but the furious animals, instead of hurting the Jews, turned upon the heathen spectators and destroyed a great number of them. Ptolemy, that he might be left to the uninterrupted enjoyment of his pleasures, having made peace with Antiochus upon very easy terms, his subjects were discontented and broke out into rebellion; and some time afterward he died, worn out by intemperance and debauchery, and was succeeded by his infant son, Ptolemy Epiphanes (B. C. 204). Antiochus, thinking this a favorable opportunity, entered into a league with Philip, king of Macedon, to divide the dominions of the king of Egypt between them; and Antiochus having marched with an immense army into Cœle-Syria and Palestine, he speedily subdued those provinces. Soon afterward, however, the Egyptians took advantage of Antiochus being engaged in war with Attalus, king of Pergamus, and sent Scopas with an army into Palestine and Cœle-Syria, where he was so successful that he took several cities, reduced all Judea and put a garrison in Jerusalem (B. C. 199). But the following year Antiochus, having desisted from his war with Attalus by the interposition of the Romans, marched against Scopas, overthrew him near Paneas, shut him up in Sidon, where he forced him and his men to surrender, and soon rendered himself master of all Cœle-Syria and Palestine.

Among others, the Jews willingly submitted to him, and rendered him such essential services that he gave orders that their city should be repaired, and that those who had been dispersed should return and inhabit it, and among other important favors confirmed them in all the privileges which had been granted by Alexander the Great. After this, being intent on his war with the Romans, he married his daughter Cleopatra to Ptolemy Epiphanes, and gave in dowry with her the provinces of Cœle-Syria and Palestine, upon condition of the revenues being equally divided between the two kings. Having in vain endeavored to corrupt her to betray her husband's interests, he fitted out a fleet of one hundred large ships of war and two hundred other smaller vessels, and subdued most of the maritime places on the coast of Asia, Thrace and Greece. But not long afterward, Acilius, the Roman consul, routed the army of Antiochus at the straits of Thermopylæ and expelled him from Greece; Livius and Æmilius beat his fleets at sea, and Scipio finally obtained a decisive victory over him in Asia, near the city of Magnesia, at the foot of Mount Sipylus, stripped him of all his dominions on this side of Taurus, and condemned him to pay twelve thousand talents for defraying the expenses of the war (B. C. 188). Covered with shame and disgrace, he retired to Antioch; and afterward, being under great difficulties how to raise the money which he had stipulated to pay the Romans, he marched into his eastern provinces to collect tribute and amass what treasure he could; and attempting to rob the rich temple at Elymais, he was assaulted and slain by the inhabitants of the country (B. C. 187).

Antiochus was succeeded on the Syrian throne by his son Seleucus Philopater, who was remarkable for little else than raising of taxes to defray the tribute which the Romans had exacted from his father. Being informed by Simon, the governor of the temple at Jerusalem (in consequence of his having quarreled with Onias the high priest), that great treasures were deposited there, he sent his treasurer Heliodorus to seize them; but when on the point of entering the sacred temple, the Syrians were struck with such a panic that they fell to the ground half dead. Soon afterward, after an inglorious reign of eleven years, Seleucus was destroyed by the same wicked hand that was the instrument of his sacrilege (B. C. 176). Antiochus, the brother of Seleucus, while at Athens in his return from Rome, where he had been detained as a hostage, having heard of the death of his brother and the attempt of Heliodorus to usurp the throne, and finding that the usurper had a great party with him to support him in his pretensions, and that there was another party forming for Ptolemy Philometor, king of Egypt, and that both of them were agreed "not to give unto him the honor of the kingdom," as the prophet Daniel had foretold, applied to Eumenes, king of Pergamus, and Attalus, his brother, and "by flattering speeches" and great promises of friendship prevailed with them to help him against Heliodorus.

Having by their means suppressed the usurper, he was quietly placed on the throne, and without further opposition he peaceably obtained the kingdom, as had been predicted in the same prophecy. Upon his accession to the throne he took the name of Epiphanes or the Illustrious; but being in every respect "a vile person," as Daniel foretold of him, and as is fully borne out by the character given him by ancient historians, he was given the name of Epimanes, or the Madman. He was scarcely seated on the throne when, being pressed by the Romans to raise their heavy tribute, among other means he deposed the good and pious high priest Onias, and sold the pontificate to his brother Jason, stipulating that the sum of three hundred and sixty talents should be paid him yearly, and afterward he deposed Jason and sold it to his brother Menelaus for six hundred and sixty talents (B. C. 172).

Incensed that Lennæus and Eulæus, the curators of young Ptolemy, should have demanded for their master the provinces of Phœnicia, Cœle-Syria and Palestine, which had been assigned for the dowry of his mother, Cleopatra, but which it seems had never been delivered up, Antiochus, having repaired the fortifications of these countries, marched his army toward the frontiers of Egypt; and meeting the forces of Ptolemy between Mount Casius and Pelusium, they came to a battle, in which Antiochus obtained the victory (B. C. 171). In the next campaign he had still greater success, routed the Egyptians, took Pelusium, ascended as far as Meniphis, and made himself master of all Egypt except Alexandria. Macron, the governor of Cyprus, revolted from Ptolemy, and delivered up that important island to Antiochus, and the effeminate monarch of Egypt, having done almost nothing for the defence of himself and subjects, fell into the hands of the conqueror. Both kings at this time frequently ate and conversed together at "one table;" but notwithstanding this appearance of peace and friendship, "their hearts" were really bent "to do mischief," and they "spake lies" to one another, Antiochus pretending to take upon him the care of the kingdom for the interest of his nephew at the very time he was plotting his ruin, and Philometor pretending to confide in his uncle in all that he was doing, at the same time resolving to break with him at the first opportunity.

Judea under the Kings of Syria.

While Antiochus was in Egypt, a false report having been spread of his death, Jason marched with a thousand men to recover the high priesthood, surprised the city of Jerusalem, drove Menelaus into the castle, and cruelly put to the sword and all other kinds of death all those whom he considered his adversaries. Antiochus, being informed of these events, and supposing that the whole Jewish nation had revolted, hastened out of Egypt to quell the rebellion; and being told that the inhabitants of Jerusalem had made great rejoicings at the news of his death, he was so provoked that, having taken it by storm (B. C. 170), he slew forty thousand persons, sold as many more for slaves, plundered the temple of gold and furniture to the amount of eight hundred talents of gold, entered the holy of holies and sacrificed a sow upon the altar of burnt offerings, and caused the broth of it to be sprinkled all over the temple. He then returned to Antioch laden with the spoils both of Egypt and Judea, appointing one Philip, a Phrygian, a barbarous and cruel man, governor of Judea, Andronicus, as bad a man, governor of Samaria, and continuing Menelaus, the worst of all, in the high priesthood. The Alexandrians, finding that Philometor was entirely managed by his treacherous uncle, made Physcon, his brother, king in his stead (B. C. 169).

Antiochus, hearing of this, under pretext of restoring the deposed king, but in reality to subject the whole kingdom to himself, made a third expedition to Egypt; and having vanquished the Alexandrians in a sea-fight near Pelusium, he entered the country with a great army and marched directly toward Alexandria to lay siege to the place. But finding he should be obliged to raise the siege, and in hopes that the civil war between the brothers would quickly render the country an easy prey to him, he seemingly again restored the kingdom to Philometor, excepting only Pelusium, and returned to Antioch. Suspecting his designs, however, Philometor and Physcon agreed to reign jointly in peace, which so enraged Antiochus that he again invaded Egypt, ravaged and subdued it as far as Memphis, and advanced to besiege Alexandria. But Caius Popilius Lænas and other Roman ambassadors, arriving in Macedonian ships, charged him in the most peremptory manner to withdraw his forces from Egypt if he regarded the friendship of their state (B. C. 168). Mad with rage at this disappointment, while marching back through Palestine he detached from his army twenty thousand men, under the command of Apollonius, with orders to destroy Jerusalem, to put all the men to the sword, and to make slaves of the women and children. These orders were most rigorously put in execution on a Sabbath-day, when all the people were assembled at public worship, so that none escaped but such as could hide themselves in caves or reach the mountains by flight.

After having spoiled the city of all its riches, they set it on fire in several places, demolished the houses and pulled down the walls round about it, and then with the ruins they built a strong fortress on Acra, an eminence which overlooked and commanded the temple, whence the garrison might sally forth and murder such as dared to worship there. After the infuriated monarch had returned to Antioch, he issued a decree to oblige all people in his dominions to conform to the religion of the Greeks, and sent one Athenæus, a Grecian idolater, to initiate the Jews in the idolatrous rites and to punish with the utmost cruel deaths those who refused. On his arrival at Jerusalem, assisted by the apostate Jews, he caused all sacrifices to the God of Israel to cease, suppressed all the observances of the Jewish religion, polluted the temple itself and made it unfit for the worship of God, profaned their Sabbaths and festivals, forbade their children to be circumcised, burned every copy of the law which could be found, dedicated the temple to Jupiter Olympius, erected his statue on the altar of burnt-offerings, and put every one to death who was found to have acted contrary to what the king had decreed.

Mattathias, great-grandson of Asmonæus, from whom the family were called Asmonæans, retired with his five sons, John, Simon, Judas, Eleazar and Jonathan, from the persecution at Jerusalem to a town called Modin, his native place, in the tribe of Dan. Apelles, however, one of the king's officers, came to the place of their retreat in order to enforce the execution of the king's commands; and having called the people together, he addressed himself to Mattathias to persuade him to embrace idolatry, promising him great favor and riches. This the good priest not only scornfully rejected, but slew the first Jew who dared to approach the idolatrous altar, and then, turning upon the king's commissioner, he despatched him and all his attendants, with the assistance of his sons and those that were with him; and putting himself at the head of his family and as many Jews as he could collect, he broke down the idols and altars of the heathens and retired into the mountains. Here being joined by numbers who were strict adherents to the law of their God, and especially by those termed Asideans, and having thus gotten together such a company as made the appearance of a small army, he came out of his fastnesses and took the field, and marching round the cities of Judah pulled down the heathen altars, restored circumcision, cut off all apostates, destroyed all persecutors wherever he came, and again re-established the true worship of God in all places where he prevailed (B. C. 167). But Mattathias, worn out with old age and fatigue, died the next year; and his son Judas, surnamed Maccabæus, according to the appointment of his father, succeeded to the command of the army.

Judas, however, sufficiently compensated for the loss they had sustained by the death of the venerable priest; for having successively vanquished Apollonius, governor of Samaria, Seron, deputy governor of Cœle-Syria, Ptolemy Macron, Nicanor and Gorgias, three eminent commanders, Timotheus and Bacchides, governors of the country beyond Jordan, and at last Lysias himself, governor of all the country west of the Euphrates, he recovered the temple, repaired and purified it, restored the pure worship of God, appointed the feast of the dedication to be kept annually, and repaired Jerusalem, which had almost been reduced to a heap of ruins (B. C. 165). Antiochus at this time was engaged in an expedition against the Persians, who, with the Armenians, had revolted from him; and when returning, having heard of the success of the Jews under Judas and the defeat of his generals, he threatened utterly to destroy the whole nation and make Jerusalem their common burial-place. But while these proud words were in his mouth the judgments of God overtook him, for he was smitten with an incurable disease, being seized with grievous torments in his bowels, and a most intolerable ulcer, which terminated in his death (B. C. 164). He was succeeded in the kingdom by his son Antiochus Eupator, a minor nine years old, under the tuition of Lysias, who combined with the Idumeans and other neighboring nations to destroy the whole race of Israel.

Judas, informed of this, carried the war into the enemies' country, and for some years proved a terrible scourge to the Idumeans, Syrians and Arabs, and other heathen nations, till he was slain by Bacchides, the general of Demetrius Soter (the son of Seleucus Philopater, who had seized upon the kingdom of Syria), in revenge for the defeat and death of Nicanor (B. C. 161). He was succeeded in the command by his brother Jonathan, who, with his brother Simon, continued to rectify with astonishing bravery and prudence the disorders both in Church and State; and Onias, the high priest, having settled in Egypt, where he afterward built a temple for the use of his countrymen, according to the form of that in Jerusalem, they officiated in Judea both as high priests and civil governors during the reigns of Alexander Balas and Demetrius Nicator.

Judea under her own Princes.

Jonathan having been treacherously slain by the usurper Typhon (B. C. 144), and Simon and his sons Judas and Mattathias murdered by Ptolemy, his son-in-law, his son John Hyrcanus succeeded to the pontificate and government of Judea (B. C. 135). He was at first constrained to make a disadvantageous peace with the Syrians; but on the accession of Demetrius Nicator (B. C. 130), Hyrcanus shook off the Syrian yoke, and maintained his independence during the revolutions which followed in Syria by the succession of the impostor Alexander Zebina, Antiochus Gryphus and Antiochus Cyzicenus. He enlarged his borders by seizing upon various places in Syria, Phœnicia and Arabia, and took Shechem and destroyed the temple on Mount Gerizim (B. C. 130), extended his conquests over the Idumeans, whom he compelled to embrace the Jewish religion (B. C. 129), renewed the league with the Romans which had been made by his father, Simon, by which he obtained greater privileges and advantages than the nation ever enjoyed before (B. C. 128), and under the conduct of his sons Aristobulus and Antigonus he utterly destroyed Samaria (B. C. 109). After this he governed Judea, Samaria and Galilee for two years, when, dying in the thirtieth year of his administration, he left the high priesthood and sovereignty to Aristobulus, his eldest son (B. C. 107).

This prince, who was the first since the captivity who put on the diadem and assumed the title of king, after a short reign of one year, was succeeded by his brother, Alexander Jannæus, who subdued the Philistines and obliged them to embrace the Jewish religion, burnt Gaza, their capital (B. C. 97), and also reduced the Moabites, Ammonites and part of the Arabians, and after a reign of twenty-seven years died of a quartan ague, brought on by intemperance, while besieging Ragaba, in the country of the Gerasens (B. C. 79). After his death his widow, Alexandra, governed the nation with much prudence for nine years, till B. C. 70; and she was scarcely dead before Aristobulus, joined by multitudes who hated the Pharisees, who had tyrannized during the preceding reign, contended for the crown and high priesthood against Hyrcanus, his elder but indolent brother, and succeeded in dispossessing him after a reign of only three months. Aretas, king of Arabia, having assisted Hyrcanus, besieged Aristobulus in the temple; but Aristobulus calling in the assistance of the Romans, he was obliged to withdraw his troops (B. C. 65). Having, however, applied to Pompey, the Roman general, he decided for Hyrcanus, took Jerusalem and seated him in the government, though he would not permit him to wear the diadem, and made Judea tributary to the Romans (B. C. 63). He with several of his officers also entered the holy of holies, after which he never prospered; and soon after, Crassus, bent on his fatal Parthian expedition, pillaged the temple of about ten thousand talents of silver (B. C. 54). At length Antipater, a noble but crafty Idumean, by favor of Julius Cæsar (who had prevailed against Pompey), was made procurator of Judea, and Hyrcanus continued in the high priesthood (B. C. 47).

After Antipater's death, his son, Herod the Great, by the assistance of Antony, the Roman triumvir, and through much barbarity and bloodshed, obtained the regal dignity (B. C. 40), which authority was at length confirmed by Augustus Cæsar (B. C. 30). He maintained his dignity with great ability, but with the most atrocious cruelty in his own family as well as among others, till the birth of Christ. In the interval he built many cities, and to ingratiate himself with the Jews almost rebuilt the temple. His atrociously cruel attempt to murder the infant Saviour is recorded by the evangelist, and soon afterward he died most miserably. After some years, during which the dominions of Herod were governed by his sons, Judea became a Roman province, and the sceptre departed from Judah, for Shiloh was come; and after being under the government of Roman procurators for some years, the whole Jewish state was at length subverted by Titus, the son of Vespasian (A. D. 70).

COMPARATIVE SYSTEMS OF SCRIPTURE CHRONOLOGY.

Scripture Chronology.

Independently of scientific evidence, the following are our data for determining the chronological relations of primeval history to the Christian era.

From the creation to the deluge, the generations of the patriarchs form our only guide. These, however, are given differently in different copies of the Scriptures, the sum being, in the LXX., six hundred and six years longer, and in the Samarian Pentateuch three hundred and forty-nine years shorter, than in the received Hebrew text. The ancient chronologers give further variations.

From the deluge to the death of Joseph, and thence to the exodus, the patriarchal years are again our chief guide; but other data are obtained from various statements respecting the interval from the call of Abraham to the giving of the law and the sojourning of the Israelites in Egypt. Gen. 15 : 13; Ex. 12 : 41; Acts 7 : 6; Gal. 3 : 17. The main point in dispute here is whether four hundred and thirty years was the whole period from the call of Abraham to the exodus, or only the time of the sojourning of the Israelites in Egypt.

From the exodus to the building of Solomon's temple the interval is positively stated in the received Hebrew text as four hundred and eighty years. 1 Kings 6 : 1. But the reading is disputed; it is alleged to be inconsistent with the four hundred and fifty years assigned by St. Paul to the judges (Acts 13 : 20), and the longer period is made out by adding together the numbers given in the book of Judges. Some chronologers, on the other hand, compute from the many genealogies which we have for this period.

From the building of the temple to its destruction and the captivity of Zedekiah we have the annals of the kings of Israel and Judah. Here the difficulties are so slight that the principal chronologers only differ by fifteen years in nearly five hundred.

The epoch of the destruction of the temple is fixed by a concurrence of proofs from sacred and profane history, with only a variation of one, or at the most two, years, between B. C. 588 and 586. Clinton's date is June, B. C. 587. From this epoch we obtain for the building of Solomon's temple the date of about B. C. 1012. The highest computation, that of Hales, makes the date B. C. 1027.

From this point the reckoning backward is of course affected by the differences already noticed. Out of these have arisen three leading systems of chronology.

The rabbinical, a system handed down traditionally by the Jewish doctors, places the creation two hundred and forty-four years later than our received chronology, in B. C. 3750, and the exodus in B. C. 1314. This leaves from the exodus to the building of the temple an interval of only three hundred years, a term calculated chiefly from the genealogies, and only reconciled with the numbers given in the book of Judges by the most arbitrary alterations. Genealogies, however, are no safe basis for chronology, especially when, as can be proved in many cases, links are omitted in their statement. When we come to examine them closely, we find that many are broken without being in consequence technically defective as Hebrew genealogies. A modern pedigree thus broken would be defective, but the principle of these genealogies must have been different. A notable instance is that of the genealogy of our Saviour given by St. Matthew. In this genealogy Joram is immediately followed by Ozias, as if his son, Ahaziah, Joash and Amaziah being omitted. In Ezra's genealogy (Ezra 7 : 1–5) there is a similar omission, which in so famous a line can scarcely be attributed to the carelessness of a copyist. There are also examples of a man being called the son of a remote ancestor in a statement of a genealogical form. We cannot, therefore, venture to use the Hebrew genealogical lists to compute intervals of time, except where we can prove each descent to be immediate. But even if we can do this, we have still to be sure that we can determine the average length of each generation.

The short or received chronology is that which has been generally followed in the West since the time of Jerome, and has been adopted in the margin of the authorized English version, according to the system of its ablest advocate, Archbishop Ussher. Its leading data are, first, the adoption of the numbers of the Hebrew text for the patriarchal genealogies; secondly, the reckoning of the four hundred and thirty years from the call of Abraham to the exodus; and lastly, the adhering to the four hundred and eighty years for the period from the exodus to the building of the temple. As we are only giving a general account of these different systems, and not attempting their full discussion, we cannot now explain how the last datum is reconciled with the four hundred and fifty years assigned by St. Paul to the judges, or with the numbers obtained from their annals. The great chronologer Petavius is in substantial agreement with Ussher; but for reasons which cannot now be stated, he places the exodus and the call of Abraham each forty years earlier, the deluge and the creation each twenty years later, than Ussher.

We have given Ussher's dates in the text of this work as those most commonly received; but for the reasons already mentioned, we believe that the Jewish genealogies are no safe basis for chronology, and that it is therefore impossible to assign any real dates to the creation and the patriarchal history.

The long chronology has been in recent times the most formidable competitor of the short system. Its leading advocates are Hales, Jackson and Des Vignolles. With some minor differences, they agree in adopting the Septuagint numbers for the ages of the patriarchs and the long interval from the exodus to the building of the temple. Their arguments for the former view are very ably answered by Clinton, who adopts the short period from the creation to the call of Abraham, and the four hundred and thirty years on to the exodus, but reckons six hundred and twelve years from thence to the foundation of the temple.

The following table exhibits the principal dates as given by the leading modern chronologers:

	Short System.			Long System.
	Ussher.	Petavius.	Clinton.	Hales.	Jackson.
	B. C.	B. C.	B. C.	B. C.	B. C.
Creation	4004	3983	4138	5411	5426
Flood	2349	2327	2482	3155	3170
Call of Abraham	1921	1961	2055	2078	2023
Exodus	1491	1531	1625	1648	1593
Foundation of temple	1012	1012	1013	1027	1014
Destruction of temple	588	589	587	586	586

The system of Ussher has prevailed principally in the British empire, and among the divines of the Reformed Church on the continents of Europe and America; that of Petavius among the divines of the Church of Rome. The dates of Ussher chiefly have been annexed to the last translations of the Bible, and established by public opinion and authority. (See Chronological Tables.)

Noah's Ark, Passover, Baal and Schools of the Prophets.

Noah's Ark.

The precise meaning of the Hebrew word (têbâh) translated ark is uncertain. The word occurs only in Gen. 6–8 and in Ex. 2 : 3. In all probability it is to the old Egyptian that we are to look for its original form. Bunsen in his vocabulary gives tba, "a chest," tpt, "a boat," and in the Coptic version of Ex. 2 : 3, 5, thebi is the rendering of têbâh. This "chest," or "boat," was to be made of gopher—i. e., cypress—wood, a kind of timber which, both for its lightness and its durability, was employed by the Phœnicians for building their vessels. The planks of the ark, after being put together, were to be protected by a coating of pitch, or rather bitumen, which was to be laid on both inside and outside, as the most effectual means of making it water-tight, and perhaps also as a protection against the attacks of marine animals. The ark was to consist of a number of "nests" or small compartments, with a view no doubt to the convenient distribution of the different animals and their food. These were to be arranged in three tiers, one above another; "with lower, second, and third (stories) shalt thou make it." Means were also to be provided for letting light into the ark. In the Authorized Version we read, "A window shalt thou make to the ark, and in a cubit shalt thou finish it above"—words which, it must be confessed, convey no very intelligible idea. The original, however, is obscure, and has been differently interpreted. What the "window" or "light-hole" was is very puzzling. It was to be at the top of the ark apparently. If the words "unto a cubit shalt thou finish it above" refer to the window and not to the ark itself, they seem to imply that this aperture or skylight extended to the breadth of a cubit the whole length of the roof. But if so, it could not have been merely an open slit, for that would have admitted the rain. Are we then to suppose that some transparent, or at least translucent, substance was employed? It would almost seem so. A different word is used in ch. 8 : 6, where it is said that Noah opened the window of the ark. There the word is challôn, which frequently occurs elsewhere in the same sense. Supposing, then, the tsôhar to be, as we have said, a skylight or series of skylights running the whole length of the ark, the challôn might very well be a single compartment of the larger window which could be opened at will. But besides the window, there was to be a door. This was to be placed in the side of the ark. Of the shape of the ark nothing is said, but its dimensions are given. It was to be three hundred cubits in length, fifty in breadth, and thirty in height. Taking twenty-one inches for the cubit, the ark would be five hundred and twenty-five feet in length, eighty-seven feet six inches in breadth, and fifty-two feet six inches in height. It should be remembered that this huge structure was only intended to float on the water, and was not, in the proper sense of the word, a ship.

Meaning of the Passover.

In the interpretation of this most significant of all the types of the Mosaic dispensation we must trace the double reference to its immediate occasion and to its wider spiritual meaning; its twofold aspect, to the devout Israelite then, and to the Christian now. The following are the chief and obvious points; many more have been suggested by the sometimes too refined ingenuity of commentators.

In its Primary Meaning.—(1.) The paschal lamb was a sacrifice. The chief characteristics of a sacrifice are all distinctly ascribed to it. It was offered in the holy place (Deut. 16 : 5, 6); the blood was sprinkled on the altar, and the fat was burned. 2 Chron. 30 : 16; 35 : 11. The language of Ex. 12 : 27; 23 : 18; Num. 9 : 7; Deut. 16 : 2, 5, together with 1 Cor. 5 : 7, would seem to decide the question beyond the reach of doubt. The lamb, the gentlest of all creatures, must be without blemish, to teach not only the general principle of offering our best to God, but also the special doctrine that an expiatory sacrifice must be that of the innocent for the guilty.

(2.) The paschal lamb was also a feast. Even amid the confusion of that awful night they ate it with joy for their deliverance. But it was also their last feast in Egypt, from whose "flesh-pots" they were now for ever parting. The bread which they had not had time to leaven, the bitter herbs, their haste and their traveling equipment, all taught them that it was no season of sensual pleasure, and that henceforth they were dependent on God alone for food.

In its Perpetual Spiritual Sense.—Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us. 1 Cor. 5 : 7. The blood of the first paschal lambs sprinkled on the doorways of the houses has ever been regarded as the best defined foreshadowing of that blood which has redeemed, saved and sanctified us. Heb. 11 : 28. The lamb itself, sacrificed by the worshiper without the intervention of a priest, and its flesh being eaten without reserve as a meal, exhibits the most perfect of peace offerings, the closest type of the atoning Sacrifice who died for us and has made our peace with God. Isa. 53 : 7; John 1 : 29; cf. the expression "my sacrifice," Ex. 34 : 25; also Ex. 12 : 27; Acts 8 : 32; 1 Cor. 5 : 7; 1 Pet. 1 : 18, 19. The unleavened bread is recognized as the figure of the state of sanctification which is the true element of the believer in Christ. 1 Cor. 5 : 8. The haste with which the meal was eaten, and the girt-up loins, the staves and the sandals, are fit emblems of the life of the Christian pilgrim, ever hastening away from the world toward his heavenly destination. Luke 12 : 35; 1 Pet. 1 : 13; 2 : 11; Eph. 5 : 15; Heb. 11 : 13.

The crowning application of the paschal rites to the truths of which they were the shadowy promises appears to be that which is afforded by the fact that our Lord's death occurred during the festival. According to the divine purpose, the true Lamb of God was slain at nearly the same time as "the Lord's Passover," in obedience to the letter of the law.

Baal and Ashtoreth.

Baal was the supreme male divinity of the Phœnician and Canaanitish nations, as Ashtoreth was their supreme female divinity. Both names have the peculiarity of being used in the plural; and it seems certain that these plurals designate not statues of the divinities, but different modifications of the divinities themselves. The plural Baalim is found frequently alone—e. g., Judg. 2 : 11; 10 : 10; 1 Kings 18 : 18; Jer. 9 : 14; Hos. 2 : 17—as well as in connection with Ashtoreth. Judg. 10 : 6; 1 Sam. 7 : 4. In the earlier books of the Old Testament, only the plural, Ashtaroth, occurs; and it is not till the time of Solomon, who introduced the worship of the Sidonian Astarte, and only in reference to that particular goddess, Astoreth of the Sidonians, that the singular is found in the Old Testament. 1 Kings 11 : 5, 33; 2 Kings 23 : 13. Baal signifies lord, not so much, however, in the sense of ruler as of master, owner, passover. Bel is the Babylonian name of the god.

The worship of these deities was of great antiquity. We find the worship of Baal established among the Moabites and their allies, the Midianites, in the time of Moses (Num. 22 : 41); and through these nations the Israelites were seduced to the worship of this god under the particular form of Baal-peor. Num. 25 : 3, seq.; Deut. 4 : 3. Notwithstanding the fearful punishment which their idolatry brought upon them in this instance, the succeeding generation returned to the worship of Baal (Judg. 2 : 10–13), and with the exception of the period during which Gideon was judge (Judg. 6 : 26, seq.; 8 : 33) this form of idolatry seems to have prevailed among them up to the time of Samuel (Judg. 10 : 10; 1 Sam. 7 : 4), at whose rebuke the people renounced the worship of Baalim. Solomon, as we have already said, introduced the worship of the Sidonian Astarte. The worship of Baal, together with that of Asherah, became the religion of the court and the people of the ten tribes under Ahab, king of Israel, in consequence of his marriage with Jezebel (1 Kings 16 : 31–33; 18 : 19, 22); and though this idolatry was occasionally put down (2 Kings 3 : 2; 10 : 26), it appears never to have been permanently or effectually abolished in that kingdom. 2 Kings 17 : 16. In the kingdom of Judah, also, Baal-worship extensively prevailed.

The worship of Baal among the Jews appears to have been appointed with much pomp and ceremonial. Temples were erected to him (1 Kings 16 : 32; 2 Kings 11 : 18); his images were set up (2 Kings 10 : 26); his altars were very numerous (Jer. 11 : 13), were erected particularly on lofty eminences (1 Kings 18 : 20), and on the roofs of houses (Jer. 32 : 29); there were priests in great numbers (1 Kings 18 : 19), and of various classes (2 Kings 10 : 19); the worshipers appear to have been arrayed in appropriate robes (2 Kings 10 : 22); the worship was performed by burning incense (Jer. 7 : 9) and offering burnt-sacrifices, which occasionally consisted of human victims. Jer. 19 : 5. The officiating priests danced with frantic shouts around the altar, and cut themselves with knives to excite the attention and compassion of the god. 1 Kings 18 : 26–28.

Baal and Ashtoreth symbolized the generative and productive powers: the former was also regarded as the sun-god, and the latter as the moon-goddess.

The Schools of the Prophets.

The sacerdotal order was originally the instrument by which the members of the Jewish theocracy were taught and governed in things spiritual. But during the time of the judges the priesthood sank into a state of degeneracy and the people were no longer affected by the acted lessons of the ceremonial service. They required less enigmatic warnings and exhortations. Under these circumstances a new moral power was evoked—the prophetic order. Samuel was the instrument used at once for effecting a reform in the sacerdotal order (1 Chron. 9 : 22), and for giving to the prophets a position of importance which they had never before held. So important was the work wrought by him that he is classed in Holy Scripture with Moses (Jer. 15 : 1; Ps. 99 : 6; Acts 3 : 24), Samuel being the great religious reformer and organizer of the prophetical order, as Moses was the great legislator and founder of the priestly rule.

Samuel took measures to make his work of restoration permanent as well as effective for the moment. For this purpose he instituted companies or colleges of prophets. One we find in his lifetime at Ramah (1 Sam. 19 : 19, 20); others afterward at Bethel (2 Kings 2 : 3), Jericho (2 Kings 2 : 5), Gilgal (2 Kings 4 : 38), and elsewhere. 2 Kings 6 : 1. Their constitution and object were similar to those of theological colleges. Into them were gathered promising students, and here they were trained for the office which they were afterward destined to fulfill. So successful were these institutions that from the time of Samuel to the closing of the canon of the Old Testament there seems never to have been wanting a due supply of men to keep up the line of official prophets. The apocryphal books of the Maccabees (1 Macc. 4 : 46; 9 : 27; 14 : 41) and of Ecclesiasticus (36 : 15) represent them as extinct. The colleges appear to have consisted of students differing in number. Sometimes they were very numerous. 1 Kings 18 : 4; 22 : 6; 2 Kings 2 : 16. One elderly or leading prophet presided over them (1 Sam. 19 : 20), called their father (1 Sam. 10 : 12) or master (2 Kings 2 : 3), who was apparently admitted to his office by the ceremony of anointing. 1 Kings 19 : 16; Isa. 61 : 1; Ps. 105 : 15. They were called his sons. Their chief subject of study was, no doubt, the law and its interpretation, oral, as distinct from symbolical, teaching being henceforward tacitly transferred from the priestly to the prophetical order. Subsidiary subjects of instruction were music and sacred poetry, both of which had been connected with prophecy from the time of Moses (Ex. 15 : 20) and the judges. Judg. 4 : 4; 5 : 1. The prophets that met Saul "came down from the high place with a psaltery, and a tabret, and a pipe, and a harp before them." 1 Sam. 10 : 5. Elijah calls a minstrel to evoke the prophetic gift in himself. 2 Kings 3 : 15. David "separates to the service of the sons of Asaph and of Heman and of Jeduthun, who should prophesy with harps and with psalteries and with cymbals. . . . All these were under the hands of their father for song in the house of the Lord with cymbals, psalteries, and harps for the service of the house of God." 1 Chron. 25 : 1–6. Hymns or sacred songs are found in the books of Jonah (2 : 2), Isaiah (12 . 1; 26 : 1), Habakkuk. 3 : 2. And it was probably the duty of the prophetical students to compose verses to be sung in the temple. Having been themselves trained and taught, the prophets, whether still residing within their college or having left its precincts, had the task of teaching others. From the question addressed to the Shunammite by her husband, "Wherefore wilt thou go to him to-day? It is neither new moon nor Sabbath" (2 Kings 4 : 23), it appears that weekly and monthly religious meetings were held as an ordinary practice by the prophets. Thus we find that "Elisha sat in his house," engaged in his official occupation (cf. Ezek. 8 : 1; 14 : 1; 20 : 1), "and the elders sat with him" (2 Kings 6 : 32), when the king of Israel sent to slay him. It was at these meetings probably that many of the warnings and exhortations on morality and spiritual religion were addressed by the prophets to their countrymen.

ANCIENT COINS AND GEMS

OF THE PERIOD OF TIME FROM

Alexander the Great to the Destruction of Jerusalem,

336 B.C. TO 138 A.D.,

INCLUDING GREEK, ROMAN, AND HEBREW MONEY, DRAWN FROM THE ORIGINAL ANCIENT COINS IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM, LONDON, IN COLLECTIONS IN PARIS, AMSTERDAM, BRUSSELS, BERLIN, ROME, AND IN THE UNITED STATES.

Entered, according to Act of Congress, in the year 1881, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.

Coins of Alexander and his Successors.

Before the time of Alexander the Great of Macedonia there were no portraits on coins, except of Gelon and Hiero at Syracuse in Sicily (108). Philip, the father of Alexander, left no portrait, his coins bearing a head of Zeus (Jupiter) or Hercules. The local deity of the country was honored on the coins of each—as Minerva at Athens (84), Arethusa at Syracuse (107), the Minotaur in Crete (142), Apollo and Diana in many cities, and nearly every other divinity, hero or heroine, or deified ruler, including also animal forms and mythical figures, mentioned in the ancient classics.

The Greeks were the earliest people to make and use coins with an image stamped on them, and also to make them depositories of portraits and figures of persons and objects which have become of great value to the historical student, adding much to our knowledge of antiquity.

The kingdom of Alexander was too vast to hold together under any other ruler, and his generals assumed royalty after his death, and each seized a portion. Seleucus, who had been made satrap of Babylonia, founded the Syrian monarchy; Ptolemy (see DICTIONARY, p. 80), a half-brother of Alexander, founded the dynasty of Greek Ptolemies in Egypt; Lysimachus obtained Thrace; his military genius, although defeated by the Roman general Glabrio at Thermopylæ in Greece, and again by Scipio at Magnesia in Asia Minor, when he lost a great territory and paid fifteen millions to the Romans for the expenses of the war.

The custom of the Seleucid kings of Syria was to adopt the names Seleucus or Antiochus alternately in succession; so the son and successor of Antiochus the Great was called Seleucus IV., and his brother, who succeeded him, was Antiochus IV. about 337 B. C. He was the most powerful enemy the Romans had to contend with next to Hannibal, as estimated by Cicero. He was father-in-law to Tigranes. (See DICTIONARY, p. 92.)

Demetrius II., son of Demetrius I. (No. 8), was taken prisoner by Mithridates VI., and held nearly nine years, who gave him his daughter for a wife, during which time his brother, Antiochus VII., held the throne of Syria, and espoused Cleopatra, wife of Demetrius, but was deposed on his return. He is mentioned in Maccabees (1 Macc. x., xi., xii., xiv.) and in Josephus (Ant. xiii. 9, 3) as a friend to the Jews, reducing their tribute. He wore a beard after the Parthian fashion, while nearly every other Syrian king the young king Antiochus VI., son of Alexander, and who usurped the throne after killing him. He put his name on the coins of the young king, as seen in the DICTIONARY, p. 8. (See 1 Macc. xi., xiii., etc.)

Antiochus VII. expelled Tryphon and took his brother's wife. He made concessions to Simon, "high priest and prince of the Jews" (1 Macc. xv.; Jos. Ant. xiii. 7, 3). He afterward besieged Jerusalem, but made honorable terms with John Hyrcanus (133 B. C.), who accompanied him against the Parthians, where he was killed. This coin was struck at Tarsus. The shrine on the reverse of this coin contained a figure of the Greek goddess Hera (Juno in Rome) standing on a lion, holding in the left hand two palm-branches; the right hand extended, holding a staff or sceptre. She was called "Queen of heaven" in Jeremiah (vii. 18; xliv. 17; etc.). On each side of the lion is a vase or cup for the drink-offerings mentioned by Diodorus; a star over her head refers to the planet which was sacred to her. She was called the "Goddess of Syria," and had a great statue in her honor at Hierapolis (Dan. xi. 38). Called also Astarte, Ashtaroth, Mylitta, and Alitta.

Antiochus IX. was named Cyzicenus from the city where he was educated (by Craterus), and his coins add the title Patriot (philopatoros). He was a son of Antiochus VII. (13), and born while Demetrius was a prisoner among the Parthians; his mother was a Cleopatra. He shared the kingdom with his brother, Grypus (15), having Cœle-Syria and Palestine, with his residence at Damascus. His wife had been repudiated by Ptolemy Lathyrus of Egypt, and brought him an army as a dowry. She was killed by order of her sister, Tryphena, at the altar of a sanctuary in Antioch. Besides his own head, he put on the coins those of Hercules, Zeus, Eros, Pallas and Apollo, Tyche, Dionysus, and Artemis, besides the anchor and various emblematic figures. This coin was struck at Sidon.

Demetrius III. Philopator (patriot) was a son of Antiochus Grypus (15). He was also flattered on his coins with the titles "savior," "god," and "thunderer." On the reverse is a figure of Demeter, called Ceres by the Romans.

Tigranes (DICTIONARY, p. 92), was son-in-law to Mithridates VI. (10), and after some extensive conquests assumed the title "King of kings" in Armenia. In 83 B. C. he conquered Syria and founded Tigranocerta. After submitting to the Romans, he was kept by them on the throne of Armenia until he died, 55 B. C. After Cæsar's death, Asia and Egypt were allotted to Antony, and with the famous Cleopatra he indulged in luxury and repose, neglecting state affairs. He was defeated at Actium, when Octavius became sole emperor and augustus. Cleopatra, the last of the Greek dynasty in Egypt, was celebrated for her personal charms and various accomplish-

The inscription is read "Shekel of Israel" around, and A for year 1 over a cup on one side, and on the other, "Jerusalem the Holy" around a triple lily. The half-shekel is on page 66 of the Dictionary, and the copper shekel on page 67. The next coins were by John Hyrcanus, son of Simon.

He was with Antiochus in Parthia, conquered the Idumæans, destroyed Samaria, and built Arak el-Emir, east of Jordan. His coins were not called shekels, and the inscriptions and devices differed from the shekel. No. 31.—HEROD OF CHALCIS (41–48 A. D.).

Herod of Chalcis was son of Aristobulus and Berenice, and brother of Agrippa. He was made king by Claudius (who at the same time gave Agrippa II. and was assigned to duty after Archelaus was banished, 6 A. D. He came with the prefect Quirinus (Cyrenius, No. 58). The procurator was the governor in Judæa, collector of revenue and general regulator of financial affairs, and in later times was supreme in both civil and military duties (Matt. xxvii.; Luke iii. 1; Acts xxii.; etc.). The second was Ambivius; the third, Marcus Rufus, in whose term the augustus died.

No. 37.—FELIX, UNDER NERO (54–68 A. D.).

He married Drusilla, sister of Agrippa. His first wife was Drusilla, daughter of Juba; his third also a princess.

First Revolt of the Jews.

The Jews were so oppressed by the Romans that they broke out into revolt several times, but were put down easily, except when, under Gessius Florus, they suffered unbearable tyranny.

No. 38.—ELEAZAR (65 A. D.).

The first revolt began under the emperor Nero, A. D. 60, and one of the first war-measures was to issue money to pay soldiers and for the use of the people, who detested the coins of the Romans as blasphemous and badges of servitude. The most capable leader was Eleazar, son of the high priest Ananias before whom Paul was tried. (Acts xxiii. 3.) His coins have the words "Eleazar the high priest" and "First year of the Redemption of Israel." The types he used were various, being vase, harp, treasury (for sacred books), fruit, palm tree, and others.

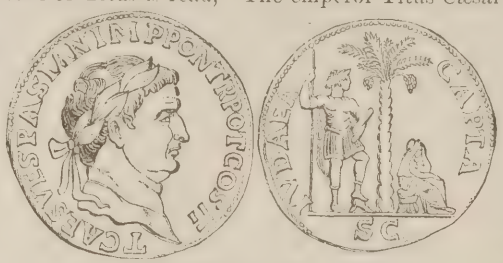
The only true shekels were those made by Simon the Maccabee (No. 21), all coins after his death having some other name, although writers usually call any piece of Hebrew money a shekel. The sizes of the various pieces were made to conform to those of the Greek and Roman standards. The stater (Nos. 9, 135, 140) was equal to sixty cents and Simon's shekel (No. 21); the double stater (Nos. 14, 10, 139, etc.) was equal to two shekels; the mite (Nos. 31, 33) of copper was about a quarter of a cent.

No. 40.—SIMON, SON OF GAMALIEL.

Simon, son of Gamaliel, chief of the Sanhedrin, called "Nasi" (prince), struck coins after Eleazar's death, and also Ananus, son of Ananus. The Sanhedrin authorized bronze coins to be issued, with the legend "Year 2" around the vase, and "Deliverance of Zion" around the vine-leaf.



No. 41.—SANHEDRIN.

On some coins the name Zion stands for Jerusalem. During the siege by Titus Cæsar (who was afterward the emperor Titus) the Jews used Greek or Roman coins to strike their own devices on, as appears on many coins of that time, as also on those of the second revolt. (Nos. 46, 47, 48.)

The Romans did not permit their provinces to strike coins of gold or silver; therefore, the only coins of Herod and his successors are in bronze. The tribute-money was of necessity a Roman coin, bearing the head of "Cæsar" or the emperor, and was valued at sixty cents, the sum required for two persons.

Jerusalem Captured.

The revolt was suppressed, and Jerusalem captured by the Romans under Titus, his father, Vespasian, being emperor. A great number was struck by the Romans to commemorate the event—by Vespasian, in gold, silver, and bronze, and also by Titus. One of Vespasian is shown on page 98 in the Dictionary. This bronze (42) coin of Titus is read, "The emperor Titus Cæsar Vespasian, Priest, Tribunal Power, Consul second time." On the reverse is a palm bearing dates, with a Roman soldier (Titus) armed, and a woman for Judæa weeping, seated on arms; S. C. for Decree of the Senate.

No. 43.—TITUS (73 A. D.).

No. 43 is described, "Titus standing, his right foot on the prow of a vessel, holding a 'Victory' and a spear; at his feet are two Jews in supplication, and near a palm." Dated 73 A. D. No. 44 is a coin in honor of a naval victory, and is supposed to refer to the one described by Josephus (Wars, iii. 9).

When the war began, Nero sent Vespasian with the army to Palestine, and he took his son, Titus, with him as his lieutenant; and when Nero died, A. D. 68, Vespasian became emperor, returned to Rome, and left Titus in command at Jerusalem. Vespasian was proclaimed emperor at Alexandria, Egypt, July 1, 69, and at Jerusalem, in the camp of Titus, July 3. Jerusalem was taken September 8, A. D. 70.

Titus was honored with the title of "emperor" (which was equal to commander-in-chief) on the fall of Jerusalem. He had served under his father in the siege and capture of the cities Tarichæa and Gamala, described by Josephus. In the triumphal procession of Vespasian at Rome, Titus was associated with his father and with his brother, Domitian; he was also nominated a cæsar—that is, an heir to the throne of Rome. A triumphal arch, the "Arch of Titus," was erected at Rome, and is still standing, bearing sculptures in memory of the trophies and victory over the Jews. It is the oldest arch of the kind in that city, and one of the most interesting monuments in the world. Besides the coins of Vespasian and Titus, those of Domitian bore devices recording the capture of Jerusalem. The Romans evidently regarded it as an important event, for they stamped it on their coins during twenty-six years.

The Second Revolt of the Jews.

From the time of the first Cæsar, Julius, the Jews, when at peace, had a certain amount of liberty and many privileges. Some Jews had the Roman franchise at Ephesus and elsewhere, and Seneca said of them, "Though conquered, they gave laws to their conquerors." After the revolt which was put down by Titus, they paid tributes fixed by Vespasian, but under Nerva these were abolished, and coin No. 45 was struck to commemorate the event. But Jewish hatred to Rome could not so easily be quieted, and after a few years a second revolt broke out, in 115 A. D., in Cyrene, Egypt, Asia Minor, and Cyprus. In 117 A. D., Hadrian sent a colony of veteran soldiers to Jerusalem, and the revolt broke out there, aided by the cry, "The Messiah has come!" referring to the new leader, Simon Barkokab, called "Son of the Star" (Num. xxiv. 17–24), but the war did not begin until 131 A. D.

No. 47.—SIMON BARKOKAB.

It was an ancient custom of the Syrian kings and Egyptian Ptolemies to honor a successful general or a patriotic king and general of the army with the title "SAVIOR"—in Greek, SOTER—as seen on coin No. 3; the first Ptolemy was a Soter, also the first Demetrius. The Romans honored their emperor or general with the title "Father of the Country" for similar services. The Hebrews were very jealous of permitting any human image on a coin, and therefore we read only the name of the high priest or other person in chief authority, and the pious sentence, "The Deliverance of Jerusalem," as on No. 47, and "The Deliverance of Zion" on others. These coins were issued at the mint under the authority of the Sanhedrin or senate, with a new device on the accession of each high priest, king, or ethnarch. The coin No. 48 is probably the last coined by the Jews as a people.

The leader Barkokab struck Hebrew devices over silver coins of Titus, as in this case, and over those of Trajan (No. 47) and of Domitian,

No other Roman coins of a later date struck at Jerusalem have been found. The next coinage of that city is of the Arabs, who made many varieties. Elagabalus was a Syrian, named Bassianus, but known by his title as priest of the sun-deity, which was worshiped at Emesa under that name. He was an Oriental in habits, tastes, and training, and had no sympathy for Roman laws, discipline, or its religion. His reign was cut short by the mob, his successor being Alexander Severus, his cousin.

No. 55.—TRAJAN (249–251 A. D.).

Caius Messius Quintus Trajan Decius was urged to accept the throne of Rome much against his inclination. Under his rule the Goths first made their appearance in the empire as enemies. Decius entered the field against them, leaving Valerian in Rome to rule with the title of Censor. He was the first of all the Roman emperors to fall in battle with the enemy. The coins struck in Jerusalem with his head and titles were honorary, as it is not recorded that he ever visited the city. His wife, Herennia Ætruscilla, is honored on the coin with the title Au-

The figure on the other side of the coin is of the goddess Modesty, and is also in honor of the queen. These religious honors were decreed by the Senate, and have been the means of perpetuating the memory of the noble woman in the absence of other records.

No. 57.—ARABIAN.

The caliph Omar captured Jerusalem 637 A. D., and struck coins in honor of the event, one of a long series, during over 400 years, being given here. Their inscriptions are always in monogram, often artistically constructed. The soil in and around the Holy City contains many buried treasures of coins, vast numbers of which are brought to light every year. The people in the villages of Palestine, in digging up old foundations or cellars for new houses, find deposits of ancient coins, mostly of bronze, a few silver, and only now and then gold. At Sidon three different deposits have been found of gold coins of Philip and Alexander the Great—in all over 20,000 pieces, of from $10 to $50 each in value.

No. 58.—CYRENIUS, PREFECT OF SYRIA.

The coin of Cyrenius (Quirinus) recalls the mention of the census made for Cæsar Augustus in Luke (ii. 2), when "all the world" was taxed, about the time of the birth of Jesus. The portrait shows a character in accord with the accounts given by historians of the cruel and inhuman exactions of the tax-gatherers of that time. He was so detested that the Senate of Rome refused him the honors of a public funeral, although requested by the emperor Tiberius.

Herod Archelaus (59 and 28) was ruler in Palestine when, it is supposed, Paul was "at the foot of Gamaliel," Antipas governed Galilee and Peræa, and Philip (29) Trachonitis, Auranitis,

No. 60.—AMBIVIUS.

The general policy of Augustus as to the government of Judæa was, as advised by Mæcenas, to continue the prefect in office three or five years. Augustus died 14 A. D., after a reign of fifty-seven years, at the age of seventy-seven, and was succeeded by his adopted son, Tiberius, son of his wife Livia, who was a less active and more luxurious ruler, and who adopted a new line of policy, which was to change the rulers of provinces as seldom as possible, so as to avoid plundering the people by new and hungry officials. In a reign of twenty-two years he changed the procurator of Judæa only once. The first procurator under Tiberius was Valerius Gratus, in whose time Joseph, also called Caiaphas, was made high Recent discoveries have enabled the student to follow the entire history of that age from one ruler to another, with nearly every detail supplied from antiquities.

No. 63.—CITY OF ANTIOCH.

The coin of Antioch has an emblem of the river Orontes beneath the feet of a woman personifying the city, the inscription reading, "Of Antioch the Metropolis." This city was founded by Seleucus I., 300 B. C. (See DICTIONARY, p. 7.) The coinage includes many of the Greek kings and Roman governors of Syria. We have coins of the Roman governors—P. Q. under Cominius Proclus, Proconsul." The head is of the emperor Claudius. The coin of Paphos refers to a temple of Venus, now in ruins. The temple-ruins at Paphos have not yet been examined; but another temple to Venus—also called Aphrodite and Astarte—was exhumed at Golgos, near the centre of the island, when 1000 marble statues came to light, some colossal, others life-size, and many smaller. These are now in the Metropolitan Museum, New York. Pausanias says in his ancient history that Agapenor, a general of the Greeks under Agamemnon, returning after the close of the siege of Troy, was wrecked on the coast of Cyprus, landed, and built the town of Paphos and its temple to Venus, which was much later in time than the one at Golgos. The people of the island at that time are said to have numbered seven millions.

No. 69.—PERGA IN PAMPHYLIA.

Mark, the cousin of Barnabas, Paul's companion, left them at Perga, whose coin, shown here, bears the image of the goddess Diana, a stag, and other religious emblems, with the inscription, "Of Diana of Perga." (See PERGA in the DICTIONARY.) Diana is named on this coin Artemis.

The coin of Iconium, shown here, is inscribed "Nero Cæsar Augustus" around a head of the young Nero; and on the reverse, "Poppæa Augusta of the Claud-Iconians," around a seated figure of Poppæa, wife of Nero. Iconium was made a Roman colony by Claudius, and named Claudia. (See ICONIUM in the DICTIONARY.) Xenophon says it was a city in Phrygia, as in his history of the Expedition of Cyrus he says, "he came to Iconium, the last city of Phrygia," but Cicero, Strabo, and other ancients say it was in Pamphylia. It is a very ancient place, for Xenophon wrote about 360 B. C.

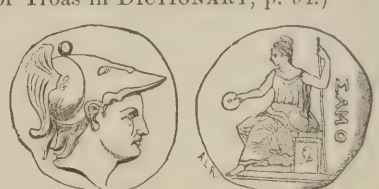
No. 71.—ATTALIA.



The coin of Attalia is of the emperor Commodus (180–192 A. D.), who required his subjects to salute him as Hercules the god. The place was originally called Corcyrus, and Attalus II. Philadelphus (see Nos. 127, 128), king of Pergamus, added a new town and built a wall around the whole, giving it his name.

The coin of Troas is of Alexander Severus, emperor of Rome, 222–235 A. D. The city was founded by Antigonus (No. 137), and named by him Antigonia, but enlarged by Lysimachus, who named it Antigonia Troas. It became a Roman colony under Augustus, and had many immunities and privileges. The port was artificial, with two basins, outer and inner, and it was an important commercial centre for many centuries. The antiquities found by Dr. Schliemann in his search for the Troy of Homer indicate great wealth and culture among the people in some early age. (See coin of Troas in DICTIONARY, p. 94.)

No. 72.—ALEXANDRIA TROAS.

No. 73.—SAMOTHRACIA.

The island of Samothrace lies about halfway between Troas and Macedonia; it is eight miles long, six wide, and has lofty mountain-ranges, the highest being 5250 feet. From the top, or even high up on the sides, of the mountains of this island one can see the plains of Troy, as is said in Homer's Iliad. This is a very interesting confirmation of the accuracy of Homer as to geography and minute observation.

Macedonia under the Roman rule was divided into four districts for safety against a general rebellion, 167 A. D. A coin of the first division is on page 62 in the DICTIONARY; one of the second (74) is here; none is known of the third; but of the fourth there are several, besides this one, No. 75, which bears the mark of the emperor's legate (LEG). The chief cities were—

Amphipolis, capital of the 1st district; Thessalonica, of the 2d; Pella, of the 3d; and Heraclea, of the 4th. The peoples of the several districts were kept wholly distinct, not even being allowed to marry those of another or have any dealings in houses or lands. The proconsul over the whole country resided at Thessalonica; the Roman roads were excellent throughout the country, uniting the capitals. The chief seaport eastward was Neapolis, the coin of which bears an archaic head of Diana with a peculiar style of hair-dressing, and the letters in Greek ΝΕΟΠ, for Neapolis; on the reverse a head of the fabulous monster called Gorgon. The road from Neapolis to Philippi leads over the river Zygactes (break-pole), about which the Greeks tell this legend: Proserpine was gathering flowers by the river, when Pluto fell in love with her and took her into his chariot, the pole of which broke as he tried to cross the river. The whole country is poetically dotted with similar legends and names.

The coin of Philippi shows that it was a Roman colony, the inscription being, "Tiberius Claudius Cæsar Augustus, High Priest, Tribunal Power, Emperor," around bust, and "Colony of Julia Augusta of Philippi" around statues of Julius Cæsar and Augustus, standing on a pedestal inscribed "The Deified Augustus." The city was first called Crenides, or Fountains, afterward Datum; but when Philip, father of Alexander the Great, fortified it, he named it after himself. The gold-mines of the vicinity were very productive, yielding a million a year. The famous battle between Octavius (afterward Augustus) and Antony (No. 18) on one side, and Brutus and Cassius on the other, was fought here 36 B. C. The remains of the earthworks used on that day can be traced now for long distances, and there are remains of a triumphal arch near the modern city. (For Thyatira in Asia, where Lydia, found by Paul at Philippi, resided, see coin No. 123.)

No. 78.—BRUTUS AT PHILIPPI.

ner. Livy (viii. 32) and Aulus Gellius (x. 3) describe the Roman manner of flogging in the public square or forum on the naked body.

Philippi was then the capital of the province, instead of Amphipolis (see under 75), and had the "Italian right," which included exemption from martial law and its hasty punishments, and from certain taxes, and also being favored with peculiar privileges. The Roman citizen, or any other person having the "Italian right," could not be condemned and punished without a trial, and he also had the right of appeal. The scourging was done in the public square of the city, before the assembled people. Some were tied to a post; others were stripped and had their hands tied behind the back.

No. 80.—THESSALONICA.

On the coin of Thessalonica, we find "Caius (Caligula), son of Augustus," around the portrait of Caius, and "Of the Thessalonians" (money) around a head of Augustus. Caius was an adopted son. He was one of the assessors when Archelaus and Herod Antipas and Philip were heard before Augustus prior to the death of Herod the Great. (Jos. Ant. xvii. 9, 5; see THESSALONICA in the DICTIONARY.)

The poetical allusions of Paul are cited as evidence of his acquaintance with, and keen relish for, their beauties. For instance, in his address to the Athenians there is an allusion to the poems of the Cilician poet Aratus in this line:

"For we are also his offspring" (Acts xvii. 28); and when he rebukes the Cretans, he quotes from their own writer, Epimenides:

"The Cretans
Are always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies" (Tit. i. 12); and for the Corinthians he selects a line from the comedy of "Thais," a word of the excellent writer Menander:

"Evil communications corrupt good manners."

The poet Aratus was a Cilician, born at Soli, and a fellow-countryman with Paul. He was at the court of Antigonus Gonatas many years, where he wrote the astronomical Greek poem, called "Phenomena," from which Paul quoted in Acts xvii. 28, on which Hipparchus wrote a commentary, and of which Cicero made a Latin version. Ovid said, "Aratus will always be associated with the sun and moon in the minds of men, for his excellent qualities."

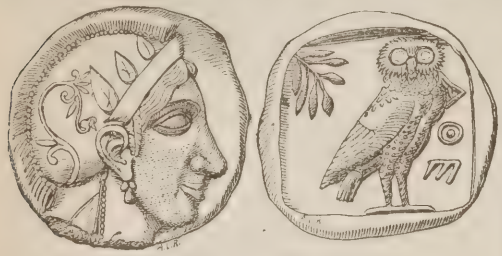
No. 82.—MENANDER (b. 341 B. C.).



Menander, the Greek tragic poet, was the originator of the New Comedy, and had the highest reputation, being eulogized by Julius Cæsar, Plutarch, and other ancients. Paul quoted from his comedy of Thais in 1 Cor. xiii. 33. The portraits of Socrates and Plato are from an ancient gem now in the possession of Mr. John Taylor Johnston of New York City. They are introduced here because Socrates was accused of viohas a plan of the port, where a circular row of warehouses end in an office, or perhaps a temple, on either side, and in the centre stands a statue of Neptune, while ships in full sail are in the harbor, with the initials of "Colonia Laus Julia Corinthos." (See in the DICTIONARY.)

There are perhaps more coins of different types of Ephesus than of any other ancient city. The political and religious characteristics of the city and of the age are illustrated on them, which have many allusions to the Diana-worship, and bear the names and official titles of various public officers referred to in the New Testament. The one below (87), with the head of Nero, is dated about the time assigned to Paul's visit. We learn from the coins that there were many temples to Diana and other deities (117)—one of Apollo at the head of the port; one opposite the great theatre; another of Diana near the theatre. One of the Diana temples has four columns; another has columns all around it; a third (the great temple), eight columns in front (114). The theatre was the largest structure ever built by the Greeks, and would hold 50,000 spectators. In this were displayed the public games by the Asiarch—running, wrestling, feats of strength, boxing, horse-racing, gladiatorial contests, and fights with wild beasts (1 Cor. xv. 32); one of the latter is presented on the coin No. 88. (See 1 Cor. ix. 24, 25.) The emperor Claudius died during the time Paul was at Ephesus, 54 A. D.

The inscription on coin No. 87 is "Nero Cæsar," around a portrait of the emperor on one side, and on the other, "Of the Ephesians Neocori, Aichmocles Aviola, Proconsul," around a temple of Diana, on each side of which are EPH in Greek letters. The neokoros was a conductor of the public-worship; we have no such officer now. The city also had the privilege of building a temple in honor of the reigning emperor; and on coin No. 117 the four temples suggest that one or more may have been of that class.

The inscriptions on the coins of Colossæ show that the name of the city was written differently in most ancient times. The place is now entirely deserted, while Xenophon says (Anab. ii. 2) it was a great, populous, and flourishing city; and Pliny says (v. 41) it was one of the most celebrated towns in Phrygia. Laodicea and Hierapolis were near, and were included in the circuit of labors of the apostle and his assistants (Col. iv. 13). These three towns were all in the valley of the river Mæander, within a circuit of fifteen miles. Hierapolis is included among the illustrious cities of Asia by Tacitus. It has been shaken by earthquakes in successive ages, but is still a fine city, called by the Turks Pambook Kalessi. The hot springs near are the resort of invalids and curiosity-hunters, who examine the deposits of lime from the waters, which have formed vast masses in fantastic shapes. Among the ruins of the ancient city the theatre and the gymnasium are the most noted. The Stoic philosopher Epictetus was a native of Hierapolis, where he was sold in his youth as a slave to a freedman of the emperor Nero; which became the means of his good fortune, for he was taken to Rome, where he found means of gaining an education and his freedom.

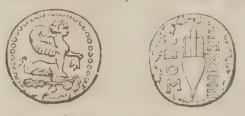
No. 91.—NERO.

On coin No. 91 there is a front of a provision-market, called in Latin MACELLUM (MAC on the coin), which is interesting in connection with the text of 1 Cor. x. 25. The legend is, "Nero Claudius, Cæsar Augustus Germanicus, Tribunal Power, Emperor, Father of the Country," around a bust-portrait of Nero on one side, and on the other, "Provision-Market of Augustus, (struck by) Decree of the Senate."



The emperors supplied the poor people of Rome under Augustus, to the number of 200,000, with grain for bread. This free gift continued in practice until the time of Alexander Severus, 222 A. D., when it was abolished.

The island of Chios is named in Acts (xx. 15) as on Paul's route to Judæa, and coins Nos. 92, 93 are from it. On the larger one we read, either side of a water-bottle. This was the farthing-piece or half a cent; two mites were equal to one of these.

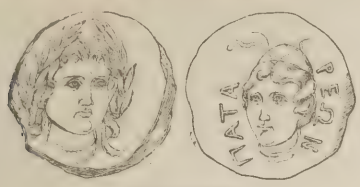
Earthquakes have recently caused a great loss of life and a destruction of many houses in the cities and villages of Chios (now called Scio). The island is 32 miles long by 8 to 18 miles wide. Its fertility and the excellent quality of its wine, mastic, figs, and other products have been the theme of writers in all ages. This was one of the seven places that claimed the honor of Homer's nativity, the other six being Smyrna, Rhodes, Colophon, Salamis, Athens, and Argos. They show a sepulchre in Chios which is called Homer's, near the ruins of an ancient temple to Apollo.

No. 94.—SAMOS.

Samos was the capital of an island of the same name. We read on the coin No. 94, "Hegesianax, of the Samians," above a head and shoulders of an ox; the head of a lion is without inscription. This is a very ancient place, and mentioned in the earliest history.

No. 95.—MILETUS.



The coin of Miletus has a head of Apollo bound with a wreath of laurel, and on the reverse a lion looking back at a star, with the monogram of Miletus and the name of Theodorus, who was a chief magistrate. (See DICTIONARY, pp. 65, 66.)

No. 96.—COS.

The island of Cos was called the garden of the Ægean Sea. It was mentioned in the book of Maccabees (1 Macc. xv. 23) and in Josephus (Ant. xiv. 7, 2) in connection with the war with Mithridates. Herod the Great conferred many favors on the Jews in Cos.

For coin of Rhodes, see DICTIONARY. It has a head of Apollo radiated as the sun on one side, and "Amynias (a magistrate) of the Rhodians" on the other, around an opening rose.

No. 97.—PATARA.

(Rhodes, Dict., p. 85.)

Patara was the port of Xanthus, the capital of Lycia, and stood eight miles east of the Yellow (xanthus) River. It is now a ruin, and its port is filled up with sand. On the coin a head of Apollo in a laurel-wreath is on one side, and a head of Diana on the other, with the words "Of the Patareans." Ruins of a theatre, baths, and a triple arch which was once a city-gate mark the site.

Lycia was south of Asia, and had its Lysiarchs as Asia had its Asiarchs. It was a part of the Persian dominions before Alexander (Herodotus vii. 91, 92), then under the Greek kings to the time the Romans took it from Antiochus. It is mentioned in 1 Macc. xv. 23, and was made a Roman province under Claudius. On the coin is a head of Apollo and a lyre, with "Of the Lycians, Year 8."

No. 99.—ACRE PTOLEMAIS.

Acre was a city of Phœnicia, and was invested by the Romans with the privileges of a colony, as appears on this coin of Claudius, with the legend, "(Claudius) Cæsar, High Priest, Consul 4th time, Emperor 13th year" (47 A. D.), around a portrait, and "The Deified Claudius, Ptolemais, Claudian Colony, Citizens Saved," around two oxen and driver, with four standards of the legions—6, 9, 10, 11.

No. 100.—ADRAMYTTIUM.

The coin of Adramyttium reads, "Antinous the Bacchus," around portrait of Antinous (who was deified in the reign of Hadrian), and "Dedicated by Egesias of the Adramyttians," around a figure of Ceres. This place was settled in the time of Crœsus by the Lydians, 590 B. C.

On the coin of Sidon we find a head of a king or emperor without name, and a group of the fabled Europa and the bull, with the words "Of the Sidonians." This myth of Europa was recorded on many coins of different nations. (See SIDON in the DICTIONARY.) The name Europe means "the west" when applied to the country, but it means on this coin a deified daughter of Agenor, king of Phœnicia, of whom it is fabled that Jupiter was enamored, and she became the mother of the heroes Minos, Sarpedon, and Rhadamanthus, and after that married Asterius, the king of Crete; the Cretans deified her and built shrines for her worship.

No. 102.—CNIDUS.

Cnidus was known to the Jews in the second century B. C. (1 Macc. xv. 23), and was passed by Paul (Acts xxvii. 7). It must have been of great importance and magnificence. It was formerly on an island of the same name, but is now connected with the mainland by a causeway. The coin presents a head of Venus with many ornaments, and a lion's head, with Ethbolo, the name of a magistrate. This place has been named Triopia, Pegusia, and Stadia, because founded by Triopas. The chief deity worshiped there was Venus, whose temple was famed for its marble statue of that goddess, the work of Praxiteles. The mathematician Eudoxus, the philosopher Agatharcides, the historian Theopompus, and the physician Ctesias were natives of Cnidus. It is now a mass of ruins. The historian Theopompus is quoted by several ancient authors, and is favorably compared with Thucydides and Herodotus, but was more satirical and illiberal. His works are lost, only the passages quoted by others being extant. Ctesias wrote a history of Persia in twenty-three books.

No. 103.—CNOSSUS.

Crete is rich in the early mythology of the Greeks; Cnossus was its chief city, and Gortyna second. (See DICTIONARY.) The famous Labyrinth is presented on this coin and on No. 142. The head of Diana has an ornamented cap, and she has earrings and necklace of pearls or hollow gold beads; the word is "Of the Knossians." The Cretans are named among those who witnessed the gift of tongues (Acts ii. 11). The strange fables of the Gnostics were received on the island. A natural cave is shown to travelers near Gortyna as the original Labyrinth; it has many rooms and passages, with stalactites, and may have suggested the poetic idea which the ancient poet crystallized in the tale of Theseus and the Minotaur.

Gaulos is a small island near Malta. The coin is Phœnician, and is described: Head of the governor of the island, with a caduceus in token of his good conduct in office; on the reverse a wreath of laurel around a vase, and the letters ALL, for alal, in Phœnician letters.

No. 104.—GAULOS.

The coin of Malta was struck by the Greeks, and presents a head of the Egyptian goddess Isis with mystic head-dress and crown, a head of barley, and the words "Of the Maltese;" on the reverse a figure of the god Osiris, winged, crowned with the serpent, and holding the emblems of power in either hand. The knowledge and use of the Egyptian gods extended to Rome also in later times.

The coin of Syracuse (No. 106) is of Gelon, 485–478 B. C., and presents the head of a girl, hair waved in front, one lock hanging over the ear, the rest braided and folded or gathered in a net, bound with a wreath of olive; earring, with pendants and necklace; four dolphins swim around the head in the same direction, differing from the one below; on the other side was the chariot and four horses similar to that on the next coin.

Coin No. 107 is of Hiero of Syracuse, 470 B. C., and bears a head of the goddess Arethusa, with earring, necklace, band, and hair in a net; four dolphins swim around, two meeting before the face, indicating, as is supposed, that the island on which the fountain of Arethusa is located was there united to the mainland by a causeway, built after the former coin was struck. The chariot and four horses commemorate victories won by King Hiero in the Olympic Games, which were celebrated by the poet Pindar in his Odes. Besides Pindar, his court was frequented by Æschylus, Simonides, and Epicharmus—all well-known authors of Greek literature. Hiero was a generous patron of the arts and sciences.

This portrait of King Hiero on No. 108 is the oldest-known portrait on any coin, and is dated 480 B. C.

No. 108.—SYRACUSE.

Nero was made emperor through the management of his mother, Agrippina, wife of Claudius, in 54 A. D., when he was seventeen years old. The portrait of the young man appears beardless on many coins (see 70), and his advancing years can be traced to the last (in 68 A. D.) on various specimens, No. 91 or 111 marking the greatest age. He was not old when he died (by his own hand), aged thirty-one. It is said his chief passion was to sing with a thin, shrill voice to the sound of a guitar, although he had talents in painting, sculpture, and poetry. It is said that he became a monster of crime and cruelty. Seneca, one of his advisers in state affairs, was the most elegant scholar of the age. He instituted games, called Juvenilia, in honor of his first beard. Coin No. 110 is inscribed, "Nero Claudius, Cæsar Augustus Germanicus," around a portrait with a radiated crown; on the reverse, "Freighted with (or by) Augustus," around a grain-ship, in reference to the supplies obtained from Africa for the people of Rome.

No. 110.—NERO (GRAIN-SHIP).

Coin No. 109 has this legend: "Nero Claudius, Cæsar Augustus Germanicus, High Priest, Tribunal Power, Emperor, Father of the Country," around a youthful head of the emperor; and on the other side a figure of Nero playing on a lyre or cithara.

No. 111.—NERO.

Coin No. 111 is inscribed, "Nero Claudius, Cæsar Augustus Germanicus, Tribunal Power, Father of the Country, Emperor;" and on the reverse, "Peace in the earth and on the sea, the temple of Janus closed," around a front of the temple of Janus hung with a garland over the door, the letters S C on either side for "Decree of the Senate."

The Seven Churches of Asia (Rev. i. 4).

Of Patmos there are no coins.

Of the cities of the seven churches in Asia, some are a heap of ruins, and others, like Ephesus, have been lost, and only recently restored by the explorer's shovel. The city was originally named Smyrna (Strabo xiv. 1, 4). The Diana-worship was peculiarly Oriental, and included magic, charms, amulets, soothsaying, and pretended miracles. The image of Diana in the great temple was of immense height, carved in ebony, ivory, and gold, and probably formed like those on the coins. The moon was symbolized behind the head and shoulders; the signs of the Zodiac were carved on the drapery of the breast, and animals or monstrous forms were distributed over the drapery of the lower limbs; in each hand was a trident. It was asserted that the image fell from heaven (or Jupiter) complete, as is also said of the Kaaba Stone in Mecca. Diana was worshiped in three characters — as the moon (Luna) in the heavens, Diana on earth, and Hecate in Hades. One month was named Artemisia from the annual festival in honor of the goddess (called Artemis), the record of which in a decree, engraved on a marble slab, was found near the temple, corroborating the text of Acts xix. 35. During the month of revels various scenes were enacted in which the gods were represented: a man as Jupiter the May King, who was appointed by the emperor or his legate; one as Apollo, and another as Mercury. The Jupiter wore a robe glittering with gold, white as snow, and a crown of carbuncles, pearls, and other precious stones (Malala, lib. xii.). Ephesus was the great market of the region, buyers and sellers flocking there in great numbers; thus religion, business, and pleasure combined to make the festival-month a success. It was in that month that Paul's visit was timed. The expenses of the games were paid, all or a part, by the Asiarch (see Asiarch in the Dictionary), who superintended the exhibition. The great image was copied in small sizes for use in private families, shops, etc., and for travelers.

but honorably, and it enjoyed the proud title, "The Ornament of Asia." The most popular deity of the ancient city was the god Bacchus; other gods were Apollo, Diana, the Nemesis, the father of the gods (Zeus), the mother of the gods (Hera), the city of Rome as Roma, and peculiarly, Dionysus, who was fabled to die by violence and be resuscitated every year. It had a large public library and a museum, dedicated to Homer, who was claimed as a countryman, an Odeum, and other public buildings, including a hall of justice, where appeals from other cities were heard under the Roman laws. It is now a city filled with ruins built into modern walls, which include many fragments of sculptures and other works of art. Herodotus described a statue which was near the city, cut on the face of a rock, seven feet high, Egyptian in style, with this inscription across the breast: "I conquered this country by the might of my arms." (See Dan. xi.) This city was founded by Alexander the Great after the battle of Granicus.

Pergamus, the third church in the list, was in a city which was the capital of a district of the same name. The city was founded before the Trojan war, when Pergamos, son of Pyrrhus, deposed Eumenes II. was rewarded for services to the Romans by the addition to his kingdom of Mysia, Lydia, and Phrygia; he founded a library that became the rival of that at Alexandria. Attalus III. (133 B. C.) gave his kingdom to the Roman people and ended the monarchy of Pergamus.

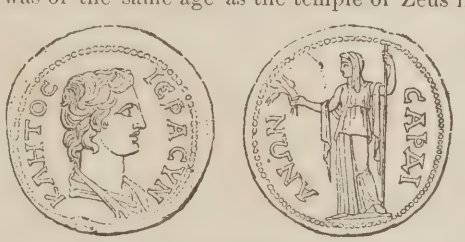
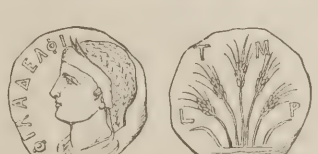
No. 123.—NERO AT THYATIRA.

Thyatira was mentioned fourth in the Apocalypse. (See in the DICTIONARY.) The coins bear the heads of Apollo (Tyrimnas), Hercules, Athene, Roma, Cybele, and the reigning emperors. The remains of antiquity are numerous, but ruinous, such as fragments of sculptures and inscribed stones giving an account of the various labor-guilds of that age. (Acts xvi. 14.)



No. 124.—THYATIRA.

The city of Thyatira was founded by Seleucus I. (No. 2), as one of the many Macedonian colonies which were among the results of the partition of Persia by the successors of Alexander the Great. It had been a city from remote times, called Pelopia, Semiramis, and Euhippia, after various rulers in different ages, and under the Persian rule from the time of Cyrus the Great, 546 B. C. A very curious superstition is said to have been introduced there by the Jews in the worship of the sibyl Sambatha. (See Rev. ii. 20–24.)



No. 125.—SARDIS.

Sardis was the fifth in the list, and the capital of ancient Lydia, which Homer called Mœonia, the "Queen of Asia," whose earliest king was Candaules, 716 B. C., and the last Crœsus, 560–546 B. C. The golden sands of the Pactolus furnished metal (electrum) for the money of that age, which assisted in developing the manufactures and trade of the city. (See in the DICTIONARY.) Two massive columns (6 feet 6 inches thick and 40 feet high) of the once magnificent temple of Cybele remain among a heap of ruins. It was of the same age as the temple of Zeus in Ægina and of Hera in Samos. An earthquake in the time of Tiberius very much damaged the city, when its tribute to Rome was remitted for five years. Its theatre was nearly 400 feet in diameter, and the stadium adjoining it was 1000 feet long. The ancient name of the city was Hydè, under the rule of Omphale, a wife of Hercules. The modern name is Sart Kalessi, but the place is deserted; only heaps of ruins remain of the once famous city, which was full of temples, theatres, factories, and commodious dwellings, all of stone.

No. 127.—ATTALUS II. PHILADELPHUS.

Philadelphia was a city on the border of Lydia and Phrygia, on the slopes of Mount Tmolus and on the banks of the Cogamus River.

Philadelphia was the sixth in the list of the churches in Asia. The city was founded by Attalus II., called Philadelphus, 140 B. C., as a mart for the famous wine-district celebrated by

Virgil; and the coins of that period have a head of Bacchus or the figure of a Bacchante. Xerxes passed near the site of the city, and Herodotus speaks of the sorghum as in successful cultivation then (485–465 B. C.). The valley of the Hermus is one of the most extensive and fruitful in Asia. The coins of the later rulers are not very numerous. Attalus II. on coin No. 128 is repre-

The ruins of Laodicea are on seven hills, and comprise a stadium, three theatres (one 450 feet in diameter), a gymnasium, bridges, aqueducts, etc. The earliest name was Diospolis (city of Jupiter); after that, Rhoas, which was then the largest city in Phrygia; and finally Antiochus named it after his sister, Laodice. The aqueducts are constructed with a knowledge of hydraulics equal to ours, the theatres have seats numbered and lettered, and the place abounds in evidences of a high state of civilization. This city under the Roman rule was a place of importance for its trade and manufactures. In the Christian age it was a populous and wealthy city where the great councils of the Church met. The ruined site is called Denislu.

PLACES MENTIONED IN THE ACCOUNT OF THE DAY OF PENTECOST, Acts ii. 9–11.

The Parthian kingdom was founded about 250 B. C. by Arsaces, a Scythian, and it extended over a large part of Asia. The Parthians were never wholly subdued by the Romans, their last king, Artabanus IV., being killed by the Persians 226 A. D. The Parthians captured many Roman standards in battle, which were returned after a solemn treaty amid great rejoicing in Rome under Augustus, who struck several medals in commemoration of the event. The coin No. 132 is of Arsaces IX., Mithridates II., who was the first to make his nation known to the Romans under Sulla, 92 B. C.

Mesopotamia appears first in history as a country inhabited by many independent tribes, as Arabia is now, then as a part of the Assyrian empire, and after that divided between the Medes and Babylonians. Cyrus added it to Persia, and Alexander made it a satrapy under his rule; it fell, after his death, to one of his generals, Seleucus I., and to the Parthians, B. C. 160. Trajan made it a Roman province A. D. 115.

Cappadocia was founded by Pharnaces 744 B. C.; conquered by Perdiccas of Macedonia 322. The Romans first encouraged the formation of cities. The king Ariarathes mentioned in 1 Macc. xv. 22 was the sixth of that name. The last king of Cappadocia was Archelaus, who was favored by Augustus, but died at Rome A. D. 17, when the country was made a Roman province, under Tiberius.

Pontus was originally a part of Cappadocia, near the Pontus Euxinus, and made an independent nation by Artabazus, under Darius of Persia, 487 B. C. Mithridates VI. (No. 10) conquered Scythia, Bosphorus, Colchis, and Cappadocia. The kingdom ended in the death of Mithridates, 63 B. C., and it became a Roman province under the emperors. Polemo was made king of Pontus by Antony, whom he attended in his expedition against Parthia. His son, whose head appears on this coin, was confirmed on the throne by Claudius.

Asia as a province dates from B. C. 133 (see Coin No. 121); before that it had been from the time of Alexander under the Seleucid kings, until it became a Roman province. The Greeks and Persians contended for centuries for supremacy in Asia until Alexander's time, since when it was under the Seleucid kings (except Pergamus, which was given to the Romans by will 133 B. C.), until it became a Roman province 15 A. D., under Tiberius.

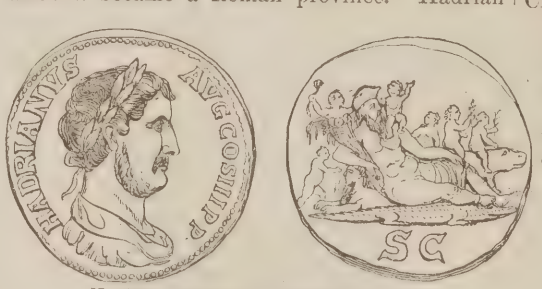
large territory, from which portions were added to several Roman provinces at different times. Iconium and Colosse were in Phrygia. Josephus says Antiochus the Great (No. 5) first introduced Jews to Phrygia about 200 B. C. (Ant. xii. 3, 4). Acts xiii. 14; xiv. 1, 19.



Pamphylia is mentioned by Herodotus (vii. 91, 92) as one of the lesser states. In Paul's time it was a Roman province, enlarged under

It contains many relics of different ages: tombs with Lycian inscriptions, a theatre of the Greek age, a Byzantine church, and later remains. The Orthodox Greeks have a legend that St. Nicolas was born at Patara, buried at Myra, and his bones now rest, having been moved to St. Petersburg recently. (See No. 69.)

The Egypt of the Bible, so far as the coins present it, dates from Alexander the Great, 332 B. C. (No. 1). The Ptolemies continued from 323 (see DICTIONARY) to Cleopatra, 30 B. C., when it became a Roman province. Hadrian spent the greater part of his reign in journeys throughout the provinces of his empire, displaying liberality, political wisdom, and love of the fine arts. On this coin appears the inscription, "Hadrian Augustus, Consul 3d time, Father of the Country," around head of the emperor; and an emblem of the Nile—a strong man surrounded by boys, representing the districts of Egypt, Sphinx and Crocodile, with S C for Decree of the Senate.

Cyrenaica comprised five cities and their outlying districts (see DICTIONARY), was colonized by the Greeks as early as 600 B. C., and was named by Aristæus after his mother. After Alexander, it became a dependency of Egypt.

At one time, as Pliny says, six Roman proprietors owned half the land in Africa outside of Egypt, and Augustus owned all Egypt.

Coins, Money and Weights of the Bible.

By F. W. Madden, M.R.A.S.

General Remarks.—Ancient money was of two kinds, uncoined and coined. By uncoined may be understood pieces not issued under an authority, though they may have borne some stamp or impress of their value. By coined may be understood ingots, of which the weight and fineness are certified by the integrity of designs impressed upon the surfaces of the metal (Prof. Jevons, Money, p. 57).

The first mention in the Bible, after the Flood, of uncoined money is when Abraham came up out of Egypt "very rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold" (Gen. xiii. 2; comp. Gen. xxiv. 35). Though this passage does not imply anything more than "bullion," yet we soon find a notice of the use of money (Heb. silver) as the price paid for a slave (Gen. xvii. 13). The first actual transaction of commerce is the purchase by Abraham of the cave of Machpelah for 400 shekels of silver, current [money] with the merchant (Gen. xxiii. 16); and silver as a medium of commerce appears to have been in general use among the nations of the Philistines (Gen. xx. 16; Judg. xvi. 5, 18; xvii. 2, seq.), the Midianites (Gen. xxxvii. 28), and the Syrians (2 Kings v. 5, 23). By the laws of Moses, men and cattle (Lev. xxvii. 3, seq.; Num. iii. 45, seq.), the possessing houses and fields (Lev. xxvii. 14, seq.), provisions (Deut. ii. 6, 28; xiv. 26), all fines for offences (Exod. xxi., xxii.), the contributions to the Temple (Exod. xxx. 13; xxxviii. 26), the sacrifice of animals (Lev. v. 15), the redemption of the first-born (Num. iii. 47–50; xviii. 15), were estimated and regulated by money value. It is probable that a fixed weight was assigned to single pieces, so as to make them suitable for the various articles presented in trade. The system of weighing (though frequent mention is made of the balance and the weighing of money, Exod. xxii. 17; Lev. xix. 36; Deut. xxv. 13, 15; 2 Sam. xviii. 12; 1 Kings xx. 39; Jer. xxxii. 9, 10; Prov. xi. 1, etc.) is not likely to have been applied to every individual piece. In the large total of 603,550 half-shekels accumulated by the contributions of each Israelite (Exod. xxxviii. 26), each individual half-shekel could hardly have been weighed. Money was sometimes put into a chest, which when full was emptied by the high priest, and the money was bound up in bags, and then told, perhaps being weighed in the bags (2 Kings xii. 9, 10; comp. 2 Chron. xxiv. 8–11). That there were pieces of different denominations is evident from the passage in Exod. xxx. 13, where the half-shekel is to be paid as the atonement-money, and "the rich shall not give more, and the poor shall not give less" (Exod. xxx. 15). The third part of the shekel is mentioned in Persian times (Neh. x. 32), and the fourth part must have been an actual piece, for it was all the silver that the servant of Saul had to pay the seer (1 Sam. ix. 8, 9). Iron and lead bars of constant form and weight circulated in Egypt; in Greece, bars of iron; in Italy, bars of copper; in Britain, in the time of Julius Cæsar, bars of copper and iron; and from the earliest times gold and silver in the same shape were employed in general traffic in the East. This explains the mention of a wedge (Heb. tongue) of gold found by Achan at Jericho (Josh. vii. 21) [see Talent under Weights], as well as the different payments which are mentioned in the O. T., and which presuppose with certainty the currency of single pieces of metal according to weight.

It is also probable that a system of "jewel currency" or "ring-money" was in vogue. The case of Rebekah, to whom the servant of Abraham gave "a golden ear-ring of half a shekel weight, and two bracelets for her hands of ten shekels weight" (Gen. xxiv. 22), proves that the ancient Hebrews made their jewels of a specific weight, so as to know the value of these ornaments in employing them for money. That the Egyptians kept their bullion in jewels is evident from their monuments, where they are represented weighing rings of gold and silver, and is further illustrated by the fact of the Israelites having at their exodus from Egypt borrowed "jewels [vessels] of silver and jewels [vessels] of gold" (Keli keseph, Keli zahab), and "spoiled the Egyptians" (Exod. xii. 35, 36; comp. Exod. iii. 22; xi. 2). So too it would appear that the money used by the children of Jacob, when they went to purchase corn in Egypt, was an annular currency (Gen. xlii. 35). Their money is described as "bundles of money," and when returned to them was found to be "of [full] weight" (Gen. xliii. 21). It was therefore of a form capable of being tied up, which receives corroboration from the passage in Deuteronomy (xiv. 24–26), where directions are given as to the payment of the tithes to the sanctuary: "Then shalt thou turn it into money, and bind up the money in thy hand, and shalt go unto the place which the Lord thy God shall choose." The account of the sale of Joseph to the Midianites affords another instance of the employment of jewel ornaments as a medium of exchange (Gen. xxxvii. 28), as we gather from the account in Numbers (xxxi. 50, 51) of the spoiling of the Midianites, that they carried their whole wealth in the forms of chains, bracelets, ear-rings, and tablets. The friends of Job gave him, in addition to "a piece of money" [Kesitah], "an ear-ring of gold" (nezem zahab, LXX. tetradrachmon chrusou kai asēmon—tetradrachm of uncoined gold, Job xlii. 11). Now had these ear-rings of gold not been intended as representing money, all the friends of the patriarch would not have given him the same article, and that in conjunction with a piece of silver.

From these statements, it is evident, firstly, that if the Hebrews became learned in "all the wisdom of the Egyptians" (Acts vii. 22; comp. 1 Kings iv. 30), they did not learn from them the use of money; and secondly, that nowhere in the Pentateuch is there any mention of money that was coined. Nor do the passages in Joshua, Judges, and Job imply an actual coinage, any more than the "piece of silver" [Agorah] mentioned at the time of Samuel (1 Sam. ii. 36). The reigns of David and Solomon were an era of prosperity for Judæa—"Silver was in Jerusalem as stones; it was nothing accounted of in the days of Solomon" (1 Kings x. 21, 27; 2 Chron. ix. 20, 27); still, it is certain that there were no real coins—namely, pieces struck under an authority—before the Exile. On the other hand, the Hebrews, as I have shown, must have employed pieces of a definite weight; but the excavations in Palestine have never brought to light an example, any more than the excavations in Egypt, Assyria and Babylonia. It may, however, be observed that when the pieces of silver were collected for the treasury they were melted down before reissue. It is recorded (2 Kings xxii. 9; comp. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 17) that Shaphan the scribe came to King Josiah, and said, "Thy servants have gathered together (Heb. melted) the money that was found in the house;" and the same plan was also followed by the Persian king Darius (B. C. 521–485), who melted the gold and silver into earthen vessels, which when full were broken off, leaving the metal in a mass, from which pieces were broken off as necessity required.

The oldest coins extant are certain electrum staters of Lydia, probably about B. C. 720, which, issued on different standards, continued in circulation till the time of Crœsus, who, on his accession in B. C. 568, reorganized the Lydian coinage, abolished electrum, and issued instead pieces of gold and silver. Before the introduction of coined money into Greece, there was a currency of obeliskoi, "spits" or "skewers," probably of iron or copper, six of which made a handful (drachmē), and which were of a considerable size. The first Greek silver coins were struck at Ægina in B. C. 670–660.

The earliest coins mentioned in the Bible are the coins called drams, B. C. 538 [Dram]. It is supposed by some that the Jewish silver shekels and half-shekels were introduced under Ezra, about B. C. 458 [Shekel]; but it is more probable that they were issued under Simon Maccabæus, B. C. 139 (1 Macc. xv. 6), and copper coins were struck by the Asmonæan and Herodian family.

The N. T. history falls within the reigns of Augustus, Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius, and Nero, but only Augustus (Luke ii. 1), Tiberius (Luke iii. 1), and Claudius (Acts xi. 28; xviii. 2), are mentioned; but Nero is alluded to in the Acts from chapter xxv. to the end, and in Phil. iv. 22. Coins of all these emperors would therefore be in circulation.

The following list embraces all the denominations of money mentioned in the Old and New Testaments:

Agorah. See Piece of Silver.

Bekah (Exod. xxxviii. 26). Literally "a half," "half a shekel," about 1*s.* 4*d.* Extant half-shekels weigh about 110 grains. [Half a Shekel and Shekel.]

Brass [Money]. (1) In the O. T. a passage in Ezekiel (xvi. 36, Heb. nechosheth, LXX. Chalkos, Vulgate æs, A. V. filthiness) has been supposed to refer to brass money, but with no probability, as this was the latest metal introduced into Greece for money. The Hebrew word probably means something worthless, like "base metal" (comp. Jer. vi. 28; Ezek. xxii. 18). (2) Chalkos, pecunia (Matt. x. 9). The brass coins current in Palestine in the N. T. period consisted of Roman copper and Greek imperial coins, of the coins of Alexander Jannæus, of the Herodian family, and of the procurators of Judæa See Farthing and Mite.

Daric. See Dram.

Denarius. See Penny.

Didrachm. See Shekel and Tribute-money.

Drachm, Drachmē, drachma (2 Macc. iv. 19; x. 20; xii. 43; Tobit v. 14). It is of various weights, according to the use of the different talents. The drachms here mentioned are of the Attic talent, which became almost universal on Alexander's succession (B. C. 338), and weighed about 67.2 grains. In later times (about B. C. 27), the drachm weighed only 61.3 grains, and thus became very nearly equal to the Roman denarius [Penny], the average weight of which was 60 grains. The earliest Attic drachm contained about $\frac{1}{60}$ of the weight of alloy, and there remain 66.1 grains of silver to be valued. Our shillings weigh 87.2 grains, and contain 80.7 grains of pure silver. The earliest Attic drachm is therefore worth $\frac{66.1}{80.7}$ of a shilling, or 9.82 pence, which is $9\frac{3}{4}d.+\frac{2}{10}$ of a farthing. The later Attic drachm, deducting also $\frac{1}{60}$ of the weight of alloy, is worth $\frac{60.1}{80.7}$ of a shilling, or 8.93 pence, which is $8\frac{3}{4}d.+\frac{7}{10}$ of a farthing; and hence the value of the latest drachm or denarius may be taken at about 8*d.* [Piece of Silver and Penny.]

Dram. The translation in the A. V. of the Hebrew words Adarkon and Darkemon (Ezra ii. 69; viii. 27; Neh. vii. 70–72; 1 Chron. xxix. 7). Though there are several opinions concerning the origin of these words, it is agreed that by them a gold coin or stater—the Persian daric—is intended. The origin of the term has been sought in the name of Darius the Mede, but on no sure grounds, or of that of Darius, son of Hystaspes. In consequence of the type of the coins being "an archer" (by which name —toxotai—they were sometimes called), some have thought that the Hebrew words were derived from darak, "to bend the bow;" whilst others suggest a connection with the Persian words dashtan, "to have, to hold, to possess," or dara, "a king," which latter would be a likely derivation, as the figure represented is not any particular king, but the king of Persia in a general sense. Though the passages in Ezra and Nehemiah would seem to show that coins of similar name were current during the reigns of Cyrus, Cambyses, and Darius Hystaspes, it is a question if the coin called "daric" is intended by those mentioned during the reign of Cyrus, B. C. 530 (Ezra ii. 69). The daric proper was not in circulation till the reign of Darius, son of Hystaspes (B. C. 521–485), who issued a new coinage of pure gold, though the actual name of daric stater was not in vogue till the time of his successor, Xerxes (B. C. 485–465); and the drams mentioned under the reign of his son, Artaxerxes Longimanus (Ezra viii. 27; Neh. vii. 72), are certainly the coins called darics, which at this period extensively circulated in Persia. It is probable that the staters of Crœsus, king of Lydia, continued in circulation from after the capture of Sardis in B. C. 554 to the time when Darius reformed the coinage; and if so, the Lydian staters would be those alluded to during the reign of Cyrus. The ordinary Persian daric is a thick gold piece, bearing the figure of a king kneeling, holding in left hand a bow and in right a spear or a dagger (comp. Ezek. xxxix. 3; Isa. lxvi. 19), and has an average weight of 130 grains. The English sovereign weighs 123.4 grains, which, after deducting $\frac{1}{12}$, leaves 113.12 grains of fine gold; but the daric is $\frac{1}{24}$ finer than our gold, and reckoning it at 130 grains in weight, contains 124.6 grains of pure gold; therefore in value it equals $\frac{124.6}{113.12}$ of a sovereign, or about £1 2*s.* Double darics, weighing about 260 grains—but rare—and perhaps half-daries, weighing 60 grains, are also in existence. With reference to the mention of drams at the time of David (1 Chron. xxix. 7), it must be remembered that the writer, who in all probability was Ezra, wished to express in language intelligible to his readers the value of the gold subscribed, and therefore translated the terms employed in his documents, whatever they were, into terms that were in use in his own day (Speaker's Com., vol. iii., p. 271).

Farthing. This word occurs four times in the A. V. of the N. T. Two names of coins are rendered by it. (1) Assarion (Matt. x. 29; Luke xii. 6), the Greek name of the Roman as or assarius. From the fact that the Vulgate substitutes the word dipondius (= two asses) for the two assaria of the Greek text, it is more than probable that a single coin is intended by this latter expression—an idea fully borne out by the copper coins of Chios, on which are inscribed the words assarion, assaria duō or duŏ, and assaria tria. The assarion of the N. T. must be sought for among the Greek imperial coins, and the second brass coins of Antioch in Syria seem to furnish us with probable specimens. One of these coins, with the countermark GAD (in Greek letters), proves that it was lawfully current in Gadara of Decapolis. These coins, from the time of Augustus, consist of two series—(a) with Greek legends, and having the name of the town and the date of the era of Antioch; and (b) with the name of the emperor in Latin, and on the reverse the letters S. C. (Senatus consulto). After the reign of Vespasian (A. D. 79) the two sets become amalgamated, and form one series. The second brass coins of these series average in weight 143 grains, and are specimens of the as, which, at 10 to the denarius [Penny], would be equivalent to $\frac{3}{4}d.$ of our money. (2) Kodrantēs (Matt. v. 26; Mark xii. 42), or quadrans, the fourth part of the Roman as, originally equal to the chalkous, weighing 67.2 grains. The copper currency of Palestine in the time of Augustus and Tiberius consisted partly of Roman and Jewish coins and partly of Græco-Roman or Greek imperial. In consequence of the reduction of the weight of the as, the quadrans became reduced to just half the weight, or 33.6 grains, and the Roman coins and small copper coins of the Herodian family of this weight represent the farthing of the N. T. The as being equivalent, as we have shown above, to $\frac{3}{4}d.$, the quadrans would be equal to about $\frac{3}{16}d.$ or $\frac{3}{4}$ of an English farthing. According to St. Mark, "two mites make a farthing;" but on this question see Mite.

Fourth Part of a Shekel. Rebah (1 Sam. ix. 8), about 8*d.* [Shekel.]

Gerah (Exod. xxx. 13; Lev. xxvii. 25; Num. iii. 47; xviii. 16; Ezek. xlv. 12). The twentieth part of a shekel, about $1\frac{1}{2}d.$ [Shekel.]

Gold [Money]. (1) There is no positive mention of the use of gold money among the Hebrews (see Isa. xlvi. 6; Job xxviii. 15) [Piece of Gold; Shekel], though gold constituted part of the wealth of Abraham (Gen. xiii. 2), if we exclude the "600 shekels of gold" paid by David for the threshing-floor and oxen (1 Chron. xxi. 25; comp. 2 Sam. xxiv. 24, "shekels of silver"), and it was generally employed for personal ornaments and for objects in connection with the Temple (2 Chron. iii. 9, etc.). (2) Chrusos, aurum (Matt. x. 9; James v. 3); Chrusion, aurum (Acts iii. 6; xx. 33; 1 Pet. i. 18). The gold coinage current in Palestine in the N. T. period was the Roman imperial aureus, which passed for 25 denarii, and was worth about £1 1*s.*

Half a Shekel (Exod. xxx. 13, 15), about 1*s.* 4*d.* [Bekah; Shekel.]

Keseph. See Money, Silver, and Silverling.

Kesitah. See Piece of Money and Piece of Silver.

Mite (Mark xii. 42; Luke xii. 59; xxi. 2). The rendering of the Greek word lepton, which was a small Greek copper coin $\frac{1}{16}$ of the obol, weighing 33.6 grains, and hence half of the original chalkous or quadrans. St. Mark states "two mites, which is a farthing;" but he probably meant "two small pieces of money," the smallest pieces then extant, and the words "which is a quadrans" have been added to show that the quadrans, weighing about 33.6 grains, was then the smallest piece struck. The mite alluded to was a Jewish coin, for the Jews were not permitted to bring any but Jewish money into the Holy Place, and for this cause money-changers [Money-Changers] stood at the entrance to the Temple in order to give Jewish money in exchange for foreign; and it is probable that the small coins of Alexander Jannæus, ranging in weight from 30 grains to 15 grains, are the pieces in question. Their value would be about $\frac{3}{16}d.$, or $\frac{3}{4}$ of an English farthing. If, however, the pieces of 15 grains are the half of those of 30, and not examples of the same coin of light weight, then two would equal a quadrans, and their value would be $\frac{3}{8}$ of an English farthing. But this conjecture is by no means sure.

Money. (1) In the O. T. the general expression is Keseph. (2) In the N. T. money is rendered as follows:—(a) Argurion, pecunia, "silver" (Matt. xxv. 18, 27; xxviii. 12, 15; Mark xiv. 11; Luke ix. 3; xix. 15, 23; xxii. 5; Acts vii. 16 [argentum]; viii. 20 [pecunia]. In Matt. xxvi. 9, the phrase is "much [money]"). (b) Chalkos, æs, "brass" (Mark vi. 8; xii. 41). (c) Chrēma, "a thing that one uses or needs," pretium (Acts iv. 37; pecunia, viii. 18, 20; xxiv. 26). (d) Kerma, "anything cut small," æs (John ii. 15). [Silver and Money-Changers.]

Penny. Dēnarion, denarius (Matt. xviii. 28; xx. 2, 9, 10, 13; xxii. 19; Mark vi. 37; xii. 15; xiv. 5; Luke vii. 41; x. 35; xx. 24; John vi. 7; xii. 5; Rev. vi. 6). Its standard weight in the reign of Augustus, and to the time of Nero, was 60 grains. Deducting $\frac{1}{36}$ of the weight for alloy, there remain 58 grs. of pure silver, and the shilling containing 80.7 grs. of pure silver, we have $\frac{58}{80.7}$ of a shilling, or 8.6245 pence = about $8\frac{1}{2}d.$ In the time of Nero the weight was reduced to 52.5; and applying to this the same method of reckoning, the penny of Nero's time would equal about $7\frac{1}{2}d.$ There is no doubt that most of the silver currency in Palestine during the N. T. period consisted of denarii, and "a penny" was the tribute-money payable by the Jews to the Roman emperor [Tribute (money), 2]. "A penny" was the day's pay for a laborer in Palestine at the time of our Lord (Matt. xx. 2, 9, 10, 13; comp. Tobit v. 13), as it was the pay of a field-laborer in the Middle Ages; and the term denarius is still preserved in our £ s. d. [Drachm and Piece of Silver, 2.]

Piece of Gold. This phrase occurs only once in the O. T., in the passage respecting Naaman the Syrian (2 Kings v. 5). In several other passages of a similar kind in connection with gold, the A. V. supplies the word "shekels" [Shekel]; and as a similar expression is found in connection with silver, and as there is not much doubt that a weight is intended, the word understood in this passage would also probably be "shekels."

Piece of Money. (1) Kesitah (Gen. xxxiii. 19; "piece of silver," Josh. xxiv. 32; Job xlii. 11). From the translation by the LXX. of "lambs," it has been assumed that the kesitah was a coin bearing the impression of a lamb or a sheep, but the coins so frequently quoted as examples belong probably to Cyprus, and were not struck till after B. C. 450. The real meaning of kesitah is "a portion," and it was in all probability a piece of rough silver of fixed weight. (2) Stater (Matt. xvii. 27). The word stater means a coin of a certain weight, and hence a standard (comp. shekel and pondo), and was a term applied by the Greeks to coins of gold, of electrum, and of silver. The name was applied first to the didrachm (two drachms), and then to the tetradrachm (four drachms). During the first and second centuries, the silver currency of Palestine consisted of tetradrachms of Antioch on Orontes, of Tyre, etc., and of Roman denarii of a quarter their weight. The Attic tetradrachm was called stater, as the standard coin of the system, and no other stater was current in Palestine at this time. The great cities of Syria and Phœnicia either ceased to strike tetradrachms, or debased their coinage before the close of the first century A. D. Antioch continued to strike tetradrachms to the third century, but gradually depreciated them, the commencement of which cannot be determined. It was carried so far as to destroy the correspondence of the stater to four denarii by the time of Hadrian (A. D. 117). Other cities, if they issued staters towards the close of the first century, struck them of such base metal as to render their separation from copper money impossible. On this evidence, the Gospel is of the first century. The tetradrachm of Antioch (stater) is a specimen of the "piece of money" that was found by St. Peter in the fish's mouth (Matt. xvii. 27). It represents the tax for two persons—for our Lord and for St. Peter [Tribute (Money), 1]. It is equivalent in weight to the shekel, averaging 220 grains, and to about 2*s.* 8*d.* of our money. [Piece of Silver, 2.]

Piece of Silver. This phrase occurs in the A. V. of both the O. T. and N. T. (1) The word "pieces" has been supplied in the A. V. for a word understood in the Hebrew. The rendering is always "a thousand," or the like "of silver" (Gen. xx. 16; xxxvii. 28; xlv. 22; Judg. ix. 4; xvi. 5; 2 Kings vi. 25; Song of Solomon viii. 11; Hosea iii. 2; Zech. xi. 12, 13). In similar passages, the word "shekels" occurs in the Hebrew [Shekel], and there is no doubt that this is the word understood in all these cases. There are, however, some exceptional passages where a word equivalent to "piece" or "pieces" is found in the Hebrew. The first occurs in 1 Sam. ii. 36, Agorah keseph, "piece of silver," and the agorah may be the same as the gerah (q. v.). Both are translated in the LXX. by obolos. The second is in Ps. lxviii. 30 (Heb. 32), Ratsee keseph, "pieces of silver" (LXX. [lxvii. 30] argurion), and the word ratz from ratsats, "to break in pieces," must mean a fragment or piece broken off. The third, the kesitah, to which I have already alluded [Piece of Money, 1]. (2) Two words are rendered in the N. T. by "piece of silver." (a) Drachmē, drachma (Luke xv. 8), and here correctly rendered, as the Attic drachm was at the time of St. Luke equivalent to the Roman denarius [Drachm; Penny]. This accounts for the remark of Josephus (Antiq. iii. 8, 2), who says that "the shekel . . . . . equalled four Attic drachms," for in his time the drachm and denarius were almost equal to the quarter of a shekel [Shekel]. Value about 8*d.* or $7\frac{1}{2}d.$ (b) Argurion, argenteus, denarius. This word occurs in two passages—(A) the account of the betrayal of our Lord for "thirty pieces of silver" (Matt. xxvi. 15; xxvii. 3, 5, 6, 9). These have usually been considered to be denarii, but on no sufficient ground. The parallel passage in Zechariah (xi. 12, 13) is translated "thirty [pieces] of silver;" but which should doubtless be read, "thirty shekels of silver," whilst it is observable that "thirty shekels of silver" was the price of blood to be paid in the case of a servant accidentally killed (Exod. xxi. 32). The passage may therefore be explained as "thirty shekels of silver"—not current shekels, but tetradrachms of the Attic standard of the Greek cities of Syria and Phœnicia. These tetradrachms were common at the time of our Lord, and of them the stater was a specimen [Piece of Money, 2]. In the A. V. of St. Matthew the prophecy is ascribed to Jeremiah instead of to Zechariah. Many suggestions have been made on this question, but it may be observed that the Syriac version omits the proper name, and merely says "the prophet;" hence a copyist might have inserted the wrong name. (B) The price of the conjuring books that were burnt (Acts xix. 19). The Vulgate has accurately rendered the phrase denarii, as there is no doubt that these coins are intended. [Money and Silver.]

Pound. Manā (Luke xix. 13-25)—money of account. At this time the Attic talent obtained in Palestine. Sixty minæ went to the talent (q. v.). The "pound" contained 100 drachms. The drachm of the Gospel period being equivalent to about 8*d.*, the value of the pound would be £3 6*s.* 8*d.* The Greek name mnā was probably derived from the Hebrew maneh (q. v. under Weights).

Ratz. See Piece of Silver.

Rebah. See Fourth Part of a Shekel.

Shekel. A word signifying "weight," and also the name of a coin, either silver or copper. It only occurs in the O. T., where it signifies the weight of certain objects, or where it is employed for a piece of silver of fixed value. The word "shekel" occurs in the Hebrew and the A. V. in the following passages: Gen. xxiii. 15, 16; Exod. xxi. 22; xxx. 13, 15; xxxviii. 24-26; Lev. v. 15; xxvii. 3-7; Num. iii. 47, 50; vii. 13, 19, 25, 31, 37, 43, 49, 55, 61, 67, 73, 79, 85, 86; xviii. 16; Josh. vii. 21; 1 Sam. ix. 8; xvii. 5, 7; 2 Sam. xiv. 26; xxi. 16; xxiv. 24; 2 Kings vii. 1; xv. 20; 1 Chron. xxi. 25 (gold shekels); 2 Chron. iii. 9 (gold shekels); Neh. v. 15; x. 32; Jer. xxxii. 9; Ezek. iv. 10; xlv. 12; Amos viii. 5. It is supplied in the A. V. in connection with "silver" in Deut. xxii. 19, 29; Judg. xvii. 2-4, 10;

2 Sam. xviii. 11, 12; 1 Kings x. 29; 2 Chron. i. 17; and in connection with "gold" in Gen. xxiv. 22; Num. vii. 14, 20, 26, 32, 38, 44, 50, 56, 62, 68, 74, 80, 86; Judg. viii. 26; 1 Kings x. 16; 2 Chron. ix. 15, 16 [see Maneh under WEIGHTS]. Three kinds of shekels appear to be mentioned—(1) the shekel, (2) the shekel of the sanctuary, and (3) the shekel of the king's weight. The "shekel of the sanctuary," or "holy shekel," a term generally applied to the silver shekel, but once to the gold (Exod. xxxviii. 24), was probably the normal weight, and was kept by the priests. The "shekel of the king" was connected with the Assyrio-Babylonian maneh of the king, as marked on the monuments from Nineveh [Talent under WEIGHTS]. The LXX. translate the denominations in silver by didrachmon and siklos. The shekel as extant corresponds in weight to the tetradrachm or didrachm of the early Phœnician talent in use in the cities of Phœnicia under Persian rule. It is probable that the Alexandrian Jews adopted the term "didrachm" as the common name of the coin which was equal in weight to the shekel. The value of the silver shekel is about 2*s.* 8*d.* The gold shekel, as derived from a passage in Josephus, must have weighed about 253 grains [see Pound under WEIGHTS], a very little lower than the 60th of the Assyrian mina in gold, which weighed 260 grains; and when he says in another passage (Antiq. iii. 8. 10; comp. Num. vii. 14) that ten gold shekels equalled ten daries, he must mean the double daries, weighing about 260 grains. The gold shekel was worth about £2. None have ever been discovered. (See General Remarks.) Fifteen shekels of silver, each weighing about 224 grains, were equal in value to one shekel of gold [Talent under WEIGHTS]. The divisions of the shekel mentioned in the O. T. are the half (bekah), the third part, the fourth part (rebah) and the twentieth part (gerah), q. v. In the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus (B. C. 458) a special commission was granted to Ezra "to do what seems good with the rest of the silver and the gold" (Ezra vii. 18); and it has been suggested that this was virtually permission to the Jews to coin money; and the silver shekels extant, dated of the years 1 to 5, and the half-shekels of the years 1 to 4, weighing about 220 and 110 grains respectively, are considered to be of this period. As regards the "shekels of silver" mentioned in Nehemiah (v. 15; comp. x. 32), these may perhaps refer to the silver coin circulating in the Persian kingdom called siglos, of which 20 went to one gold daric, and weighing 84 grains, but having no connection with the siklos (weighing about 220 grains), excepting in name. These coins are, like the daries, impressed with the figure of an archer [DRAM]. In the year B. C. 139, Antiochus VII. (Sidetes) granted special permission to Simon Maccabæus to coin money with his own stamp (1 Macc. xv. 6), and the silver shekels and half-shekels most probably belong to Simon, and perhaps the copper pieces (½ shekel, ¼ shekel, and ⅛ of shekel), dated in the fourth year; but there is great uncertainty as to the latter.

The Asmonæan dynasty continued to issue a copper coinage, gradually showing Greek tendencies, to the time of Antigonus, the last prince of the Asmonæan dynasty, (B. C. 40–37), and the numerous coinage of Alexander Jannæus (B. C. 105–78) doubtless circulated even to N. T. times [MITE]. The Idumæan princes, commencing with Herod I. (surnamed the Great), continued a copper coinage with only Greek legends, which circulated in Judæa (as well as a procuratorial coinage, A. D. 6–59) till the death of Agrippa II. (Acts xxv. 13; xxvi. 2, seq.) in A. D. 100. The national coinage, consisting of silver shekels and ¼ shekels, as well as of copper, with old Hebrew inscriptions, was revived during the first revolt (May, A. D. 66–September, A. D. 70), and during the second under Bar-cochab (A. D. 132–A. D. 135), at which time many of the Jewish ½ shekels were struck over Roman denarii.

Silver [Money]. (1) Keseph in O. T. (q. v.); (2) in N. T. arguros, argentum (Matt. x. 9; James v. 3), or argurion, argentum (Acts iii. 6; xx. 33; 1 Pet. i. 18). The silver coins current in Palestine in N. T. period consisted of the tetradrachms and drachms of the Attic standard, and of the Roman denarius. [MONEY, 1 and 2, and PIECE OF SILVER, 2.]

Silverling. Keseph (Isa. vii. 23). The word silverling occurs in Tyndale's version of Acts xix. 19, and in Coverdale's of Judg. ix. 4; xvi. 5. The German silberling is found in Luther's version (Bible Word-Book). The same word is also used in Cranmer and Tyndale for the money stolen by Micah (Judg. xvii. 2, 3)—"the leuen hundredth syluerlyngs" (Bible Educator, vol. iv., p. 210).

Stater. See Piece of Money, 2, and Tribute-money, 1.

Sum [of Money]. (1) Kephalaion (Acts xxii. 28), i. e. in classical authors capital as opposed to interest or income (cp. "principal," Lev. vi. 5; Num. v. 7). In Mk. xii. 15 epikephalaion, "poll-tax," is used in the place of the ordinary word kēnsos. [TRIBUTE (Money), 2.] SUM OF MONEY. (2) Timē argyriou, pretium argenti (Acts vii. 16), i. e. price in silver. [MONEY.]

Talent. Talanton, talentum, a sum, not a coin. (1) In O. T. the rendering of the Hebrew kiccar [see Talent under WEIGHTS]; (2) in N. T. this word occurs—(a) in the parable of the unmerciful servant (Matt. xviii. 23–25); and (b) in the parable of the talents (Matt. xxv. 14–30). At this time the Attic talent obtained in Palestine; 60 minæ and 6000 drachmæ went to the talent. It was consequently worth about £200. [POUND.]

Third Part of the Shekel (Neh. x. 32), about 10½*d.* See Shekel and Tribute [Money].

Tribute [Money]. (1) The sacred tribute, didrachma (Matt. xvii. 24). The sacred tribute or payment of the "atonement-money" was half a shekel (Exod. xxx. 13, 16), and was originally levied on every male of twenty years old and above when the Israelites were first numbered. In the reign of Joash the same sum was demanded for the repair of the Temple (2 Chron. xxiv. 4–14). After the return from the Captivity, the annual payment "for the service of the house of God" was one-third of the shekel (q. v.), and was voluntarily contributed (Neh. x. 32). The amount of tribute was again restored to the half-shekel (q. v.), which the Jews when dispersed throughout the world continued to pay toward the Temple. It is to this tribute that St. Matthew refers, and the stater found in the fish's mouth was an Attic tetradrachm, and at this time equal to a shekel [PIECE OF MONEY; SHEKEL]. Many commentators, both ancient and modern, have entirely missed the meaning of this miracle by interpreting the payment as a civil one. That it was the sacred tribute is plain from our Lord's reason for exemption: "Of whom do the kings of the earth take custom or tribute? of their own children or of strangers?" (Matt. xvii. 25, 26), and further, from His reason for payment, "lest we should offend them," which shows that the Jews willingly paid the tribute; indeed, it was not enforced by law even in the earliest times, being in this respect unlike the civil tribute. (2) The civil tribute, nomisma tou kēnsou, kēnsos, phoros (Matt. xxii. 17, 19; Mark xii. 14; Luke xx. 22; xxiii. 2). This was a tax paid to the Roman emperor, and was doubtless established when Judæa became a Roman province. The sum paid annually is not known; but after the capture of Jerusalem and destruction of the Temple, Vespasian ordered the Jews, in whatever country they might be, to pay the sum of two drachmæ to the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, as they had previously paid to the Temple at Jerusalem. Under Domitian the tax was enforced with great severity, but upon the accession of Nerva it was abolished. Numismatic records establish this fact: coins are extant with the legend, Fisci Judaici calumnia sublata (comp. sycophantia—false accusation—Luke xix. 8). After the revolt of Bar-cochab, Hadrian renewed the tax, and in the reign of Alexander Severus (A. D. 226) the Jews continued to pay the didrachm. This civil tribute was paid in denarii. "Show me the tribute-money; and they brought unto Him a penny" (Matt. xxii. 19; comp. Mark xii. 15; Luke xx. 24). "And He saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription? They say unto Him, Cæsar's." The title of Cæsar is common to all the Roman emperors, and the name of Tiberius, who was the Cæsar alluded to, is abbreviated on the coins, TI., while the title CÆSAR is at length. The answer may further be illustrated by the small brass coins issued under the procurators Coponius, Ambivius, and Rufus, circulating in Judæa at this time, on which is simply the legend Kaisaros—of Cæsar. [PENNY.]

The two following terms bear direct relation to money, and are worthy of illustration:

Money-Changers. Three distinct terms are employed in the N. T. to express this class—(1) Trapezītes, numularius, A. V. "exchanger" (Matt. xxv. 27), from trapeza, "a table," a word employed for the "tables" (mensæ) of the money-changers in Matt. xxi. 12; Mark xi. 15; John ii. 15, and for the "bank" (mensa) in Luke xix. 23. Trapezītes was the ordinary name for the banker at Athens. His principal occupation was that of changing money at an agio. He was a private banker, like the argentarii at Rome, who must be distinguished from the mensarii or mensularii and the numularii, who were public bankers appointed by the state on various emergencies, the latter of whom seem to have been permanently employed. Hence the Vulgate has rendered their name in all cases correctly. As the Greek word trapezītes is from trapeza, "a table," so our English word "banker" (French, banquier) is derived from the French banc, "a bench," on which the person sat to do his business. (2) Kollubistes, numularius, A. V. "money-changer" (Matt. xxi. 12; Mark xi. 15); A. V. "changer" (John ii. 15), from kollubos or kollubon, sometimes designated as "the changing of money," or "rate of exchange," sometimes as "a small coin" or "a kind of money." A passage in Theophrastus shows us that the kollubos must have been a silver piece ranging between the lepton [MITE] and the ¼ obol, and therefore ⅛ of an obol, weighing about 1.4 grains. It would thus be the silver equivalent of the chalkous, which was the copper ⅛ of an obol. (3) Kermatistes, numularius; A. V. "changer of money" (John ii. 14), from a Greek word signifying "to cut small," which is from kerma, "money," John ii. 15 [MONEY]. Money-changing was called kermatismos. No coin was called by this name. The money-changers, of which perhaps the "goldsmiths" who repaired the vessels of the Temple (Neh. iii. 8) are prototypes, sat in the courts of the Temple on the 25th of Nizan for the purpose of exchanging foreign money for Jewish, as the Temple tax could only be paid in this latter coin. They also seem to have acted as bankers, money being placed in their hands for the purpose of increasing it, and on which interest was paid (Matt. xxv. 27; Luke xix. 23). Though the system of "lending" was not altogether objected to in the O. T. (Exod. xxii. 25; Lev. xxv. 36, 37; Deut. xxiii. 19, 20; Prov. vi. 1; Ps. xv. 5; Jer. xv. 10; Ezek. xxii. 12; xviii. 13, etc.), yet after the Captivity the Jews were compelled to leave off usury (Neh. v. 11, 12), whilst in the N. T. period it was sanctioned, provided it was done "hoping for nothing again" (Luke vi. 35; comp. Matt. v. 42). The system, however, pursued by the money-changers in the Temple must have been a vicious one, as is apparent from our Lord's denunciation of their doings (Matt. xxi. 13; Mark xi. 17; Luke xix. 46; comp. Isa. lvi. 7; Jer. vii. 11).

Treasury or Treasure. This term is used in the A. V. of the N. T. as the translation of three different words—(1) Gazophulakion (Mark xii. 41, 43; Luke xxi. 1; John viii. 20), from gaza, "a treasure," and phulassō, "to keep." The word gaza (Heb. ganza), which occurs in this sense in Acts viii. 27, is employed frequently in the O. T. for "treasures" or "treasure-house" (Ezra v. 17; vi. 1; vii. 20; Esth. iii. 9; iv. 7; Ezek. xxvii. 24; 1 Chron. xxviii. 11). It is not a Hebrew word, but probably a Persian. The term gazophulakion or gazophylacium occurs in various passages of the Maccabees, and the Vulgate uses it as the term for the "chest" (Heb. aron, LXX. kibōtos) in which Jehoiada collected the money for the repairs of the Temple [see General Remarks]. The treasury-chamber appears to have been a place where people came to offer their charity-money for the repairs and other uses of the Temple, and consisted of 13 brazen chests (Heb. trumpets, because the mouths were wide at the top and narrow below), which stood in the outer court of the women. (2) Korbanas, corbōna (Matt. xxvii. 6), the sacred treasure of the Jews, and explained in Mark vii. 11 as a gift (dōron), and by Josephus as "a gift to God." Korban in the O. T. is principally employed for unbloody sacrifices" (comp. Lev. ii. 1, 4, 5, 6). Dōron in the N. T. principally means "gifts in general" (Matt. ii. 11), "sacrificial gifts" (Matt. v. 23, 24; Heb. v. 1; xi. 4), "gifts of God to man" (Ephes. ii. 8), "of man to man" (Rev. xi. 10); but it is also used of gifts to the "treasury" (Luke xxi. 1), and in one case appears to mean the "treasury itself" (Luke xxi. 4). (3) Thesauros, thesaurus. (a) As the "treasure-house" (Matt. ii. 11; xiii. 52); (b) as the "treasure" (Matt. vi. 19, 20; xii. 35; xiii. 44; xix. 21, Mark x. 21; Luke vi. 45; xii. 33; xviii. 22; 2 Cor iv. 7; Col. ii. 3; Heb. xi. 26). The word is used in the LXX. as the translation of the Hebrew otsar meaning either "treasures of God," "store-house for corn," "treasury for gold and silver," etc. (Deut. xxviii. 12; xxxii. 34: 1 Chron. xxvii. 27; Josh. vi. 19; 1 Kings vii. 51, etc.).

WEIGHTS.

The following weights are mentioned in the Bible:

Bekah (Gen. xxiv. 22), "half," "half a shekel." This word occurs only in the Pentateuch. See Bekah under MONEY.

Gerah. Properly a "grain" or "bean," the smallest silver weight, $\frac{1}{20}$th part of the shekel. See Gerah under MONEY and Shekel.

Litra. See Pound.

Maneh (LXX. mnā; Vulgate, mina). "A portion or part;" A. V. "pound," sometimes called stater—standard; a word owing its origin to Babylon, and which, as the weight was employed by the Egyptians, Phœnicians, Hebrews, and Greeks, has the same meaning in the language of all these nations. The weight of the golden targets made by Solomon for the Temple is stated to have been 300 [shekels] of gold each (2 Chron. ix. 16), whilst in the parallel passage the amount of gold employed for each shield is given as three pounds (manehs, 1 Kings x. 17). It would thus appear that the maneh of gold was equal to 100 shekels, but it must be observed that in the Chronicles the Hebrew is "300 of gold," the word shekels being supplied in the A. V.; and it has consequently been suggested by some that the Chronicles was written in the Macedonian period, and that consequently one should reckon what is here meant as "100 drachms to the maneh," as in use among the Greeks. The passage, however, is obscure, and in any case the calculation of 100 shekels to the maneh is not likely. That in Ezekiel (xlv. 12) relative to the maneh is also difficult of explanation [SHEKEL; TALENT]. The word maneh further occurs in Ezra ii. 69; Neh. vii. 71, 72; comp. 1 Esdras v. 45.

Pound. (1) Mnā, mina (1 Macc. xiv. 24; xv. 18). Here large sums are weighed by this standard, and it refers to the Attic talent. (2) Litra, a word used by the Greeks of Sicily in their system of weights and money, sometimes called stater—standard—and equivalent to the Latin word libra or as, the unit of weight among the Romans. Josephus says that the Hebrew maneh of gold equalled $2\frac{1}{2}$ litræ. The libra or Roman pound = 5059 grains, consequently $2\frac{1}{2}$ Roman pounds = 12,647 grains; and as the Hebrew gold shekel was the fiftieth part of the maneh, it must have weighed about 253 grains [Shekel under MONEY]. The word litra occurs in the N. T. in John xii. 3 and xix. 39.

Shekel. A word signifying "weight," according to which numerous objects were weighed, especially the metals. The passage in Ezek. xlv. 12 is confusing, and cannot be satisfactorily explained, but it must be remembered that it is prophetical. 50 or 60 shekels equalled a maneh [MANEH; POUND]. 3600 or 3000 shekels equalled a talent [TALENT]. See Shekel under MONEY.

Talent. Kikkar, properly "a circle" or "globe;" hence kuklos, circus. The largest Hebrew weight for metals. First occurs in Exod. xxv. 39, "a talent of pure gold." It is also specially spoken of as "talent of silver" (2 Kings v. 22), "talent of lead" (Zech. v. 7), "talent of brass" (Exod. xxxviii. 29), and "talent of iron" (1 Chron. xxix. 7). A talent of silver bound up in a bag, and one change of garment, were about as much as one man could carry (2 Kings v. 23), and weighing was probably avoided by the sealed bags containing a certain weight of silver. The Hebrew talent was derived from Assyria and Babylonia. Of the talents current in these countries, the heavy or Assyrian talent passed through Mesopotamia and Syria to the Phœnician coast-towns, and to Palestine, where we find it in use among the Israelites. In Nineveh, as well as in Palestine, besides the weights talent of the king of 3600 sixtieths of the maneh for valuing precious metals, a special reckoning was made by talents of 3000 gold and silver units; but when it was found convenient to reckon 3000 shekels instead of 3600 to the talent is not known, nor when a deviation was made from the sexagesimal division of the maneh, and it was limited to 50 instead of to 60 units. The sum-total of the taxes to the sanctuary paid by the people is stated to be (Exod. xxxviii. 25) 100 talents, 1775 shekels, to which 603,550 men each contributed a half shekel, so that, according to this, 3000 shekels are reckoned to the talent; and as the talent is always divided into 60 manehs, 20 shekels went to the maneh; which is corroborated from the fact that the taxes for persons of various age and sex commence at a maximum point of 50 shekels (Lev. xxvii. 3, 16), and that Achan found a wedge of gold of just 50 shekels' weight, and not 60 (Josh. vii. 21). [See General Remarks.]

The shekels of the weight talent "of the king" and the gold talent are identical, the latter talent having been formed from the former, which appears to have been used for weighing other materials than the metals ("king's weight," 2 Sam. xiv. 26). [SHEKEL.] The weight of 9 "holy" silver shekels (224.7975×9) thus equals 8 sixteenths of the "weight" maneh (252.9165×8), and the value of 15 "holy" silver shekels equals that of 1 gold shekel—i. e. £2. Some, however, have taken the silver talent as weighing 660,000 grains [$114\frac{7}{12}$ lbs. troy], and, on the basis of the shekel being equivalent to 3s., equalling £450, and the gold talent (with a shekel of about 132 grains) as weighing double the silver, 1,320,000 grains [$229\frac{1}{6}$ lbs. troy], and equalling, at £4 per oz. troy, £11,000 (Smith, Student's O. T. Hist.). As to the copper talent, which is supposed by some to have had a shekel of four times the weight of the gold shekel, though only 1500 to the talent, and therefore equalling 792,000 grains, it is impossible to speak with certainty; but in all probability the copper talent did not contain a fewer number of shekels than that of the silver.

The amounts of talents mentioned in the Bible during the reigns of David and Solomon are almost incredible (1 Chron. xxii. 14; xxix. 4, 7). The annual income of Solomon is said to have been 666 talents of gold (1 Kings x. 14; 2 Chron. ix. 13), which, taking the estimate of some that the gold talent was double the silver, would be equivalent to £7,780,000, a sum more than the revenues of the whole Persian empire under Darius, which has been calculated at about three millions and a half. But if we take 15 shekels of silver as equalling one shekel of gold, and 15 talents of silver as equalling one talent of gold, then $666\frac{2}{3}$ talents of gold were exactly 10,000 talents of silver, or £4,000,000. It is, however, difficult to hazard any safe conjecture, and most likely the figures in all these passages have been corrupted.

MINING AND METALLURGY OF THE BIBLE.

The graphic account in Job xxviii. is a striking description of mining operations in olden times: "Surely there is a source for the silver, and a place for the gold which they fine. Iron is taken out of the earth, and he [i. e. the miner or workman] poureth forth stone as copper. He hath made an end of darkness, and he searcheth to every extremity [i. e. to great depths and with diligent care] for the stone of darkness and of the shadow of death. He breaketh through a shaft away from those who tarry above; there, forgotten of every foot, they hang and swing far from men. The earth, from it cometh forth bread, and beneath it is upturned like fire: its stones are the place of the sapphire, which also hath dust of gold. A way that no bird of prey knoweth, and the eye of the hawk hath not seen it; which the proud beasts of prey have not trodden, nor the lion passed along. He layeth his hand upon the stone, he turneth up mountains from the root. He cutteth channels in the rocks, and his eye seeth all rare things. He bindeth fast the rivers that they leak not, and that which is hidden he bringeth to light" (Job xxviii. 1–11).

There are, as we have already seen, traces of ancient mining in Egypt, in the desert of Sinai, in Palestine, and in the adjoining lands, and this poetic description must be held as applying to some of these operations. The writer sketches the vast labor and dangerous enterprises which men will undertake in order to win from the earth its treasures, and then passes on to the question: "Where shall wisdom be found, and where is the place of understanding?" These shall baffle the skill of the miner, and are more difficult of attainment than the precious treasures of the earth. For "the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding" (vs. 12, 28).

It may be well here briefly to summarize what is known concerning the mines of biblical antiquity. Clearly, gold, silver, and tin were brought to the lands of the Bible mainly by commerce, though there are traces or records of gold-working in Egypt, and of both gold and silver in Arabia and Edom. Copper and iron were both native products of Palestine, and were worked also in the island of Meroë, at the mouth of the Nile and in the peninsula of Sinai. The island of Cyprus is also mentioned as a source of copper, and there is every probability that both iron and copper were worked in other districts likewise, though there is no distinct and explicit proof. There were lead-mines in Egypt, near the coast of the Red Sea, and also near Sinai, and it is not improbable that these lead-mines may have yielded small quantities of silver also.

Diodorus Siculus gives a minute description of the method of mining and refining gold. Shafts were sunk into what Diodorus calls veins of marble of excessive whiteness (evidently quartz-rock), from which day-and-night relays of convicts extracted the auriferous quartz. This was then broken up with picks and chisels, and further reduced by iron pestles in stone mortars to small fragments. Then it was ground to powder, spread upon a broad inclined table, and washed with water and fine sponges until the gold became pure from earthy matter. Finally, it was put, with a little lead, tin, salt and bran, into earthen crucibles closed with clay, and subjected for five days and nights to the fire of a furnace. From this description it may be seen that gold-mining in these ancient times did not radically differ from that of one hundred years ago.

Concerning the arts of metallurgy in ancient times we are left in much ignorance. These arts must have existed in considerable excellence amongst the Egyptians and Assyrians; and the accounts given in the Bible of the buildings of David and Solomon show that the Israelites, and especially the Phœnicians, were accomplished metal-workers. Situated between the great ancient empires of the East and West, Palestine was alternately the prey of each, and the carrying away of metal-workers into captivity shows the esteem in which they were then held. See 1 Sam. xiii. 19; 2 Kings xxiv. 14, 15; Jer. xxiv. 1; xxix. 2. The book of Ecclesiasticus (chap. xxxviii. 27, 28), in the Apocrypha, gives an account of a smith's workshop which those who are used to factories and foundries will fully appreciate: "So every carpenter and workmaster, that laboreth night and day; and they that cut and grave seals, and are diligent to make great variety, and give themselves to counterfeit imagery, and watch to finish a work: the smith also sitting by the anvil, and considering the iron-work, the vapor of the fire wasteth his flesh, and he fighteth with the heat of the furnace; the noise of the hammer and the anvil is ever in his ears, and his eyes look still upon the pattern of the thing that he maketh; he setteth his mind to finish his work, and watcheth to polish it perfectly."

In the Bible are references to casting (Ex. xxv. 12; xxvi. 37; 2 Chron. iv. 17; Isa. xl. 19); soldering and welding (Isa. xli. 7); hammering into sheets (Num. xvi. 38; Isa. xliv. 12; Jer. x. 4, 9); gilding and overlaying with metal (Ex. xxv. 11–24; xxvi. 37; 1 Kings vi. 20; 2 Chron. iii. 5; Isa. xl. 19; Zech. xiii. 9). But perhaps the most interesting of all such allusions are those to the melting and separation and refining of metals (Ps. xii. 6; Prov. xvii. 3, etc.; Isa. i. 25; Jer. vi. 29; Ezek. xxii. 18–20). Malachi (iii. 2, 3) makes use of a striking metaphor derived from the metallurgy of silver. Before the discovery of quicksilver, lead was used for the purification of the precious metals. How far the ancients were acquainted with what is now known as "Pattison's method" of obtaining silver from argentiferous lead-ore is uncertain, but Pliny apparently hints at something of the kind in these words: "When submitted to the action of fire, part of the ore precipitates itself in the form of lead, while the silver is left floating on the surface."

Clearly, however, the passage from Malachi above named refers to the process of "cupellation:" "He [the Messiah] shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver; and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness."

1. A he-goat	1. Alexander, or Greek power,
2. came from the west	2. came from Europe (west of Asia)
3. gliding swiftly over the earth	3. with unexampled rapidity of success;
4. ran unto the ram in the fury of his power.	4. attacked Darius furiously, and
5. smote him	5. beat him—at the Granicus, Issus, etc.;
6. brake his two horns	6. conquered Persia, Media, etc.;
7. cast him on the ground	7. ruined the power of Darius,
8. stamped on him, and	8. insomuch that Darius was murdered, etc.
9. waxed very great	9. Alexander overran Bactriana to India,
10. when he was strong his great horn was broken, and	10. but died at Babylon in the zenith of his fame and power;
11. instead of it, came four notable ones	11. his dominions were parceled among Seleucus, Antigonus, Ptolemy, Cassander (who had been his officers);
12. toward the four winds of heaven	12. In Babylon, Asia Minor, Egypt, Greece.
13. out of one of them a little horn waxed great	13. Antiochus the Great, succeeded by Antiochus Epiphanes,
14. toward the south and east	14. conquered Egypt, etc.,
15. which took away the daily sacrifice, and cast down the sanctuary, etc.—Dan. 8: 5–12.	15. and endeavored utterly to subvert the Jewish polity, polluting their temple-worship and sacrifices to the utmost of his power.
THE FOURTH BEAST.	ROMAN EMPIRE.
1. Dan. 7: 7, 8; 19–21.	1. Rome, mistress of the world.

BIBLE AIDS FOR SOCIAL AND PRIVATE PRAYER.

EXPRESSIONS FOR SOCIAL PRAYER.

ADORATION.

Jer. x. 6, 7. Forasmuch as there is none like unto thee, O Lord; thou art great, and thy name is great in might: who would not fear thee, O King of nations?

Psa. cxlv. 10. All thy works shall praise thee, O Lord, and thy saints shall bless thee. They shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power.

— lxv. 2. O thou that hearest prayer, unto thee shall all flesh come.

CONFESSION.

Dan. ix. 5. We have sinned, and have committed iniquity, and have done wickedly, and have rebelled, even by departing from thy precepts and from thy judgments.

1 John i. 8. If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us.

Isa. lxiv. 6. We are all as an unclean thing.

SUPPLICATION.

Psa. lxvii. 1. God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us.

— lxxxv. 7. Wilt thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in thee?

—— 8. Show us thy mercy, O Lord, and grant us thy salvation.

INTERCESSION.

— lxvii. 3. Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

— vii. 9. Oh let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end; but establish the just.

THANKSGIVING.

— cvii. 15. Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, for his wonderful works to the children of men!

Psa. cviii. 4. For thy mercy is great above the heavens, and thy truth reacheth unto the clouds.

— cxiii. 2. Blessed be the name of the Lord from this time forth, and for evermore.

— cxiii. 3. From the rising of the sun unto the going down of the same, the Lord's name is to be praised.

—— 5, 6. Who is like unto the Lord our God, who dwelleth on high, who humbleth himself to behold the things that are in heaven and in the earth?

2 Cor. ix. 15. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift.

—— 7. In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins according to the richness of his grace.

1 Pet. i. 3, 4. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away.

Eph. i. 3. Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in Christ.

DEDICATION.

Isa. xxvi. 13. O Lord our God, other lords besides thee have had dominion over us; but by thee only will we make mention of thy name.

— lxiii. 19. We are thine.

DOXOLOGY.

Phil. iv. 20. Now unto God and our Father be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

Rev. vii. 10. Salvation to our God which sitteth on the throne, and unto the Lamb.

— vi. 12. Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen.

EXPRESSIONS FOR PRIVATE PRAYER.

ADORATION.

Psa. xviii. 1. I will love thee, O Lord, my strength.

—— 2. The Lord is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer; my God, my strength, in whom I will trust; my buckler and the horn of my salvation, and my high tower.

— lxii. 1. Truly my soul waiteth upon God: from him cometh my salvation.

—— 2. He only is my rock and my salvation; he is my defence; I shall not be greatly moved.

CONFESSION.

— li. 3. I acknowledge my transgression, and my sin is ever before me.

Rom. vii. 18. For I know that in me, that is in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing; for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good I find not.

—— 24. O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?

Job xl. 4. Behold, I am vile; what shall I answer thee? I will lay my hand upon my mouth.

SUPPLICATION.

Luke xviii. 13. God be merciful to me a sinner.

Psa. li. 10. Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me.

— li. 1. Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy loving-kindness; according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies, blot out my transgressions.

— xxv. 11. For thy name's sake, O Lord, pardon mine iniquity, for it is great!

— xxv. 7. Remember not the sins of my youth, nor my transgressions: according to thy mercy remember thou me for thy goodness' sake, O Lord.

—— 11. Cast me not away from thy presence, and take not thy holy spirit from me.

—— 12. Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation, and uphold me with thy free spirit.

—— 15. O Lord, open thou my lips, and my mouth shall show forth thy praise.

— xvii. 7. Hold up my goings in thy paths, that my footsteps slip not.

— cxix. 149. Hear my voice according unto thy loving-kindness; O Lord, quicken me according to thy judgment.

—— 175. Let my soul live, and it shall praise thee; and let thy judgments help me.

—— 176. I have gone astray like a lost sheep; seek thy servant, for I do not forget thy commandments.

— cxxxix. 23. Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts:

—— 24. And see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting.

— xxv. 4. Shew me thy ways, O Lord: teach me thy paths.

—— 5. Lead me in thy truth, and teach me, for thou art the God of my salvation; on thee do I wait all the day.

— cxix. 18. Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law.

1 Chron. iv. 10. Oh that thou wouldst bless me indeed, and enlarge my coast, and that thine hand might be with me, and that thou wouldst keep me from evil, that it may not grieve me!

Psa. li. 9. Hide thy face from my sins, and blot out all mine iniquities.

Gen. xxxii. 26. I will not let thee go, except thou bless me.

Prov. xxx. 8. Remove far from me vanity and lies; give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me.

—— 9. Lest I be full, and deny thee, and say, Who is the Lord? or lest I be poor, and steal, and take the name of my God in vain.

Job xvi. 22. When a few years are come, then I shall go the way whence I shall not return.

Psa. xxxix. 4. Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is, that I may know how frail I am.

INTERCESSION.

Eph. vi. 24. Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity.

Psa. cxxv. 4. Do good, O Lord, unto those that be good, and to them that are upright in their hearts.

Isa. lxiv. 1. Oh that thou wouldst rend the heavens, that thou wouldst come down, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence.

Psa. xliii. 3. Oh send out thy light and thy truth.

— lvii. 11. Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens; let thy glory be above all the earth.

— lxxii. 18. Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things.

—— 19. And blessed be his glorious name for ever; and let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen and Amen.

THANKSGIVING.

— xl. 1. I waited patiently for the Lord, and he inclined unto me and heard my cry.

—— 5. Many, O Lord my God, are thy wonderful works which thou hast done, and thy thoughts which are to us-ward: they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee: if I would declare and speak of them, they are more than can be numbered.

— cxxxix. 17. How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them!

— cxxxix. 18. If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand: when I awake, I am still with thee.

— ciii. 1. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy name.

—— 2. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits.

— ciii. 3. Who forgiveth all thine iniquities, who healeth all thy diseases.

— 4. Who redeemeth thy life from destruction: who crowneth thee with loving-kindness and tender mercies.

— cxvi. 12. What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me?

—— 13. I will take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord.

— cxlv. 10. All thy works shall praise thee, O Lord, and thy saints shall bless thee.

— cxlix. 4. For the Lord taketh pleasure in his people, he will beautify the meek with salvation.

DEDICATION.

— cxvi. 16. O Lord, truly I am thy servant: I am thy servant, and the son of thine handmaid: thou hast loosed my bonds.

—— 9. I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living.

DOXOLOGY.

1 Tim. i. 17. Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor and glory for ever and ever. Amen.

Rom. xvi. 27. To God, only wise, be glory, through Jesus Christ, for ever. Amen.

FROM THE CREATION TO THE FOURTH CENTURY A. D.,

DISPLAYING THE LINE OF

JESUS CHRIST FROM ADAM,

THROUGH THE PATRIARCHS AND JUDAH TO DAVID, THE KINGS OF JUDAH TO THE CAPTIVITY, AND SALATHIEL AND SUSANNA (in the line recorded by Luke) TO MARY.

ALSO,

HIGH PRIESTS, KINGS OF ISRAEL, JUDGES, PROPHETS AND HISTORIANS, with remarkable persons and events collaterally placed.

NOTE.—Each century is divided by a strong perpendicular line. The Map begins on the left hand at the top, and is continued from right to left and left to right alternately, forming a regularly connected course to the end. The length of the horizontal lines denotes either the duration of life, the length of reign or time they flourished.

The date of the beheading of Paul is placed in the 14th of Nero's reign. Dionysius, bishop of Corinth, A. D. 170, says that Peter and Paul went to Italy, preached together there, and suffered martyrdom about the same time. Caius of Rome, in the 2d century, names the grave of Peter on the Vatican, and of Paul on the Ostian Way; and others, as Eusebius, Tertullian, and Jerome, agree in this account. The locality around Paul's grave is now used as a cemetery for strangers who die in Rome.

The principle which harmonizes all the acts, and preaching, and letters of Paul, was a belief in Jesus as the Divine Spirit — a living Master, intimately related to every living soul, of whose Gospel he was the special Messenger. This purified his love of his own people, and opened his heart toward all mankind.

VIEW OF JERUSALEM FROM OLIVET AS IT WAS IN THE TIME OF CHRIST.

ar'on (Heb. Aharon). The brother of Moses, and three years his elder. The eldest son of Amram and Jochebed, of the tribe of Levi, born B. C. 1574, probably at Memphis, Egypt. He was 83 years old when he sought out his brother, who had just received his commission as prophet and deliverer at the burning bush. His natural eloquence fitted him to be the spokesman of Moses, who was very slow of speech (Ex. iv. 14–16).

Although Aaron assisted at the making and worship of the golden calf (bull of Egypt), yet Moses appointed him as the first high-priest of the new nation. He may have been jealous of his brother's great and responsible position at the head of the nation, when he joined his sister Miriam in murmurs against him; but, on the appearance of the leprosy in Miriam, he saw his error, repented, and begged forgiveness of God for both. For his want of faith at the rock of Meribah, he was denied the privilege and high honor of crossing over Jordan into the Promised Land, and died on Mt. Hor, at Mosera (Ex. xx.); and there is a tomb on the very summit of the mountain which is venerated as Aaron's, and visited by many pilgrims.

Ab (father). Absalom (makes peace; Abner, causes light). ABBA, father, as used by Jesus (Mark xiv 36), and Paul (Rom. viii. 15; Gal. iv. 6). — 2. The name of the fifth (sacred) month, as used after the captivity.

Abad'don (destruction, or the place of the dead). ASMODEUS in the Apocrypha; APOLYON, Rev. ix. 11; Job xxvi. 6 (destruction).

Abä'na (perennial). The chief river of Damascus, now called Barada. Also known as Amana anciently. There are many channels, nearly all artificial, made for irrigating the thousands of gardens along its banks, throughout the whole city and the suburbs. The Abana rises near Zebedany on Anti-Lebanon, and has a tributary at Ain Fijy, N.W. of Damascus 23 miles. The source is 2,300 feet higher than the lake into which it empties, 15 miles east of Damascus. (2 Ki. v. 12.)

Ab'arim (beyond, or the heights). A mountain range bordering the Dead Sea and Jordan Valley on the east. Nebo is the highest peak, and Pisgah is the top of Nebo. Average height 2,000 to 4,000 feet. Nebo is reckoned 5,000 ft. by some.

Ab'ba (Father). Jesus uses this ancient Aramaic word for the Father God.

Abed'nego (servant of Nego—that is, Mercury the god). The name given by the Chaldeans to Daniel's companion Azariah (Dan. i. 3).

A'bel (weakness, breath). In Hebrew, HEBEL. Second son of Adam; killed by his brother Cain (Gen. iv.).

A'bel (meadow). Several places so named. — 1. A'BEL-BETH-MAA'CHAH, or ABEL-MAIM; a strong city on the slope of Mt. Hermon, near the Jordan, where Joab besieged Sheba (2 Sam. xx. 14). — 2. A'BEL-KERA-MIM (of the vineyards). Near Rabbath, and even now famous for its wines (Judg. xi. 33). — 3. A'BEL-MEHO-LAH (of dancing). South of Bethshan near Jordan. The birthplace of Elisha (1 Ki. xix. 16), and noted for Gibeon's victory over Midian (Judg. vii. 22). — 4. ABEL-MIZ-RAIM (of the Egypts). Near Hebron, where Joseph, his brethren, and the Egyptians mourned for Jacob (Gen. i. 11). Lost. — 5. ABEL-SHITTIM (of the acacias). In Moab, near the head of the Dead Sea. The last camping-ground of the Exodus (Num. xxxiii. 49). Acacia trees are now found wherever there is water in that region.

Abi'athar (abundance). The only son of Ahimelech the priest, who escaped Saul's massacre at Nod (1 Sam. xxii.), and who joined David in his flight, and was afterwards priest with Zadok in David's reign. "Solomon thrust out Abiathar from being priest unto the Lord," fulfilling the doom of Eli's house.

Abi'ezer (helper). Son of Gilead (Josh. xvii. 2); east of Jordan, later of Ophrah, a lost place, which was near the south border of Esdraelon. Gideon was of this family (Judg. vi. 34). — 2. One of David's "mighty men." ABIEZRITES, the family title.

Ab'igail (maker of joy). Nabal's beautiful wife, who saved her husband from David's anger — Nabal having died ten days after, David married her (1 Sam. xxvi. 14). — 2. Sister of David, mother of Amasa.

Abi'hu (God is father). Second son of Aaron by Elizabeth. He was consecrated, with his father and brothers, for the ministry. Abihu and his brother Nadab lost their lives for an error in the altar service, while intoxicated (?).

Abi'jah (father God). A son of Samuel, whose misconduct gave the Israelites the occasion to demand a change of government from the theocracy to a monarchy. (1 Sam. viii. 1.) — 2. Son and successor of Rehoboam (B. C. 958), who followed the idolatries of his father (1 K. xiv. 23).

Abi'la, Abile'ne (grassy meadow). On the E. slope of Mt. Hermon. Mentioned by Josephus (Ant. 14, 13, 3). The name is derived from Abel. ABILA was the Roman capital city of the district, and its ruins are on the banks of the Barada ravine, 12 miles N.W. of Damascus. The district is well watered by the Abana and many other streams from Anti-Lebanon; is fertile and affords good pasture. When Luke wrote (iii. 1) the tetrarchy was divided between Lysanias and Philip. There is a coin bearing the name and title of Lysanias of Abilene.

Abim'elech (father-king). The title of the kings of Philistia. 1. King of Gerar in the time of Abraham, B. C. 1898 (Ge. xx.). The kings of those days had the right (or power) of choosing the fairest unmarried women (Ge. xii.; Est. ii. 3). 2. King of Gerar in Isaac's time, B. C. 1804 (Ge. xxvi.). 3. Son of Gideon, and king of Shechem (Ju. ix.). He was the first who attempted to make himself king in Israel.

EARTHEN LAMP.

Abin'adab (princely). A Levite of Kirjathaim, in whose house the ark "rested" for 20 years (1 Sa. vii. 1). 2. Second son of Jesse (1 Sa. xvi. 8). 3. Son of Saul, killed on Mt. Gilboa (1 Sam. xxxi. 2.) 4. Father of one of Solomon's cabinet officers (1 Ki. iv. 11).

Abi'ram (high). Reubenite and conspirator. See KORAH. 2. Eldest son of Hiel, who died because his father undertook to rebuild Jericho (1 K. xvi.; Josh. vi.).

Ab'ishag (cause of error). The beautiful Shunemite wife (companion) of David in his old age.

Abishu'a (of happiness). Son of Bela (1 Ch. viii. 4). 2. Son of Phinehas, father of Bukki (1 Chr. vi. 4). High-priest after Phinehas and before Eli. Iosepos, in Josephus (Ant. viii. 1, 3).

APAMEA COIN.

Ab'ner (light-maker). A cousin of Saul and commander-in-chief of his army. After Saul's death he made Ishbosheth, Saul's son, king, but betrayed him to David, and was killed by the friends of Asahel, in blood revenge (Num. xxv. 19). David mourned his untimely loss, following his bier.

Abomina'tion. Any thing or custom detested or disliked for religious reasons. The Egyptians would not eat with any foreign people, or eat anything touched by them; and the Hebrews adopted a similar rule. The term ABOMINATION OF DESOLATION (Matt. xxiv.15; Dan. ix. 27) refers to an idol worship (of images) on or near the sacred altar on Moriah. See ANTIOCHUS EPIPHANES.

A'brăhăm (father of a multitude). First named ABRAM (elevation), which was changed when he received from God the PROMISE of the blessing to all nations in his posterity, in his 99th year. Son of TERAH, born in UR, "of the Chaldees," B. C. 1996; had two elder brothers, HARAN and NAHOR, and a half-sister, SARAH, (Iscah,) who was his wife and the mother of Isaac. The Spiritual element in the life of Abraham is the chief topic in the Bible narrative, very few incidents of his natural life being recorded. He was 60 when he left Ur and went to Haran (where his father, Terah, died, aged 215), and 75 when the promise was first made, when, as directed, he entered Canaan, and fixed his camp under a sacred oak near Shechem, where he built an altar and worshiped God, receiving a promise of the inheritance of the land by his descendants.

Abraham worshiped the one true God. The promise made to him was twofold—temporal and spiritual: that his descendants should be many and prosperous, and that by him all the families of the earth should be blessed, and it has been fulfilled in both ways: his descendants, both Jews and Arabs, have been and are now countless, and the spiritual blessings, by the rapid distribution of the Bible through the world, are reaching all the "families."

Besides Sarah he had a wife named KETURAH, who bore him several sons; and also a handmaid, Hagar, whose son, Ishmael, was the head of a great family (the Bedouin Arabs).

Before Isaac was born, Lot, his nephew, was regarded as his heir, and lived with him. He built an altar between Bethel and Hai. From here he went south, "going and pulling up" his tent-pins, towards Beersheba, whence a famine drove him into Egypt.

Pharaoh hearing of the beauty of Sarai, according to the kingly privilege, took her into his family, but soon restored her to Abraham with presents — "a blessing" of cattle and servants,— so that when Abram returned into Canaan he was much richer in cattle, silver, and gold. Lot had been with him, and again they camped near Bethel.

Their cattle having increased to a great number, and contentions among their servants arising, Abram and Lot separated, one choosing the plains of Jericho and the other the hills of Judea. After this time the promise was again repeated; and Abram pitched his tent in the oak grove near Mamre, where he built another altar.

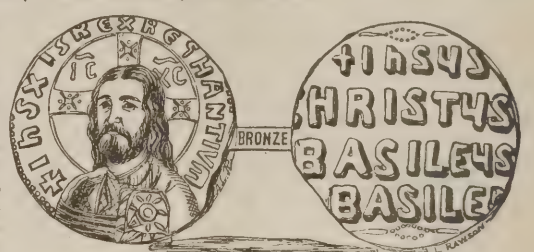
He is first called THE HEBREW on the rescue of his nephew Lot from Chedorlaomer; but his language is supposed to have been Chaldaic, rather than the Hebrew of the Old Testament.

At this time he could arm 318 of his trained servants, showing that his family must have been very large. The Bedouins of Syria are now exact representatives of the ancient patriarch, in their manner of living in tents, by keeping flocks, in habits and religion, and in being ready on the shortest notice to make a raid for defence or reprisal. At Mamre his faith was made stronger by having the promise repeated, and by the prophesy of the bondage in Egypt, and the deliverance.

Ishmael was born of Hagar when Abram was 85 years old, and Sarah 75, and was to have been considered a son of Sarai, but the childless woman could not restrain her envy and jealousy of the favored mother Hagar. When Abram was 99 the promise was renewed, a distinction being made — of temporal blessings for Ishmael and spiritual for Isaac, who was promised to Sarai. Abram's name was changed to Abraham, and his wife's to Sarah, and the covenant of circumcision was renewed to all the family and servants.

A few days after he entertained "three men," who appeared at his tent-door in the dress and manner of the natives. This is one of the most beautiful instances of ancient customs on record. The patriarch and his wife, with their own hands, prepared refreshments, and stood by while their guests ate. Travelers in Syria meet with such attentions now among Abraham's descendants. When the promise of a son to Sarah was renewed, and the destruction of the cities of the plain announced, Abraham discovered that he "had entertained angels unawares," and begged to save his nephew Lot and his family. The next morning, when offering the daily sacrifice, as he saw the ascending smoke from the plain, he probably felt sure of Lot's safety.

During the next few months he practiced the same deception on the Abimelech of Gerar that he had 23 years before on the Pharaoh of Egypt. The king was warned of his danger in a dream, and restored Sarah with presents.



Isaac was born B. C. 1896, and Ishmael (with his mother) was dismissed at the time Isaac was weaned (at 3 years), because Ishmael mocked at the child (probably offered pretended worship to the child of the promise).

Isaac was 25 when he was laid on the altar, and saved from burning by the angel's voice, Abraham's faith having proved true. His mother died at Hebron 12 years after, at the age of 127, and was buried in Machpelah, which Abraham bought of the sons of Heth. This legal conveyance of land is the oldest on record.

Abraham sent Eliezer to Haran, to get a wife for Isaac, when that beautiful and touching incident of "Rebekah at the Well" occurred. This brilliant picture includes all the requisites of a perfect marriage — the sanction of parents, favor of God, domestic habits of the wife, her beauty, modest consent, kindness, and her successful hold on her husband's love, even while living in the same tent with her mother-in-law.

Abraham's descendants occupy the land from Egypt to the Euphrates, besides those that are "scattered and peeled" all over the world.

He died aged 175, and was buried in the cave of Machpelah by his sons Isaac and Ishmael. To this day he is called the "friend of God," and is reverenced alike as the Father of the Faithful by Jew, Mohammedan, and Christian.

MEDAL FOUND AT URFA. (SEE MONEY.)

Abraham's Bosom. Meaning a place of peace, repose and happiness. See LORD'S SUPPER.

Ab'salom (peacemaker). Son of David, only son of his mother, Maachah, daughter of Talmai, king of Geshur, born at Hebron. He was a very handsome man, having a heavy head of hair. Absalom killed his half-brother, Amnon, for an outrage on his sister Tamar, and fled for security to his grandfather, King Talmai, with whom he stayed 3 years. Joab, by the help of a talented woman of Tekoah, induced David to pardon and recall him; but he was kept two years longer out of his father's presence. By the death of Amnon, and it may be of Chilead also, Absalom was the third and the oldest son of the king living, and he was ambitious for the throne, plotted for the place of power, "stole the hearts of the people" by flatteries and promises, and proclaimed himself king at Hebron. His father, David, was obliged to fly to Mahanaim, and Absalom took possession of Jerusalem. Hushai, whom David sent to advise and assist Ahithophel in counseling Absalom, gained time for the true king, and the forces of Absalom were defeated in the wood of Ephraim; Absalom himself, having entangled his hair in a tree, was killed by Joab, and buried under a heap of loose stones as a mark of contempt. David waited in the gate of Mahanaim for the news of the battle, and mourned bitterly when he knew his son was dead.

Absalom raised a pillar "in his lifetime," in the king's dale, but the pillar and its place have disappeared, leaving no trace. The monument called Absalom's tomb, in the Kidron valley, is a modern structure, nearly all cut from the solid rock, and on a side-hill, not in a dale. See TOMB.

Ac'căd. In Shinar, built by Nimrod. Akkerkoof (Arabic name) is 9 miles E. of the Tigris. A ruined brick mound 400 feet around, 125 feet high, cemented by bitumen, and divided into layers of 12 to 20 feet by reeds, and remains of canals, reservoirs, and other works, show the size and importance of the ancient city.

ARMOR. — (SEE ARMS.)

Ac'chō. Ā'cre. (hot sand?). PTOLEMAIS. St. John D'Acre. Seaport 8 miles north of Carmel, by the bay of Acre. The ancient port is filling with sand, and large ships must land at Hepha, near Carmel. The plain of Acre is 6 miles wide, to the hills of Galilee, and is one of the most fertile in Palestine.

Acel'dama (field of blood). Bought for the 30 pieces of silver that Judas received for betraying Jesus. Potter's Field. On the steep south slope of Hinnom, opposite the Siloam pool. A few old olive-trees grow near an old ruin called the house of Ananus. The hill-side is full of rock-hewn tombs. Ship-loads of earth have been carried away from this spot as holy earth, and the Campo Santo (holy field) at Pisa is filled with it.

Achā'ia. Province of Rome in Greece. Gallio was proconsul when Paul was there (Acts xviii. 12).

Achiach'arus. Keeper of the seal of Esarhaddon, king of Nineveh (Tobit i. 21). Nephew to Tobit, son of his brother Anael. Supposed to be the Hebrew for Mordecai.

Ach'sah (anklet). Daughter of Caleb, given to his nephew, Othniel, in reward for leading the attack on Debir. The "upper and lower springs" that were given her as a dower, with the south land (Negeb), are located 6 miles S.W. of Hebron.

Ach'zib. Judah in the Shefela. — 2. In Asher, from which the Canaanites were not driven out. Ecdippa. Now Es Zib, 7 miles N. of Acre. After the return from captivity this was the most northern limit of Israel.

Acts of the Apostles. The similarity of words and forms of sentences between the ACTS and LUKE leads to the belief that Luke wrote both. The book repeats a part of Christ's history, especially the ascension and what attended that event, and the advent of the Holy Spirit at the Pentecost, with the wonderful success of their preaching. The Church in Jerusalem is then noticed; its persecutions, and the conversion of one of its most violent enemies (Paul): and then the narrative includes the efforts made to spread the Gospel by Peter and by Paul. The chief interest in the book, after the introduction, is the activity, success, sufferings and teachings of the great apostle. The book seems unfinished. The author was a companion of Paul, and a witness of most of the acts he records. His design was to show the co-operation of God in spreading Christianity, and to prove the perfect equality of right and privilege in the new Church of Gentile and Jew, and to give illustrations of the power and working of the religion of Jesus. Written after A. D. 63. The place is not known. Perhaps in fragments as they traveled or lived in different cities, finishing the work at Rome.

There are several spurious books called Acts: of Christ, of Paul, and others. See APOCRYPHA.

Ad'ah (beauty). First wife of Lamech, mother of Jabal and Jubal. — 2. Daughter of Elon the Hittite, one of the three wives of Esau, mother of Eliphaz, and so of the Edomites (Gen. xxxvi.). BASHEMATH in Gen. xxvi.

Ad'ām (the man; or reddish tint). The peculiar work of the 6th day of the creation, the crown of the whole fabric, was man, made in the divine image, he alone of all animals having a spiritual life. Adam was made male and female, and the two were placed in the garden Eden. Some believe that a pair of each race were made, black, brown, red, yellow, white, and many others, because there are such great differences in complexion and figure among mankind; and that Adam and Eve were the first pair of the last race created, which would then be the white, or Shemite race.

The original state of man was one of activity and enjoyment. God assumed form and speech, and instructed His children how to dress and keep the garden, and exercised their faculties in naming the animals that He had made; and taught them something of the qualities and relations of vegetables, earths, the heavens, and external objects to which they were related.

The forming of the woman from a rib of Adam has been declared a poetic myth; but the lesson is just as surely taught, whether it is a fact or a fancy, that woman stands in a peculiarly close relation to man. The "tree of knowledge of good and evil," and the "tree of life," were tests of obedience, and as such might have been of any kind. The serpent is described as if it had been a special agent — perhaps one of those spirits that are believed to be superior to man, invisible to his eyes, good and bad, powerful, and always contending for his soul (2 Cor. ii. 11).

Woman was sentenced to endure the pains of childbearing, and the humiliating dependence on a husband; and man to labor, with or without reward, and both to be subject to death (spiritual?). The serpent is not CURSED literally, but rather blessed in having an extra means of protection in the dread of all other animals; he does not suffer by crawling on his belly because he is especially made to go in that way; and he does not eat dust. The denunciation of the serpent was symbolical, and is by some said to be the first gospel promise. "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; he will attack thee on the head, and thou wilt attack him at the heel." The serpent was the spirit of lying and cruelty, as opposed to God, holy, good, and wise.

It is probable that the first garments were made of the skins of animals, offered in sacrifice.

Cain was born the year after the expulsion; Abel a few years later, and Seth at least 130 years after Cain. Other sons and daughters were born to them of whose history nothing is recorded.

Adam's death at the age of 930 is stated, but that of Eve is not given.

Ad'am (red earth). City on the Jordan near Zarthan (Josh. iii. 16).

Adder. There are four Hebrew names translated adder. — 1. Ashub, in Ps. cxl. 3, quoted by Paul in Rom. iii. 13. The original (coiled and hiding) would apply to any kind of serpent. — 2. Pethen, the cobra. — 3. Zepha, in Prov. xxiii. 32, adder; in Is. xi. 8; Jer. viii. 17, cockatrice. The original means to hiss. In the Septuagint, basilisk — which is a fabulous serpent. — 4. Shephiphon, only in Gen. xlix. 17, of Dan, "a serpent by the way." Probably the horned viper, the asp of Cleopatra, found in great numbers in the deserts. Arabia Siffon. It is extremely venomous, only 15 inches long, but fatal even in slight scratches. See SERPENT.

Adōni'jah (my lord is Jehovah). Fourth son of David, born of Haggith at Hebron (2 Sam. iii.). After the death of Amnon and Absalom he made pretensions to the throne of David, supported by Joab and Abiathar the high-priest; but David caused Solomon to be proclaimed and crowned, and invested with authority. Adonijah was pardoned; but after David's death, having renewed his attempt on the throne, he was executed by Solomon's order. (1 K.)

Adum'mim (red pass). BENJAMIN (Josh. xv. 7). On the road from Jericho to Jerusalem, in Wady Kelt. It was always noted for robbers, and was therefore selected for the locality of the parable of the Good Samaritan. (Luke x.) Eight miles E. of Jerusalem there are ruins of a convent and a khan, on opposite sides of the road.

Ad'vōcate (Greek Paraclete). The name given to the Holy Spirit by Jesus (John xiv. 16); and to Jesus by John (1 John ii.).

Æ'nŏn. Enon. (Springs.) Near Salim, where John baptized (John iii. 22). Six miles S. of Bethshan (Tell Redgah). A tomb near is called Shekh Salim. The brook in Wady Chusneh runs near, and many rivulets wind about in all directions, containing "much water."

Ag'ăbus (locust). One of the 70 disciples. Two prophesies of his and their fulfillment are recorded (Acts xi. 27–30; xxi. 10). The famine through "all the world" was only through the Jews' world — Palestine. It is mentioned by Josephus (xx. 2, 5), about A. D. 42, 14 years after Agabus met Paul at Cæsarea, and warned him of his sufferings at Jerusalem if he went up there.

Ag'a-pe (Gr. agapæ, to love). The early Church perpetuated the commemoration of the death of Jesus by certain symbols at meals; a custom most beautiful and most beneficial; for it was a supporter of love, a solace of poverty, a moderator of wealth, and a discipline of humility. Tertullian says: "The nature of our supper may be gathered from its name, the Greek term for love. However much it may cost us, it is real gain to incur such expense in the cause of piety; for we aid the poor by this refreshment; we do not sit down to it till we have first tasted of prayer to God; we eat to satisfy our hunger; we drink no more than benefits the temperate; we feast as those who recollect they are to spend the night in devotion we converse as those who know that the Lord is ar ear-witness. After water for washing hands, and lights have been brought in, every one is required to sing something in the praise of God, either from the Scriptures, or from his own thoughts. By this means, if any one has indulged to excess, he is detected. The feast is closed with prayer." Pliny mentions this custom of the Christians, and says they eat common food (not such as was used for idol-worship). Paul speaks of the abuse of this custom in 1 Cor. xi. 21; and, perhaps to avoid such abuse, the Eucharist was celebrated apart from any meal from about the year A. D. 150.

Age. Old age. Peculiar respect to old age is a general custom in the East, and has been from most remote times. The Scriptures record many instances of such respect and honor. The young rose and stood up in their presence (Lev. xix. 32); and even old men before one especially honored (Job xxix. 8). The aged were privileged to give the first words of counsel (Job xxxii.; Eccl. xxxii.); and old men, ELDERS, became a class, such as the FATHERS, and SENATORS in Rome, and were regarded as the depositaries of knowledge and experience (Job xv.). The attainment of old age was set forth as a blessing (Gen. xv.; Job v.), in prolonging the enjoyment of life, and a sign of peaceful times (Zech. viii.; Is. lxv.); a reward for piety, and a token of God's favor.

Ag'riculture. The earliest records speak of the best men engaged in this pursuit. Laws regulating its affairs formed the chief code of the Hebrews, and tended to produce an equality in interest, binding the son and elevating the slave to a common servitude. The earth was the Lord's, and all were tenants to him, payable in the rent of the Sabbatical year. The family possession was inherited, and if sold must be returned on the year of Jubilee to the original owner, and wealthy owners of many fields were denounced (Is. v. 8). IRRIGATION was always needed for the best results in Palestine — being neglected now, the soil is dry and sterile — although the rains of Canaan distinguished the country from the rainless Nile valley. There is in Palestine almost every variety of climate. The sky is almost cloudless for a large part of the year; the variations of sunshine and rain affecting only the autumn and winter months. The autumnal rains begin in the latter part of October, and gently; continuing through November and December; and rain is rare after March, seldom or never so late as May. The ground is not often frozen in winter; snow lying during the night only; and in the plain of Jericho no snow or frost is ever seen, but there is on the hills around a spring-like temperature and air. The summer heat is oppressive, and fatal on exposure, but not on the higher hills, where heavy dews fall, and the nights are cool. The winter is the season of green fields and foliage, the summer heat destroying the grass. The HARVEST begins in the Plain early in April; in Esdraelon in May, and on the hills in June.

The seasons were usually counted as two in the Scriptures, but we find six terms used by the Rabbins: —1. SEED-TIME, Oct. to Dec.; 2. WINTER, Dec. to Feb.; 3. COLD, Feb. to April; 4. HARVEST, April to June; 5. HEAT, June to Aug.; 6. SUMMER, Aug. to October.

OXEN TREADING OUT CORN.

The terraces, formed by stone walls along the hillsides, are a constant feature, and a necessity, of the hill country. On these narrow levels the vines, fruits and crops were raised, and frequent reference to fertilizers show a high state of culture, probably when the population was the greatest. Fences were not used, but watchmen guarded the ripening products. The boundaries were marked by trees or piles of stones (Job xxiv.; Deut. xix. 14), and about gardens, orchards and vineyards there were walls (or hedges), having towers for watching and defense.

The monuments bear the sculptured figures of many implements, and pictures of the modes of using them in field and garden work. The PLOW is a kind of heavy hoe, used in the hand or drawn by animals or men (Job i. 14). It was made of a crooked root, shod with iron and fitted with one or two handles. The yoke was a straight or bent stick with rope or bent bows. The ox-goad was a pole six or eight feet long, sharp at one end, and fitted with a spade at the other for clearing the plow, or for breaking clods (Is. xxviii. 24; Hosea x. 11; Job xxxix. 10, where "harrow the valleys" should be "break the clods," as in the Hebrew). Seed was sown and hoed (harrowed) or plowed in, in drills or broadcast. Moses alluded in Deut. xi. 10 to the mode of sowing during the inundation, or by irrigation, in Egypt by using the foot (to open or stop the little rills of water). Reaping was of several modes: pulling up by the roots (as barley and doora are now in Egypt); and as wheat and barley do not grow very high (20 to 30 inches), it is pulled for convenience; by the sickle, at the ground, or just under the heads, as the straw may be wanted or not. Ears were carried in baskets; the whole stalk in sheaves (Gen. xxxvii. 7), and a cart is mentioned in Micah ii. 13. Camels or other animals are used to carry the produce. The poor were allowed to glean (Ruth ii. 7; Lev. xix. 9). Threshing was done on level places made in the field, called floors, about fifty feet across, circular. The grain was trodden out with cattle, arranged three or four abreast, and driven around, and the cattle were not to be muzzled (Deut. xxv. 4). Sticks and flails were used to thresh out small quantities (Ruth ii. 17; Is. xxviii. 27). Threshing-machines were made of frames filled with sharp stones or pieces of iron set in holes, or fitted with circular saws (Land and Book, ii. 315), which were drawn over the grain (Is. xxviii. 27; xli. 15; Amos i. 3). Winnowing was, and is now, done by tossing the grain against the wind with a fork or fan (Matt. iii. 12; Jer. iv. 11), and then passing it through a sieve (Amos ix. 9). It was stored in granaries cut in the rock, built underground, or above (Jer. xli. 8).

A'gur (one of the assembly). The author of the sayings in Prov. xxx.; a native of Massa, East Arabia, who lived about B. C. 600. Some have supposed that this was an assumed name of Solomon, such as was "Koheleth," translated "preacher."

A'hab (father's brother). Son of Omri, king of Israel, who reigned 22 years, B. C. 918 to B. C. 897. His wife was JEZEBEL, daughter of Ethbaal, king of Tyre, a woman of strong character and an idolatress. She introduced the worship of Baal into Israel, a temple being built at Samaria for the worship. Elijah, the prophet, pronounced the judgment of God on Ahab's house, and Ahab died of wounds received in battle (see 1 Kings). — 2. A false prophet, son of PLOW. HOE.

Kolaiah, who deceived the Jewish exiles in Babylon (Jer. xxix. 21).

Ahasue'rus (Achashverosh — lion-king). The title of the Persian king. Four persons are mentioned by this title, who were, 1. ASTYAGES (Dan. ix.); 2. CAMBYSES (Ezra iv.); 3. The husband of Vashti and Esther, the same who was called XERXES by the Greeks; the marriage with Esther is assigned to his 7th year, in which he returned to Shushan after his defeat in Greece; 4. Mentioned in Tobit xiv. 15, who was Cyaxares I.

Ahā'va (river). River in Babylonia, on whose banks

Ezra collected the Jewish exiles for the return to Jerusalem (Ezra viii. 15, 31). Hit.

A'haz (possessor). Son and successor of Jotham, and 11th king of Judah. Reigned 16 years, B. C. 714 to 729. He respected neither God, the law, nor the prophets.

Ahazi'ah (holden of Jehovah). Son and successor of Ahab, and 8th king of Israel. B. C. 897 to 896. — 2. Son of Jehoram, 6th king of Judah. B. C. 885

ANCIENT SHIELDS AND SPEARS.

Ahi'kam (enemy's brother). Son of Shaphan the scribe (2 K. xxii. 12). He was one of the delegates sent to Huldah the prophetess by the king. He protected Jeremiah, the prophet, after he was taken out of the pit (Jer. xxxix. 14).

Ahi'man (giver). One of three famous giants. Anakim of Hebron (Num. xiii. 22).

Ahim'elech (king's brother). Great-grandson of Eli, priest at Nob, who gave David some of the sacred bread from the presence-table, and the sword of Goliath, which had been in safe-keeping there.

Ahith'ophel (foolish). A statesman of brilliant talents in David's time, whose counsels were regarded as oracles (2 Sam. xvi.). When his counsels to Absalom were neglected for those of Hushai (whom David had sent), he went home and hanged himself at Giloh. The only suicide mentioned in the O. T., except those engaged in war.

ALABASTER VASES.

Aholiba'mah (tent of the high place). Wife of Esau, daughter of Anah the Canaanite. Also called Judith, daughter of Beeri the Hittite. Esau's three wives had two names, given at different times, perhaps because the first displeased his parents (Gen. xxxvi. 2).

Ai (heap of ruins). Benj. (Gen. xii. 8). HAI. E. of Bethel. The second city taken by Joshua in Canaan. Eight miles N. of Jerusalem. — 2. Burial-place of Elon in Zebulun (Judg. xii.).

Ai'jalon (gazelle-place). A city of the Kohathites (Josh. xxi. 24), in Dan. (xix. 42); fortified by Rehoboam (2 Chr. xi. 10). Celebrated in the poem on the battle of Joshua in the "Book of Jasher" (Josh. x. 12). Now Ain Yalo, 12 m. N.W. of Jerusalem. — 2. City of Zebulun; birth-place of Elon, and his burial-place. JALUN, east of Acre.

PLOWING AND SOWING.

Ai'jeleth. Ayeleth Has-shachar (hind of the dawn). Only in Ps. xxii. in the introduction, as the name of the tune in which that psalm might be chanted.

A'in (fountain). En. Prefix to many names, as Engedi, Enrogel. — 1. Num. xxxiv. 11, a source of the Jordan, or a town near. — 2. City in Judah (Josh. xv. 32).

A'jalon (stag). Valley and town in Benjamin, noted in Joshua's exploits (Josh. x. 12). Several other towns of the same name, in Dan, Ephraim, and Zebulun.

Ak-rab'bim (scorpions). Maaleh Akrabbim, scorpion pass, in the mountains south of the Dead Sea.

THRESHING AND WINNOWING.

Alabas'ter. From the town of Alabastron, in Middle Egypt, where there are quarries of fine-grained, pink-colored gypsum. It is not clear, but is colored in stripes, much varied in width and tint — very near the tint of their finger-nails, including the crescent light place at the upper end of the nails. It was made into cups, boxes, etc., for holding perfumes, ointments, and other precious articles. Boxes for the same uses of any substance — wood, glass, stone, metal — were also called alabasters (Matt. xxvi. 7; Mark xiv. 3; Luke vii. 37).

Alexan'der (men-helper). Called the Great. King of Macedon. Born at Pella B. C. 356, son of Philip and Olympias. Educated by the eminent philosopher Aristotle. Alluded to in Daniel's prophesy. He destroyed the Persian empire and placed Greeks in power there; conquered Asia, Egypt, Syria, and founded the city of ALEXANDRIA (B. C. 332), which may be said to have been built on the ruins of Sidon and Tyre, for it grew rich and powerful on the Oriental trade which formerly fed those cities, and was afterwards diverted from the Euphrates to the Red Sea route. Alexander's toleration of Oriental customs and religions, guaranteeing to all people (and especially the Jews, who were exempted from tax on the 7th year) the free observance of their hereditary laws, showing the same respect to their gods as to the gods of Greece, thus combining and equalizing the West and the East, weakened all the nationalities of his empire, and tended to dissolve the old religions. The Greek and Hebrew learning of Alexandria greatly influenced the planting of Christianity there, as well as in Asia. He married Roxana and Parysatis, Eastern princesses, an example followed by 80 generals and 10,000 soldiers of his army, who also married Oriental wives. Josephus gives an account of a visit of Alexander to Jerusalem, and his reception by the high-priest, which has been called fabulous (Ant. xi. 8). He died at Babylon B. C. 323, only 32 years old, of intemperance.

Alexan'der Bālas. A pretended son of Antiochus Epiphanes. He reigned four years over Syria (1 Macc. x. 11; Jos. Ant. xiii. 2). See COIN.

Alexan'der Jannæus. The first prince of the Maccabees who called himself king.

Alexan'der. Four persons so named in the Gospels. — 1. Son of Simon the Cyrenean, who bore the cross part of the way (Mark xv.). — 2. An opponent of the apostles, related to the high-priest (Acts iv. 6). — 3. Son of Herod the Great and Mariamne. — 4. A Jew of Ephesus, who took part in the uproar in the temple of Diana, against Paul. — 5. A coppersmith, excommunicated by Paul for errors.

Alexan'dria. The Greek, Roman, and Christian capital of Egypt, founded by Alexander B. C. 332. For centuries it was the largest city in the world. Pop. 600,000 (Diodorus). The lighthouse of its spacious port was famous in the world of commerce as the PHAROS, one of the 7 wonders. The great library had 700,000 volumes (Strabo), even after losing 400,000 by fire (B. C. 47), and was finally destroyed by the Saracens, A. D. 642. Among the learned men were Philo, a Jew (author of works which contain the best exposition of Hebrew Platonism — almost purely Christian ethics), and Origen and Clement, Christians, whose writings have influenced and directed religious men in all Christian nations to the present. Ptolemy Philadelphus favored the translation from Hebrew into Greek of the Holy Scriptures (Old Testament), which work was called the SEPTUAGINT, finished about B. C. 280. It is now the oldest known version, and is called the Codex Alexandrinus (Jos. c.; Apion ii. 4). See WRITING.

The Museum was the means of spreading a knowledge of Aristotle through the civilized world, and at one time it gathered 14,000 students from all the world. Modern astronomy arose there, under the direction of Eratosthenes, who taught the globe shape of the earth, its poles, axis, equator, arctic circles, equinoctial points, solstices, horizon, eclipses, and the distance of the sun. Callimachus (poet) wrote a treatise on birds; Apollonius one on mathematics and geometry, and invented a clock. Hipparchus was the great astronomer of the age, and discovered the precession of the equinoxes, gave methods of solving all triangles, and constructed tables of chords, tables of latitude and longitude, and a map of more than 1000 stars. The Almagest of Ptolemy (A. D. 138) was for 1500 years the highest authority on the phenomena and mechanism of the universe. The same author described the world from the Canaries to China.

These systems were supplanted by the discoveries of Newton of the law of gravitation, and of Columbus of the New World. There was a very extensive botanical and zoölogical garden, and a school for the study of anatomy and dissection. The temples of Isis and Serâpis were among the finest ever built, and were partly used for scientific purposes, having the most perfect instruments for astronomical observations then known. They were destroyed by Bishop Theophilus A. D. 390. Present pop. about 60,000 from all nations.

Al'lon (oak?). ELON. Naphtali (Josh. xix. 33). Zaananim (loading tents), near Kedesh (Judg. iv. 11). — 2. ALLON-BAC'HUTH (oak of weeping), under which Rebekah's nurse, Deborah, was buried (Gen. xxxv. 8). Palm-tree of Deborah in Judg. iv. 5, between Ramah and Bethel.

Alms. The Hebrews had no word for a free gift to the poor, such as alms, but used righteousness for such acts (Job xxix. 10–16; Prov. x. 2; Deut. xiv. 29; xxiii. 24, 25; xxiv. 19; xxvi. 12; Lev. xix. 9, 10; xxiii. 22; xxv. 5). The laws of Moses made ample provision against poverty, and if they had been strictly kept, in letter and spirit, there could not have been any destitution. The gospel recognizes the duty of alms-giving and enforces it, and this virtue was a peculiar mark of a Christian in the early age. This was not made a definite rule, but was left to the constraint of inward principle and feeling, "to prove the sincerity of their love." Encouragement of idle vagrancy was denounced as wrong, and such idlers were scorned (2 Thess. iii. 10–12). The Jews, since the destruction of Jerusalem, have regarded their poor as the people of God, and those who give to them are credited with as much virtue as if they kept all the commandments, and they teach that alms-giving atones for their sins. As Jesus sought the needy and the sick, and kindly ministered help and consolation, so it is his will that his Church shall show the same spirit towards the poor and afflicted.

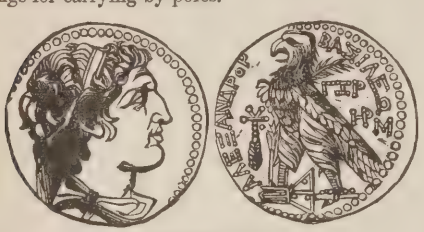
Al'mug. Algum. Fragrant sandal-wood, white and yellow, found in the mountains of Malabar. The trees are 9 to 12 inches in diameter, 25 to 30 feet high. Its uses were for perfume, incense, beads, rosaries, fans, elegant boxes, and cabinets, and for musical instruments. Solomon used it for pillars in the houses he built, and for musical instruments (1 K. x. 12; 2 Chr. ix. 10).



ALEXANDRIA.

Al'oe. An odoriferous, precious tree of Siam, where it is worth its weight in gold, and is used for perfuming garments and rooms, and as a medicine. It is not our gum aloes.

Al'phæus (Alpheus, exchange). Father of the lesser James (Matt. x. 3). Called Cleopas in John xix. 25. Alphæus and Cleopas are synonymous in Hebrew and Greek.

Al'tar. The central point of religious worship, as a mount, table, or structure of turf, wood, stone, or metal, on which sacrifice was made to some deity. The first one mentioned in the Bible is that built by Noah. Moses restricted the building of altars to those for the temple service only; but the law was often broken (Lev. xvii.; Deut. xii.; Judg. vi.; 1 Sam. vii.; 2 Sam. xxiv.; 1 K. iii.). The law directed two kinds to be made: 1. ALTAR OF BURNT-OFFERING, the table of the Lord (Ex. xxvii. 8), having horns to which the animal to be sacrificed might be bound (Ps. cviii. 27); and a ledge half-way up, on which the priests could stand, which was fenced below with a net-work of metal; — 2. ALTAR OF INCENSE, the golden altar, Ex. xxxix. 38, (the other being the brazen) (Ex. xxxviii. 30). This was not strictly an altar, as no sacrifice was offered on it. Both had rings for carrying by poles.

ALEXANDER BALAS.

Altăs'chith (destroy not). In the introduction to Psalms lvii., lviii., lix., lxxv., indicating the melody to which the psalms were to be sung.

Amăl'ĕkites. An ancient nomadic race, found from Petræa to the Persian Gulf, the descendants of the grandson of Esau. The mention of this country in Gen. xiv. 7, does not imply that they were a people at that early time, but that they were a people in that country when the history was written. They were doomed to extinction because they opposed the Hebrews. They became fewer and weaker from age to age up to the last mention in David's time (1 Sam. xxvii.; xxx. 17), who destroyed their remnant.

Am'asa (burden). Son of Ithra, by David's sister Abigail. Was general to Absalom, and was defeated by Joab, but pardoned by David, and appointed Joab's successor as general. Joab killed him treacherously (2 Sam.).

Amazi'ah (whom Jehovah strengthens). Son of Joash, and 8th king of Judah. Began to reign at 25, B. C. 838, and reigned 29 years. He was the first to hire soldiers to fill his army. He conquered Edom and carried home the idols for worship, and so brought on his own ruin, and was killed by conspirators at Lachish.—2. Priest of the golden calf at Bethel, under Jeroboam II, in the time of the prophet Amos (vii. 10).

A'men' (truth). Hebrew word, usually translated verily; or at the end of sentences not translated, but meaning so be it. In Rev. iii. 14 it is used as a name of the Lord, "the Amen, the faithful and true witness." It is used as a word of confirmation, binding a saying, or an oath (Num. v. 22; Deut. xxvii. 15; Neh. v. 13; Ps. cvi. 48), and as a response or closing of a prayer (Matt. vi. 13; Rom. xi. 36).

Am'mon (son of my relative). AMMONITES. Ben Ammi in Gen. xix. 38. Descended from Lot. The people occupied the territory afterwards given to Reuben and Gad, after driving out the Zamzummim (Deut. ii. 20). Jabbok was their border on the N. They were nomadic, restless, and predatory, as the Moabites were settled, civilized, and industrious. They opposed the march of Israel to Canaan, and although favored by Moses (Deut. ii. 9), yet they were hated and warred with always. They worshiped Moloch, also called Milcom, and Malcham. Saul was made king (the second time) on account of his relief of Jabesh from the Amalekites (1 Sam. xi.). Women of this people were in Solomon's house. The last mention of them is in 1 Macc. v. 6, 30–43.

A'mon (builder). Son of Manasseh, and king of Judah. An idolater, and reigned only two years, B. C. 644–2 (2 K. xxi.).

AMON.

Am'orite (mountaineers). On both sides of Jordan (Num. xxi.; Gen. xv. 16; Deut. i. 20). From Emor, 4th son of Canaan. Og and Sihon, their kings E. of Jordan, opposed Moses, but were beaten, and their land was given to Reuben, Manasseh, and Gad. This district was good pasture, and is now. Five Amorite kings on the W. of Jordan opposed Joshua, and were defeated. The Jebusites were a branch, who held Zion 400 years after Joshua, until David took it (2 Sam. v. 6). Solomon imposed a tribute on the remnant of the people (1 K. ix. 20).

A'mos (burden). Prophet in the days of Isaiah and Hosea, a native of Tekoa, and a dresser of sycamore (fig) trees. He prophesied at Bethel; his book is one of the finest in style, being full of pure language, vivid pictures, and often sublime thoughts; most of his imagery is taken from rural life. B. C. 780. See HISTORY.

A'moz (strong). Father of Isaiah.

Amphĭp'olis. Capital of a district in Macedonia (Acts xvii.). On a height on the east bank of the river Strymon, 3 miles from the sea. The gold mines of Mt. Pangæus made the city famous. Now Newtown. Xerxes sacrificed nine young men and maids, and several white horses, on the banks of the Strymon (Herod. vii. 113).

Am'ulet (ornament). Any object used as a magical protection against evil or danger. Tickets with writing; stones and metal with pictures and writing. Moses tried to turn the practice to good use by directing the laws to be written on them (Ex. xiii. 9, 16; Deut. vi. 8; xi. 18). They are now very common in Oriental countries, and not unknown in our own land. Jacob found some worn as earrings (Gen. xxxv.).

A'nah (answer). Son of Zibeon, father of Esau's wife, Aholibamah (Gen. xxxvi. 24). He discovered the hot springs of Callirrhoe. He was a Horite, that is, a mountaineer. He is also called BEERI (fountains) the Hittite, in honor of his finding the springs.

SHEKEL.

Anaha'rath (pass). Place in Issachar (Josh. xix. 19). ARANEH, 2 m. E. of Jenin (Rob. ii. 316, 319. Hackett.)

A'nak. AN'AKIM (neck-chain). A race of tall people, who lived at Hebron and vicinity (Num. xiii. 33; Josh. xv. 14), descended from ARBA. They appear on the monuments of Egypt as tall and light-colored, and are called Tammahu, from the Hebrew Talmai.

Anam'melech (kingly image). The Assyrian Moloch, in whose worship the people passed their children through the fire. This was the female power, as ADRAMMELECH was the male power of the sun-god.

Anani'as. A disciple at Jerusalem, who, with his wife Sapphira, tried to impose on Peter and the brethren, and defile the house of God, died suddenly, and was buried at once (Acts v.). — 2. Made high-priest (Acts xxiii.), about A. D. 477, by Herod, king of Chalcis (Ant. xx. 5, 2). He made himself great wealth out of his office. Paul when before the Sanhedrim called him a white wall, and prophesied his ruin, which came in a time of trouble, and he fell by an assassin (Wars ii. 17; vi. 69). — 3. Disciple at Damascus, who was directed (by the Lord) to go to Saul and lay hands on him, to ordain him to the ministry (Acts ix. 10–17). Tradition makes him bishop of Damascus, and a martyr.

Anäth'ema (suspended). When said of things given to God, it is pronounced anathēma (Luke xxi. 5). It was also the religious curse of the Hebrews. It means also devoted — any person or thing devoted to God. Paul means devoted where he says accursed, in Rom. ix. 3. Those Jews devoted themselves to the work of killing Paul (Acts xxiii. 12). Anathema maranatha (the Lord comes), means that the curse (as well as the blessing) has its operation in Christ's kingdom, and rises to its highest power at his coming, and he will surely come to bless as well as to curse (1 Cor. xvi. 22). It was used as the church censure, or final excommunication, and it is so used now, of those who are excluded from the company of the believers.

An'athoth (echoes). Benjamin, near Nob and Hazor (Neh. xi. 32). Anata, 3½ ms. N.E. of Jerusalem, where there are remains of walls and buildings in the midst of orchards of figs and olives. The quarries still supply Jerusalem.

ALMOND-TREE AND BLOSSOMS.

Andrew (strong man). Brother of Peter, and native of Bethsaida in Galilee (John i. 44). He was first a disciple of John the Baptist, but followed Jesus on John's testimony, and informed his brother Peter of what he had found — that Jesus was the Christ (verses 35, 36, 41). He did not leave his business of fishing until some time after (Mark i. 14). He was present at the feeding of the 5000 at Jerusalem, when the Greek Jews wished to see Jesus (John vi. 8); and, with others, on Olivet, asked privately of Jesus what he meant by his strange words about destroying and rebuilding the Temple. Of his after-life and death nothing is recorded. Tradition says he preached in Scythia, or Achaia, and was crucified on a cross, now called St. Andrew's, which is of a peculiar shape, and still bears his name. The early writers mention the "Acts of Andrew," and the "Gospel of St. Andrew," but they were rejected, and are lost.

An'gel (messenger). Whatever God employs to do his will. In Ps. civ. 4 (quoted in Heb. i. 7), the wind (spirit) is His angel. Haggai was called the Lord's angel (i. 13), as was John the Baptist by Malachi (iii. 1). Israel was God's angel sent to enlighten the world (Is. xlii. 19), as well as the priests (Mal. ii. 7), meaning the priests as a body. Jesus spoke of angels of God, who were neither married nor given in marriage, but were spirits, not in the flesh, but above, more free, more powerful, more wise (Matt. xxii. 30; xxv. 53; Gen. xvi. 7; Heb. xii. 22). There are angels of light (of heaven), and angels of darkness, "that kept not their first estate." Isaiah speaks of the angel of the presence (lxiii. 9), and Moses of the angel that went before Israel (Ex. xxiii. 21), who has the whole world as his heritage (Rev. viii. 3), and who is believed to be the Lord Jesus, whom the Father sent to reveal Him to men.

Anoint. Anointing. Use of oil on the head or any object to be honored. Jacob poured oil on his stone pillow at Bethel, consecrating it to God. Guests were honored by having their hair oiled. The monuments have pictures of this act. It was a common custom among the Hebrews, and is often referred to in the O. T. (Ps. xxiii. 5; xlv. 7; Prov. xxi. 7; xxvii. 9). To omit the use of this perfumed oil was a sign of grief and mourning (Dan. x. 3; Is. lxi. 3). It was also used as a medicine (Is. i. 6; Mark vi. 13; James v. 14). Kings were called "the anointed of the gods," and both kings and priests were confirmed in their office by the anointing of oil, both in Egypt and Palestine. Anointing the eyes denoted a spiritual recovery of sight — knowledge of divine truth. The Holy Spirit descended on the head of Jesus, like a spiritual anointing, a divine confirmation of his office of Messiah.

HEBRON.

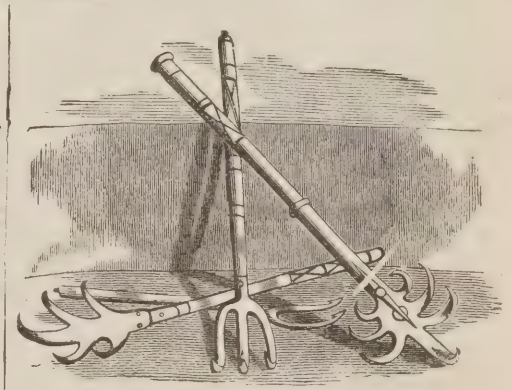
The bodies of the dead were also anointed with spiced oil. See PERFUMES.

An'nas. High-priest for 15 years (appointed by Quirinus), and then deposed by Valerius Gratus. Father-in-law to Caiaphas, who was high-priest when Jesus was crucified (John xviii.; Acts iv. 6). The office of high-priest was judicial, in addition to the temple service, and Annas for a long period held this honored place, his term having been 20 years. Five of his sons succeeded each other to the same office, and then his son-in-law; and in all these changes he had exercised the highest judicial authority. He might have been a member of the Sanhedrim, and possibly was its president or vice-president.

LOCUST.

Annuncia'tion. This word means the announcement of the selection of the Virgin Mary as the favored mother of Jesus. About the year 800 the church decreed (council of Trullo) a day for celebrating the event.

An'tioch in Syria. On the Orontes, 30 miles from the sea, 300 from Jerusalem. Founded by Seleucus Nicator (conqueror), B. C. 300, and named in honor of his father, Antiochus. It was the capital of the Greek and Roman governors of Syria for 1000 years. Its suburb Daphne was famous for its sanctuary to Apollo and Diana (2 Macc. iv. 33); the sacred grove extending its cool shades and brooks of water for ten miles around. It was a sensual paradise, where pleasure, under the disguise of religion, dissolved the firmness of manly virtue. The first GENTILE CHURCH was founded here by Paul, and disciples were here first called CHRISTIANS in derision by the Pagans (Acts xi. 21–26). Ignatius, who suffered martyrdom under Trajan, at Rome, was bishop of Antioch 40 years. In the time of Chrysostom (born here A. D. 344), the pop. was 200,000, one half being Christians. The city had a street colonnade from end to end, built by Antiochus Epiphanes, and paved with granite by Antoninus Pius; magnificent marble baths, built by Caligula, Trajan, and Hadrian; a marble palace of Diocletian, and was the finest and largest city of Western Asia. It lost greatly in wealth and population in several earthquakes: one in A. D. 526, destroying 250,000 people, at the time of the festival of the Ascension, when many strangers were gathered; and in 1822 one-fourth of the city and people, about 5000. It was of great importance during the Crusades, and is often mentioned for its sieges, battles, and the brilliant exploits of both Christian and Moslem in and about its walls. Am. Prot. missionaries began to preach there in 1856. Pop. now about 20,000. Ar. name Antakia. Ruins of aqueducts, marble pavements, columns, and other evidences of its ancient splendor are often found buried under rubbish. Its port is at Seanderea.



An'tioch in Pisidia. Founded by the same king (who built 10 or 15 others of the same name), and peopled them by hired immigrants from Magnesia on the Mæander. On the S. side of Mt. Paroreia, on the boundary between Pisidia and Phrygia, overlooking a broad plain. Recent discoveries of ancient inscriptions prove the site correct. There are ruins of several churches, temples, a theatre, and an aqueduct of which 21 arches are now entire. The ancient city was often visited by Paul (Acts) with Barnabas, Silas, and Timothy, who was a native of this district.

Anti'ochus (who lasts out). There are several of this family name.

1. ANTIOCHUS II. THEOS (the god). Son of A. Soter (savior). He succeeded his father B. C. 261. He was the "king of the north" of Daniel (xi.), who joined the "king of the south" (Ptolemy) by marrying his daughter Berenice.

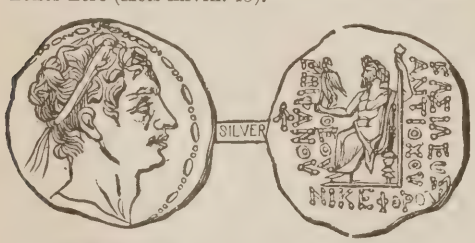
2. ANTIOCHUS III, THE GREAT, succeeded his brother Seleucus Keraunus (thunderer, who was poisoned after ruling 3 years), and was the first really strong man since Seleucus, who founded the family and empire in Syria. He was only 15 when he began to rule, and his great rival, Ptolemy IV, Philopator (father loving), of Egypt, was crowned only two years later. Ptolemy began his reign by murdering nearly all his relations, including his mother and father. Antiochus did no violence to his friends, but planned how to increase the wealth and power of his people, and with these plans he passed his whole life in war. One part of his policy was to put a great trust in the Jews as a people, and especially as soldiers (Ant. xii. 3, 4). At one time he moved 2000 families of Jews from Mesopotamia to Lydia and Phrygia for garrison service. The honors and privileges of the Jews in Palestine were increased when he became master there, until they were very near to the actual enjoyment of social and religious liberty. He is also mentioned by Daniel (xi. 41), as one who should stand "in the glorious land which by his hand was to be consumed." His own daughter, Cleopatra, whom he gave to Ptolemy Epiphanes as a wife, opposed him in favor of her husband. Hannibal influenced him to war against Rome, and he was beaten finally at Magnesia in Lydia, B. C. 190. He lost his life B. C. 187, in an attempt to plunder the temple of Belus in Elymais.

3. ANTIOCHUS IV EPIPHANES (illustrious), youngest son of A. the Great, succeeded to his brother Seleucus Philopator, who reigned 10 years, chiefly as "a raiser of taxes" (Dan. xi. 20). Epiphanes gained the kingdom by flatteries (s. 21), that is, by a system of extensive bribery. These and other acts caused the Greeks to call him Epimanes (crazy), a very sharp and sarcastic pun on his title. He wished to plunder the Jewish temple, because he needed money, and to do this it was his policy to make the Jews hateful, and destroy their nationality. But he raised up the Maccabees, who delivered their people (B. C. 143), as is recorded on the coins of that period (MONEY). He was a type of Antichrist, so made by his want of respect to God and religion, and the disregard of every higher feeling among men. He worshiped the Roman war-god, whose forts were his temples.

FLESH HOOKS.

4. ANTIOCHUS V EUPATOR (of noble descent), succeeded his father A. IV, B. C. 164, while a child, and was under the guardian Lysias, and they were killed by Demetrius Soter, when the rule fell to Antiochus VI, son of Alexander Balas and Cleopatra, who while a child was under the care of Tryphon, B. C. 145, who contended for the throne against Demetrius Nicator. Tryphon, by treachery and success in war, gained supreme power, killed Antiochus, and assumed the throne. The coins bear his head as Antiochus and Trypho, and on some the title of Theos is added. The books of Daniel and the Maccabees give a large space to the life and deeds and bad character of this king.

5. ANTIOCHUS VII SIDETES (from Side in Pamphylia). Called also EUSEBES (pious). This was the last king of the Seleucid family, who ruled B. C. 141–128. There were some who assumed the name Antioch as a title until the Romans made Syria a province, B. C. 63.



MODERN EGYPTIAN AMULET.

Ape. Brought by Solomon's ships (1 K. x. 22) from India or Malabar, where they are now found, called KAPI (Heb. KOPH). They were prized as curiosities then as now.

Apŏs'tle (sent forth). The Jews so called those who carried about letters from their rulers. There were but few who had this honor, and to whom Jesus entrusted the organization of his Church. There were twelve originally whom he ordained, that they should be with him; and he gave them power over unclean spirits, and to heal all manner of diseases; commissioning them to preach the kingdom of God (Mark iii.; Matt. x.; Luke vi.), saying, "As the Father hath sent me, so send I you." It seems to have been essential to this high office, 1. That they should have seen the Lord, and have been eye and ear witnesses of what they testified to the world (John xv. 27; Acts i. 21). Paul claims equal authority from having seen Jesus in a vision (1 Cor. ix. 1; xv. 8).—2. Called and chosen by the Lord Himself (Acts i. 24).—3. Infallible inspiration (John xvi. 13; 1 Cor. ii. 10), because it was their office to explain the O. T., and to set forth the New (Luke xxiv. 27).—4. The power of working miracles (Mark xvi. 20; Acts ii. 43).—5. To these were added the power to settle points of faith, and determine all controversies. Jesus is once called "the apostle of our profession" (Heb. iii. 1). THE APOSTLES' CREED, so called, was not of their own making, but contains their doctrine as set forth by Christian men in later times. THE APOSTOLIC AGE dates from the day of Pentecost, and is usually divided into two periods, before and after the destruction of Jerusalem A. D. 70, the latter period ending at the death of John A. D. 99. There was not a revelation of the Lord's commands and the duties they involved complete as final at one time, but rather a progressive illumination—a peculiar succession and combination of events—from the first call to be apostles, the day of Pentecost, the visions at Cæsarea and Joppa, the conversion and call of Paul—by which the five heralds of the Gospel were instructed, and enabled to teach its free and comprehensive spirit. The first Christian church was formed of Jews only, who observed the Mosaic ritual strictly, and were continually in the Temple (Luke xxiv. 53; Acts ii. 46; iii. 1); and the leading Jews spoke of them as the SECT of the Nazarenes, as the Pharisees and Sadducees and Essenes were sects within the Jewish church (Acts xxiv. 5; xxviii. 22; xv. 5; xxvi. 5; v. 17). A community of goods was required at first, but was soon abandoned. The Greeks (and other Gentiles) were admitted, and elevated the tone of the society, and increased its power for diffusion. Shortly before the destruction of Jerusalem the members of the church found a refuge in Pella, east of Jordan, away from the power of the Sanhedrim, and this ended the connection of the new church with the old—Moses was to be thereafter second to Jesus in authority, and from that time an enmity grew up between them which has not yet been healed—and can never be (2 Cor. iii.). The second period is almost a blank, since there is no account of any of the apostles except John, and with his death the age closes. Since then, the church has been left to the guidance of man only, assisted by the invisible spirit, towards its spiritual maturity.

Ap'pii-fō'rum (market-place of Appius). On the Appian Way, between Naples and Rome, 43 miles from Rome. Appius Claudius built this famous road from Rome to Brundusium, and had a statue in his honor here (Acts xxviii. 15).

TETRADRACHM OF ANTIOCHUS IV EPIPHANES.

Aq'uilă (eagle). Jew at Corinth, tent-maker and friend of Paul (Acts xviii. 2), who with his wife Priscilla had been banished from Rome with all Jews, by Claudius. They became zealous promoters of the cause, as Paul says, "helpers in Christ Jesus," "who have for my life laid down their own necks" (Rom. xvi. 3, 4). The Greek church honors Aquila as a bishop, on July 12. The Romans call him bishop of Heraclea, and the festival of Aquila and Priscilla is kept on July 8.

Ar. Capital of Moab, on the Arnon (Num. xxi. 15–28). The place is still called Rabba, and is 17 miles E. of the Dead Sea, 10 S. of the Arnon, and its ruins occupy a low hill overlooking a plain, where are found the remains of two Roman temples and some water-tanks. It was burnt by King Sihon (Is. xv. 1). Rabbath Moab. See RABBAH.

Ar'abah (waste—sterile). The valley of depression from Mt. Hermon to the Red Sea at Ezion Geber (Akabah). (Deut. i. 1; Job xxiv. 5; Is. xxxiii. 9). Now restricted to the valley from the Sea of Galilee to the S. end of the Dead Sea, and called El Ghor (jor). It is 150 miles long by 1 to 10 or 12 miles wide. ARBOTH (plural of Arabah) was the name of the plain of Jericho (Josh. v. 10; Num. xxii. 1; 2 Sam. xv. 28). The region is called KIKKAR in Gen. xiii. 10. From the Dead Sea to Akabah the Arabs name the valley Wady el Arabah. The desert of TIH bounds the A. on the west, by long walls of limestone, 1500 to 1800 feet above its floor. The mts. of Edom form the E. wall, and are of granite, basalt, and porphyry, 2000 to 2300 ft in elevation, and covered with vegetation. Mt. Hor (the highest peak) is 5000 ft. above the sea. A line of chalk cliffs, 150 feet high, 6 miles S. of the Dead Sea, running E. and W., divides the Arabah from El Ghor. WADY EL JEIB is the principal water-course—flowing only in winter. The A. is a desert of sand, gravel, low hills, and cut by numberless watercourses. The sirocco blows almost constantly. There are a very few shrubs and plants, as rushes, tamarinds, oleanders, anemones, lilies, and palms. The water-shed is 40 ms. N. of Akabah, from which the water flows both N. and S. The pass out of the A. near Akabah, upon the plateau of Tih, is now used by pilgrims on the route from Suez to Mecca, and is called NUKB (the pass). 1000 ft. above it is another pass, on the route from Mt. Hor to Hebron, called es Sufah, where Israel was repulsed by Canaan (Deut. i. 44; Num. xiv. 43–45). On the E. side Wady Ithm leads through the mts. near Akabah, where there are remains of a Roman road, leading to the country E. of the Dead Sea, over the same route traversed by the Exodus, when Edom was compassed (Num. xxi. 4).

ANTIOCHUS VI. THEOS.

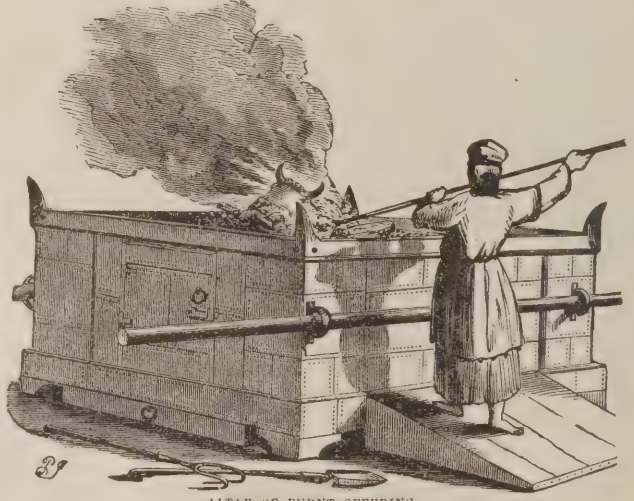
Arā'bia (Arab country). E. of Palestine, including all the descendants from Ishmael and Keturah (Gen. x. 30; xxix. 1; Judg. vi. 3). Sons of the East (Num. xxiii. 7; 2 Chr. ix. 14). Sons of Kedem (s. xxi. 13). "Forest in Arabia" (Ex. xii. 38; Neh. xiii. 3; 1 K. x. 15). "Mixed multitude" are Arabians. Now called by the Arabs BILAD EL ARAB—country of the Arab. Bedouins are people of the open country, not living in towns. Extends from the Euphrates and the Persian Gulf to Egypt and the Red Sea; and from the Indian Ocean to the Mediterranean, or Great Sea. The ancients divided it into ARABIA FELIX, A. DESERTA, and A. PETRÆA. The modern divisions are the Peninsula of Sinai, Arabia, and North A. (See Sinai, Edom, Petra, Mt. Hor, Arabah, Syria, Aram.) The original settlers were the sons of Shem and Ham (Gen. x. 21, 15). There are many ruins in Arabia of a more ancient people than any known to history—(Marib, Sana, Reydan, Riam, Inen, Rien).

There are frequent allusions in the Bible to the Arabs; and the manners and customs of the modern people are a help to the interpretation of those texts that refer to the ancients, and especially in Job. The Bedouins constantly remind us of the accounts of the patriarchs, or later Israelites. Respect to age (Lev. xix. 32); deference to superiors (2 K. v. 13); engravings on signets of sentences having the name of God (Ex. xxxix. 30; John iii. 33). As a pledge, the ring is given (Gen. xli. 42); they wear an inkhorn in the girdle (Ezek. ix. 2, 3, 11). Many of the most obscure passages are explained by a knowledge of the present customs.

The people have in all ages been active, enterprising, restless; ambitious in commerce, conquest, and religion.

Arā'bians (2 Chr. xvii. 11). Nomads, east and south of Palestine, a part being descended from Keturah. The Sheikh (king) was called Aretas (2 Macc. v. 8).

Ar'ădus ARVAD (wandering). Phœnicia (Ezek. xxvii. 8; Gen. x. 18). An island 3 ms. from the coast, near the river Eleutherus (Nahr el Kebir); and opposite to it is the site of Antaradus, now called Ruad (1 Macc. xv. 23). The island was settled by fugitives from Sidon. High and rocky, about a mile in extent, near Tripoli.



APE.

A'ram (height). N.E. of Palestine. Called also Syria—which see (Gen. xxxi. 18; xxxiii. 18). 1. A Dammesek, Syria of Damascus (2 Sam. viii. 5, 6).—2. A. Naharaim (two rivers), the country of Abraham (Gen. xxv. 20).—3. Padan A., Aram at the foot of the mountains.—4. A. Zobah (2 Sam. x. 6, 8).—5. A. Beth Behob.—6. A. Maachah (1 Chr. xix. 6). Geshur (2 Sam. xv. 8; 1 K. xi. 25). Aram was a son of Shem, and his brethren were Elam, Asshur, Arphaxad. Aram is also Assyria (2 K. xviii. 26; Is. xxxvi. 11; Jer. xxxv. 11; 2 K. xvi. 7).—7. Aram, of whose family was Elihu who visited Job (xxxii. 2.)

Ar'arat (holy land). A mountainous district, or lofty plateau, nearly 5000 ft. above the sea, between the Black and Caspian seas, where rise the Euphrates and Tigris, which flow into the Persian Gulf; the Araxes and Cyrus, into the Caspian; and the Acampsis, into the Black Sea. The range of Mt. Taurus begins at the N.E. end of the Great Sea, near Antioch in Syria, runs N.E., meeting the range of Abus, from the head of the Persian Gulf running N.W., at Mt. Ararat, which is 17,750 feet high. It is alluded to in Scripture as—1. Ararat (Gen. viii. 4), the land on which the Ark rested, and where the sons of Sennacherib fled after killing their father (2 K. xix. 37). 2. Minni (Jer. li. 27). Josephus says there is a great mountain in Armenia called Baris (Ant. i. 3, 6).—3. Togarmah. In Gen. x. 3, this is the name of the youngest son of Gomer. Ezek. (xxxviii. 6) says, "the house of Togarmah of the north." Tyre traded in horses with Togarmah (Ezek. xxvii. 14).

Arau'nah (jah is strong). The Jebusite who sold his threshing-floor to David for a place for an altar to God (2 Sam. xxiv.). He was one of the royal family of the Jebusites (2 Sam. xxiv. 23). David bought the whole hill Moriah for 600 shekels of gold, and the threshing-floor and oxen for 50 shekels (1 Chr. xxi. 25).

Areŏp'agus (hill of Ares). Mars Hill. Athens. A rocky height opposite the west end of the Acropolis, used from the earliest times as a place of assembly for the honorable men who had held the office of ALTAR OF BURNT OFFERING.

Archon. On this hill Paul stood, in the midst of these august men, when he said, "Whom ye ignorantly worship, Him declare I unto you." Dionysius the Areopagite (Acts xvii. 23–34). "In the market daily." The AGORA, or market, was a public place, surrounded on three sides by the architectural glories of Athens. It may be described thus: To the northeast was the Acropolis, a rocky height 150 ft. above the street below, crowned with the Parthenon and other temples; north the Areopagus; west the Pnyx (pulpit); and south the Museum, with other buildings. (See plan of Athens.)

At the time of Paul's visit, Athens was a grand city, ornamented in every quarter with memorials sacred to religion and patriotism, showing the highest achievements in art. The famed Academy had its groves of plane and olive trees, retired walks and cooling fountains, altars, statues, and temples, near which was the house of Plato, the great teacher.

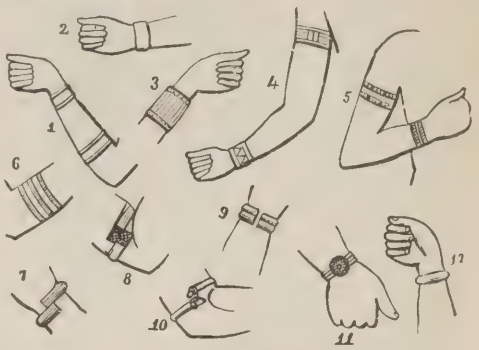
The Acropolis had clustered on its summit memorials and monuments of religion and art, such as were never seen on an equal space. Pericles had adorned it with a flight of steps and a Propylæa, with five entrances and two flanking temples of Pentelican marble, where were placed the equestrian statues of the Roman emperors Augustus and Agrippa, the temple of the Wingless Victory; a picture-gallery; and there still stands the ruin of the unequaled Parthenon, which was then adorned with the masterpieces of the sculptor Phidias.

The Erechtheium contained the holy olive-tree, sacred to Minerva, the holy salt-spring, and other sacred things. A colossal bronze statue of Pallas Promachus, by Phidias, stood near, the plume of whose lofty helmet was visible from the sea between Sunium and Athens, 45 miles distant.

Pausanias gives an account of a great number of statues on the Acropolis, so that we wonder how there could have been any space left for the people.

It is no wonder, however, that Paul, with his natural genius and vast experience, should have been inspired by the surroundings. (See Life of Paul.)

Ar'gob (stony). Manasseh, east of Jordan, in Bashan. It had sixty fortified cities (Deut. iii. 4, 13, 14; 1 K. iv. 13), called Trachonitis, a translation of the Hebrew name. The Samaritans called it Rigobaah = stony. The Arabs named it Mujeb = stony, and it is now El Lejah. It lies fifteen miles south of Damascus, is triangular, twenty-two miles from north to south, and fourteen from east to west. The region is elevated above the surrounding country, and is very rocky, like an ocean of basaltic rocks and boulders; thickly studded with deserted cities and villages, in all of which the houses are solidly built and of remote antiquity. A Roman road runs through the district, probably leading from Damascus to Bosra. Kenath and Edrei are on the border, to the southwest. The Hauran presents the utmost contrast to the Lejah, in being a country of the richest agricultural soil.



EGYPTIAN ARK.

Ark. A word adopted from the Egyptian. A chest. The word for Noah's ark is TEBAH, the same as used for that of Moses (Gen. vi., viii.; Ex. ii.) ARK OF THE COVENANT. An oblong chest of acacia wood, gilded, 45 inches long, 27 wide, and 27 deep. (Ex. xv. 10; Num. vii. 9.) It was to contain (or by its side) the book of the law, the covenant, perhaps also the pot of manna, and Aaron's rod (Heb. ix. 4). When Solomon's temple was dedicated, the ark contained only the "two tables" of stone (1 K. viii. 9). It was to be kept in the most holy place, excluding all idols, and itself be the centre of regard, as denoting the presence of God, on the Mercy-Seat, which was on the lid, overshadowed by two images with wings. Jeremiah predicted (iii. 16) that it should be finally abandoned as a sacred object. It "rested" at Shiloh until the superstitious warriors took it into battle and lost it to the Philistines. Not long after its recovery it was placed in the Temple. It is believed to have been burnt when the Babylonians destroyed Solomon's temple.

Ark (No'ah's). The form and size cannot be learned from the text. The figures are given as 300 cubits long, 50 wide, and 30 high. The cubit was of several kinds, 18, 19, and 21 inches in length. The present opinion (among some) is, that the Deluge was a local inundation, extending only far enough to destroy the human race which is supposed to have dwelt in the valley of the Euphrates and Tigris. The form of the ark may be seen in that of the great rafts on those rivers, which have a flat-roofed cabin on them, like a rude house. The Apameans had a tradition that the ark rested near their city, in Phrygia, of which the coin here shown, dating from A. D. 150, is a memorial, now in Paris.

Armē'nia. Heb. ARARAT. Christianity was established here in the 4th century. The whole number of Armenians is about two millions. They have a rich convent on Zion (see Jerusalem). The ARMENIAN VERSION of the Bible was made in A. D. 410 by (the patriarch Isaac and) Miesrob, aided by his pupils Joannes Ecelensis and Josephus Palnensis, from the Syriac. It was afterwards corrected from the Greek, and was finished in the year 431.

Arm'lets. Ornaments worn by men, as bracelets are by women.

BRACELETS AND ARMLETS.

Ash'kelon. One of the five cities of the Lords of the Philistines (Josh. xiii. 3; 1 Sam. vi. 17). Samson retired to Ashkelon as to a remote place (Judg. xiv. 19). Since the crucifixion it has been more noted than before. There was a temple and sacred lake to Derceto, the Syrian Venus. It was celebrated for its groves of cypress, figs, olives, pomegranates, vines, and for henna, which grew best here of any place, except only Canopus, and also for the peculiar onions called shallot. Richard I of England, during the Crusades, fortified and held his court here. The Muslim called it the Bride of Syria. The ancient city had a natural wall of hills forming an amphitheatre on the shore of the sea, and on the top of this ridge was the wall, which was very high, thick, and built of small stones and old columns of granite and marble. The modern village Askulan is very beautiful in its groves, orchards, and shade-trees (Gen. xx. 2). Gerar is supposed to be A. by the Samaritans.

A'sia (country of the As race, Eastern). Found only in 1 Macc. viii. 6, and the N. T. Now Asia Minor. — 2. The country of the king of Pergamos, Mysia, Lydia, Phrygia. — 3. Name claimed by the kings of Antioch, now Cilicia (1 Macc. xii. 39). Chief town, Ephesus (Acts ii. 9).

ANCIENT WATER-WHEEL.

Ash'dod. Azo'tus. Eighteen miles south of Joppa, in Philistia. On an elevation above the plain, was strongly fortified, and was one of the seats of worship of the god Dagon (1 Sam. v. 5; Josh. xv. 47). The birthplace of Herod the Great, who adorned it with baths. It was on the high-road to Egypt, and besieged by the Assyrian Tartan, B. C. 716 (Is. xx. 1). Psammetichus besieged it for 29 years, B. C. 630 (Jer. xxv. 20). Philip was found at Azotus (Acts viii. 40; Neh. xiii. 23, 24). It was noted during the Crusades. Now called Usdud. The modern village is built among the ruins of the ancient city, and is embowered in groves, tall sycamores, and hedged with cactus, while the sand drifting with the wind is creeping up to the very doors, two miles from the sea, and burying every green thing.

Ash'er (happy). The eighth son of Jacob, by Zilpah, Leah's handmaid (Gen. xxx. 13). The names of one of the 12 tribes. The boundaries are extremely difficult to trace, but were N. of Carmel, on the Great Sea (Josh. xix. 24–31). It contained some of the richest soil in Palestine, and minerals. Anna, who lived in the Temple, watching for the coming of Christ, was of this tribe.

Asiar'chæ. Chief of Asia in Acts xix. 31. A religious office in Asia (Minor), under the Romans, annual, and subject to the proconsul. There are coins of several cities which show by their inscriptions that this office was a great honor. Their duties were the control of the public GAMES and SPECTACLES in the theatres (which were at their own expense?). Philip was the Asiarch when Polycarp was killed at Smyrna. Only wealthy men could have it. Each city sent one person annually to the council, ten were chosen from the whole number, one was made president, or Asiarch. Others think the ten were all Asiarchs.

Assyr'ia (country of Asshur). On the Tigris (Gen. ii. 14), the capital of which was Nineveh (x. 11); named from Asshur, the son of Shem, who was deified and worshiped as their chief god by the Assyrians: 500 ms. N.E. to S.W., and 350 to 100 ms. wide. Divided from Armenia by a high range of mountains. Its northern part is mountainous, the middle hilly, with fertile plains, and the southern is the great plain of Mesopotamia (midst of rivers) — the district now called El Jezira. This plain is 250 miles long, divided by the rocky ridge Sinjar— a limestone range, sparsely wooded, and of a golden color, with purple lines of shade at a distance. 80 ms. N. of the Sinjar the plain extends to the hilly region, and was once densely populated, but is now a wilderness. The mounds are the only relics of antiquity, and these contain (in those of Nineveh, and others recently partly explored by Layard) proofs of their greatness, in sculptures, inscriptions, and remnants of architecture. The first king of Assyria who oppressed Israel was Chushan-Rishathaim, B. C. 1400 (Judg. iii. 8). Art and architecture, civil and religious institutions, were in a very advanced state. They used the arch, tunnels, drains, the level, and roller; engraved on gems; enameled, inlaid, and plated with metals; made glass, optical instruments, men. The plan shows the position of the Agora (market-place), between the four hills. Pausanias says the Athenians surpassed all others in attention to the gods; and their city was crowded with temples, altars, statues, and other sacred works. Paul said they were "too religious." See AREOPAGUS.

Atōne'ment (at-one-ment). Satisfaction for sin by which forgiveness is had. When Jacob sent a present to his brother Esau, he said, "I will cover his face, so that he shall forgive my offence, I will make atonement before him, I will placate him" (Gen. xxxii. 21). In Ps. xvi. 14, "A wise man will pacify it" (the wrath of the king). Only once in the N. T., in Rom. v. 11, where it means reconciling. THE DAY OF ATONEMENT was a great feast of the Jews, on the 10th of Tisri, and was held as a day of rest, a kind of Sabbath of Sabbaths, the only day in the year when the whole people fasted. The service was peculiar. The high-priest, clothed in white linen, without ornaments, took a young bull and a ram for himself and his house, and two goats as a sin-offering, and a ram as a burnt-offering for the people. The goats were selected by lot, one for Jehovah and one for Azazel in the wilderness (that is to be sent away surely). The blood of the victims was taken into the most holy place and sprinkled upon

Augus'tus (venerable). Title of the Roman emperors. First assumed by Caius Julius Cæsar Octavianus (nephew of the great Julius Cæsar), when at the battle of Actium he became sole ruler of the empire, B. C. 29. Born B. C. 63, died A. D. 14, aged 76. He gained his great power by gradually uniting in himself all the principal state offices. Tiberius was associated with him in the empire long before his death. He was truly venerable and worthy of regard, for he used his absolute power with great moderation and prudence ivory, bronze, and precious metal ornaments. The prophecies against Assyria are those of Nahum, B. C. 625; Zephaniah ii., B. C. 608; and Ezekiel xxxi., B. C. 584.

Ath'ens. Capital of Greece, founded by Cecrops, B. C. 1556. Visited by Paul (Acts xvii.; 1 Thess. iii.). He founded a church. The people were lovers of music, painting, sculpture, architecture, and oratory, and took part in politics. The fine arts, history, and philosophy were a part of the education of all free-and before the mercy-seat. The scape-goat, to be sent away, was brought forth and the high-priest confessed over his head his sins and those of the people, and he was sent into the wilderness by a trusty man. The bullock and the goat were not eaten, but entirely burnt. This was a symbol of the great truths of the redemptory system by means of propitiation, and it is understood as a type of the vicarious intercession of Jesus Christ.

Ax. The Hebrew words are KARDOM, or GARZEN, the softer form, for a heavy ax with a long handle. MAATZAD, a carving-knife (Is. xliv. 12), and also a file for wood or iron (Jer. x. 3); CHEREB, a longer knife, or sword; CASH SHIL (Ps. lxxiv. 6), a carpenter's hatchet; MAGZERAH, ax or cleaver; MAPPETS, a maul or battle-ax. In some the ax is fastened to the handle with a thong or strip of leather, wound around a great many times; in others there is a hole or eye through the head. (See KNIFE, HOE.)

B.

Bā'al (sun or lord). The supreme male god of the Phœnicians, as Ashtoreth was the supreme female goddess. The worship has been practiced from the most ancient times, and was adopted by the Jews, and carried on with great pomp and ceremony in special temples adorned with his images. The several names by which he was known were — 1. BAAL-BE'RITH (covenant) at Shechem (Judg. viii. 33). — 2. BAAL-ZE'BUB (of the fly), at Ekron. — 3. BAAL-HA'NAN (gracious). BAAL-PE'OR (see Smith's Dictionary). The name was given to many places.

BAAL.

1. Simeon (1 Chr. iv. 33). Baalath Beer (of the wells).

2. Bā'alah. Kirjath Jearim, Judah, 7 miles W. of Jerusalem (Josh. xv. 9). — 3. Town of the same name in Dan (Josh. xix. 44).

4. B. Bēer (B. of the well, or holy well), south

ANCIENT SHEEP FOLD.

Judah, and given to Simeon. Other sacred wells in this region were called Beer-lahai-roi (of the vision of God), and Beersheba (of the oath).

5. B. Gād (fortune). The most northern point of Joshua's victories (xi. 17; xii. 7). Supposed to have been a Phœnician sanctuary. Robinson thought it was the same as Banias, which has been a sanctuary of the god Pan from a remote age. Thomson thinks it was Baalbek.

6. B. Hā'mon (of multitude). Where Solomon had a vineyard (Cant. viii. 11). May have been not far north of Samaria (Judith viii. 3).

7. B. Hā'zor (village). Where Absalom had a sheep-farm, and where Amnon was murdered (2 Sam. xiii. 23).

8. Mt. Bā'al Hermon. Mt. Hermon.

9. B. Mē'on. BETH-BAAL-MEON. BETH-MEON (1 Chr. v. 8). 9 miles from Heshbon, near the mountain of the hot springs, and reputed to be the native place of Elisha.

10. B. Pēr'azim (destructions). Scene of David's victory over the Philistines (2 Sam. v. 20; 1 Chr. xiv. 11).

11. B. Shāl'isha (third idol). Not far from Gilgal, Sharon (2 Ki. iv. 42).

12. B. Tā'mar (of the palm). Benjamin, near Gibeah (Judg. xx. 33). The palm-tree of Deborah is supposed to be meant by some. Lost.

13. B. Zē'phon. Near the crossing-place of the Red Sea in the Exodus. Lost.

Ba'alath. BAAL.

Bā'albek (city of the sun). BAAL GAD (Josh. xi. 17; xii. 7), in Cœle-Syria, the valley of Lebanon, under Mt. Hermon. The ruins are the most important and remarkable in the whole country; the site pleasantly located on the lowest slopes of Anti-Lebanon, at the opening of a small valley into the plain El Bukaa. A small stream, divided into many rills for irrigation, waters the fertile soil.

The city was not regular in plan, and heaps of ruins scattered over a space of two miles indicate its size. The chief attractions are the three temples. 1. The Great Temple (whose ruins are very grand and picturesque) seems to have been left unfinished. The Great Gate is ornamented with every device that could be used in the most florid Corinthian style. Ears of grain, vine-leaves, and grapes, with little figures of genii, or elves half-hid among them, and many choice touches of scroll-work, attract the eye and gratify the taste. Only six columns of the peristyle of this temple are now standing (75 ft. high, 7 ft. thick, the pediment 120 ft. above the ground), besides two courts and a portico. These are on an artificial platform, which is elevated 30 ft., and has vaults underneath. The three great stones forming a part of this platform measure (1) 64 ft., (2) 63 ft. 8 in., (3) 63 ft. Thickness, 13 ft. The large stone left in the quarry is 69 ft. long, 17 ft. wide, and 14 ft. thick. 2. The Octagon Temple is Ionic and Corinthian in style, circular inside and outside, having niches which are seen each between two columns. Carved wreaths ornament the space above each. This has been used as a Christian church, but is now ruinous. 3. The Temple of the Sun, also Corinthian, is the most beautiful work there. The great work of Wood and Dawkins contains drawings and plans of every object of interest at Baalbek, and also at Palmyra.

Ba'ale, of Judah. BAAL.

Ba'alim. BAAL.

Ba'asha (bad). The first king of the second line which reigned over the ten tribes. He was an idolater — worshiped the calves, and compelled the people to break off intercourse with Jerusalem.

Ba'asha (lays waste). Son of Ahijah, 3d king of Israel, for 24 years. B. C. 953 to 930.

Bā'bel, Bāb'ylon (gate of God). Capital of the Plain of Shinar (Gen. x. 10). Built B. C. 2600 (ver. 25), on both sides of the river Euphrates; a vast square, 56 miles in circuit. About 5 miles above Hillah, on the E. bank of the river, are a great many artificial mounds of enormous size, in three groups: 1. Babil, or Mujellibe (overturned), a high pile of unbaked bricks; 2. The palace or Kasr; and 3. The mound on which the modern tomb of Amram ibn Ali stands. In a line with the Amram mound, on both sides of the river, are the ruins of a great palace, the bricks of which bear the name of Nergal-Sharezer (Neriglissar), who was the chief magician (Rab-mag) and officer of Nebuchadnezzar (Jer. xxxix. 3). Similar mounds, but smaller, are scattered over the country on both sides of the river, one of which, 6 miles S.W. of Hillah, is called Birs Nimrud, which some say is the tower of Babel. Inscriptions found here, of the date of Nebuchadnezzar, mark the site of Borsippa, outside of Babylon. A broad and deep moat, kept full of water, surrounded one wall of the ancient city, outside of which was another wall 200 royal cubits high and 50 thick. (Pliny says 200, Strabo 75, and Rawlinson 60 to 70 feet.) Scarcely a trace of these walls can be found now, except a few mounds which mark the sites of some of the gates. Ctesias says there were 250 towers on the walls. The houses were generally built of bricks made of the river mud, sun-dried, or burnt in kilns, cemented with bitumen, and were three and four stories high.

The streets were straight, and crossed each other at right angles, the cross streets having gates of bronze at the river. Ctesias mentions a bridge of stone 3,000 feet long and 30 feet wide, connecting two palaces on opposite sides of the river. There were three walls around the royal palace on the Eastern side, the second or middle wall being 300 ft. (?) high and the towers 420 ft. (?), and 4½ miles in circuit, made of colored brick, representing hunting scenes, with figures of Ninus and Semiramis. A tunnel under the river also connected the two palaces (Jer. li. 58, 53; l. 15). There were a hundred gates of bronze with posts and lintels of the same. The banks of the river had quays, whose ruins still exist, on whose bricks was written in arrow-head characters the name of the last king. The most imposing ruin examined by Layard is called Birs Nimrud, and was found to be in seven stories, with a chamber on the top, each story smaller, forming an oblique pyramid with a square base. It was called the Temple of the Seven Spheres, and is not the Tower of Babel of the Scriptures, which is not yet identified. The stories were colored, and were, beginning at the lower — 1st, 272 ft. square, 26 ft. high, colored black; 2d, 230 square, 26 high, orange; 3d, 188 square, 26 high, red; 4th, 146 square, 15 high, golden color; 5th, 104 square, 15 high, yellow; 6th, 62 square, 15 high, blue; 7th, 20 square, 15 high, silver color; and the ark, nearly covering the entire upper platform, and 15 ft. high, color not given: making, in all, 153 ft. above the platform, which was three feet above the plain. The empire lasted 1,300 years. (Jer. xxv. 12, 14.) It is now a desolation, the great city has become heaps (li. 37), the land a wilderness for wild beasts, and even the Arabs refuse to pitch the tent, and the shepherd to fold sheep there (Is. xiii. 19–22).

Bā'ca (weeping). The valley (Ps. lxxxiv. 6). Located in Hinnom (2 Sam. v. 23). A valley of the same name is now found in Sinai.

Băcchī'des (son of Bacchus). Friend of Antiochus Epiphanes, and governor of Mesopotamia; after Judas Maccabeus fell he reëstablished the power of the Syrian faction in Judæa. B. C. 161–158.

Băc'chus. Greek Dionysus. (2 Macc. vi. 7; xiv. 33.) A god of special abhorrence to the Jews. He was the god of wine, and of general festivity and jollity, and his rites sanctioned the most frantic excesses of revelry and excitement. Nicanor threatened to build a temple to Bacchus on the site of the temple of Solomon.

Badg'er (Heb. Tachash). The antelope. Tachaitze of Eastern Africa, blush slaty-gray in color. Sculptured in Egypt.

Bahū'rim (young men's village). Near the Jerusalem-Jericho road; where, in the Wady Ruwaby, there are some ruins.

Bala'am (stranger). Son of Beor, and a prophet (Num. xxii. 5). This strange man worshiped Jehovah, and at the same time knew and practised the forbidden arts of divination. His prophesies are distinguished for dignity, compression, vividness, and fullness of imagery: there is scarcely any work equal to them in the later prophets (Rev. ii. 14).

Bā'lak (empty). Son of Zippor, king of Moab, who hired Balaam to curse the Israelites (Num. xxii. 24).

Baldness, is natural and artificial. The artificial is caused by shaving the head, in token of mourning for the dead (Jer. xvi. 6), which Moses forbade to the Jews because it was a heathen custom. Baldness was ridiculed (2 Ki. ii. 28), perhaps on suspicion of leprosy. A bald man was declared unfit for the priestly office (Lev. xxi. 20).

Ba'mah (High-place) (Ezr. xx. 29). Jehovah gave this name to every place of idolatrous worship.

Ba'moth. Station in the Exodus (Num. xxi. 19).

Ba'moth-Ba'al. BAAL. High place in Moab (Josh. xiii. 17).

Băn'quet. Entertainment furnished at the expense of one man; usually towards the close of the day, between 5 and 6, and called supper. On grand occasions the invitations were given out some days before, and on the day appointed a servant was sent to announce that the time had arrived, and the guest was expected (Matt. xxii. 8; Luke xiv. 17). After accepting the invitation, to neglect to attend was no less than an insult. When all who had been invited had arrived, the master of the house shut the door (Luke xiii. 24). The first act of welcome was washing the feet and anointing the hair with perfumed oil; and among the wealthy, on great days, a handsome cloak was furnished to each guest, to be worn during the festivity (Ecc. ix. 7; Rev. iii. 4).

Bāp'tism. Washing before prayer or sacrifice was a custom among all ancient nations, as a sign of spiritual purity in the physical cleanness, and baptism was instituted as an initiatory rite of his religion by the Lord Jesus Christ. To be baptized for Moses (1 Cor. x. 2) means to become subject to the law of Moses; to be baptized for Christ, shows an intention to become a true follower of Christ. John baptized with water unto repentance — not causing repentance but as a sign of it. Perhaps only a sign of their willingness to enroll themselves among John's followers. Jesus himself did not baptize with water, but with the Spirit. The Baptists believe, that baptism is a specific rite, having one unvarying character; and that, as there is but "one Lord" and "one faith," so there is but "one baptism" (Eph. iv. 5). There are different views of Baptism. 1. That it is a direct instrument of grace, when applied by a properly qualified person; infusing into the soul positive moral goodness; or, as some believe, giving only the capacity to receive goodness, which if rightly used will lead to salvation; while others again see that the good will only be enjoyed by those who are predestined to salvation. 2. It is a seal of grace, divine blessings being thereby confirmed to the soul. 3. Some hold that it is only a sign of initiation into Church membership. 4. Or a token of regeneration, to be received only by those who give evidence of being really regenerated. 5. A symbol of purification. The mode of baptism differs; and there is practiced immersion and affusion or sprinkling. The Marcionites and the Gnostics baptized the dead (1 Cor. xv. 29) by proxy, some one answering for the dead, while the water was applied to the dead body; and parents were baptized for their children, from a mistaken reading of the words of Paul. He meant, "If the dead rise not at all, what benefit do they expect who baptize vicariously for the dead?"

Barab'bas (son of Abba). One who had forfeited his life by sedition and murder (Mark xv. 7). The Armenian version reads, "Whom will ye that I shall deliver unto you, Jesus Barabbas, or Jesus that is called Christ?"

Bā'rak (lightning). Son of Abinoam of Kedesh, Naphtali (Judg. iv. 6). Summoned by Deborah to fight against Jabin and Sisera.

THE MOLTEN SEA.

Bärba'rian. Any nation but the Greek, was the Greek definition. The term meant to the Greeks what Gentile did to the Jews — any people but Jews. The Egyptians had a similar term; and the Oriental nations all had, and have now, some term for distinction between their own and other people.

Bar-Je'sus. ELYMAS.

Bar-Jo'na. PETER.

Bar'ley. Used, by the poor only, for bread, mixing it with wheat, beans, lentils, millet, etc., and as fodder for horses (Judg. vii. 13; 2 Ki. iv. 42; Ezr. iv. 9; 1 Ki. iv. 28). The barley harvest is in March and April, earlier than the wheat harvest by three weeks.

Barley bread is a sign of poverty, and is little esteemed (Ezr xiii. 19). Its value was one-third that of wheat (Rev. vi. 6).

Barn. Ten different Hebrew and Greek words are translated barn. Barns, as we know them, for storing hay, grain, etc., are unknown in the East. Rooms or pits (granaries) are often made under-ground or cut into the solid rock. It is the custom to keep animals, produce, grain, and all kinds of goods, in the lower story of the dwelling. Poor people often sleep in the same room with their cattle.

Bär'nabas (exhorter). Joses, a Levite of Cyprus, an early disciple and companion of Paul, was called Barnabas — son of eloquence — because of his ready oratory (Acts iv. 36). He was the first to recognize Paul's sincerity, and introduce him to the church in Jerusalem (ix. 27). Being honored with the mission to Antioch, he sought for Saul (Paul) in Tarsus as a helper, and they worked together a year. Barnabas' sister's son, Mark, was the Evangelist. He is not counted as an apostle (see APOSTLE), although Luke so speaks of him in Acts xiv. 14; and they were equally honored by the church until after the quarrel and separation of Barnabas from Saul. After that, Barnabas is lost sight of. The Epistle called by his name is believed to be spurious, because it has in it errors in the Jewish history and worship, and very feeble grasp of divine truth, unworthy of a Levite and a disciple. It is assigned to the 2d century A. D. by Alford.

Bärthol'omew (son of Talmai). One of the 12. The same as Nathanael. Born at Cana. Philip had some difficulty in bringing him to regard Jesus as the Christ. He was one of the 7 to whom Jesus appeared after the resurrection at the lake of Tiberias, and a witness of the ascension. Tradition only gives any account of him after that time, when he is supposed to have gone as a preacher into "the East" (India). A spurious gospel bears his name.

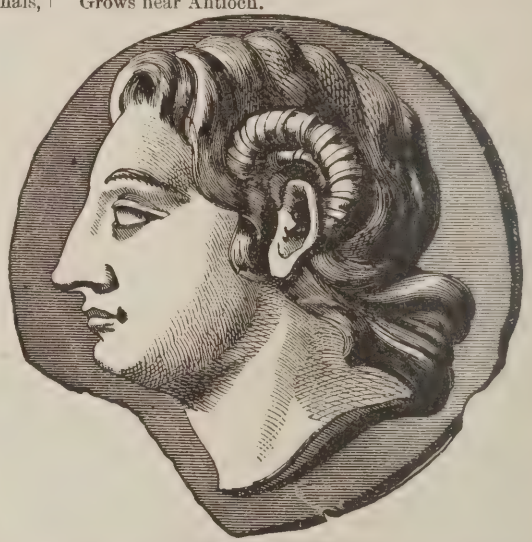
Bärzilla'i. A wealthy Gileadite who was hospitable to David when he fled from Absalom (2 Sam. xvii. 27); but declined David's invitation to reside at court, because of his great age. 2. Whose son married Saul's daughter Michal.

Bā'shan (soft, rich soil, or basalt soil). Land of Bashan. E. of Jordan, N. of Jabbok; from the border of Gilead to Hermon, and from the Jordan to Salcah (Josh. xii. 4, 5; Deut. iii. 10–14). At Edrei, Og, king of B., was defeated, and the land given to the half-tribe of Manasseh, with half of Gilead. It was famous for its oaks (Is. ii. 13; Zech. xi. 12), and cattle; and now the granary of Damascus. Modern travellers speak of its delightful forests, of its flocks and herds, and grain fields. ARGOB, with its 60 cities, was in Bashan.

Ba'sin. The translation of four Hebrew and one Greek word. The form of some kinds have been preserved on the monuments, and are given in the article WASHING THE HANDS AND FEET.

Bäs'ket. Five Hebrew words are translated basket. The form of the bread-basket is shown in the cut. They were made of grass, or willow twigs.

Bas'tard (Heb. mamzer). A child born to those who marry within the limited degrees of relationship, as two of the same family; or a Jew and a Gentile.



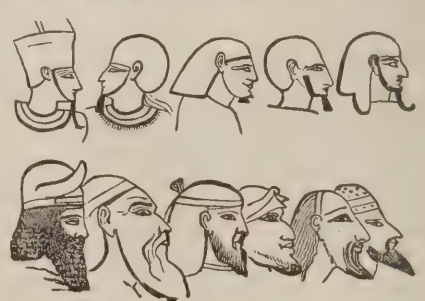
Bät. Among the animals forbidden to be eaten (Lev. xi. 20). The peculiar habitation of bats, in the dark recesses of rocky caves, and their nocturnal habits give great force to the prophecy that the idols shall be cast to the bats and the moles. Baruch shows (among other images) that the idols are no gods because bats sit on their heads, with birds and cats.

Bāthing. BAPTISM. In Palestine, Syria, and Egypt, bathing is a luxury as well as a necessity, and is now a religious ceremony, as in ancient times.

Bath-Rabbim. Gate of the ancient city of Heshbon. The two pools near this gate were likened to the eyes of Shelomith's beloved (Cant. vii. 4).

Bāthshē'ba (promised — sworn). Daughter of Eliam, wife of Uriah, and grand-daughter of Ahithophel, the statesman. Mother of Solomon. There are recorded instances of her vigorous understanding and kindness of heart.

Bay-tree. A native — not an exotic (Ps. xxxvii. 35). Grows near Antioch.



ALEXANDER THE GREAT.

Bdell'ium. The gum of a tree that grew in the land of India and Arabia — used in sacrifice and as a perfume and flavor for wine. The word may mean pearls (Gen. ii. 12; Num. xi. 7).

Beans. A native of Palestine, Syria, and Asia Minor. (2 Sam. xvii. 28.) Blossoms from January to March. Planted in November; gathered in February. Both the green pod and ripe beans, boiled with oil and garlic, are commonly used by persons of all classes. There are several kinds, some of which are fed to horses.

Bear. The Hebrew name (dob) is still in use for the bear in the East, which is found on Mts. Hermon, Lebanon, and other parts of the country; and naturalists have shown that it is a species peculiar to Syria.

Beard. The beard in the East is a badge of manhood and a mark of freedom. The Egyptians shaved it off and wore a false beard of plaited hair, in style and length to suit their rank. The Hebrews were distinct from both their Egyptian and Assyrian neighbors, as may be shown on the monuments, where captives are drawn in their proper costume and feature. It was a shame to lose the hair or beard (Is. l. 6), and also a sign of mourning. It was carefully dressed and oiled (Ps. cxxxiii.), and a full, long beard was, and is, a highly coveted ornament.

BEARDS.

Bec'tileth, the Plain of (house of slaughter), between Nineveh and Cilicia (Judg. ii. 2). Bactiali was a plain 21 miles from Antioch. (Peutinger tables.)

Bed. 1. A mat of grass, reeds, straw, hemp, or one or more cloths. 2. A quilt or mattress, filled with cotton, wool, grass, or straw. The pillow for the head is a frame of wood, a stone, or a stuffed bag, or sheepskin. The bed was laid on the divan (platform 6 to 8 feet wide, and 8 to 15 inches high, on one or more sides of a room). Bedsteads, or movable frames (1 Sam. xix. 15; bier, 2 Sam. iii. 31), were used, perhaps, only by the wealthy. Some were made of palm-sticks, and others of iron (Deut. iii. 11). Sculptures in Asia Minor show many elegant shapes of bedsteads, and couches. The canopy (Judith xvi. 23) was, and is still used in the East, for display, and for protection against light, dust, and insects. (Esth. i. 6; Ps. vii. 16.) The people seldom or never change their dress on going to bed; only taking off the outer garment (see DRESS), excepting in hot weather.

EGYPTIAN HUNTING HIPPOPOTAMUS.

Bee (dêbôrâh). Palestine abounded in bees, for it was a land "flowing with milk and honey" (Deut. xxxii. 13). The banded bee of Palestine is not found in this country. So plentiful was "wild honey," that it was exported. It was eaten mixed with butter. There is a vegetable substance called honey, which is a thick juice of grapes.

Beel'zebub (fly-god). BEEL'ZEBUL (lord of dirt). House-god, and dung-god, by some. A belief that demons possessed persons led to a belief in a prince of demons, who was supposed to rule over them.

Bē'er (well). — 1. A well dug by the "princes" beyond Arnon, near one of the last stations of the Exode, and celebrated in poetry (Num. xxi. 16, 18. — 2. Jotham, son of Gideon, fled to this place (Judg. ix. 21). Site lost.

Bē'er-lahā'i-roi (well of the living and seeing god). Between Kadesh and Bered, wilderness of Shur (Gen. xvi. 14; xxiv. 62; xxv. 11). Located by Ritter 25 m. S.E. of Beersheba, at Moyle, Beit Hagar.

Beē'roth (wells). One of the four cities of the Hivites; the other three being Gibeon, Chephirah, and Kirjath Jearim (Josh. ix. 17; xviii. 25, 26, 28). 10 m. N. of Jerusalem, on the Shechem road, the customary resting-place of travellers (Rob.). — 2. Bene Jaakan. Edom, a station (Deut. x. 6).

Bēr'sheba (well of swearing, or well of seven). S. border of Judah. Dug by Abraham (Gen. xxi. 31). The compact of Abraham and Abimelech was ratified by setting apart seven ewe-lambs, sheba = seven. Isaac's servants also "digged" a well (xxvi. 32). Two principal wells and five smaller ones are on the N. bank of Wady Seba on the edge of the desert. One is 12½ ft. diameter, 44½ ft. to the water (Rob., Apr. 12). The other is 5 ft. diameter and 42 ft. to the water. Watering-troughs of stone lie around the wells, and in the grass are crocuses and lilies. The five lesser wells are at some distance from the two larger. The ruins of a town are on the hills N. of the wells. It is very frequently mentioned as one of the boundaries of all Israel: from Dan to Beersheba. The Arab name is Bir es Seba', Well of the Lion.

Begot'ten. Jesus Christ, the Son of God (John i. 14, 18, Rev. i. 5).

Behē'moth (excellences). Mentioned only in Job xl. 15–24. It is not certain which is meant, the elephant or the hippopotamus (river-horse). Both answer the description, but the elephant comes much nearer to all the points required.

Bel. The national god of the Babylonians (Is. xlvi. 1; Jer. l. 2). Zeus Bel is the male, and Hera the female of the same deity. Writers are divided as to whether Bel (Baal) was the sun or the planet Jupiter; if the sun, then Ashtoreth was the moon goddess.

Bells. Large bells were not used in ancient times, nor are they in use now. Small hand-bells were used by the Greeks, Romans, and Jews. The high-priest wore round the hem of his dress seventy-two gold bells, which were placed alternately with pomegranates. The little girls of Cairo wear strings of them round their feet. They were sometimes attached to the harness of horses and camels.

Bel'lows. The ancients used two kinds, according to the monuments, ingeniously contrived to be worked by the feet (Jer. vi. 29).

Belshaz'zar (Bel's prince). The last king of Babylon. A mysterious writing appearing on the wall during a great feast, and his magicians not being able to read it, Daniel was called, and explained its meaning. The king died the same night (Dan. 5). See DANIEL.

Belteshaz'zar Name given to Daniel (Dan. i. 7). Correctly BEL-SHAT-ZAR (favored by Bel).

Be'ne-be'rak (sons of lightning). City of the tribe of Dan (Josh. xix. 45).

Benejā'akan. Tribe descended from Jaakan (AKAN), a Horite chief (Gen. xxxvi.), and who owned wells where Israel encamped in the Exode (Num. xxxiii. 31).

Benekē'dem (people of the East). Kedem was the name for the whole country E. of Palestine, far or near. They lived (as now) in tents, kept flocks and herds, and were always ready for robbing expeditions.

Benhā'dad (son of Adad, a god of Syria). — 1. King of Syria, who was hired by Asa, king of Judah, to invade Israel (1 K. xv. 18). Supposed to be the same as Hadad, the Edomite, who rebelled against Solomon (1 K. xi.). — 2. King of Syria, son of the former, and always at war with Ahab (1 K. xxi. 30). He consulted the prophet Elisha, by means of Hazael, and was smothered by him soon after, B.C. 884 (2 K. viii.). — 3. A king of Syria, son of Hazael (2 K. xiii.).

Ben'jamin (fortune). Named Benoni by his dying mother. Youngest son of Jacob, second of Rachel, born near Bethlehem; his father's favorite, next to Joseph, and the mark of special honors from him. He had the affection of his brothers, and received their favors as a matter of course, and was not very positive, but a quiet, gentle spirit. He had ten sons and grandsons at the migration into Egypt (Gen. xlvi.). He made no special history for himself. The tribe was always of least consequence. At the Exodus there were 35,400 of full age, and at the passage over Jordan 45,600. There were 26 cities in their portion (see map). The tribe was almost destroyed for violating the rights of hospitality (Judg. xix. 20), 600 only escaping to the rock Rimmon (see RIMMON and SHILOH). The first deliverer of Israel (from Moab) in the time of the judges, was Ehud, a Benjamite. The first king of Israel was Saul, a Benjamite; and Saul (Paul), the apostle, was also of this tribe.

Berā'chah (blessing). 6 miles S. of Bethlehem, 1 mile E. of the Hebron road, now called Bereikut (2 Chr. xx. 26).

Berē'a. Macedonia (Acts xvii. 10). Visited by Paul and Silas. Sopater of Berea (xx. 4; Rom. xvi. 21). Sosipater. Now called Verria, on the east slope of Olympus, well watered, and commanding a fine view of the plains of Axius and Haliacmon; 15,000 population. The ruins are Greek, Roman, and Byzantine. — 2. A name of Aleppo. — 3. In Judea, near Jerusalem (1 Macc. iv. 4; Jos. Ant. xi. § 1). Jerome says certain persons lived in this city who had, and used St. Matthew's Hebrew Gospel.

Bēred. In the wilderness, near Kadesh (Gen. xvi. 14).

BETHANY.

Located at Elusa, Khulasa (Ar.), 12 ms. south of Beersheba, where there is a well. Supposed to be Shur, and also Gerar.

Bereni'ce (gift). Eldest daughter of Herod Agrippa. Married to her uncle Herod, king of Chalcis, and after his death, wife of Polemon, king of Cilicia. She was also with Vespasian and Titus (Ant. xix. 5, 1; xx. 7, 2, 3).

Berō'thāh, BERŌ'THAI; BERY'TUS; BEI'RUT (ba-root). Chief seaport in North Palestine (Syria). (2 Sam. viii. 8; Ezr. xlvii. 16.) A city of the Phœnicians, named after Baal Berith (god of wells). Van de Velde proposes for the Scripture place Tell el Byruth, between Tadmor and Hamoth. See PHŒNICIA.

Beta'ne. BETHAN'IN of Eusebius, two miles from the Terebinth, or Oak of Abraham, and four from Hebron. This has been variously identified with Betharath, Bethainun (Beth-anoth), and Betaneh, or Ecbatana in Syria.

Bĕth. House of any kind. TENT. HANGINGS. FAMILY. TEMPLE. BETH-AB'ARA (house of the ford), where John was baptizing (John i. 28). The oldest MSS. read BETHANY. It was beyond Jordan, and nearly opposite Jericho. BETH-A'NATH. Naph. Fenced city (Josh. xix. 38; Judg. i. 33). Site lost. BETHA'NOTH. Judah (Josh. v. 59). Beit ainun, near Halhul, and Beit Sur. (Rob.) 3 ms. N. of Hebron.

Beth'any (house of dates). One of the most interesting places in Palestine. The residence of Lazarus, who was raised from the dead; the frequent resting-place of Jesus; the home of Mary and Martha, and of Simon the leper; and from whence the triumphal entry began; and near the scene of the Ascension. On the Mount of Olives (Mark xi. 1; Luke xix. 29); 15 furlongs off (John xi. 18); on the road to Jericho (Luke xix. 1, 29), and near it was Bethphage. It is now called El Azariyeh, the city of Lazarus. Is in a hollow, surrounded with olives, almonds, pomegranates, oaks, and carobs. The buildings are ruinous and wretched. The house of Lazarus is pointed out as a square tower, very ancient; and his tomb, a cave in the rock, descended by 26 steps.

Bethbāalme'on. Reuben, on the downs east of Jordan (Josh. xiii. 17). Baal Meon (Num. xxxiii. 38). The name is still given to a ruin of large size, two miles S.W. of Hesban (Burck.) in Wady Zurka Main, where there are remains of a Roman road.

Bethbā'rah (house of the ford) (Judg. vii. 24). Gideon's victory was near Bethshan, and the fords were probably the outlets of the brooks coming down from the mountains of Ephraim. The place where Jacob crossed on his return from Mesopotamia, and at which Jephtha slew the Ephraimites. Located by Van de Velde on the Jordan, at the ford on the Nablus-Es — Salt road.

Bethdā'gon (house of Dagon). — 1. In the Shefelah, Judah (Josh. xv. 41). Site supposed to be found at Beit dejan, between Lydda and Jaffa (Rob.). — 2. Asher, near the coast (xix. 27). — 3. Beit dejan, about 5 ms. S.E. of Nablus, Shechem.

Beth'el (house of El). Ten miles north of Jerusalem, to the right of the Shechem road, where Jacob saw the ladder in his dream (Gen. xxviii. 19). The name was originally Luz. Jacob set up a stone to mark the spot where God spake with him (Gen. xxxv. 14, 15; Hosea, xii. 4, 5). In Abram's time it was called Bethel (xii. 8 Jeroboam, the king, set up a golden calf at Bethel (1 K. xiii.). Jehu continued the worship of the calf. It was near Bethel that the event of the bears, Elisha, and the forty-two children took place. It was a royal residence (Amos vii. 13). There were winter-houses and summer-houses and houses of ivory at B. (iii. 14, 15; 2 K. xxvii. 28). Josiah destroyed it. The worship of idols and of Jehovah went on side by side for many years (Amos v. 14, 22). Was a strong place in later times (1 Macc. ix. 50). It is not mentioned in the N. T. Josephus relates its capture by Vespasian (Wars, iv. 9, § 9). The ruins cover four or five acres: on a low hill between two valleys, which run into es Suweinit (Rob.).—2. Judah (Josh. xii 16; 1 Sam. xxx. 27). Chesil, Bethul. HIEL, the BETHELITE, the rebuilder of Jericho (1 K. xvi. 34).

Bethes'da (house of mercy). A pool at Jerusalem, near the sheep-gate, or "market," with five porches, extensive enough to accommodate a large number of sick and infirm people, who resorted there for relief (John v. 2). Supposed to be the great excavation near St. Stephen's gate, now called Bethesda. The porches and water are gone, and all around it are ruins, but it is very large, cemented as if for holding water, and there might have been buildings on its east and north sides anciently. Dr. Crosby locates it at the Virgin fountain, and Dr. Deems at the Hezekiah pool. See Map of Jerusalem.

SECTION OF POOL.

Beth'ga-mul (house of the camel). Moab, in the plains. Um-el Jemail, a few miles south of Busrah, in the Hauran (Rob.).

Bethhog'lah (house of partridge). On the border of Judah (Josh. xv. 6) and Benjamin, near Jericho. A great spring and ruin in the Jericho plain is now called Ain Hajla (Rob.).

Bethhō'ron (house of caverns). Two cities, on the Jerusalem-Jaffa upper road, built by Sherah, a woman of Ephraim, on the boundary between Ephraim and Benjamin (Josh. xvi. 3, 5; xviii. 13, 14; xxi. 22). Two of the most memorable victories of the Jews occurred here — Joshua over the five Amorite kings, when the sun and moon stood still at his command (Josh. x.), and that of Judas Maccabæus over the forces of Syria, under Seron (1 Macc. iii.13–24). The Roman army, under Cestius Gallus, was defeated here in the reign of Nero, with a loss of 5,680 men (Jos. Wars, ii. § 8).

Bethjesh'imoth (house of the wastes). East of Jordan, in the deserts of Moab (Num. xxxiii. 49). One of the cities which were "the glory of the country" (Ez. xxv. 9). Beth Jisimuth is now half a mile east of the Jordan, and a mile north of the Dead Sea.

Beth'lehem (house of bread). Four and a half miles south of Jerusalem. One of the most ancient cities in Palestine. Called EPHRATH (fruitful). (Gen. xxxv. 16; xlviii. 7.) The residence of Boaz and Ruth, the birthplace of David, and the residence of Saul. Rehoboam fortified it (2 Chr. xi. 16). The INN OF CHIMHAM was a halting-place for those who would "go to enter into Egypt" (Jer. xli. 17); which was probably the same inn in which Jesus was born (Matt. ii. 1, 5; Luke ii. 4, 5). Called also B. JUDAH and CITY OF DAVID. Justin Martyr (A. D. 150) speaks of our Lord's birth as having taken place "in a certain cave very close to the village." The village is not again mentioned after the birth of Jesus, in the Scripture. The Emperor Hadrian planted a grove in honor of Adonis, over the cave, which stood 180 years (A. D. 135–315). The Empress Helena, after clearing away this grove, built a church on the spot, which has been continued, with additions, making it "a half church and half fort," until the present day.

The modern village is built on the low hill behind the convent, facing the east. The hill is an offshoot of the main ridge, and ends in a little valley or narrow plain. The village is walled in, and is triangular. The plain east of the ridge is that on which tradition says the angels appeared to the shepherds, and is called the Shepherds' Field (Arabic, Beit Sahur — house of Sahur). As the plains were always anciently cultivated, it is probable that the shepherds would have been found on the hill, where they now may be found, with their flocks.

A church containing the monuments of the three shepherds is mentioned by an early writer (Arculfus), as standing in the midst of the fields and terraced gardens. Jerome lived here, in a cell which is now pointed out, next to the great church, where he wrote most of his commentaries, and compiled the Latin Vulgate, A. D. 385–420. Population, 3,000 people, nearly all Christians, who are makers of crucifixes, beads, models of the holy places, and other articles for sale to pilgrims. —2. Zebulon, 7 ms. W. of Nazareth (Josh. xix. 15). Birthplace of Ibzan, the judge (Judg. xii. 8).

Beth mär'cāboth (house of chariots). HAZARSUZIM, MADMANNAH (Josh. xix. 5). Of Simeon in Judah, extreme S. A station on the way to Egypt, where Solomon's chariots were kept (1 K. ix. 19; 2 Chr. viii. 6). Post-station.

Beth-nim'rah (house of pure water). E. of Jordan, N. of Beth-aram, in the Jordan valley, opposite Jericho; a fenced city (Num. xxxii. 36; Josh. xiii. 26; Is. xv. 6; Jer. xlviii. 34). Eusebius mentions it as a large place. A group of ruins 2 m. E. of the Jordan are now called Nimrim or Wady Shoaib. Supposed to be the Bethabara of John i. 28; Matt. iii. 5; Mark i. 5.

Bethphä'ge (house of figs). On the Mt. of Olives, near the Jericho road (Matt. xxi. 1; Mark xi. 1; Luke xix. 19). Probably W. of Bethany (Matt. xxi. 19). The locality of the miracle of the withered fig-tree.

Beth-rē'hob (house of room). Naph. Near Dan Laish (Judg. xviii. 28). A little kingdom of Aram (2 Sam. x. 6). Now called Hunin, and was one of the strongest forts in the North P., and commanded the plain of Huleh. Its beveled masonry marks its Phœnician origin (Rob. iii. 371).

Bethsā'ida (house of fish). This place was on the Jordan, just above its entrance into the Sea of Galilee (John xii. 21), and there was no second Bethsaida, as has been supposed, west of Capernaum. The arguments for and against are given with much detail by W. M. Thomson (Land and Book), and by the Palestine Exploration (Jerusalem Recovered). A misunderstanding of the text made it seem necessary to find a second place of the name on the shore of the sea. The recent discovery of the Sinaitic copy of the gospels, which gives a more correct version of the passage, has settled the question in favor of one city of the name located on the Jordan river. It may have been on both sides of the river, and so have been one part "in Galilee" and the other "beyond Jordan." The ruins, although they are found on both sides of the river, do not appear equal to the requirements of the text of Josephus, in which it is described as an important city, raised to the first rank, and named Julias, in honor of Julia, the daughter of the emperor Titus. Herod Philip, the tetrarch, was buried there in a magnificent tomb, which has not yet been found. The place where the five thousand were fed has been located in the Plain of Butiha by some, and at Ain Barideh, near Tiberias, by others. If the correction* of the reading derived from the Sinaitic MS. is the more ancient and reliable, then Ain Barideh, or more correctly, Ain el Fuliyeh (Warm Springs), was the place.—The city of Andrew, Peter, and Philip (John i. 44). The 5,000 were fed near there. (Luke ix. 10; John vi. 3–10; Mark vi. 39; Matt. xiv. 19). About two miles N. of the lake, and half a mile E. of the Jordan, is a long hill called Tell Julias, now covered with extensive ruins (Rob. ii. 413).

JULIA. From a gem

Beth-shē'an. BETHSHAN (house of rest). Town of Manasseh in Issachar (1 Chr. vii. 29; Josh. xvii. 11). In the Ghor, 18 ms. S. of the lake of Galilee, 4 ms. W. of the Jordan. Called Scythopolis, from the Scythians, B. C. 631 (2 Macc. xii. 29; Judith iii. 10; Col. iii. 11). The corpses of Saul and his sons were fastened on its walls by the Philistines (1 Sam. xxi. 10, 12). Three or four large brooks run near, and Ain Jalud, one of these, was the fountain which was near Jezreel, referred to in 1 Sam. xxix. 1. The ruins of Beisan, among which is a tower of Phœnician origin, now cover several hills, high, steep, about 3 ms. in circuit, between whose black, rocky bases the four brooks run. The highest is nearly 200 feet, and overlooks the Jordan for many miles N. and S. It must have been a city of temples (Rob. iii. 328; 1 Chr. i. 10). Josephus names it as the chief city of the Decapolis (Jos. Wars, iii. 9, 7).

BOTTLES.

Beth-shē'mesh (house of the sun). Several places o this name. 1. Judah, near Kirjath Jearim (Josh. xv. 10; 1 Sam. v. 13). The ark was sent here by the Philistines from Ekron (1 Sam. vi. 9–12, 18). Now Ain Shems.—2. Issachar (Josh. xix. 22).—3. A fenced city of Naphtali (Josh. xix. 38).—4. An idolatrous temple in Egypt (Jer. xliii. 13). AVEN. ON.

Beth-shittah (house of the acacia.) In the N. of Palestine, to which the Midianites fled before Gideon (Judg. vii. 22). In the valley of the Jordan (Rob. ii. 356).

Bethū'lia. S. of the Plain of Esdraelon, near Dothan, in which the chief events of the book of Judith occurred (Rob. ii. 313). The Frank Mountain was called Bethulia in the middle ages. Safed was also called by the name of the lost city.

Beth'zur (house of rock). Judah (Josh. xv. 58). Josephus says it was the strongest fortress in Judea. Built by Rehoboam, or fortified by him, and built by the people of Maon (1 Chr. ii. 42, 45). In the day of Jerome this was considered as the place of th baptism of the eunuch by Philip. Robinson finds i in Beit Sur, 4 ms. N. of Hebron, near the Jerusale road.

Beū'lah (married). (Is. lxii. 4.) The name which th land of Israel is to bear when it is married.

Bish'op (overseer). An old title of the Roman adopted in the early church for its officers who wer charged with its superintendence. Originally th same as elder. Both deacons and elders were preachers as well as overseers. In Paul's time the two titles had already become descriptive of differen duties required of the different officers. The church elected them, and the apostles confirmed them by laying on their hands (sometimes also the hands of th presbytery — ELDERS), (2 Tim. i. 6; 1 Tim. iv. 14)

VIEW IN BETHLEHEM

* The corrected text reads, "When therefore the boats came from Tiberias (which was), nigh unto where they did also eat bread." The most ancient writers record the tradition that the locality was at Ain Barideh.

They were to lead blameless lives, be the husband of one wife; have a spiritual care over the flocks (1 Peter v. 2); teach in private and public; visit the sick (James v. 14); receive and entertain strangers (1 Tim i. 2). Bishops succeeded to the authority of the apostles, but not to their rank.

Bot'tle. One Greek and four Hebrew words are translated bottle (chemeth, nebel, bakbuk, nod, and askos). Bottles are of skins, or of earth or glass. Skins of goats and kids are used for the smaller, and of the ox for the larger. These skin bottles are mentioned by Homer, Herodotus, and Virgil, and are now used

BETHSAIDA.

Bithȳn'ia. Province in Asia Minor, on the Black Sea (Acts xvi. 7). Paul was not suffered to visit Bithynia, but the gospel was preached there (1 Peter i. 1). The country is mountainous and well watered.

Blains (to boil up). Violent ulcerous inflammations, the sixth plague of Egypt (Ex. ix. 9, 10). (In Deut. xxviii. 27, 35). Called the botch of Egypt.

Blas'phemy (speaking evil of God). This crime was punished with death (by stoning, by the Jews, and both Jesus and Stephen were condemned on a charge of breaking the law. The Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost (Matt. xii. 31) has never been determined, unless it was the saying that the miracles of Jesus were the work of Satan.

Blind'ness. Is very common in the East from many causes (Matt. ix. 27, ff, xi. 5, xii. 22, xx. 30 ff). "Opening the eyes of the blind" is mentioned as a peculiar attribute of the Messiah (Is. xxix. 18). Blindness was wilfully inflicted as a punishment (Judg. xvi. 21).

Blood. Among the Hebrews called the life (Lev. xvii. 11–14). In sacrifices the blood was caught and disposed of in a prescribed manner (Lev. iv.). Murder was held to curse the place where it was done (a superstition still strong in nearly every country (Gen. iv. 10).

The Jewish people from the time of Noah were forbidden to eat blood (Gen. ix. 4), when at the same time animal food was permitted, because the blood was specially offered to God in sacrifice (Lev. xvii. 11). Since animal sacrifices have been abolished by the one great sacrifice of Jesus, blood is eaten by Christians. THE AVENGER OF BLOOD is the nearest relative (to the fifth degree) to any person who has been murdered, whose duty it is to avenge the death (Gen. ix. 5). A money payment is often accepted for a life in the East. The six Cities of Refuge were appointed as a refuge for any who accidentally killed another [not for murderers, for whom there was no refuge or pardon]. The "blood-revenge" has, more than any other custom or power, prevented the tribes of Arabia from exterminating each other.

Bō'han. A stone set up on the border of Benjamin and Judah, between Betharabah and Bethhoglah on the E. and Adummim and Enshemesh on the W. (Josh. xv. 6; xviii. 17).

Bō'sor. E. of Jordan, in Gilead (1 Macc. v. 26, 36).

Bŏsō'ra. Gilead. A strong city taken by Judas Maccabæus; probably the same as Bozrah (1 Macc. v. 26. 28).

in Spain and all over the Orient. Earthen and glass bottles were also used, and are often mentioned.

Box-tree. This elegant shrub, or small tree, is twice named by Isaiah for its beauty (Is. xli. 19, lx. 13; 2 Esd. xiv. 24). It is thought that the word ivory ought to be translated box-wood; in Ezr. xxvii. 6, box is still used for combs, and by the carver and the turner. It is the best material for blocks for the wood-engraver.

Bō'zez (shining.—Teeth of the cliff). The rock on the N. of the pass by which Jonathan entered the Philistine camp (1 Sam. xvi. 4, 5). In the Wady Suweinit, near Michmash.

Bŏz'kath. Judah in the Shefelah (Josh. xv. 39; 2 K. xxii. 1). The native place of King Josiah.

Bŏz'rah (enclosure; sheepfold). Chief city in Edom (Gen. xxxvi. 33). The modern name is Buseireh—little Busreh (Rob., ii. 167). It is a strong fort on a hill-top among the mountains, about 25 m. S.E. of the Dead Sea, half-way to Petra (Is. xxxiv. 6, lxiii. 1; Jer. xlix. 13, 22; Amos i. 12; Micah ii. 12. It is the centre of a pastoral region.—2. In the plain country—the land of Mishor—(Jer. xlviii. 24). E. of the Dead Sea and Lower Jordan are high tablelands, called Belka, where there are three ruins, named Um-el-Jemal (Beth-gamul), Kureiyeh (Kerioth), and Busrah (Bozrah), in the N.E. section, which is a rich district near the Hauran. The walls of Bozrah were 4 m. in extent, and they did not include the suburbs. Temples, churches, mosques, and a beautiful theatre, are all in ruins; only a strong castle is left entire.

Brăcelet. Armlet, wristlet. Ornament worn around the arm, above or below the elbow.

Brănch. Limb of a tree—figuratively a person related to another, or to a family—as Jesus to the line of David (Is. iv. 2; xi. 1; Jer. xxiii. 5; xxxiii. 15; Zech. iii. 8, vi. 12)—Christians to Christ.

Brass. The Hebrews did not mix copper and zinc, as we do, to make brass, but used the copper pure, or mixed tin with it, forming bronze; of which metal are nearly all of the antique coins not gold and silver.

Bread (Hebrew lehem). First mentioned in Gen. xviii. 6. Bread was a term for the whole meal; as meal (ground grain) is for all that is eaten at any time. The best was made of wheat, ground and sifted, leavened and baked. Poorer kinds were made of barley, rye, beans, and lentils. The bread was kneaded with the hands or with the feet (as shown on the monuments), in a trough, and if unleavened baked thin and quickly, as now by the Bedouins. There were private and public ovens (Jer. xxxvii. 21; Neh. iii. 11). Hot, smooth stones are also used for baking. The objectionable passage in Ez. iv. 12 is explained when we know that dried dung of all kinds, in the East where there is no wood, is used for burning. Ephraim is a cake not turned (Hosea vii. 8). The baking-pan and the frying-pan were used (Lev. ii. 5; 2 Sam. xiii. 9).

Brick. Made of clay, clay and sand, mud with straw, burnt in kilns, or dried in the sun. They were sometimes colored or painted in patterns. Houses of sun-dried bricks had layers of reeds or straw at intervals. David made the prisoners work in brick-kilns (2 Sam. xii. 31). Bitumen, mud, and a very hard cement, were used to join the bricks.

Brother. 1. Kinsman, brother, nephew, cousin.—2. Of the same tribe.—3. Of the same people.—4. An ally in war.—5. Any friend (Job vi. 15).—6. One in the same office (1 K. ix. 13).—7. Fellow-man (Luke xix. 17).—8. One of a similar character (Job xxx. 29).—9. Disciples (Matt. xxv. 40.)—10. Of the same faith (Amos i. 9; Acts ix. 30). A term meaning similarity, as "brother of dragons," in Job xxx. 29. See JAMES for Brethren of the Lord.

Bur'ial. The custom was to bury in tombs or graves, and there were no exceptions, not even criminals (Deut. xxi. 23). The tombs cut in the rocks of Palestine and Egypt have been found to be depositories of much valuable information on the manners and customs of antiquity. Sepulchres for families were cut near the residence, in a garden, or by the road, long before they were expected to be needed. Only kings and prophets were buried in towns (1 K. ii. 10; 2 K. x. 35; 1 Sam. xxv. 1). Rachel's tomb was a monument erected on the spot where she died. It was a misfortune and a dishonor to fail of burial in the family tomb (1 K. xiii. 22); and an honor to a person or family to wish to be buried with them

BRICK-MAKING IN EGYPT.

(Ruth i. 17); or to give one a place in a sepulchre (Gen. xxiii. 6; Luke xxiii. 50). It was the custom to wash them with lime ("white"), each year (Matt. xxiii. 27). Spices were used to prepare the body for the grave (2 Chr. xvi. 14; John xix. 40), which were omitted as a mark of popular dishonor (2 Chr. xxi. 19). Burning was very rare, and only recorded of Saul and his sons. The next of kin presided over the whole offices, but there were public buriers (Ez. xxxix. 12; Acts v. vi. 10). The body was wrapped in its usual dress, and with bandages. Coffins were rarely used. A stone sarcophagus was used for a great person — king, etc. The dead were carried on a bier, by the relatives or hired persons, or by any person who wished to honor the dead or the relatives. The desire was to be buried in the native place, as Jacob and Joseph wished to be carried to Canaan, because of a superstition that only those buried in the Promised Land would rise in the resurrection.

But'ter. The term usually means curdled milk, curds, milk, and cheese. Butter (churned cream) is made by shaking a skin of cream, or milk, and when formed, melting, and pouring into skin bottles, or earthen jars. It is more like oil than our butter.

Byb'lus. Gebal. The Greeks changed the name of Gebal to Byblus, and the Septuagint uses that name in 1 Ki. v. 18, etc. In mythology this was the birthplace of Adonis, and contained the principal temple and sanctuary of that god. Byblus had a fleet of war-vessels in the time of Alexander. For many centuries it was a place of importance, and in Christian times had a bishop.

C

Cab'bon. Judah, in the Shefelah (Josh. xv. 40).

Cā'bul (little). 1. Asher (Josh. xix. 27; Jos. vi. § 43, 45). Modern site, 8 miles east of Acre. — 2. Region in Galilee given by king Solomon to Hiram, king of Tyre, which "pleased him not" (1 K. ix. 12, 13; Jos. Ant. viii. 5, § 3).

Cæsarē'a. On the shore of the Great Sea, N.W. of Jerusalem 70 ms., and 35 north of Joppa, on the ancient road from Tyre to Egypt (Jos. Wars, i. 21, § 5). The political capital of Palestine, and a very important city in the time of the apostles (Acts viii. 40; ix. 30; x. 1, 24; xi. 11; xii. 19; xviii. 22; xxi. 8, 16; xxiii. 23, 33; xxv. 1, 4, 6, 13). In Strabo's time there was at this place Strato's Tower, and a landing-place; and Herod the Great, at immense cost, built an artificial breakwater and founded a city, B. C. 22. The sea-wall was built of very large blocks of stone, 50 feet long, and extended into water of 120 feet depth, enclosing several acres, on which a large fleet could safely ride (Jos. Ant. xv. 9). Named, in honor of Augustus, C. Sebaste (Jos. Ant. xvi. 5, § 1). Sometimes called C. Palestina, and C. Stratonis. Called Sebastos on coins. The residence of Philip, one of the seven deacons of the early church, and the home of the historian Eusebius; the scene of some of Origen's labors, and the birthplace of Procopius. Was noted in the time of the Crusades. It is now utterly desolate.

It was at Cæsarea that Origen (A. D. 185–201), a man of great natural ability, collated the text of the Septuagint, Hebrew, and other Greek versions, making a page of six columns, each version in its proper column, thus forming what was called the Hexapla — Six-ply version of the Scriptures, which is the most important contribution to biblical literature in ancient times. Of some books he gave eight versions.

Cæsarē'a. Philip'pi. PANEAS (Pan). At the S.W. foot of Mt. Hermon, on a broad terrace overlooking the Huleh plain; behind the mountain range rises in rugged bold peaks, wooded and capped with snow. Groves of evergreens, oaks and olives, hawthorns, myrtles, oleanders, and beautifully carpeted with grass. One of the chief sources of the Jordan is in a cave near the castle, and pours out an abundance of water, spreading fertility in its course. Named by Philip in honor of Tiberius Cæsar and himself. Agrippa II. named it Neronias, after Nero. Titus exhibited gladiators there (Jos. Wars, vii. 2, § 1). On the coins it is C. Paneas. Its most ancient name is now only known at the spot. The castle (Subeibeh) is of Phœnician work, and one of the largest in the land. Supposed to be Baal Gad (Josh. xi. 17). The charge to Peter was given here by Jesus (Matt. xvi. 18), and near it was probably the scene of the Transfiguration (xvii. 1, 2).

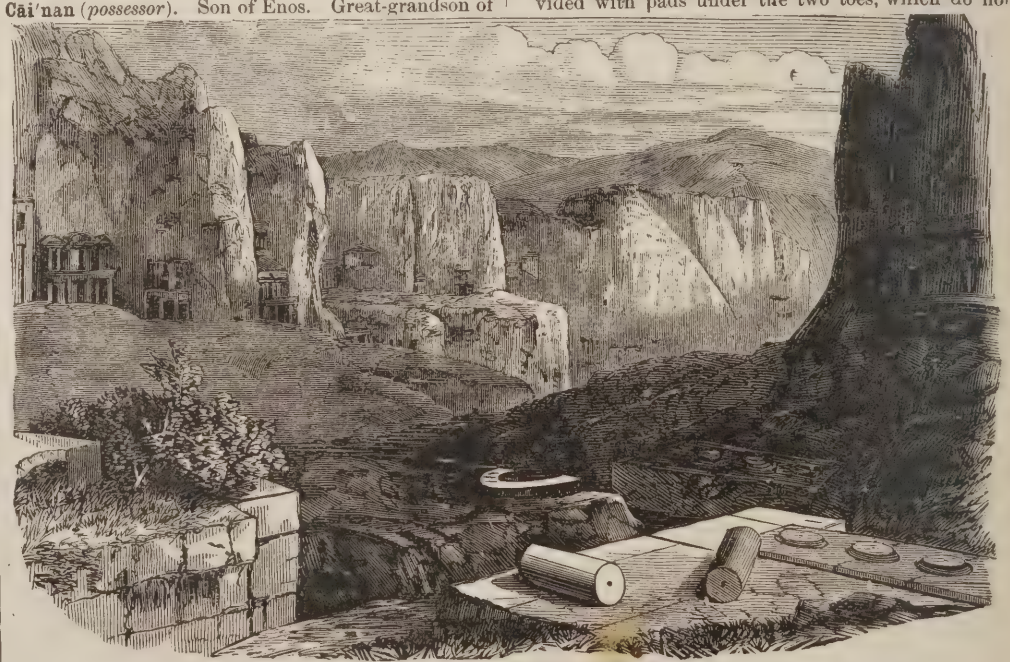
Cāĭā'phas (rock or depression). Joseph Caiaphas, high-priest of the Jews, under Tiberius at the crucifixion — appointed by Valerius Gratus, A. D. 25, holding it till removed by Marcellus, A. D. 37. His long term indicates unusual power and fitness. Son-in-law of Annas. He pronounced judgment that Jesus was guilty of blasphemy (Matt. xxvi. 57–66), and uttered a prophesy of Jesus without being conscious of it.

Cāin (acquisition). The first-born of the Adamic race. Son of Adam and Eve (Gen. iv. 1). Eve said, "I have got a man, by the help of Jehovah." It is supposed that he worked in the field, and that his brother Abel kept the flocks. After the murder of Abel, (through envy and jealousy,) he went into the land of Nod (wandering land); saw a sign from heaven, and was assured that no attempt would be permitted against his life; he married Save, and built the city of Enoch. Society was thoroughly organized in his time, and we find such names as Zillah (shadow), Naamah (pleasant), and Adah (ornamental); and Jabal living in tents; Jubal making musical instruments; Tubal Cain in the shop of the smith; Lamech composing poetry; while history and genealogy were carefully preserved. — 2. CAIN. A place in Judah, in the mountains, near Zanoah and Gibeah (Josh. xv. 57).

Cāi'nan (possessor). Son of Enos. Great-grandson of Adam. Father of Mahalaleel. Died aged 910 (Gen. v. 9; Luke iii. 37). — 2. Son of Arphax'ad and father of Sala. The second name is supposed to have been added to the genealogy for some reason by the scribes or some compiler.

Cā'lah (old age). One of the most ancient cities of Assyria, built by Asshur (Gen. x. 11). HALAH (2 K. xvii. 6). Shalmaneser carried Israel captive to this city. The Nimrud ruin, which has yielded vast quantities of Assyrian remains, is believed to be the ancient Calah, once capital of the empire.

Cā'leb (dog). The only one besides Joshua, of all those who left Egypt, who was permitted to enter Canaan. Son of Jephunneh, the Kenezite (Josh. xiv. 14), not a Hebrew, but so adopted, and the city of Hebron was given to him as his portion. — 2. Son of Hezron — Pharez — Judah — and father of Hur; his wives were Azubah, Jerioth and Ephrath, Ephah and Maachah. — 3. Son of Hur. — 4. CALEB EPHRATA. BETHLEHEM.



Calf. Image for worship made at Sinai in imitation of the Apis (Mnevis?) of Egypt, from the jewelry borrowed of the Egyptians (Ex. xxxii. 2). Not solid gold, but of wood, gilded or plated with gold (as the emblem of Osiris — Apis — was made). Moses burnt the image as an allegorical act (Job xv. 16; Hos. viii. 56; x. 6). Another was set up at Bethel, and one at Dan.

Cāl'ne (fort of Ann), Calno, Calnah, Canneh, Assyria, on the east bank of the Tigris, opposite Seleucia (Gen. x. 10), Ctesiphon, 200 ms. below Nineveh, 20 below Bagdad; 6 north of Babel. Tauk Kesra is its present name, and the ruins are very interesting.

Calis'thenes. Burnt by the Jews (2 Macc. viii. 33).

Calvary (a bare skull). GOLGOTHA. Place of the crucifixion of Jesus. Wm. C. Prime this year found a wall in Jerusalem which he thinks is the long-lost second wall of Josephus, running south of the so-called Church of the Holy Sepulchre (Matt. xxvii. 33; Mark xv. 22; Luke xxiii. 33; John xix. 17). The question of the site has increased in interest this year, from the discovery of a skull-shaped hill, a few rods N.W. of the Damascus gate, and in a place that meets all the requirements of the text. This hill is nearly a bare rock, and has not changed its shape, probably, for many centuries, and gives the beholder an impression of a cranium, even to the eye cavities, for there are quarries or excavations in the perpendicular side towards the city. The group of three crosses on the top of this hill would have been in plain view from the city wall on the north, and from the road also.

Cam'el (Heb. gamal). Mentioned in Gen. xii. 16; Ex. ix. 3, as abundant (2 Chr. xiv. 15). Used as a means of traveling, especially across the desert (1 K. x. 2), both for riding and for burdens; and also used in war. The coarse hair (shed in the spring) was made into tent-cloth, and heavy cloaks for rough weather, and used in the desert or open country (Matt. iii. 4); and the fine hair into the delicate "camel's hair shawls." Its meat was forbidden as food or sacrifice, because it does not divide the hoof. Many trinkets and ornaments are hung on the neck and sides of favorite camels (Judg. viii. 21, 26). Its foot is provided with pads under the two toes, which do not easily sink in the sand; its nostrils can be closed against the dust or fine sand, or hot wind; its sharp, long teeth are exactly adapted to cut off the prickly shrubs of the desert; its hump is almost pure fat, which can be absorbed on a long journey, where food is scanty; and its stomach has several extra water-bags, holding many days' supply. The desert would be uninhabitable without the camel (and the palm tree). Camel's milk is a luxury much esteemed in the East. The swiftness of the dromedary (swift-camel) is proverbial, 900 miles in 8 days having been made.

Ca'mon (full of grain). GILEAD? (Ant. 5, 7, 6). Where Jair was buried (Judg. x. 5). Lost. CYAMON.

Cām'phire. Camphor (Song of S. i. 14; iv. 13). Hebrew kopher, Greek kupros, Arabic alcana. Lawsonia inermis, a privet, with clusters of delicate little lilac-blossoms, and exquisite in perfume. The ladies wear them in their bosoms as a bouquet. Hasselquist (Trav. 246, Lond. 1766), speaking of this plant, says "the leaves are pulverized and made into a paste with water; the Egyptians bind this paste on the nails of their hands and feet, and keep it on all night: this gives them a deep yellow, which is greatly admired by Eastern nations. The color lasts for three or four weeks before there is occasion to renew it. The custom is so ancient in Egypt that I have seen the nails of the mummies dyed in this manner. The henna-plant grows in Egypt, Syria, Arabia, and N. India. The flowers are white, and grow in clusters, and are very fragrant. The dried leaves are mixed with citron-juice and used to stain the nails and palms with a yellowish-brown (rust-color), very much liked (and is compelled by fashion) in the East. In Persia, men also dye the nails. The hair is colored also, by adding indigo, black. Deut. xxi. 12, should read "adorn her nails," instead of "pare her nails."

Ca'na of Galilee, once Cana in Galilee, a village or town not far from Capernaum, memorable as the scene of Christ's first miracle (John ii. 1, 11, iv. 46) as well as of a subsequent one (iv. 46, 54), and also as the native place of the Apostle Nathaniel (xxi. 2). The traditional site is at Kefr Kenna, a small village about 4½ miles N. W. of Nazareth. It now contains only the ruins of a church said to stand over the house in which the miracle was performed, and — doubtless much older — the fountain from which the water for the miracle was brought. The tradition identifying Kefr Kenna with Cana is certainly of considerable age. It existed in the time of Willibald (the latter half of the 8th century), who visited it in passing from Nazareth to Tabor, and again in that of Phocas (12th century). But the claims of another site have been lately brought forward by Dr. Robinson with much force. The rival site is a village situated further north, about 5 miles north of Seffurieh (Sepphoris) and 9 of Nazareth, near the present Jefat, the Jotapata of the Jewish wars. This village still bears the name of Kana-el-jelil. The Gospel history will not be affected whichever site may be discovered to be the real one.

Cā'nāan (bowed down). Fourth son of Ham (Gen. x. 6), progenitor of the Phœnicians. The word is also translated "traffickers" (Is. xxiii. 8), "merchant" (11), "the land of traffic" (Ezr. xvii. 4), "merchant people" (Zeph. i. 11), and in scorn by Hosea (xii. 7), "he is a merchant; the balances of deceit are in his hand," speaking of degenerate Israel. Ham, the younger son of Noah, behaved with indecent levity towards his father, becoming a shame and reproach to him in his old age, and so Ham was punished in his youngest son, for indecent levity, shameless profligacy, and insufferable abominations, have poisoned the whole line, taking the shape and plea of religion, the most hateful being worshiped as the most holy. Mt. Lebanon is now the harbor of the most revolting types of idolatry, the relics of antiquity.

Cī'nāan (lower country; that is, lower than Gilead). The ancient name of the country between the Jordan and the Great Sea, extending from Hamath on the N. to the desert below Beersheba on the S. (Gen. xii. 5; xiii. 12; Zeph. ii. 5; Is. xix. 18; Judg. iii. 1; Ex. xv. 15). In Matt. xv. 22, the name is applied to Philistia and Phœnicia, the low lands.

Cā'nāanite. Simeon the Zealot (Canaanite — from the Syriac kannean, of which the Greek is zelotes.)

Cā'nāanite. Dwellers in the land — lowland — as lower than Gilead. And again, dwellers in the lower lands of the plains by the sea; and in the Jordan valley (Num. xiii. 29; Gen. x. 18–20). — 2. Any people in the land not Hebrew (Gen. xii. 6; Num. xxi. 3).

Can'dāce (Greek kandake). Title of the queens of Meroe, whose capital was Napata. A prime minister from this court was converted by Philip, on his way back from Jerusalem to Ethiopia (Acts viii. 27). Queens of this country were sculptured on the ancient monuments, mentioned by Herodotus (Nitocris, ii. 100),

THE MOLTEN CALF.

Pliny (vi. 35), Strabo (xvii. 820); Dio Cassius (liv. 5), and Eusebius.

Candlestick. LAMPSTAND. The only light of the tabernacle, and afterwards of the temple, was that of the 7 lamps on the golden stand; or ten, according to 1 K. vii. 49, and one in 1 Macc. i. 23; iv. 49; Wars vii. 5. The only ancient figure we have of this is the sculpture on the Arch of Titus at Rome.

Cāne (reed, grass). A sweet-scented vernal grass, much valued for its perfume Is. xliii. 24); calamus (reed) in Cant. iv. 14. There is no notice of the sugar-cane.

Cā-per'na-um (village of Nahum). On the northwest shore of the Lake of Galilee. The scene of many of the works of Christ. Not mentioned in the O. T. or the Apocrypha. Site now located at Tell Hum, where there are ruins of a magnificent synagogue, with beautiful specimens of columns, some of which are double; cornices and massive walls; and a great extent of ruins, half a mile long by a quarter wide. The home of Jesus after leaving Nazareth on being rejected (Mark ii. 1). Here Matthew was chosen (ix. 10).

SPHINX.

Simon, Peter, and Andrew belonged here (i. 29). (For the miracles wrought here, see LIFE OF CHRIST.) The son of the nobleman was healed here by words spoken at Cana. The woes denounced against this city and others near it have been so literally fulfilled that even their sites cannot be determined (Stanly, S. & P., ch. x.; Rob. ii. 403–4, iii. 344–358). Mentioned by Josephus (Wars, iii. 10, § 8). Wilson, Lands of the Bible (ii. 139, 149). The Palestine Exploration has this last year added new facts to the evidence in favor of Tell Hum being the true site. (The Recovery of Jerusalem, p. 265, &c.)

Cā'phar. A village (1 Chr. xxvii. 25).

Cā'phar-sal-ama. A place where a battle was fought between Judas and Nicanor (1 Macc. vii. 31).

Căph'tor. CRETE. CAPHTORIM. Mentioned three times as the origin of the Philistines (Deut. ii. 23; Jer. xlvii. 4; Amos ix. 7). By some supposed to be an ancient name of a part of Egypt. KEBT-HOR in hieroglyphics.

Cappado'cia. Asia Minor (Acts ii. 9; 1 Pete i. 1; Jos. Ant. xii. 3, § 4). The road from Palestine passed through the famous Cilician Gates, which led through Mt. Taurus. It is an elevated table-land divided by chains of mountains, well watered but scantily wooded. Mazaca, afterward called Cæsarea, was the Roman capital, and at the base of Mt. Argæus, the highest in Asia Minor. The people were mixed, Scythian and Persian.

Cap'tain. Sometimes a civil and at others a military chief is meant. The Lord is called the captain of his people's salvation (Heb. ii. 10).

Captivity. The Hebrews reckon four captivities: Babylonian, Median, Grecian, and Roman. The expatriation of the people belongs to two periods only — the first and second captivity. In the first — the Babylonish — the best of the nation were carried to Assyria. This event occupied, from beginning to end, 150 years, ending B. C. 588. Judah was carried away captive by Nebuchadnezzar about a hundred years after the first deportation of Israel (Jer. lii). The decree of Cyrus granting the return of the Jews, was dated B. C. 536. A part of the people, under Zerubbabel, returned B. C. 535; and more under Ezra, B. C. 458; and of others, under Nehemiah, B.C. 445. The return thus extending over a period of 145 years. (See Nehemiah, Ezra, Haggai, and Zechariah.) The number of those who remained in Assyria was about six times those who returned to Jerusalem, and they were known in the time of Christ as the DISPERSED (John vii. 35; James i. 1). Besides those who remained in Assyria, there were many Jews who fled into Egypt (Zech. x. 6–10), and into Arabia, settling in Yemen (Sheba). After this time the TEN TRIBES were lost to history. It is supposed that they intermarried with each other and with the people among whom they lived, and so became lost as distinct tribes, or even as a people.

Carchē'mish (fort of Chemosh). Assyria (Is. x. 9). By Euphrates (Jer. xlvi. 2; 2 Chr. xxv. 20). Assyrian inscriptions discovered in modern times show it to have been a chief city of the Hittites, from B. C. 1100 to B. C. 850, who were masters of Syria. Taken by Pharaoh Necho, B. C. 608, and 3 years after by Nebuchadnezzar.

Cā'ria. S.W. in Asia Minor.

Carma'nians. People of Carmania, north of the Persian Gulf (2 Esd. xv. 30).

Căr'mel (park — fruitful field). A mountain range branching off to the north-west from the mountains of Samaria, 15 miles long, 2 to 4 wide, and 600 to 1800 feet high, ending in a steep cape far out into the Great Sea, dividing the plain of Acre from Sharon (Josh. xii. 22, xix. 26; Jer. xlvi. 18). The plain of Esdraelon lies east, and the river Kishon washes its north side. No part of Palestine equals it in picturesque beauty and variety of scenery, the luxuriance of its herbage, and the brilliancy and variety and abundance of its flowers (Is. xxxv. 2; Cant. vii. 5). There are many deep ravines, which abound in partridges, quails, woodcock, hares, jackals, wolves, hyenas, and wild-boars; and it is said, anciently also lions and bears. There are many caves in the vicinity of the convent, which were once occupied by hermits; and one of these is said to be the one referred to in 1 Ki. xviii. 4; and also see Amos ix. 3. The chief incident in its history is Elijah's sacrifice, the site of which is now located at el Mukrakah (the burning — the sacrifice), on a rock terrace, Tell el Kusis (hill of the priests), at the east end; from which was seen the whole of the plain of Esdraelon, the river Kishon, Gilboah with Jezreel at its base, Jezebel's temple and Ahab's palace in full view, the sea being hid by the hill to the west, up which the servant could climb in a few minutes and see the sea in its entire expanse (1 Ki. xviii. 30; 2 Ki. iv. 23). Pythagoras visited it, and Vespasian, the emperor, came to consult the oracle of Carmel. Elijah was sitting on the mountain when the "fifties" were sent by Ahaziah to take him prisoner for stopping his messengers to Baal at Ekron, and two bands were consumed by fire from heaven (2 Ki. i. 9–15). After the ascent of Elijah, Elisha went to reside on Carmel for a time (2 Ki. ii. 25), and was here when the woman from Shunem found him, and told him of her son's death (iv. 25). Called now Jebel Mar Elias. The convent was built A. D. 1830, over ancient ruins, and is famous for having been founded by St. Louis of France, and its name given to the Barefoot Carmelite Friars. — 2. Judah, 6 miles southeast of Hebron. City of Nabal (1 Sam. xxv. 2), and of Abigail, David's favorite wife (xxvii. 3), where Saul set up a place after his victory over Amalek (xxv. 12), and Uzziah had vineyards (2 Chron. xxvi. 10). It is mentioned by Jerome and Eusebius as having a Roman garrison; and in the history of the Crusades, A. D. 1172. The heaps of ruins now called Kurmul, lie around the sloping sides of an oval valley, the head of which is shut in by rocky ridges. The castle (Kasr el Birkeh) had walls ten feet thick of beveled stones, 60 feet long, 40 wide, and 30 high. Near it was a round tower, and there are the remains of several churches, one of which was 150 by 50 feet. There is a fine reservoir of sweet water supplied from springs near (Van der Velde).

Carpenter. Since wood was always too scarce and precious in Palestine for any use besides for doors, windows, etc., and for decorations, the carpenter was probably a carver of such finishing as is now seen in the best rooms of the East.

Car'pus. A disciple at Troas with whom Paul left his cloak (2 Tim. iv. 13), books and parchments. He is mentioned as bishop of Berytus in Thrace by Hypolytus.

Cart. Wagon. Were open or covered (Num. vii. 3), and used to carry persons and burdens (Gen. xlv. 19; 1 Sam. vi. 7), or produce (Amos ii. 13). There were no roads, and the only ones now in use have been lately made, from Joppa to Jerusalem, and from Beirut to Damascus.

Car'ving. Carving and engraving have always been much used for the decoration of houses, furniture, arms, jewelry, etc. The occupation of Joseph was that of a carver and not a carpenter, as wood has always been too scarce and expensive to use in the framework of houses.

Cas'sia. One of the principal spices in the composition of the "oil of the holy ointment" (Ezr. xxx. 24); a choice perfume. Also, an article among the precious merchandise of Tyre (Ezr. xxxvii. 19).

Cas'tor and Pol'lux (sons of Jupiter), (Acts xxviii. 11). Name of the vessel in which Paul sailed from Malta to Rome; derived from the name of the two stars called the Twins; the fabled sons of Jupiter and Leda.

Cats (Bar. vi. 22). The cat was a favorite of the Egyptians, and is found embalmed among their mummies.

Caul. A head-dress, made in checker-work; long, like a scarf; worn by women for ornament.

Cave. Mentioned in the early history as often useful to men. There are a great number in the limestone region of Palestine and Syria, many of which have been cut out larger for shelter or defense. Several Hebrew words are used to denote caves, holes and fissures, and many places were named from noted caves, and some people, as the Horites (caveites), were so named from their dwellings. The great cave near Aleppo will hold 3000 horse-soldiers. Maundrell described a large system of caves, containing 200 rooms, near Sidon. Lot is the first who is recorded as living in a cave. The cave of Machpelah is the first mentioned as a burial-place. Other noted caves were Makkedah (five kings taken in by Joshua); Adullam (where David cut Saul's skirt off); and in Josephus, the famous robber-caves of Arbela, near Gennesaret.

Cedar (Heb. Erez; Ar. arz, the larch). There are eleven groves of cedars on the Lebanon mountains, which have been visited by travelers recently. One, near the highest peak, 6000 feet above the sea, N.E. of Beirut, and long famous for its 400 ancient trees of immense size, standing near the summits, which are covered with perpetual snow; the second, near Deir El Kamr. The six largest of this group measured, in 1868, 48, 40, 38, 33½, 30, 29¾ feet; and a third, near Ain Zehalteh, on the Beirut-Damascus stage road, lately found. Dr. Robert Morris recently brought several camel-loads of cones from these trees for distribution among Sunday-School scholars. The references to cedar-wood in the Scripture do not always mean the cedar of Lebanon — as, for instance, when at Sinai (Lev xii. 6). The word EREZ means also pine, cyprus, fir, and juniper. Rev. Henry H. Jessup, an American missionary in Syria, thinks the whole range of Lebanon, from 3000 to 7000 feet altitude, was at one time covered with cedar groves.

Ceiling. The ceilings of the principal apartments in Eastern houses are the parts on which the chief care is expended in adorning. The Jews bestowed much care on these parts in their houses (Jer. xxii. 14; Hag. i. 4).

Cen'chrĕæ. Harbor of Corinth, on the Saronic Gulf, east, whence Paul sailed for Ephesus (Acts xviii. 18). There was a church there, of which PHŒBE was a member (Rom. xvi. 1), and Lucius its first bishop, appointed by Paul. There was a temple at the end of each mole, and a statue of Neptune on a rock between, as may be seen on an ancient coin of Corinth.

Censer. A small portable vessel of metal, fitted to contain burning coals (2 Chr. xxvi. 18; Luke i. 9).

Centu'rion. Captain of 100. CENTURY. A Roman military officer. Cornelius, a centurion, was one of the disciples. Several others are mentioned.

CART.

Chain. Chains were in use by the ancients; they were made of precious metal for ornaments, and were worn alike by men and women — of iron for other purposes. The gold chain given to Joseph (Gen. xii. 42), and the one promised to Daniel (Dan. v. 7), were the first mentioned.

Chal'dæa. CHALDEA, CASDIM (Khaldi in Armenian, the moon). Babylonia — the whole, or sometimes the southern part (Dan. v. 30, ix. 1; Gen. xi. 28). Haran died in Ur of Casdim (Ezek. i. 3). The whole of Mesopotamia occupied by Chaldeans. The Chaldeans were one out of many Cushite tribes peopling Babylonia. Hence came Sabæans to afflict Job (i. 15–17). Recently discovered inscriptions on ancient works show that there were two languages in use: one a Semitic, for civil purposes, and another a Cushite, for learned and religious purposes (Dan. i. 4; v. 11). The Chaldeans were priests, magicians or astronomers — the depositaries of learning and science. The plains were formerly irrigated by canals led from the river, spread over the country like a net-work. Groves of palm-trees, pleasant gardens, fields of grain and vineyards, proved the richness of the soil, and supported a dense population. It is now a waste of drifting dust and sand, with heaps of bricks and rubbish (Is. xiv. 23; Jer. l. 38). The chief cities were Accad, Babel, Borsippa, Calneh, Cutha, Erech, Sippara, and Teredon. Herodotus mentions a vast number of cities, and the mounds over all the country prove his statements true.

Chambers of Imagery Used by Ezekiel (viii. 12) in denouncing the idolatrous corruptions of the kingdom of Judah, or that part which imitated the Egyptians in painting on the walls of a chamber pictures of idols, &c., for worship. (See Wilkinson's Manners and Customs of the Ancient Egyptians.) Every man has a chamber in his own mind filled with his idols — his dearest objects of regard.

Chame'leon (Heb. KO-ACH, strength). There are two lizards, each of which has been proposed as the animal meant. Lizards are very plentiful in Palestine and Egypt. 1. The chameleon is noted for its strong grasp, by which it sustains its position for a long time on twigs and branches. The normal color is black or slaty, but can be changed in an instant to many other tones, as green, yellow, spotted, which changes seem to be independent of the will of the animal. — 2. The Nile Monitor is sometimes called the land crocodile, being about 6 feet in length. It eats the eggs and young of the crocodile.

Cham'ois. A wild goat found in Arabia (Deut. xiv. 5). The Aoudad.

LOCUST.

Changers of Money. A class who made a business, in accommodating the temple worshipers at the annual feasts of the Jews, by exchanging the money of those who came from foreign countries for the half-shekel which was the lawful tribute to the treasury. They probably crept gradually nearer the temple until they occupied the corners and passages of the sacred courts. From these Jesus drove them, because no trading was lawful there, and certainly not dishonest, sharp practices, which had made God's house a "den of thieves."

Char'ger. (Heb. AGARTAL.) Basin in Ezra i. 9, that is, a tank for catching the blood from the victims on the altar. — 2. KEARAH, deep dishes (Num. vii. 13). — 3. PINAX, a tray, or server, of wood inlaid, or of metal (such as is now used for the common table), (Matt. xiv. 8).

Chariot. Heb. merkabah, and rekeb, and agaloth for war-chariots, or wagons or carts. The Egyptian monuments present paintings of several kinds of chariots, all of two wheels only, differing chiefly in the ornaments. The king's was different only in being more richly ornamented, and as having the king alone — as a sign that to him belonged the entire glory of the victory. In the Assyrian sculptures are some 4-wheeled carriages. Three persons usually ride in them — the king, his umbrella-bearer, and the charioteer. The Persian chariots were heavier than those of Egypt or Assyria.

Charity. Greek agape, which is properly love (1 Cor. viii. 1, 13; Luke xi. 42; Rom. v. 5, 8). AGAPE.

Chebar (great river). Chaldea (Ez. i. 3). Some of the Jews were located here during the captivity (Ez. i. 1, 3, iii. 15; 2 K. xxiv. 15). HABOR. This was the largest artificial canal of Babylonia, and was cut by the Jewish captives.

Che'dorlā'omer (Gen. 14). King of Elam, perhaps a part of Persia and Media. His marauding excursion, aided by four other kings, was brought to an abrupt and disastrous end by Abraham.

Cheese. There is no Hebrew word for cheese. The three words translated cheese are: 1. gebinah, curdled milk (Job x. 10); 2. charitse hechalab, slices of curds (1 Sam. xvii. 18); 3. shephoth bakar, curd rubbed fine — of kine (2 Sam. xvii. 29). Cheese now in use in the East is in small round cakes (4 inches).

white, very salt, and hard. The Bedouins coagulate buttermilk, dry it, and grind it to powder.

Chem'arim (idol-priests). Ascetics, who go about dressed in black (Zeph. s. 4). Idolatrous priests in 2 K. xxiii. 5. Priests of false worship (Hos. x. 5).

Chĕ'mosh (subduer). The national god of the Moabites (1 K. xi. 7; Jer. xlviii. 7), who were called the people of Chemosh (Num. xxi. 29). Also of the Ammonites, though Moloch was afterwards their God (Jer. xlix.). Moloch and Chemosh may mean the same god, who might have been also called Baal Peor. Traces of the same worship are found at Babylon, Tyre, and it was introduced among the Hebrews by Solomon, who built a high place on the Mt. of Offense, so named for that act. The Arabs worshiped a black stone as his emblem — as a black stone in the Kaaba at Mecca is an emblem now worshiped by all Mohammedans. This idol represented some of the planets, perhaps Saturn.

CHERUBIM AT THE ENTRANCE OF A PALACE AT KONYUNJIK.

Che'phar-Haammo'nai (village of the Ammonites); a city of Benjamin (Josh. xviii. 24).

Cheph'irah (the village). Benjamin (Josh. ix. 17). East of Yalo, two miles. Kefir (Rob. iii. 146). The Gibeonites of this place (and also Kirjath Jearim and Beeroth) played the trick on Joshua mentioned in Josh. ix. 3, which led him to make a treaty with them.

Cherĕthi'tes and Pelethites. Body-guard of David. No other king had one, that is recorded, but they had runners. Their captain was Benaiah the son of Jehoiadah (2 Sam. viii. 18). Under Solomon, Benaiah was made general instead of Joab. The names are of Philistine origin, and the men may have been partly of Philistine and partly of Hebrew (refugee) origin, attached to David in his adversity, and rewarded by him in his prosperity.

CASTOR AND POLLUX. (COIN OF BRUTH.)

Che'rith. The brook Cherith, in a valley now called Kelt, running by Jericho to the Jordan (1 K. xvii. 3, 5; Jos. Ant. viii. 13, § 2). Some have supposed that it must be looked for on the east of Jordan.

Cher'ub (mystic figure on the ark). Cherubim, plural. A keeper, warder, or guard of the Deity. Josephus said no one in his day could even conjecture the shape of the cherubim that Solomon made for the Holy of Holies (Ant. viii. 3, 3). They were of wood, gilded, and 15 feet high (1 K. vi. 23). Ezekiel describes them as having each four faces and four wings; but he gives only two faces (or it may be but one) to those in the Temple on the walls. The cherubim of Rev. iv. 7, 8, are living creatures, with one body, four faces full of eyes, and six wings. The fourfold combination was of man, lion, ox, and eagle. Monstrous combinations of this kind are figured and sculptured both in Assyria and Egypt. These combined forms are symbolical of united powers: the lion of strength, royal majesty; the ox of patient industry; wings, of swiftness, quickness; and the human head the intelligence to guide all these for one purpose; and thus showing that the divine government is sustained by intelligence, power, patience, and speed. They were servants of God, and they were ministers of vengeance (Ez. x. 7; Rev. xv. 7), and attendants of the heavenly king, praising and extolling the wonders of his grace (Rev. v. 11), and thus always nearest to God, "in the midst of the throne" (Rev. iv. 4–6), while others, as angels and elders, were round about the throne. They are especially called living creatures (Ezekiel and John), and so full of eyes, the peculiar sign of life. The cherubim were designed as symbols of faith and hope to man, pointing to the possibility of man attaining to the highest and holiest places. (See EGYPT for picture of the Sphinx, and NINEVEH for winged figures).

Chest (Heb. ARON and GENAZIM). Meaning Ark of the Covenant, Joseph's coffin, and the contribution box in the Temple. Treasuries, in Esther iii. 9.

Chestnut Tree. In the A. V. (Gen. xxx. 37; Ez. xxxi. 8) the translation of the Heb. ARON, the plane-tree. In Ecclus. xxiv. 14, wisdom is a plane-tree by the water.

Chi'don (javelin). Near Kirjath Jearim (1 Chr. xiii. 9; 2 Sam. vi.). An accident happened here to the ark while on its way to Jerusalem.

Child. CHILDREN. Were regarded as God's gifts. Parents were bound to teach them their own faith and fit them to occupy the place of true members of the covenant (Gen. xviii. 19; Deut. vi. 7; vi. 19), and required of children a kind of sacred reverence, sanctioned in the Decalogue; the parent standing to his children as God does to the parent. At five the child was placed under the father's special care, and at twelve the son was called the son of the law. Very severe laws regulated the conduct of the child, and punished misconduct (Lev. xix. 3; Ex. xxi. 15, 17; Deut. xxvii. 16) in the father as well as the son (Deut. xxi. 21). Property descended to the sons in equal shares, the oldest having a double portion, no wills being necessary. The child might be sold for a debt of the parent (2 K. iv. 1; Is. i. 1; Neh. v. 5), until the year of jubilee. The word child also means a person noted for certain qualities, as "children of the world" — selfish; "children of light," having religion; "child of song," a good singer.

Chim'ham (longing). Son of Barzillai — returned with David (2 Sam. xix. 37, 38, 40; Jer. xli. 17). See BETHLEHEM.

Chin'nereth. Naph. Fortified city (Josh. xix. 35). Lost. It is a question which was named first, the lake or the city. Gennesar is a proper change of the same name.

Chi'os. Island in the Ægean Sea, 5 ms. from the shore of Asia Minor, 32 ms. long, 8 to 18 ms. wide (Acts xx. xxi.).

Chit'tim, Kittim (maritime). Josephus says it was Cyprus. Mentioned many times (Gen. x. 4; 1 Chr. i. 7; Num. xxiv. 24). Fleets from Tyre sailed there (Is. xxiii. 1, 12; Jer. ii. 10). Cedar or boxwood was got there (Ez. xxvii. 6). Some suppose the name means all the islands settled by the Phœnicians, as Crete, the Cyclades, &c. See CYPRUS.

Chora'zin. One of the cities in which the mighty works of our Lord were done (Matt. xi. 21; Luke x. 13), 2 m. from Capernaum. Supposed to be Kerazeh, a small Arab village 3 ms. inland from Tell Hum. The woes pronounced upon this city have come to pass. Its site even is doubtful.

Christ. Title of Jesus as the Messiah. See JESUS.

Christian. Followers of the highest and best known divine laws as taught by Jesus Christ. The name Christian was given to the disciples of Jesus at Antioch by the Greeks in derision, in the reign of Claudius. They were before that called Nazarenes and Galileans.

Chrŏnŏl'ogy. The chronology of the Bible is that of the Jews and their ancestors, from the earliest records to the end of the writing of the New Testament. Since the Bible is not a complete history of the whole time it represents, nor of the whole world, it must not be expected to have a continuous chronology. Designed alterations by bad men and careless copying have changed many points, and have made it necessary to exercise the greatest care in determining and correcting the errors. The Jews computed the year by observation only. The Egyptians and Chaldees attained to a high standard of mathematical knowledge and chronological computation. The observation of the moon was the basis of the year's reckoning. Messengers were stationed on the heights around Jerusalem, on the 30th day of the month, to announce the appearance of the new moon to the Sanhedrim. This custom, among the Jews, was older than Moses, as appears in the regulation of it in Num. xxviii. 11. The year was made of twelve moons; and every fourth or fifth year a month was added at the end of the year, after the month Adar, called Veadar, Second Adar. The sacred year began with the month Nisan, in which Moses brought Israel out of Egypt (Ex. xii. 2; Esth. iii. 7). The civil year began as now, with the month Tishri, which was supposed to be the month of the creation.

The year was often dated from the king's reign, as in Esther, Chronicles, Kings, etc.; from the building of King Solomon's temple; and from the beginning of the Babylonish captivity. The week was of seven days, ending with the Sabbath. The day was divided into night and day: thus, in Gen. i. 5, "the evening and the morning were the first day." The evening began at sunset, and the morning at sunrise. There were four divisions of the day in common use — evening, morning, double light (noon), and half night (midnight). The night was divided into watches, the first and the second. A middle watch is mentioned once in Judg. vii. 19; and the morning watch in Ex. xiv. 24, and 1 Sam. xi. 11. Four night-watches were adopted from the Romans in later times (Mark viii. 35). The day and the night were divided into twelve hours each, the hours being longer or shorter according to the length of the day (Dan. iv. 19, 33). The Egyptians divided the day and night into hours from about 1200 B. C. The division into 24 equal hours was unknown before the fourth century B. C. The most common usage was to divide the day by the position of the sun, as the Arabs do now. There were many contrivances for measuring time, such as dials, gnomons, and clepsydræ, which had long been known by other nations. The day was divided into four parts only for the Temple service (Acts ii. 15; iii. 1; x. 9). The Sabbath (a day of rest), at the end of the week, was kept up by the patriarchs, and continued by the law of Moses, as a memorial of the deliverance from Egypt (Deut. v.), and was a day of joy and rejoicing. The morning and evening sacrifice in the Temple were doubled, the shew-bread changed for fresh, the law was publicly read and expounded; and this custom, simple at first, finally developed into the grand ceremonials of the Synagogue, especially under Ezra, after the return from Babylon. The resurrection of our Lord Jesus, the Christ, occurred on the FIRST day of the week (John xx.), and several of his appearances to his friends and disciples happening on that day also, the day of Pentecost in that year fell on that day, when the miraculous gift of tongues prepared the apostles for their peculiar work among all nations; therefore it was adopted as the day for stated meetings of the believers, and called the Lord's day. The seventh day, the seventh month, the seventh year, and the YEAR OF JUBILEE (the 49th), were sacred, and had their festivals and privileges. The seventh month contained the FEAST OF TRUMPETS, the DAY OF ATONEMENT, and the FEAST OF TABERNACLES (which was the most joyful of all the Hebrew festivals), and the opening of the New Year. On the seventh year the land was to rest (Ex. xxiii. 10), in which no field was to be tilled nor vineyard dressed, nor even grain gathered that had sowed itself, nor grapes plucked. All debts were released. The Sabbatical year completed the Sabbatical scale. It began on the seventh month, and was marked by high and holy occupation, connected with sacred reflection, and was completed in the YEAR OF JUBILEE. It is quite certain that the year of jubilee was the 49th. It was to begin on the tenth day of the seventh month, at the sound of a horn (trumpet), all through the land (Lev. xxv.). The laws respecting this year were: 1. Rest for the soil; 2. Restoration of land to its original owner; 3. Freedom to all slaves, whether by poverty or other causes. A notable instance of the release from debt is recorded in Nehemiah v., after the captivity, when the people were rebuilding the walls. There were several eras used in reckoning, by writers, and as national customs. 1. The Exodus (1 K. vi. 1; Num. xxxiii. 38), counting from the first starting out of Egypt. — 2. The foundation of king Solomon's Temple. — 3. The captivity of Jehoiachin (Ezek. i. 2; xxix. 1; 2 K. xxv. 27; Jer. lii. 31). — 4. The return from the captivity of Babylon (Ez. iii. 1, 8). — 5. The era of the Seleucidæ. — 6. The year of liberation under Simon Maccabæus, marked by coins (1 Macc. xiii. 41). And the years of the reign of each king in his own time, reckoned from the beginning of the new year next after his accession. The original records are so few, and so indefinite, that it is difficult to fix on the precise date of any event, either in the Old or the New Testament. The Bible does not give a connected chronology from Adam down, nor from Noah, nor even from Abraham; nor is there any apparent purpose or system of dates that we can find. The Bible treats of men and character, and God's dealing with man, and of certain distinct and separate periods of time only as were occupied in the passing events recorded. The people of the East, and the Arabs of the desert in particular, have never been mathematical, founding their chronology on astronomy; but have from the first regulated their calendar by observation only. Since they did not have the exact machinery of our modern clocks for determining the precise times of the sun's, moon's, or stars' rising and setting, eclipses, &c. (which are the foundation of our most exact calculations), they never could have had more than a moderate degree of accuracy in their observations. The new moon would be expected on a certain day, and the precise moment of its appearance would depend on the place of observation, on a hill or in a valley, and the careful watch and good eyesight of the sentinel. The true figures of the original Hebrew chronology are very obscure in many instances, because there are three different versions — the Hebrew, the Samaritan, and the Septuagint — each of which gives a different series of figures for the ages of the patriarchs, as shown in the following

1. Here is a continuous chronology from Adam to Joseph. The Hebrew text, as interpreted by Ussher, is adopted here for convenience.

2. From the call of Abraham to the Exodus, 430 years; estimated here as follows:

Abraham to Jacob	85	Abraham to Isaac	25
Levi's age	137	Isaac to Jacob	60
Kohath's age	133	Joseph enter'd Egypt	130
Amram's age	137	Joseph lived after	71
Moses at Exodus	80	Oppression after Joseph
	572	Moses at Exodus	80

B. C. 1921 — 430 = 1491.

From the number 572 we may take the average years of each before the birth of the next, making a sum of 142, and this will leave 430. To the 366 we may add the years of oppression (Ex. i. 8–22) after Joseph died, say 64, and this gives the number required. Joshua's ancestry, from Ephraim, is given in 1 Chr. vii. 23–27; and if their ages were equal to their brethren of the other tribes mentioned, 430 years is not too long a period.

The specimen of ancient Egyptian papyrus preserved in the Bibliotheque at Paris, and published in fac-simile (pl. V. in the Astor Library), gives independent and disinterested evidence on the question of the long life of Jacob and others of this age. At the close of the essay (on morals) the writer says: "I have become an elder on the earth; I have traversed 110 years of life by the gift of the king and the approval of the elders, fulfilling my duty toward the king in the place of favor." The inscriptions at Memphis corroborate this account, and show that the writer, Ptah-hotp, was eldest son of Assa, 5th king of the 15th dynasty (B. C. 1960–1860), whose father's age must have been at least 130. Manetho also verifies the same point. The increase of the Jews in Egypt was from seventy families to about three millions.

From Exodus to the Foundation of King Solomon's Temple, 480 years (1 K. vi. 1).

B. C.
445. Walls of Jerusalem rebuilt by Nehemiah. Herodotus reads his history at Athens.
The age of Phidias (sculptor), Euripides (poet), Pericles in Greece. Military tribunes in Rome.
425. Xerxes II, king of Persia (Darius II, 424). Thucydides (historian). His book ends B. C. 410, and Xenophon's begins.
414. Amyrtæus, king of Egypt, revolts from Persia. The Athenians being alarmed by an eclipse, are defeated before Syracuse, Sicily. — 413. Archelaus, king of Macedon. The 400 rule in Athens.
404. Artaxerxes II, king of Persia. — 401. Xenophon and the 10,000 retreat. Socrates dies.
383. Mithridates, king of Pontus. Bithynia made a kingdom. Plato (philosopher). Aristæus (mathematician).
368. A celestial globe brought from Egypt to Greece.
366. Jeshua slain by Johanan in the temple of Jerusalem. — 361. Darius Ochus, king of Persia.
360. Cappadocia made a kingdom. Tachos, king of Egypt. Philip II, king of Macedon. Demosthenes.
356. Temple of Diana burnt at Ephesus. Alexander born.
349. Darius Ochus takes Egypt and robs the temples. Aristotle (tutor to Alexander, 343). — 345. 12 cities in Italy buried by an earthquake. — 336. Eclipses first calculated by Calippus of Athens.
330. Alexander conquers Persia. He enters Jerusalem. Seeing the high priest, Jaddua, in his sacred robes, he respects him, and offers sacrifice to Jehovah. — 323. Alexander died at Babylon.
320. 100,000 Jews carried into Egypt by Ptolemy. Onias I, high priest. — 312. Seleucus Nicator, king of Syria.
311. Judæa subject to Antigonus. Appian Way made.
301. Judæa under the Ptolemies. Euclid, mathematician in Alexandria. Chinese wall built.
284. Colossus of Rhodes. Sect of Sadducees. The Pharos (first light-house) at Alexandria.

367. Ptolemy makes a canal from the Nile to the Red Sea. Silver money coined. Parthia.
248. Onias II, high priest. — 246. Ptolemy Euergetes conquers Syria. — 237. Simon II, high priest.
241. Attalus I, king of Pergamus. Archimedes, mathematician.
203. Judæa conquered by Antiochus. Onias III, high priest. — 200. Jesus, son of Sirach (Ecclesiasticus). First mention of the Sanhedrim (70 rulers).
187. Syria a Roman province. — 175. Jason, high priest. The Temple plundered by Antiochus Epiphanes, and dedicated to Jupiter Olympus (168). See head on p. 10.
165. Judas Maccabæus expels the Syrians and purifies the Temple. Rise of the Pharisees.
161. First treaty with the Romans. — 146. Carthage destroyed.
135. End of the Apocrypha. Antiochus IV (Sidetes) besieged Jerusalem.
130. John Hyrcanus delivers Judæa from the Syrians, and reduces Samaria and Idumæa.
107. Aristobulus, king of Judæa. — 116. Ptolemy Lathyrus, king of Egypt. — 107. Alexander I, king of Egypt.
105. Alexander Jannæus at war with Egypt. Libraries of Athens sent to Rome by Sylla (86).
92. Tigranes, king of Armenia. See portrait in COINS.
79. Alexandra, widow of Jannæus, governs Judæa. Pompey in Africa. Julius Cæsar.
70. Hyrcanus II, high priest, deposed by his brother Aristobulus. They appeal to Pompey, who conquers Judæa and Syria, and makes them Roman provinces. — 63. Antiochus XII, the last of the race of the Seleucidæ.
53. The Temple plundered by Crassus (proconsul of Syria). Augustus born. — 51. Cæsar passes the Rubicon.
48. Antipater of Idumæa. Calphurnius Bibulus, governor of Syria. Battle of Pharsalia.
45. Cæsar reformed the calendar, using solar years instead of lunar. Gives the Jews privileges.
44. Cæsar assassinated. — 42. Battle of Philippi.
40. Herod the Great marries Mariamne, grand-daughter of Hyrcanus, and is made king by the Romans (at Rome, with Pagan sacrifices). — 30. Mariamne, and all the Sanhedrim but Pollio and Sameas, killed by Herod.
37. Romans assist Herod by taking Jerusalem. Antigonus, last Asmonean, killed at Antioch.
30. The Roman Republic becomes a monarchy. Antony and Cleopatra in Egypt.
27. Battle of Actium. The title of Augustus (Venerable) created and given to Cæsar Octavius.
20. Augustus (nephew of Julius Cæsar) visited Judæa and enlarged Herod's kingdom, by Paneas, where Herod built a temple in honor of Augustus (Cæsarea Philippi), ordering heathen games to be celebrated every fifth year. Herod built a temple at Samaria and called the city Sebaste (Venerable). He began to rebuild the Temple, which was finished in the reign of Herod Agrippa II, A. D. 65.
15. Augustus (Germanicus) assumes the title of Pontifex Maximus (Pope). — 11. Germany conquered by the Romans.
5. Varrus, gov. of Syria; Cyrenius (Quirinus), of Judæa. Cymbeline, king of Britain. Dionysius of Halicarnassus, historian. Herod robs the tomb of David.
4. Jesus the Christ born in Bethlehem. Flight into Egypt. Herod dies: his son Archelaus succeeds as ethnarch. Herod Antipas tetrarch of Galilee. (For events in the life of Jesus and of Paul, see BIOGRAPHY.)

A. D.
14. Tiberius, emperor. — 19. Jews banished from Rome. Herod builds the city of Tiberias.
25. Pontius Pilate, gov. of Judæa. — 26. John the Baptist's ministry begins. Thrace becomes a Roman province. — 27. Jesus baptized.
30. Crucifixion Friday, April 7th (Nisan 15th). Philo, a Jew of Alexandria. Seneca.
37. Apion of Alexandria (grammarian). See Josephus. Caligula emperor. — 40. First Christians at Antioch, Syria.
41. Herod's persecution. — 52. Council of Apostles at Jerusalem.
48. Population of Rome, 1,200,000.

Church (called). The Lord's faithful people. The Lord's house, where his people gather. A church is any number of souls, called and united in one vow, in one place, for divine worship, where the pure word is preached, and the sacraments duly administered, and godly living, after his law, as given by the head of the church, the Lord Jesus Christ. The church in Galatia means all the societies or churches in that country.

Cilic'ia (Cilix, son of Agenor). (Herodotus vii. 91.) Asia Minor, southeast on the sea. Separated from Pamphylia, W., Lycaonia and Cappadocia, N., and Syria, E., by lofty mountains. Chief rivers are Calycadnus, Cydnus, and Sarus. Fertile and populous. Tarsus was its capital. Josephus supposed it was the Tarshish of Gen. x. 4 (Ant. i. 6, § 1). Native land of Paul the Apostle. The high-road between Syria and the West. The Roman general Pompey destroyed the pirates and robbers of Cilicia.

Cin'namon. A native of Ceylon and other islands of the Indian Ocean. It was one of the principal spices in the precious ointment used in the tabernacle, and highly valued for its perfume (Ex. xxx. 23; Prov. vii. 17).

Cin'nereth. The ancient name of the Sea of Galilee, derived from a town of the same name which was on the shore of the sea a little way south of Tiberias. It is supposed that the cemetery of the ancient city has been discovered, between Tiberias and the hot baths a mile south of the city. No ruins of the ancient city have been identified, except perhaps some foundations of houses near the sea. Jesus never visited this place, nor the city of Tiberias, because, as it is supposed, of the ceremonial uncleanness of the locality (it being on the site of a cemetery, which is an unclean place under the Jewish ceremonial law), and it is scarcely mentioned in the New Testament.

This whole region, bordering on the shores of the Sea of Tiberias, has been examined but very slightly, and promises a valuable return to future explorers. Many obscure texts in the Gospels will probably be cleared up by a thorough knowledge of this almost unknown district, and the work of exploration is now going on with energy.

SYRIAN CULPRIT IN THE STOCKS.

Circumcis'ion (cutting around). The cutting off of the foreskin of man, first practiced by Abraham by divine command, as a token of a covenant between God and man. It was a very ancient custom founded on (supposed) sanitary laws, by the Egyptians and Ethiopians, and the practice is widespread in modern days; the Abyssinian Christians holding to the rite strictly. The Egyptian priests were required to observe this rite, and it was only strictly binding on those who entered the priesthood. It became the badge of a religion that made undue account of outward distinctions, and merely natural virtues. The Hebrews were to practice it because they were to be a nation of priests (Ex. xix. 6), and it was to signify spiritual purity, being so considered by the leading men, implying a call to a holy life and purity of heart. The time was the 8th day after birth; among other people at full age — 20 years. Foreigners on adoption into the Hebrew nation were required to submit to it.

AXES.

Cis'tern. A dug place, for the water of a spring, or from rain. Some were built up of stone and cement, and the best were cut in the solid rock. The largest are called pools, such as Solomon's, the Royal Cistern, Bethesda, etc. (See JERUSALEM.) A wheel is used to pass the rope over for drawing up the water, alluded to in Eccl. xii. 6. Keeping to one's own sources of pleasure, and not meddling with the property of others, is taught in the Proverbs (v. 15), by the figure of the cistern. Idolatry is compared to broken cisterns (Jer. ii. 3).

Citizen. Among Romans, etc., a member of the state, or of a city. Among the Hebrews, a member of the nation at large. Paul was an instance of one born to the rights of a Roman citizen, which protected and benefited him on three occasions (Acts vi. 37; xxii. 25; xxv. 11). The Roman law made two classes of citizens — the first entitled to hold office and vote, and carry on public and private business — the second to enjoy the protection of the laws as a free man. The sacred law was the basis of the civil among the Jews, and citizenship was acquired by complying with the terms of the covenant, and lost by certain transgressions. Christians are counted as citizens of the celestial state.

Clau'da. An island S.W. of Crete (Acts xxvii. 16). Now Gozzo.

Clau'dius. 5th emperor of Rome, A.D. 41 to 54. Tiberius Claudius Nero Germanicus. He succeeded Caligula. The famine mentioned in Acts xi. 28, happened in his reign; and he banished all Jews from Rome (xvii. 2). His head is on the coin of Cyprus. Agrippina, his fourth wife, poisoned him.

Clay. A beautiful symbol of the divine power over the destinies of man was derived from the potter's use of clay, as he produced such elegant and useful forms from such a crude material (Is. lxiv. 8; Rom. ix. 21). "It is turned as clay to the seal" (Job xxxviii. 14), refers to the use of clay in stopping up doors in tombs or granaries, and the use of a seal engraved with a private design on the soft surface, leaving its impression as a protection against intrusion. Bricks were stamped also, as may be seen on the numberless specimens from the ruins. Locks on the storehouses in the East are now further secured by the clay, stamped with a seal.

Clean and Unclean. Terms of frequent occurrence in the Bible, concerning the rites and usages of the Abrahamic covenant, having both a natural and a symbolical meaning. It is mentioned as in use at the sacrifice made by Noah, and it is probable that it was then an ancient distinction. Animals, birds, beasts and reptiles were pronounced good for food without distinction (Gen. ix. 3). It then has no foundation in the laws of diet or health. The line was fixed by man between the wild, obnoxious, poison-fanged animals, filthy in habit and suggestive of evil, and the tame, docile creatures, more cleanly in their habits and more akin to the better instincts of mankind. The Egyptians sacrificed dogs, cats, crocodiles, etc., and held them as sacred. Moses, to separate his people from those pagans, confined sacrifices to animals from the flock and herd, sheep, goats, and cattle, and to the dove species among birds; while, for food, a larger limit was allowed; but at the same time, the animals allowed being those that chew the cud and divide the hoof; among wild animals only the deer species, and of birds a few were prohibited by name, and the rest allowed; of fishes, those that had both fins and scales; and of insects, locusts and grasshoppers. The unclean were called abominations, and were to work a spiritual defilement if eaten. The clean and unclean animals had a counterpart in the soul, and the restrictions laid on the appetite became a bit and bridle to the soul. This law was abolished by the Lord in a vision to Peter at Joppa. There were other laws relating to ceremonial impurity, touching certain animals, dead bodies, diseased persons, the intercourse between man and wife, and the office of the mother. Particulars in Leviticus.

CART.

Clement. Mentioned by Paul in Phil. iv. 3, with much esteem and honor, as his fellow-laborer at Philippi, whose name (with the others) was in the book of life. He is said to have been bishop of Rome (Pope Clemens Romanus, the third from Peter), and wrote a letter to the Corinthians very much esteemed by the ancients and read publicly in the churches. It is in the Alexandrian MS. copy of the Scriptures as Codex A.

Cleō'pas. One of the two disciples that saw Jesus on the way to Emmaus.

Cleopat'ra. Daughter of Antiochus III (the Great), and the name of several queens of Egypt. 1. Wife of Ptolemy V, called Epiphanus, B. C. 193; 2. Wife of Ptolemy VI, Philometer (Esth. xi. 1); 3. Wife of Alexander Balas, B. C. 150, daughter of No. 2; afterwards given by her father to Demetrius Nicator (1 Macc. xi. 12); also wife of Antiochus VII, Sidetes, B. C. 125, who killed Demetrius. She murdered her son Seleucus, and died by a poison she had prepared for her second son, A. VIII.

RUINS OF THEBES.

Climate. There is scarcely any country in the world which has such a variety of climate and temperature, within the same limits, as Palestine. On Mts. Hermon and Lebanon there is perpetual snow; and at Jericho, only 60 or 80 miles, there is tropical heat. The hills of Bashan, Gilead, Galilee, Samaria, and Judæa, are the home of forests, vines, fig-trees, and all kinds of fruit and vegetables; and the plains produce bananas, oranges, etc. From Jerusalem to Jericho, in a direct line, is about 15 miles. At one place snow and ice sometimes are seen in the winter, but at the other frost is never known. Frost is also unknown in the plains of Sharon and Philistia. The temperature at Engedi is as high as that of Thebes, in Egypt. Palms grow as far north as Beirut, and bear fruit also at Damascus in sheltered positions. The greatest heat on the hills of Judæa, Hebron, and Jerusalem, is seldom above 90° Fahrenheit, and the cold only once so low as 28° in five years (Barclay). Damascus is cooler, the highest degree being 88°, and the lowest 29°.

Highest in Judæa 90°, shade at noon; lowest 28°, night.

Damascus 88°, noon; 29°, night; winter.

On Lebanon, Shumlan, highest 82°, in August.

In Gennesaret, 450 feet above the sea, from March 17 to April 5, average, 63°, and 73° from 8 A. M. to 8 P. M. In May 78°, and day only 83°.

Dead Sea shore, 42°; average, night 47°, day 67°, in Jan. In April 105°, in the shade.

The Arabs leave for the high lands in the hot months, June to Sept.

Beersheba, Feb., night 31°, noon 72°; in summer 65° night, and 90° day, highest range.

Nablus is sheltered and warmer than Jerusalem; and Nazareth also.

January. — Last sowing of wheat and barley. Last roasting ears of corn (the 3d crop of the year!). Trees in leaf. Almond blossoms, apricot, peach, plum, beans. Winter figs still on the trees. Cauliflowers, cabbages, oranges, lemons, limes, citrons. Mandrake in bloom; wormwood also. New leaves on the olive-trees. Fire is needed in the house. Many flowers.

February. — Barley may be sown. Beans, onions, carrots, beets, radishes, etc. Oranges, etc. Apple-trees in bloom. Flowers in the fields abundant.

March. — Beans and peas in the market. Trees in full leaf. Barley ripe at Jericho. Fig-tree blossoms while the winter fig is still on. First clusters of grapes. Pear-trees, apple, palm, and buckthorn in bloom. Sage, thyme, mint, etc. Carob-pods ripe. Celery. Rue, parsley, hyssop, leeks, onions, garlic, etc. Flowers carpet the fields.

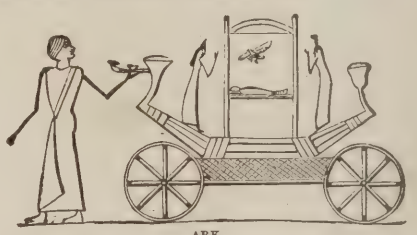
April. — Barley and wheat harvest. Sugar-cane set. Beans, etc., lettuce, cucumbers; lavender, rosemary, mulberries. Oleander blossoms; also rose of Sharon. Great variety of flowers. Early ears of corn. Apricots.

May. — Harvest in the plains and on the hills. Almonds, apples, mandrakes, and many vegetables. Grass begins to wither for want of rain. Melons of all kinds, onions, cucumbers, tomatoes, potatoes, corn. Walnuts, blackberries, sycamore and mulberry figs.

June. — Threshing grain. Figs, cherries, plums, cedar-berries, olives, almonds, quinces, plantain fruit, bananas, grapes, liquorice plant, dandelion, egg-plant, doum-palm dates. Henna (for dyeing the nails) and roses gathered.

July. — Pears, nectarines, peaches, grapes, melons, potatoes, tomatoes, egg-plant, Indian figs, prickly pear (cactus fruit), gourds. Millet, doura, linseed, tobacco, grapes.

August. — All fruits and vegetables before named, and also citrons, pomegranates. Olives now perfect. Grapes. The fruit-month.



September. — Every fruit and vegetable still in market. Cotton and hemp mature. Millet, doura, maize, lentils, chick-peas, lupines, beans, fenn-greek, fennel, castor-oil plant. Grapes.

October. — Sesame (for lamp-oil) ripe. Wheat and barley may be sown. Vegetables planted. Olives yield the last berries. Pomegranates, pistachio nuts. Lettuce, radishes, and other garden sauce. Cotton mature. Fig-leaves fall. Plowing.

November. — Principal sowing of wheat and barley. Trees lose their leaves. Early dates. Very few olives. Grapes. Plowing.

December. — Grass abundant. Wheat and barley may still be sown, and pulse also. Sugar-cane, cauliflowers, cabbage, radishes, lettuce, lentils. Plowing.

This calendar is mainly true of Jerusalem and the hill country. Some weeks allowance must be made for the higher temperature of the Jordan valley, and the plains by the Mediterranean Sea.

ARK.

RAIN. — The average rain-fall at Jerusalem for the year is 56; in very wet seasons it has gone higher, 85, 44–66 average. The average in London is only 25, in the highlands of England 60, in New York, 62 and the highest in the lake country 65. There is a wet and a dry season. In the wet, the winter, the rains fall in two series of showers, called the early (yoreh) and the latter rain (malkosh), with occasional lighter showers between, and many clear sunny days. The loss of rain is sure to affect the harvest, and a total want of rain would destroy all crops (Amos iv. 7). From April to November there is scarcely ever a cloud. The dews are heavy, often like a small shower. Chilly nights, succeeding hot days, have always been a constant feature in the East (Gen. xxxi. 40). The different climate of Jericho has been often noticed. Josephus says, and it is true now, that linen clothing can be worn at Jericho when there is snow on the hills around Jerusalem. The plains along the sea-shore are but little hotter than the hills. Beirut is much hotter the year round than Jerusalem. In the desert are found the greatest extremes of heat and cold. In winter the heat will be greater than our summer in the day, and the night colder than our average winter. The winds are very regular in their season and effects. West or S.W. wind invariably brings rain in winter (Luke xii. 54). The north wind is cool, but rare. The south wind is always hot (55; Job xxxvii. 17). The east wind is very rare in the winter, and, blowing on the desert in summer, is dry and hot (Ez. xvii. 10; Hos. xiii. 15). In the Jordan valley there is an under and an upper current. The under current blows down the valley in winter and up in summer. There are no east and west winds in the Arabah.

Coal (PEHHAN — black, and GAHHELETH — burning). There are veins of coal in Mt. Lebanon, a few miles from Beirut, and it is probable that the Hebrews and Phœnicians knew and used it. But charcoal must have been specially meant in Psalm cxx. 4, in coals of juniper; and only charcoal was used in the censer at the temple-service.

Coast. Border, bound (Ex. x. 4; xiv. 19).

Cock. Domestic poultry are not mentioned in the O.T., unless in Is. xxii. 17, 18. The compassion of the Lord towards Jerusalem is compared to the tender care of a hen over her chickens (Matt. xxii. 37; Luke xiii. 34). The cock-crowing of Matt. xiii. 35, refers to a certain hour of the night, just before dawn, and the special signal given at that hour to Peter (Matt. xxvi. 34, 74). They are on the monuments in Assyria, but not in Egypt; also on the Etruscan pottery of great antiquity (Mrs. Gray's Etruria), and on the coins of Greeks and Romans. The ancient Britons kept them, but did not think it right to eat them (Cæsar's Wars, 5).

Col'lege (2 K. xxii. 14; and second in Zeph. i. 10). Where Huldah the prophetess lived "in the lower (or second) part of the city" (Neh. xi. 9).

Col'ors. There are about twenty different words, meaning color, in the O. T.; but only white, black, red, yellow or green are distinctly named. In the N. T. there are seven words meaning color. 1. Leben, white (Lebanon, white mts.). Milk is leben, and so is manna, snow, horses, clothing, the moon, the pale face, and white hair. It was the symbol of joy, of innocence, purity; the clothing of angels, saints, and of Jesus. — 2. Shahor, black: as hair, complexion of the sick, horses, mourners' robes, clouded sky, night, turbid brook; and as opposed to white, the symbol of evil. — 3. Adom, red (Adam). Blood, pottage of lentils, a horse, wine, complexion, leprous spot, a grape-vine, and the symbol of bloodshed. — 4. Argaman, purple. Made at Tyre, from a shell-fish. The color was only a drop in the throat of each animal. It was purple, violet, or blue, according to the fixing. Some say the violet (or blue) was had from a different shell-fish, and called — 5. Tekeleth, blue. The deep blue of the sky, violet, and sometimes as black; the ribands and fringes of the Hebrew dress (Num. xv. 38), tapestries of Persia (robes of perfection in Ez. xxiii. 12). — 6. Shani, shine (as scarlet); tolaath, worm scarlet (our word vermilion means worm color). Lips, in Cant. iv. 3, fire; scarlet robes were luxuries, and appropriate for a warrior's cloak (Na. ii. 3). The vermilion of the ancients was like our Venetian-red — dull red — such as is seen on the monuments, where it has preserved its tint for many ages.

Colos'se, COLOSSÆ. On the Lycus, a branch of the Mæander, in Phrygia, near Laodicea (Col. ii. 1; iv. 13). Pliny (Nat. Hist. v. 41) describes it as a celebrated city in Paul's time. Paul founded a church here on his third tour. The ruins of the ancient city are near the modern village of Chonas.

Com'forter. A name given to the Holy Spirit (2 Sam. x. 3).

Com'merce (trade, Heb. rekel, traffic). The first record of bargain and sale is of Abraham's purchase of the burial-place for Sarah of Ephron, at Hebron, for 400 shekels weight (as sovereigns are weighed at the Bank of England) of silver. Job throws much light on the commerce, manufactures, and science of his age. He mentions gold, iron, brass (copper or bronze), lead, crystal, jewels, weaving, merchants, gold from Ophir, topazes from Ethiopia, building of swift ships, writing in books, engraving on plates of metal and stone, and fine seal or gem engraving; fishing with hooks, nets, and spears; harp, organ, and names of stars. The history of Sidon and Tyre is a record of commercial affairs; and that of the building of King Solomon's Temple is also. Foreigners were the principal traders before the Captivity, but after that, and especially after the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, the Jews have been an entire people of traffic.

CRANE.

Co'ney (Heb. SHAPHAN, rabbit). The Syrian Hyrax. Its habits are very much like the rabbit, only it is a little larger. Its teeth and hoofs (instead of claws on each toe) are like those of the rhinoceros (Lev. xi. 5; Deut. xiv. 7; Ps. civ. 18; Prov. xxx. 26).

Congrega'tion (edah). The Hebrew people collected as a holy community, held by religious bonds (for political ends). Circumcision and full age (20) were required for membership, which might be forfeited for certain faults (Deut. xxiii. 1–8). During the Exodus the whole nation could gather from their tents, but when they occupied the country on both sides of Jordan, it became a necessity to appoint representatives, who are called, in Num. i. 16, persons "wont to be called to the Congregation;" and, in xvi. 2, they are styled "chiefs of the Congregation, who are called to the Convention;" and, in Ex. xxxviii. 25, their name is, "those deputed to the assembly" (numbered in A. V.). Besides these, the heads of families (patriarchs — sheiks now), and a fourth class, the judges of cities, magistrates (cadi, now). They met at the door of the tabernacle, or in some other noted places, as Shechem by Joshua; Mizpeh by the Levite (Judg. xx. i.); Gilgal by Samuel. In the Exodus the sound of the trumpet called the assembly together (Num. x. 2–4), but in Canaan messengers were used of necessity. It did not have legislative powers, for the law of Moses was supreme, but by-laws could be made. They could not lay taxes. The divine law was submitted to the assembly for acceptance or rejection (Ex. xix. 3-9, xxiv. 3). Chiefs were confirmed in their office (or rejected) by this body (Num. xxvii. 19; 1 Sam. xi. 15. 2 Sam. v., etc.). The assembly could arrest the execution of the king's sentence, as Jonathan was "rescued" (2 Sam. xiv. 44, 45) by the action of the Edah. Peace and war with foreign powers were considered in it (Josh. ix. 15, 18). It was the high court of appeal, and had control of death-penalties. After Jeroboam's usurpation, it was called the C. of Jerusalem (2 Chr. xxx. 2), or of Judah (v. 25). It finally was reduced to the 72 members of the Sanhedrin.

Coos. Cos. Island at the E. entrance to the Archipelago, and between Miletus and Rhodes, and the peninsulas on which are Halicarnassus and Cnidus (Acts xxi. 1), 21 ms. long, N.E. to S.W., and 6 ms. wide. Was an important island in Jewish history from early times (1 Macc. xv. 23; Jos. Ant. xiv. 7 § 2). Stanchio.

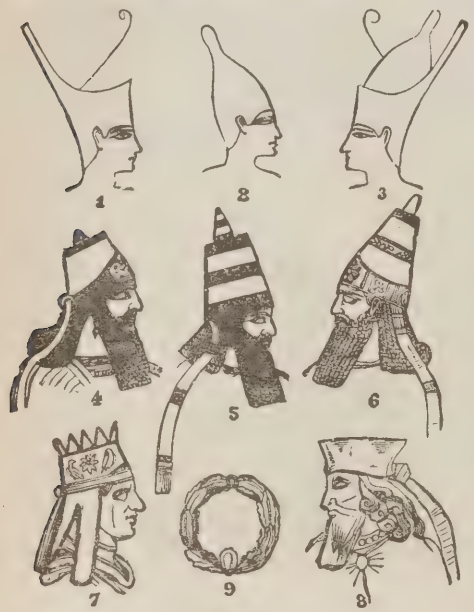
Cop'per. (Heb. NEKOSHETH.) Copper was and is now used more extensively in the East than any other metal. There is no certain mention of iron in the Scriptures, and all kinds of instruments, weapons, and tools must have been made of copper or bronze, which is a mixture of copper and tin. Wherever brass, iron, and steel are mentioned, copper was the metal meant in the original. Copper money, in great quantities, is often found buried, dated many centuries back. See MONEY.

DRINKING-CUPS.

Cor'al (lofty). Coral is mentioned only twice in Scripture (Job xxviii. 18; Ez. xxvii. 16). It often occurs in ancient Egyptian jewelry. The coral which is described as being brought from Syria was probably that of the Red Sea, where coral abounds.

Cor'ban (a sacred gift). A present devoted to God or to his temple (Matt. xxiii. 18). The Jews were reproved by Christ for cruelty to their parents in making a corban of what should have been theirs (Mark ii. 7).

Corian'der. An aromatic plant found in Egypt, Persia, and India, mentioned twice in Scripture (Ex. xvi. 31; Num. xi. 7).



Cord. The word cord means line, band, rope, thread, string, etc. It is made of various materials according to its uses. Strips of camel-hide are still used by the Bedouins. The finer sorts were made of flax (Is. xix. 9); others of the fibre of the date-palm, and of reeds and rushes. The tent being an image of the human body, the cords which held it represented the principle of life (Job iv. 21). For leading or binding animals (Ps. xviii. 27). For bow-strings made of cat-gut (Ps. xi. 2). A line of inheritance (Josh. xvii. 14; xix. 9).

Corinth'. On the isthmus that joins Peloponnesus to Greece. The rock, Acrocorinthos, south of the city, stood 2000 feet above the sea, on the broad top of which there was once a town. The Acropolis of Athens can be seen from it, 45 miles (Liv. xlv. 28). It has two harbors: CENCHRÆA (now Kenkries), on the Saronic Gulf, 7½ ms. distant, east; and LECHÆUM, on the Gulf of Lepanto, 1½ ms. west (Strabo viii. 6). Corinth was the natural capital of Greece, and was the commercial centre. Eminent for painting, sculpture, and works in metal and pottery. Famous for a temple to Venus of great wealth and splendor, the most ancient in Greece. Was the military centre during the Achaian league. Destroyed by the Romans, B. C. 146, and after 100 years of desolation the new city visited by Paul was built by Julius Cæsar, and peopled with freedmen from Rome (Pausanias — Strabo). Paul lived here eighteen months, and became acquainted with Aquila and Priscilla. The Posidonium, the sanctuary of Neptune, was the scene of the Isthmian games, which were celebrated every other year, and gave Paul some of his most striking imagery. It was N.E. of the city, near the harbor of Schœnas, now Kalamaki, on the Saronic Gulf (1 Cor. ix. 24, 26). The foot-races were run in the stadium; the boxing held in the theatre; and the victor's wreaths were made from the pines that grew near.

Cor'morant. The cormorant (Heb. SHALAK, Lev. xi. 17; Deut. xiv. 17); and Pelican (Heb. KAATH, Ps. cii. 6). Common in Syria, among the rocks on the coasts.

Corn. A term for all kinds of grain. Grains and loaves of Indian corn (maize) were found under the head of an Egyptian mummy, and it is supposed to be mentioned by Homer and Theophrastus. The offering in Lev. ii. 14, was of green corn, roasted, which was eaten with oil, etc. (ver. 15). The "seven ears of corn" on one stalk is possible, and has been noticed (N. Y. Evening Post, Aug. 26, 1863) lately in this country, and is in accord with the proper character of maize, but not of wheat, and we may so understand the dream interpreted by Joseph.

CROWNS.

Cornē'lius. A Roman centurion, commander of 100 (Acts x. 1). He seems to have worshiped the true God before his conversion (x. 2), and not the Pagan deities. He was the first Gentile convert, and was received by Peter.

Corner. The Levitical law gave a portion of the field called a "corner" to the poor, and the right to carry off what was left, also the gleanings of the trees and the vines (Lev. xix. 9). See also RUTH, GLEANING.

Cor'ner-Stone. A stone of size and importance in the corner of a building, uniting two walls. This is laid with ceremonies in large buildings. Christ is the corner-stone of our salvation (Eph. ii. 20; 1 Pet. ii. 6; Matt. xxi. 42).

CUCKOO.

Cotton (Heb. karpas; Sans. karpasam; Arabic karfas); mentioned in Esther i. 6, as green hangings. "Hanging curtains of calico, in stripes, and padded, are used, in India, as a substitute for floors." Some of the passages where fine linen is said in our version, cotton was probably the article meant in the original.

Court (Heb. CHAZER). An enclosed space, or yard, belonging to a house.

Cov'enant (Heb. BERITH). Contracts between men, and between God and men. Various rites were used: joining hands (Ez. xvii. 18); by an oath (Gen. xxi. 31); by a heap of stones (ib. xxxi. 46); by a feast (ib. xxvi. 30); by sacrificing victims, dividing the parts, and both parties to the covenant walking between the parts of the sacrifice (xv. 8–17); and, more common and above all others, eating salt (Num. xviii. 19; Lev. ii. 13).

The covenants between God and men were also ratified by signs. By the sacrifice, when a symbol of deity, a smoking furnace and a burning lamp, passed between the parts (Gen. xv. 17); by the 12 loaves on the table of shew-bread (Lev. xxiv. 6–8); and the crucifixion of the Christ (Heb. ix. 15, xiii. 20; Is. lv. 3).

Crack'nels. Hard, brittle cakes (1 K. xiv. 3). Crackers.

Crāne (Heb. AGUR). Is a wader, migratory, utters a twittering cry, and goes in vast flocks (Is. xxxviii. 14; Jer. viii. 7).

Creā'tion. The origin of all things, material and living, in the world, and the heavens around it (Gen. i.; Ps. cxlviii. 5). When rightly understood, God's works and His Word are in harmony. The Mosaic account in Genesis opens with a notice of the work of God in the original creation of the world and the heavens, in the vastly remote past, and passes at once to the final preparation of the earth for man's occupation, which has extended through six (geological) periods of unknown extent, which are called days. It is supposed by the geologist that the first formations were rocks, either in water by deposit, or both water and fire. There are traces of living things in the rocks, called fossils, and they are without eyes; perhaps because there was no light — for light was made after the heavier materials. Both vegetables and animals appear at the same time. These oldest rocks are called the CAMBRIAN, and are 5 miles thick.

The next in the series is the SILURIAN, of sediment, whose thickness is 6 miles. Fossils are very numerous, and of low types, having no animals with vertebræ (back-bone), except a few fishes on the very top. Vegetation first appears in this place. There was light, and there were eyes in the living things. The firmament (expanse) divided the waters above (clouds) from the waters below (the ocean).

The third in the series is the OLD RED SANDSTONE, which marks the time when the great mountain-ranges of the world were lifted. Sedimentary, and two miles thick, and having fossils of animals found in the other two, and of vertebrates. Dry land appeared, grass, herbs, and trees. No land animals.

The fourth was the CARBONIFEROUS (coal-bearing), in which we find coal, minerals, limestone. Coal is made of wood, and the fossil wood found in the coal series does not show the rings which we now find in all wood as marks of the yearly growth, which is evidence of dense fogs and very pale light. The lifting of the fogs towards the end of this period, letting the sun shine on the earth, is described by Moses as the events of the fourth day. The fossil remains in these rocks are the same at the equator and everywhere, indicating a uniform heat all over the earth. Animal life on land is first seen: insects, such as beetles, scorpions, and reptiles — such as frogs.

The fifth series, the PERMIAN, has remains of a higher order of vegetation and of animals, such as the saurians (lizards), and birds, whose fossils are in the NEW RED SANDSTONE of this series.

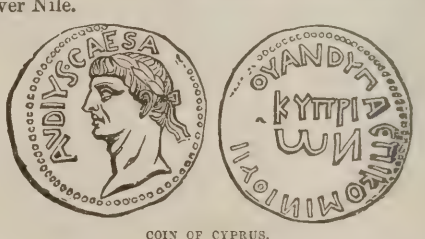
The TRIAS and OOLITE show fossils of more advanced orders, both vegetable and animal. Palm, pine, cypress, insects, and three kinds of lizards, called by Moses "the living creature that hath life" — a better translation of the original being, "the reptile that hath the breath of life" — and also great sea-monsters (called whales in Genesis). The fossils of these animals exist in such amazing numbers as to give the name of age of reptiles to this day, which was the fifth in the account of Moses.

The next was the CHALK, which has but few remains, while the Tertiary, which followed, is full of mammals, such as cattle, beasts, and creeping things, which mark the progress of the sixth day, which ended on the creation of man.

There are no fossil remains of man among all the vast number of living things in all the series. And there are no animals now living on the earth whose origin cannot be traced in the fossil remains of similar races living on the earth before man was placed here.

The truth of the Mosaic account is thus peculiarly shown in the records of the rocks.

The account is true as it would appear if shown to a man in a vision, every item agreeing with the optical appearances.



It may be that there was a race of men of a lower type, such as the Malay, or Negro, living on the earth before the birth of Adam; and if so, the passages which seem to imply other races besides Adam's would have an explanation. The several species of men, with their distinct languages, indicate more than one origin.

The most sceptical scientist of the present day admits that the breath of life was breathed into at least one original form — if not three or four — and that is the whole question. God did create a living being, or several, and the most careful examination shows that species and groups of animals were from the first — in the oldest rocks, and in all of them — distinct, as distinct as they are now, and so may have been created each by itself, "after its own kind." However short the account, the order of the events is correct, according to science.

CUP OF THE PTOLEMIES.

Crēte. CANDIA. S. of the Archipelago; 160 ms. long from E. to W., and 6 to 35 ms. wide. Homer says it had 100 cities (Iliad ii. 649; Virgil, Æ. iii. 106). Minos, the great legislator, was a native. Very mountainous, but full of fruitful valleys. There was a very early connection with the Jews (1 Sam. xxx. 14; Jos. Ant. xvii. 12, § 1). Cretans were at the feast of Pentecost at Jerusalem (Acts ii. 11). Visited by Paul (see Life).

Croc'odile (Heb. LEVIATHAN). The Jewish translations of Job xli. give crocodile for leviathan, and the description is very poetical as well as true. Herodotus says the Egyptians paid divine honors to this reptile, keeping a tame one, whose ears were hung with rings and fore-paws circled with bracelets; and when he died they embalmed his body. The worship began in the fear of man for the most terrible animal in the river Nile.

COIN OF CYPRUS.

Cross. An upright stake, with one or more cross-pieces, on which persons were suspended for punishment. It was an emblem of pain, guilt, and ignominy, but has been adopted by Christians as the most glorious badge of a servant and follower of the Christ, who was crucified on it. Constantine was the first emperor who adopted it as an ensign, whose coins bear its form, with monograms of Christ or of Constantine. The image was added to the cross, forming the crucifix, in the 6th century. The term cross was used for self-denial by Jesus and others (Matt. xvi. 24).

Crown. Originally, the band or ribbon about the head or hair of a king or a priest. The ornamented cap differed in style in every country, as is shown on the sculptures and coins. A wreath of leaves crowned the winners in the Grecian games. The final inheritance of the saints is figured as a crown of righteous- ness (2 Tim. iv. 8). The figures are of crowns from Egypt: 1. Upper E.; 2. Lower E.; 3. Upper and Lower united; 4. Assyria; 5. Assyria (Sardanapalus 3d); 6. Assyrian (Sennacherib); 7. Tigranes (Syria); 8. At Persepolis; 9. Crown of leaves, Roman coin of Galba. The Roman soldiers crowned Jesus with a wreath of thorn twigs, made from what is now called Christ's thorn (zizyphus), and by the Arabs nubk, the jujube tree. It is very abundant, and forms dense thorny hedges (growing or laid in rows two or three feet high), through which no large animal can pass.

Crucifix'ion. Putting a person to death on a cross was a very common practice in ancient days, as hanging is now. Jesus was condemned to the cross by the Sanhedrim for blasphemy, and by Pilate for sedition against Cæsar. The scarlet robe, crown of thorns, and other insults were the inventions of those engaged in the execution, and were peculiar to his case. Whipping was a part of the punishment, but in the case of Jesus was not the legal act, being applied before sentence. The sufferer was to carry his cross, or a part of it. The clothes were perquisites to the guards. A cup of stupefying liquor was often given in mercy, just before the hands and feet were nailed. The body was often left to waste away naturally on the cross, or be eaten by birds and beasts, by the Romans, but they allowed the Jews to bury their dead on account of the law of Moses (Deut. xxi. 22, 23). Constantine abolished crucifixion. See CALVARY.

Cuck'oo (Heb. SHACHAF), (Lev. xi.; Deut. xiv.). The Arabs think its note sounds like yakoob, and so call it Jacob's bird. It migrates, and winters in Palestine. Tristram suggests the shore-petrel as the bird of the Hebrew text.

Cu'cumber (Heb. KISHUIM, heavy, hard to digest). Grown only in the fertile land which is overflowed by the Nile, and is esteemed the coolest and most pleasant fruit in the East (Is. i. 8).

Cum'min (Heb. KAMMON). An umbelliferous plant (fennel), bearing aromatic seeds, like anise, coriander, dill and caraway. Used as a styptic after circumcision. Cultivated for export (Is. xxviii. 25; Matt. xxiii. 23).

Cup (Heb. 1. COS, 2. KESAOTH, 3. GEBIA; Greek, poterion). The designs were imitated from those of Egypt and Assyria, Phœnicia, etc., as shown by the Scriptures and specimens from antiquity. They were of metal, earthenware, wood, etc. The "sea" or "laver" of Solomon's Temple was called a cup, and was of brass (bronze?), and highly ornamented with sculptured lilies.

EGYPTIAN CUPS.

Nos. 1, 2, 3. From paintings at Thebes, Egypt. 4. Porcelain. 5. Green earthenware. 6. Coarse pottery. 7. Wood. 8. Arragonite. 9. Earthen. Bronze cups (and other vessels) are often found in the ancient tombs. A kind of stone was wrought into jugs and bottles, vases and cups, at Alabastron, in Upper Egypt, now called alabaster. Matt. xxvi. 7, should read alabaster vase, not box. The "Cup of the Ptolemies" is a work of the time of Nero, 5 inches high, of a single sardonyx, set in a base. See SIDON, and ALABASTER.

ASSYRIAN CUPS.

1. Lion-head, Khorsabad. 2. Lion-head, with handle. 3. From Khorsabad, all of bronze. 4. Red pottery, Nimroud. 5. Painted cup, Karamles. 6, 7. Bronze, Nimroud. The workmanship is excellent, and they are often ornamented with jewels, and embossed with sculptures of animals, or groups of men and animals. Cups of brass or silver are now in use all over the East; generally decorated with some sentence in Arabic or of a mystical sense. See BOTTLES, and BOWLS.

The office of CUP-BEARER is of great antiquity, being mentioned at the courts of the Pharaohs, the Assyrian, Persian, and Jewish kings. RABSHAKEH of 2 K. xviii. 17, should read chief cup-bearer, as in Luther's Bible (der Erzschenke). The cup is used as a figure: of a man's lot (Ps. xi. 6, etc.); of a nation's great riches (Jer. li. 7); as a contrast in "cup of God," true worship, and "cup of devils," idolatry (Ps. lxxv. 8; Is. li. 17, 22); signifying afflictions (Matt. xx. 22, xxvi. 39); of salvation (Ps. cxvi. 13), and of blessing (Luke xxii. 17; 1 Cor. x. 16).

Cur'tain (Heb. TERIAH), was made of linen, goats' hair, silk, and cotton; used for beds, partitions in tents, and for doors in houses. Heaven compared to a curtain (Ps. civ. 2; Is. xl. 22). The curtains of the tabernacle were embroidered with many colors, in figures on fine linen. Curtains of Solomon (Cant. i. 5).

Cush. Son of Ham (Gen. x. 6). Country in Africa. Ethiopia (Ez. xxxix. 10; 2 Chr. xii. 3). Tirhakah, king of Cush (Is. xxxvii. 9). Modern name Kesh. Geez. People were black (Jer. xiii. 23).

Cuth'ah. Cuth. In Asia. Shalmaneser transplanted people from here to Samaria during the Jews' captivity (2 K. xvii. 24, 30). Mixing with the Jews of the 10 tribes, they became the Samaritans, and were called Cuthæans (Jos. Ant. ix. 14, § 3, xl. 8, § 6, xii. 5, § 5). Between Tigris and Euphrates rivers.

Cut'tings in the Flesh. Mutilations of the body, practiced by the Heathens in mourning for the dead (Jer. xvi. 6, 7, xli. 5); prohibited to the Jews (Lev. xix. 28).

Cy'prus. Island off the coast of Phœnicia and Cilicia, 148 miles long, 40 wide, and irregular; (see map.) The highest mountain is Olympus, 7000 feet. Gold, silver, and copper are mined. Its cities were Salamis, Citium (now Larneka), and Paphos (now Baffa), and many others. Alexander got 120 ships there for his siege of Tyre. It was the birth-place of Barnabas (Acts iv. 36), and was visited by Barnabas and Paul (Acts xiii.). The Pagans worshiped Astarte (Venus) in a licentious manner. Barnabas and Mark (Acts xv.). Cyprians, the people, in 2 Macc. iv. 29.

Cy'rene. Lybia, Africa. Founded B. C. 632, by Greeks. Built on a table-land 1800 ft. above the sea, in a region of great beauty and fertility, 500 miles west of Alexandria. The Pentapolis of Cyrenaica were Cyrene, Apollonia, Ptolemais, Arsinoe, and Berenice (Strabo, xvii.). After Alexander the Great's death Jews were settled there with many privileges. In the time of Christ the Cyreneans had a synagogue in Jerusalem (Acts vi. 9; Philo). Simon, who bore the cross, was from C. (Matt. xxviii., etc.). Lucius of C. was with Paul and Barnabas (xiii. 1). Lucius and Mark are named as the bishops of the church at C. Arabic name Ghrenna.

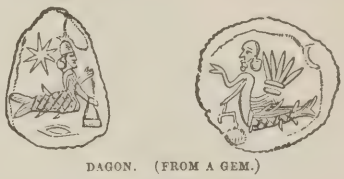
Cyrē'nius (Latin). Publius Sulpicus Quirinus was governor of Syria twice: before A.D. 1 (B. C. 4); and again, the second time, A. D. 6. Died A. D. 21 (Luke ii. 2).

Cy'rus. The Persian name for the sun (Heb. KORESH), and the same as the Egyptian name Phrah. Thus, Cyrus is a title for the king, as Pharaoh, Augustus, etc. The Bible mentions only the one who conquered Babylon, unless the Cyrus, the Persian, of Daniel, was the uncle of Cyrus, who issued the decree permitting the return of the captive Jews to Judæa. It is impossible to separate the history of Cyrus from the fables connected with it, and now more than when Herodotus found the same difficulty, only a century after the events.

The work of a resident historian, Ctesias, in the court of Persia, about fifty years later than Herodotus, has been lost, except a few extracts by Photius, and that of Xenophon, are both historical romances.

That he became supreme king of Persia, and conquered Babylon, is undoubted. The turning of the course of the river Euphrates and capture of Babylon during a great feast are also facts.

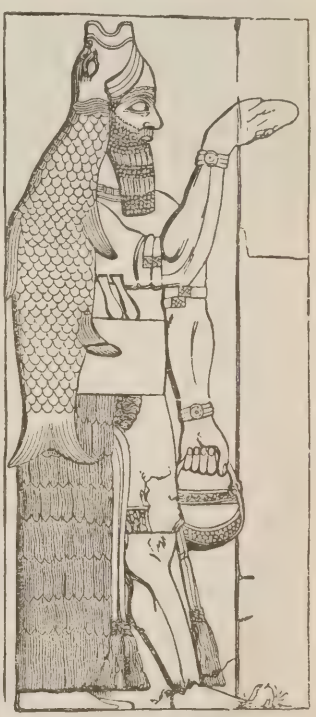
Daniel's Darius, the Mede, is the Astyages of history, and was a viceroy of the Cyrus who first ruled over Babylon.



It is supposed that the Persian religion, which is almost purely a monotheism, prepared Cyrus to sympathize with the Jews, and that Daniel's explanation of the prophesies, that he had been helping to fulfill, unknown to himself, concluded him to issue the decree for the Jews' return to their native land and temple.

A tomb of Cyrus is shown at Passargadæ near Persepolis. It is a small house (21 by 17 ft.) on a pyramid (18 ft. high), which once contained the golden coffin, bed, cloak, and other royal robes and regalia of Cyrus.

D



Dab'erath. (Josh. xxi. 28.) Now Deburieh, W. of Mt. Tabor. Beautifully situated on a rocky platform, with Tabor behind and the broad plain of Esdraelon in front. Boundary of Zebulun (Josh. xix. 12).

Dā'gon (Heb. DAG, little fish, dear). The figure of the god of the Philistines. His chief temples were at Gaza and Ashdod (Judg. xvi. 21; 1 Sam. v. 5). Traces of the worship are left in the names Cephar-dagon and Beth-dagon. Sanconiatho says the name is derived from dagon, grain, and it was the god of agriculture; but this origin does not agree so well with the idea, which was to multiply, increase, as fish do by millions. This god was known in Assyria, and is sculptured there, as shown in the large cut. Miss Fanny Corbeaux ("The Rephaim") shows that the Chaldean Oannes, the Philistine Dagon, and Egyptian On, are identical in name and nature. DERKETO was the female (as Dagon was the male), and was worshiped at Ashkelon. She had a woman's face, and a fish-body. Atergatis, Argatis, Arathis, and Argata, are different forms of DERKETO.

DAGON, THE FISH-GOD.

Dălmanū'tha. On the shore of the Sea of Galilee; visited by Jesus (Mark viii. 10). Near Magdala. Possibly it is the same as Zalmon, near Tiberias, now called Ain el Barideh (the cold fountain), where are fine fountains and the ruins of a city (Rob. ii. 396).

Dalmā'tia. Illyricum. On the E. shore of the Adriatic Sea, N.W. of Greece. Visited by Paul (Rom. xv. 19), and Titus (2 Tim. iv. 10), during Paul's imprisonment in Rome.

Dămăs'cus. On the E. of Anti-Lebanon, 2,200 feet above the sea, in a fertile plain near the desert. The oldest city known to history. It is cut through by the Barada river, which has many branches, and with the Helbon on the N. and the Awaj on the S., fertilizes a region 30 ms. in extent, which being favored by the finest climate, produces almost every valuable product of forest, field, or garden. First mentioned in Gen. xiv. 15 and in Gen. xv. 2, as the city of Abraham's steward. For 800 years, from Abraham to David, the Scriptures are silent on Damascus. David put a garrison in D. (1 K. xi. 23; 2 Sam. viii. 6; Jos. Ant. vii. 5, § 2). During Asa's reign, Benhadad pillaged cities in Naphtali (1 K. xv. 19, 20). After this it is mentioned many times. Naaman the leper, who was cured by Elisha the prophet, was of D. (2 K. v. 1). The Assyrian king, Tiglath Pilē'ser, took the city, and carried captive the people to Kir (2 K. xvi. 7–9). Isaiah's prophesy (xvii. 3; Amos i. 4, 5). Jeremiah described it, B. C. 600: "D. is waxed feeble, and turneth herself to flee, and fear hath seized on her" (xlix. 24). At the time of the Apostle Paul the city was under Roman rule, and Aretas, the Arabian, king (2 Cor. xi. 22; Jos. Ant. xvi. 11, § 9). Has now 150,000 people: Christians, 15,000; Jews, 6,000.

The fine fabrics of Damascus were celebrated as early as 800 B. C. (Amos iii. 12). The damask silk and sword-blades are still famous. Certain localities are pointed out as having an historical connection with Paul's time. The "street called straight" is now the street of Bazaars; there is a "house of Judas;" a house of Ananias; a place of the conversion, which is an open green spot surrounded with trees, now used as a Christian burial-ground; a place where Paul was let down by the wall in a basket; and also several spots connected with the history of the prophet Elisha. The old city stands on the S. bank of the principal river, surrounded by a ruinous wall of ancient Roman foundations, and a patchwork of all the succeeding ages. The city is splendid only when viewed at a distance, for the houses are rudely built; the narrow streets, paved with big rough stones, or not at all, partly roofed across with mats, or withered branches; the bazaars are covered ways with a few stalls on both sides, each trade having its own quarter. Although rough and rude on the street, yet the interior of the private houses is neat, paved, with fountain and fruit-trees, with grateful shade, and the rooms opening from the court decorated with carving, gilding, and all that wealth and taste can provide.

ELIJAH AT PRAYER.

Dan (judge). Fifth son of Jacob. First son of Bilhah, Rachel's maid (Gen. xxx. 6). One of the twelve tribes. The last to receive its portion, and the least portion, but among the most fertile in the land. — 2. The city originally called LAISH. LESHEM (Josh. xix. 47). They were idolaters from the beginning (Gen. xiv. 14; Deut. xxxiv. 1; Judg. xviii.). The worship was continued by Jeroboam (1 K. xii. 29, 30; Amos viii. 14). "From Dan to Beersheba," was the common form of speaking of the extent of Palestine (Judg. xx. 1; 1 Sam. iii. 20), etc. Tell el Kadi (judge's mound) is the modern name, and is a long, steep hill, covered with ruins, from the base of which flows one of the largest fountains in the world (Rob. 396).

Dance (Heb. MACHOL), to move or leap in a circle, twist or turn around, as the dancing dervishes now do in the East. The sacred song and dance always go together (Ex. xv. 20); words, and music, and motion, aiding each other in expressing the joy or sorrow of the soul (Judg. xi. 34; Eccl. iii. 4). The Romans also danced in their worship; so, also, the Egyptians.

In the modern Oriental dance a woman leads off, and goes through a number of graceful and artistic attitudes, and then all the others of the party follow her in every motion. Two companies of dancers are called by an error armies in Cant. vi. 13.

Dan'iel (God's judge). 1. David's son (1 Chr. iii. 1). — 2. A Levite (Ezra viii. 2). — 3. A celebrated prophet in the Chaldean and Persian period, and a (princely) descendant of Judah. He was taken with other captives (Ananiah, Mishael, and Azariah) to Babylon, B. C. 607, at the age of 12 to 16, educated thoroughly, and made a cup-bearer at the court, when he was given a new name Belshazar (favorite of Bel). He kept the Jewish law of clean and unclean meat (Dan. i. 8, 16), and was constant and faithful in his devotions to God. After three years' service he interpreted a dream (v. 17) on the occasion of the king's decree against the magi, and for this service was made "ruler and chief governor" over the province and magistrates of Babylon. He interpreted Nebuchadnezzar's second dream, and the handwriting on the wall, thus introducing the knowledge of the true God, and alluding to the profane use of the holy vessels of the Temple, as one of the crowning sins of the king and his people, which were the means of ending the nation's life, by the conquest of the Medes and Persians (v. 10, 28), while he lived at Susa, and after he had been removed from office, when he was again placed in one of the highest offices of trust and honor. During an interval in which no event in Daniel's life is recorded, his three companions were delivered from a fiery furnace.

Darius made him first of the three presidents of the empire. Having exercised the rites of his religious faith contrary to law, he was thrown to the lions, but was delivered alive (vi. 10, 23). He was in favor with the king in the third year of Cyrus, and saw his last vision on the banks of the Tigris (B. C. 534), when the prophesy of the 70 weeks was delivered to him (ch. ix.). He died at the age of over 90, at Susa, where there was a monument to his memory in the 12th century, described by Benjamin of Tudela.

Dari'us (in Heb. DARYAVESH). The Assyrian title lord-king — Dara, lord; shah, king. 1. The first mentioned is DARIUS, THE MEDE (Dan. v. 31, etc.), called also Cyax'ares (B. C. 538). The gold coin was named Daric — that is, king's money. — 2. DARIUS, SON OF HYS-TAS-PES (Vashtaspa), made king B. C. 521. He conquered Babylon, Scythia, Libya, Thrace, Macedonia, and some of the islands in the Ægean Sea, but the Greeks defeated him at Marathon (B. C. 490). Died B. C. 485 (Ezr. iv. 7). — DARIUS, THE PERSIAN. Darius II, Nothus, king of Persia, B. C. 424–404. Perhaps Darius Codomanus (Neh. xii. 22).

Dark'ness. Opposite of light, absence of light (Gen. i. 2). Three times mentioned in the Bible. In Genesis, at the creation; at the Exodus, as one of the plagues of Egypt, and at the crucifixion. Used as a figure of adversity and misery (Job xviii. 6; Ps. cvii. 10). "Works of darkness," heathen rites and ceremonies (Eph. v. 11), "outer darkness," shut out of heaven, (which is glorious with light.)

Dates. Fruit of the palm-tree, called clusters in Cant. vii. 7, and honey in 2 Chr. xxxi. 5, dates in the margin. In many parts of Arabia the staple product and the main source of landed wealth, is the date-palm, of which there are many species. The ripening season is August and September. The fruit is a substitute for the bread of other countries. To cut down the date-trees is a great achievement in war — and the absence of those trees from Palestine indicates a long period of wars and an unsettled condition. To plant the palm on new ground is a sign of prosperity — as now in Egypt. The Arabs believe the tree is a blessing granted only to them, and denied to all other people. Mohammed taught, "Honor the date-tree, she is your mother." There are 139 varieties, 70 of which are well known, each of which has its peculiar name. Some six kinds are superior. El Shelebi, the best, are two inches long, with small stones. The value in Arabia is about three cents a pound.

Daugh'ter. 1. Female offspring; of the wife; or adopted; or of a sister; or of a cousin (Ruth iii. 18; Gen. xxxiv. 17); or a grand-daughter. — 2. The female inhabitants of a place, or those who hold the faith of a certain place, as "daughters of Zion" (Isa. iii. 16), "daughters of the Philistines," "daughters of Jerusalem," "daughters of Aaron" (Num. xxv. 1; 2 Sam. i. 20; Luke i. 5). Cities were named or spoken of under female names, and were said to have daughters, suburbs or villages near. A vine had daughters (branches, in Gen. xlix. 22). Sarah was the daughter of 90 years — that is, she was 90 years old.

David (beloved). Born at Bethlehem in Judah, B. C. 1084. His father, Jesse; his mother's name is not recorded (1 Sam. xvi. 10, 17, 58). He had 7 elder brothers — Eliab, Abinadab, Shammah, Nethaneel, Raddai, Ozem, and Elihu; and two sisters — Zeruiah, and Abigail.

He watched the flocks in the field, and in their defense killed a lion and a bear.

DANCE OF PRIESTS — EGYPTIAN.

At a yearly family feast he was anointed king by Samuel "from the sheep-cote" (2 Sam. vii. 8). He went to carry food to his three brothers in Saul's army, and was introduced to the king as valiant and brave. He killed Goliath with a stone from a sling. The sword and armor of the giant were first taken to his tent in Bethlehem, afterwards to Nob, and laid up in the Tabernacle (Ps. viii. 19, 29). Saul took David into his service as a minstrel. Jonathan became his friend. Women sang his praise as superior to Saul. Saul became jealous; and sought twice to kill David. Being afraid of David he made him captain of 1000. David behaved wisely, and all Israel and Judah loved him. Merab is offered to David as a wife in reward for his service against Goliath the Philistine. But Saul afterwards gave Merab to Adriel. Michal, Saul's daughter, loved David, and Saul offered her to David for a price, and David paid double the price, for he killed 200 Philistines. He paid twice for his wife, killed Goliath and the 200. He is made armor-bearer and captain of the body-guard, with a place at the king's table. Saul seeks to kill him; sets men to watch for him; Michal assists his escape. Goes to Ramah to Samuel (Ps. lix.). Michal is given to Phaltiel. Secret meeting with Jonathan. The sign of the arrow. David flies. Saul tries to take him at Ramah. David eats consecrated bread, and gets Goliath's sword at Nob; Ps. lii. against Doeg, who informed against David and killed the priests. David goes to Abimelech (Achish), and feigning madness, escapes (Ps. xxxiv. 56). In the cave of Adullam. Joined by his family, beside outlaws, debtors, etc. The incident of the water at Bethlehem (1 Chr. xi. 17). Moves to Herodium or to Masada. Takes his parents to the king of Moab; (they are never mentioned again.) Nahash, of Ammon, treats him kindly. Gadites swim the Jordan at its flood and join him. God influences a move to the forest of Hareth. Amasai, a Benjamite, joins him. Relieves Keilah, where Abiathar the priest joins him with an ephod. His troop is now 600. Saul appears; David flies to Ziph.

Twice the Ziphim betray him to Saul, who hunts him "like a partridge" with 3000 men (Ps. liv.), in the wilderness of Maon. Sees Saul two or three times, once at the cliff of divisions, again in a cave near Engedi, when he cuts off his skirt, and then in a fortified camp, when David carried off by night the water-jar and spear from Saul's bedside.

Twice Saul repented, and said he was reconciled to David. Psalms of this date liv., lvii., lxiii., cxlii. Nabal and Abigail; married Ahinoam, and Abigail. David again went to Achish, with his troop. Achish gives him the city of Ziklag. Benjamite archers joined him. Studies the Philistines' art of war. Attacked the Bedouins to deceive Achish. Philistine nobles were suspicious, and caused him to be sent back from the army. Saul and Jonathan killed on Gilboa. Manassites joined David. Amalekites plunder Ziklag. Abiathar prophesies victory, and David recovers the spoil from the Amalekites. Made a present to many friends, whose places "he was wont to haunt." Made a law of division of the spoils (1 Sam. xxx.). News of the battle on Gilboa: killed the messenger. Lamented for Saul and Jonathan. David anointed king at Hebron (30 years old). Thanked the men of Jabesh-Gilead for burying Saul. ISH-BOSHETH, king in Mahanaim. David the only king west of Jordan. War between the two sections. Abner killed Asahel, David's nephew: Abner quarreled with Ishbosheth, and came to David. Michal restored to David. Abner and Ishbosheth murdered. David executed the two assassins. Reigned in Hebron 7½ years. David crowned 3d time king of all Israel (Ps. lxxviii., lxx.). Constitutional law. Festival 3 days; the tribes sent produce, fruits, etc., to the feast, and contingents to the army, which was "like the host of God" (1 Chr. xii. 22). Joab (his nephew) commander: Issacharites his counselors. Jehoiada and Zadok joined him (Ps. xxvii.). Jebus was taken. Joab made commander-in-chief. Royal residence in the City of David — Zion. His wives were increased by hostages from surrounding princes. Two attacks by Philistines repulsed: their idols burned. Hiram of Tyre became an ally: sends cedar-wood for David's palace.

FRUIT OF DATE-PALM.

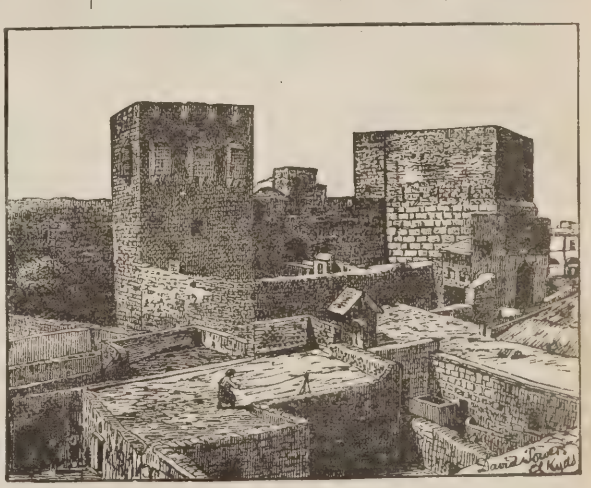
The ark removed from Kirjath Jearim — Obed Edom. The new Tabernacle on Zion; the old left standing at Gibeon. The great assembly on Zion. Musical art developed. Zadok and Abiatha. Nathan the prophet. David, as a priest and minstrel, in the procession. He blessed the people from the new Tabernacle on Zion (Ps. xv., xxiv., xxix., xxx., lxviii., ci., cxxxii.): "The Lord of Hosts, he is the King of Glory" (Ps. xxiv., x.). Michal reproaches him, and is rebuked. God's house designed. Prophesy by Nathan of a Messiah (2 Sam. vii. 12–17). David organized a court and camp. Mephibosheth cared for, in memory of Jonathan. Hanun, son of Nahash, abused David's messengers. Ammon and Syria beaten. Joab commander-in-chief (1 Chr. xi. 6): 12 divisions of 24,000 men, one for each month, all infantry, without cavalry. Chain-armor in use. Benaiah captain of David's body-guard, the Cherethites and Pelethites—Ittai. The band of 600 continued as Gibborim, heroes; Abishai, David's nephew, captain. Social and moral institutions formed. Ahithophel and Jonathan, Hushai, Shera the Scribe, Jehoshaphat, and Adoram, councilors. Gad the seer and Nathan the prophet advisers. Abiathar and Zadok high-priests; the musicians, under Asaph, Heman, and the Levites, guardians of the gates and treasures. The Philistines, Moabites, Syrians, Edomites (Ps. lx.), and Ammonites, subdued. Rabbah taken. David wears the gold crown of Milcom (Ps. xxi. 3, lxxxix. 39). Uriah murdered. Nathan's rebuke (Ps. xxii. 51), "Thou art the man." Bathsheba taken. David fasts for his sick child. The child died: "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me." Solomon, "the peaceful," born, (Ps. xx. 21). Educated by Nathan the prophet. His daughter Tamar outraged; his eldest son Amnon murdered. Absalom fled to Geshur. The artifice of Joab and the widow of Tekoa, to restore Absalom. Absalom waits two years to see his father; burning Joab's field, is brought to the king. Absalom plots — rebels: David a wanderer again. Leaves the city; a vast multitude go with him. Ittai the faithful, Zadok and Abiathar with the ark, which David sent back. Hushai, "the friend," sent to watch Ahithophel (grandfather of Bathsheba), who was untrue.

DAVID'S TOMB, MOUNT ZION.

Absalom arrived from Hebron. At Pahurim, Ziba's deceit — Shimei's curses. David rested in the Jordan valley, near the ford (Ps. iii. 143). They cross the Jordan to Mahanaim (Ps. xlii.) against the advice of Ahithophel (lv., lxix., cix.). Barzillai, Shobi, and Machir his friends. Ahithophel kills himself. Joab, Abishai, and Ittai, were there. Amasa, David's nephew, was with Absalom, in the Battle of Ephraim. Absalom killed by Joab. David waiting in the gate. The two messengers, Ahimaaz and Cushi. David vows to supersede Joab by Amasa. The return to Jerusalem. Shimei forgiven. Mephibosheth partly reinstated; Barzillai rewarded in his son Chimham. Judah and Israel are reconciled.

Sheba's rebellion. David's ten women shut up. Amasa sent to assemble the militia. The forces sent after Sheba. Joab killed Amasa. Sheba's head cast out of Abel. Adoram over the tribute; Jehoshaphat, recorder; Sheva, scribe; Zadok and Abiathar, priests; and Ira, a chief ruler.

A famine of three years on account of the Gibeonites' murder by Saul. David delivered 7 sons of Saul to be hanged, as an atonement. The bones of Saul and Jonathan buried in Zelah. David grew faint in the fight with the Philistines. Ishbibenob, the giant, thought to kill David. Abishai kills the giant. Psalm of thanksgiving (2 Sam. xxii.).



David numbered the people unlawfully, in pride. Joab and the captains opposed it. Gad, the prophet, warned of 3 calamities; David would not choose, and the 3 days' pestilence killed 70,000, and was stayed at the threshing-floor of Ornan. David bought the site for a sanctuary, and it is now marked by an ancient church — the Dome of the Rock; (see JERUSALEM.) David renewed his resolve to build a house for the Lord, and gathered materials. Charged Solomon with the duty of building the house (1 Chr. xxii.).

The young Abishag. Adonijah's rebellion. Joab and Abiathar helped (Ps. xcii. 2). By David's order Solomon is anointed king at Gihon. Adonijah pardoned by Solomon. David's last song (2 Sam. xxiii. 1–7). David's last words (1 K. ii. 1–9) describe the perfect ruler fearing God. Died at the age of 70. Buried "between Siloah and the guard-house." Reigned in Jerusalem 33 years. (Neh. iii. 16). The site of his tomb is lost.

There are very few memorials except the Psalms left of the words and deeds of this great king and spiritual leader of the Hebrews. The Arabs venerate his memory almost equally with the Jews, and have united with them in giving David's name to a mosk on Zion, to a tower near the Jaffa Gate, and many chapels and spots in and about the city in honor of the name of the greatest and best king who ever reigned in Palestine. He was so worthy as a king that his name for several centuries was used as one of the official titles of the king, who was called "the David."

TABLE OF DAVID'S FAMILY.

Wives.	Son or daughter.
1. Michal	No children.
2. Ahinoam	Amnon, 1 Chr. iii. 1.
3. Abigail	Daniel, 1 Chr. iii. 1.
4. Maachah	Absalom. 3 died. Tamar, 2 Sam. xiii.
5. Haggith	Adonijah.
6. Abital	Shephatiah, 1 Chr. iii.
7. Eglah	Ithream.
	Sons whose mothers are not named. Ibhar, Elishua, Eliphelet, Nogah, Nepheg, Japhia, Elishama, Eliada, Eliphalet, Jerimoth. 1 Chr. xiv. 7; 2 Chr. xi.
8. Bathsheba	One son died. Shammua, Shobab, Nathan, Jedidjah (Solomon or Shelomoh).

THE DAVID TOWER.

The children of ten concubines are not named. There is proof that he had more than eight wives. The text of 2 Sam. v. 13, probably refers to Michal, Bathsheba, and the ten whom he took in Jerusalem.

David was a valiant and prudent soldier, shepherd, poet, prophet, priest, statesman, and king, a romantic friend, chivalrous leader, devoted father. He represents the Jewish people at the point of the change from the lofty writers of their older system to the higher civilization of the newer, and was a type of the Messiah, who is called the Son of David.

David as king is almost above reproach; the errors of his private life only proved him a man. Next to Abraham's, David's is the most dearly cherished name of all the ancient patriarchs. The Psalms, whether his own or others' writings, have been the source of consolation and instruction far beyond any other of the Holy Scriptures, and are the only expressions of devotion that have been equally used by all branches of the Christian church and by the Jews.

It is now thought that the saying that David was a man after God's own heart meant only that he was chosen, while Saul was rejected — and his excellence as a king justified the choice.

The noble qualities of his soul, his sublime piety, which was the habit of his life, his intense struggle against fiery passions, and his mournful remorse over occasional sins, far outweighed his faults.

Because he passed through temptation, passion, and humiliation, we are instructed and comforted; and through the divine psalms which he wrote we are provided with language for our times of distress and trouble.

David, City of. Zion in Jerusalem, and also Bethlehem.

Dea'con. Assistant, helper. Christ is called a deacon (A. V. minister, Rom. xv. 8). The Apostles appointed officers and made rules as circumstances required. The 7 deacons appointed to care for the widows (serving tables), had special duties which passed away with the occasion. But there was then a difference between the ministers of spiritual and of material things. They also assisted at the communion by carrying the food and drink to the members. They received the contributions; cared for the sacred vessels; read the gospel sometimes, and baptized. They were to be grave, venerable, of good report in life, sincere, truthful, temperate, not using their office for profit, keeping the faith in a pure conscience, husband of one wife, ruling their children and house well (1 Tim. iii.; Acts vi.).

MOUNTAIN PASS NEAR JERICHO

Dea'coness. (Rom. xvi. 1-12) The records show that they were useful in the early centuries — a service which was afterwards absorbed into the nunneries.

Dead Sea. This name is first met in history about 200 years after Christ. In the O. T. it is called the Salt Sea, sea of the Plain. See SALT SEA.

Death. 1. Natural death; end of the life of the body. 2. Spiritual death; insensible to holiness; alienation from God (Matt. viii. 22; Eph. ii.; Rom. vi. 21). The poetic expressions are "return to dust" (Gen. iii. 19); "removal from the body" (Job x. 21); "asleep" (Jer. li. 39; John xi. 11); "losing the breath" (Ps. civ. 29); "the soul laying off its clothing" (2 Cor. v. 3); "to depart" (Phil. i. 23); "for a great trial" (2 Cor. i. 10). GATES OF DEATH (Job xxxviii. 17); doors of the shadow. Some believe that we should be able to live forever if we did not break God's law. But the Bible is a spiritual book, and not a treatise on Natural History.

Deb'ir (oracle). 1. Ancient royal city of Canaan (Josh. x. 33). Kirjath-Sepher (book city). Now Dilbeh, 6 ms. S.W. of Hebron, where there is a fine spring and aqueduct. — 2. Judah, near the valley of Achor. Wady Dabor at the N.W. corner of the Dead Sea (Josh. xv. 7). — 3. Boundary of Gad, near Mahanaim. Lo-debar (Josh. xiii. 26). — 4. A king of Eglon, hanged by Joshua (x. 3).

Deb'orah (bee). 1. Rebekah's nurse (Gen. xxxv. 8). Buried under an oak, called Allon-bachuth. — 2. A prophetess, wife of Lapidoth who lived near a palm-tree between Ramah and Bethel (Judg. iv. 4). She composed a song (ch. v.) in memory of the victory over Sisera (by Barak and Deborah), which for poetic beauty is much valued, and gives her the title of prophetess (singer).

Debt'or. The strict law of inheritance, of Moses, provided against commercial speculation and debts, by requiring all landed property and slaves to be freed on the year of jubilee (7th) (Lev. xxv. 39). No debtor could be sent to prison, or whipped, or oppressed unfairly, except by breaking the law. In Egypt the creditor could send the debtor to prison, and seize his family tomb, and prevent burials there. The Roman laws were very severe against the debtor, and hard on slaves (made by debt). Bankers and sureties in the commercial sense were unknown (Prov. xxii. 26). No interest could be lawfully taken from a poor person, but relief was to be given, without price, laws being made to prevent evading this rule (Ex. xxii. 25; Lev. xxv. 35, etc.). Nehemiah corrected such abuses (Neh. v.), and Jesus approved the law of Moses, although in the later times the custom of usury had become popular. Loans could be secured by pledges, under certain rules: 1. The cloak, which was used day and night by the poor, must be returned at sundown. A bedstead (a luxury) might be taken (Ex. xxii.); no widow's garments, or a millstone, could be taken (Deut. xxiv. 6, 17). The creditor could not enter a house for his pledge, but must wait outside (Deut. xxiv. 10). Debtors held as slaves must be released at the jubilee, and might be redeemed for a price. Foreign slaves were not released (Lev. xxv. 44). A year was allowed to redeem houses sold for debt. The Romans superseded the law of the jubilee year, and the debtor could be held in prison until the last farthing was paid (Matt. v. 26).

Dec'alogue (ten words). TEN COMMANDMENTS (Ex. xx.). The basis of all laws. The number ten was regarded as perfect or complete, therefore the TEN GREAT WORDS were the perfect law of God (Ps. xix. 7) given on Sinai. They were cut on two tables of stone, and kept for several centuries in the ark, in the very centre of the holy place, as a symbol of the centre of the whole system. The two tables indicate a division of the law into duties toward God and duties toward our neighbor (Matt. xx. 37-39). Some critics point out more than twenty decalogues in the laws of Moses.

Decăp'olis (ten cities). Mentioned three times in the N. T. (Matt. iv. 25; Mark v. 20, vii. 31), and many times in Josephus and other ancient writers. The Romans conquered Palestine and rebuilt and colonized ten cities, and gave them especial privileges. Pliny names Scythopolis, Hippos, Gadara, Pella, Philadelphia, Gerasa, Dion, Canatha, Damascus, and Raphana. Ptolemy includes Capitolias; and an inscription in Palmyra makes Abila one. The name was probably given to a large district in Christ's time. Damascus is the only one of the ten cities left, all the others being in ruins.

Dē'dan (low country). 1. Son of Raamah, grandson of Cush (Gen. x. 7). An island on the shore of the Persian Gulf is called Dadan, and another Sheba. — 2. A son of Jokshan, grandson of Abraham by Keturah (Gen. xxv. 3). In each case the brother is named Sheba, and both tribes may have intermarried and occupied the same country. "The traveling companies of Dedanim" of Is. xxi. 13, are caravans. They traded with Tyre (Ez. xxvii. 15, 20) in ivory, ebony, and fine dry-goods (precious cloths).

Deep, The. Abyss. Bottomless pit in A. V. (Luke viii. 31; Rev. ix. 1, 2, 11; xx. 1, 3; 2 Cor. xi. 25). In Rev. x. 6, 7, "ascend into heaven," "descend into the deep," the place of the dead. This does not include Hades, which is supposed to include the deep, which is, then, only a part of the great unknown place of the dead.

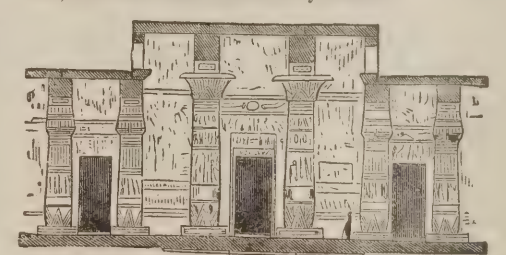
Degrēe. 1 Tim. iii. 13, should read: "For they who well served as deacons obtain for themselves a good degree, and much confidence in faith in Christ Jesus." That is, in spiritual matters.

Degrees, The Song of (steps), is a title of 15 Psalms by different authors. Pilgrim songs, sung by the people as they went up to Jerusalem (Ex. xxxiv. 24; 1 K. xii. 27; Ezr. vii. 9; Ps. cxxii. 4). 5 were written by David (4) and Solomon (1), and the other 10 after the return from captivity. See Ps. cxx. to cxxxiv. See PSALMS.

Deha'vites (villagers), (Ezr. iv. 9). Planted in Samaria by Assyria. Dahi (Herodotus, i. 125), in Persia; and Daci, in Europe (Dacia).

Dēl'ilah (drooping, languishing). Samson's love; lived in the valley of Sorek, Philistia. She was a wily seducer, who loved the bribes and not her honor or her lover's safety, and captivated only to destroy. Her bribe was large — 5500 pieces of silver — shekels ($2750), equal to $33,000 as to our standard of wages. See MONEY.

Dēl'uge. Flood (Heb. HAMMABAL, the fullness of waters), from YUBAL, a river (fullness). Deluge is used instead of flood.



KING AND COURT OF ASSYRIA DIVINING WITH A CUP.

The belief in a deluge of greater or less extent is of very ancient date, in all nations who have kept records, or have traditions. It is often noticed in the Bible, as a fact from which a great lesson is to be learned (Matt. xxiv. 38), and its history is given in Gen. vi. viii. The account next in value to this is that of the Greeks (Ovid) — the flood of Deucā'lion and Pyr'rha. The Hindus (Sir Wm. Jones, Asiatic Res. iii. 116) also have an account, which, with the Greek, agrees with that in Genesis in many points. The Parsee account says the flood washed away all the wickedness which Ah'rĭmăn (the Evil One) had brought about. The Chaldee (Jos. Ap. i. 19), that Noa saved Sem, Japet, and Chem. The Assyrian is (Eusebius, Ev. Præp. c. ix.) similar. The Scandinavian, Mexican, Peruvian, and others, have each to tell of a great flood, and a few persons saved.

God sent the deluge as a punishment for sin, destroying all flesh but such as he directed Noah to place in the ark. The time occupied was 358 days, 7 days less than our year, or a year and ten days by the Jews' calendar. Geological records (in the rocks, etc.) show the results of many floods in the past history of the earth. Vast extends of the earth's surface have been raised or depressed in modern times (in Chili 100,000 sq. miles, 2 feet high), and the work of sinking is now going on in Holland. The temple of Jupiter, near Naples, shows that it has been sunk, with the island on which it stands, under the waters of the Bay of Baiæ.

Dēlus (G. delos, visible). The smallest of the Cyclades, islands in the Grecian Archipelago, the chief seat of the worship of Apollo and his sister Diana (1 Macc. xv. 23). The island was said to have suddenly appeared anciently, as several others have in our time. It was the centre of an extensive commerce B. C. 146. The temples in honor of the gods of Greece were very fine, and were most romantically situated.

ENTRANCE TO A TEMPLE.

Demē'trius (votary of Demeter, Ceres). Maker of silver shrines of Artemis at Ephesus (Acts xix. 24). They were small models of the great statue of Diana. He made an adroit speech against Paul, exciting their religious and selfish feelings against the new sect, which aimed to spoil the business of shrine-making. — 2. Another Demetrius is commended by John as having a character so purely Christian as to carry its own testimony with it (3 John 12). — 3. DEMETRIUS SOTER, king of Syria, son of Seleucus IV. (See SYRIA, and ANTIOCHUS). — 4. D. NICATOR, son of No. 3, who was excluded by Alexander Balas from the throne until B. C. 146. He first treated the Jews well, but afterwards so badly that they took sides with Antiochus Theos. Killed at Tyre, B. C. 126.

Dē'mas, DEMETRIUS, or DEMARCHUS, was a companion of Paul (Philemon 24; Col. iv. 14; 2 Tim. iv. 10). One of Keble's grandest hymns is founded on the association of Demas and Luke with Paul in his early trials, and the desertion of Demas afterwards.

Dē'mon (Gr. daimona, god). At first the supreme, then a god, and afterwards spirits believed to be between gods and men; a kind of messengers who were guardian deities of men and cities; and finally, evil demons. Some believed them the spirits of evil men after death. The word or idea was used to denote fortune, chance, or fate. In Hebrew it is used for a pestilence (Ps. xci. 6), idols (xcvi. 5; Lev. xix. 4), God (troop in A. V.), the goddess of fortune (Is. lxv. 11), devils (Deut. xxxii. 17), satyrs (Is. xiii. 21; xxxiv. 14). The Hebrews believed them evil spirits. In the N. T. they are spirits, enemies of God, with power to afflict men with disease and sin. Called devils in 1 Cor. x. 20; 1 Tim. iv. 1; Rev. ix. 20. The modern idea is, that there is but one devil, although innumerable demons. God and his angels are enemies to the devil and his angels, the demons.

The angels are sent by God to minister to the heirs of salvation; it is the Spirit of God which gives his people the character by which they are known. The devil and his demons are discovered in the delusions and great oppression which men suffer from their power.

TURTLE-DOVE.

Demō'niacs. Men under demons' power, who are made deaf, dumb, blind, frenzied, imbecile, epileptic, hypochondriac, or suffer both in body and mind. Demons are not known to the senses, nor their powers from natural causes; and the Scriptures do not give a clear idea of them. Some suppose that the demoniacs were madmen. Some also ascribe all kinds of disease to the work of demons. Jesus said that part of his work was to cast out demons (Matt. xii. 28).

Der'be. Lycaonia, on the road from Tarsus to Iconium (Acts xiv. 6), which passes through the Cilician Gates. Derbe stood where the pass opens upon the plains of Lycaonia. Gaius belonged here (Acts xx. 14).

Des'ert. Four Hebrew words are translated desert: 1. ARABAH. The Jordan valley; Jericho on the S., and Bethshean on the N. (Ezek. xlvii. 8; Is. xxxv. 1, 6; xl. 3; xii. 19; Jer. ii. 6; v. 6).—2. MIDBAR. The wilderness of the wanderings, where the Israelites had flocks and herds during the whole passage from Egypt to Canaan (Ex. iii. 1; v. 3; x. 26; xii. 38; xix. 2; Num. xi. 22; xxxii. 21; xxx. 15).—3. CHARBAH. Waste places (Ps. cii. 6; Is. xlviii. 21); W. of Sinai (Ez. xiii. 4; Job iii. 14).—4. JESHIMON. Waste places each side of the Dead Sea (Num. xxi. 20; 1 Sam. xxiii. 19). More expressive of utter desolation than any of the others (Deut. xxxii. 10).

Des'sau. Judah (2 Macc. xiv. 16). Nicanor's army encamped there. Supposed to be Adasa.

Deū'el (El knows). Father of Eliasaph (Num. i. 14). REUEL.

Deuterŏn'omy (Gr., second law). Fifth book of the Pentateuch. Named in Hebrew ELLEH HADDEVARIM, these are the words. See HISTORY.

Dev'il (Gr. diabolos, slanderer, false accuser). Called Satan (adversary) by the Hebrews, Shatan by the Arabs. This character expresses the antagonistic and malicious nature of the enemy of God and man. See DEMON. Some (with the Manicheans) believe that he is an independent, self-existent spirit of evil; others do not, because there can be but one infinite being. He is also called the Angel of the Bottomless Pit, Prince of this World, God of this World, Prince of the Power of the Air, Dragon, Evil One, Apollyon, Abaddon, Belial, Beelzebul. The word Satan is used, generally, in the O. T. to mean an adversary. Hadad the Edomite was an adversary (Heb. Satan) to Solomon (1 K. xi. 14); David is suspected of being an adversary to the Philistines (Satan in 1 Sam. xxix. 4); the angel of the Lord was a satan (adversary) to Balaam (Num. xxii. 22); a wicked man is a satan in Ps. cix. 6. The wicked wives are adversaries (satans, diabolons) in 1 Tim. iii. 1; false accusers (2 Tim. iii. 3, and Titus ii. 3); and Jesus said one of the 12 was a devil (diabolos). The Hebrew by using the article makes a difference between a satan, an adversary, and the Satan, a person, the chief. In Zech. iii. 1, 2, it is the Satan; and so in Job i., ii., and in 1 Chr. xxi. 1; Matt. iv. 1–11; Luke viii. 12; John viii. 44; Acts xiii. 10; Eph. vi. 11; 1 Pet. v. 8; 1 John iii. 8; Rev. xii. 9. The Devil is said to be spiritual, not spirit, not eternal. He works by deceiving, keeping in ignorance, evil thoughts, unholy desires, anger, pride, revenge, discontent; and also in physical ways, producing disease (Job ii. 7; Luke xiii. 6; Acts x. 38), which is sometimes used for a divine chastisement (1 Tim. i. 20). God is the only supreme self-existence, and Satan, being an adversary, will be overcome, when he has served the will of God, and will go down into the abyss with death and hell, into utter and final annihilation (Rev. xx. 2, 10, 14).

Dew. Dew falls plentifully in Palestine, at night, in spring and autumn, but very little from May to August. It falls some weeks before, and also after, the rains, so shortening the dry season. Used as a figure of God's goodness (Hos. xiv. 5), and in Job, of his prosperity (xxix. 19); in Ps. cx. 3, of freshness and energy, of brotherly love, in Ps. cxxxiii. 3; and as a sign of calamity, if wanting (2 Sam. i. 21).

Dī'adem (bound around). Crown. Only four passages have this word, and they might be read, "fillet," "mitre," "tiara," or "turban," the original meaning rolled together, or around, like the modern Eastern head-dress (Is. iii. 23). The diadem worn by kings as a badge of absolute power was a band about two inches wide, of silk, ornamented with gold, tied behind (see GOWNS). The ends of the ribbon are frequently shown on coins. Gibbon describes one as 'a broad white fillet, set with pearls," like No. 5. Nos. 1, 2, and 3 are Egyptian; 4, 5, 6, Assyrian; 7, from a coin of Tigranes, king of Syria; 8, sculpture at Persepolis; 9, Roman, civic, or leaves, from a coin.

Dī'al (Heb. MAALOTH, degrees). The first mention of the sun-dial is B. C. 540, among the Babylonians. Herodotus says the Greeks adopted it from them, and also the division of the day into 12 parts, being introduced by the Chaldean astronomer Berosus. The first notice of the hour is by Daniel (iii. 6). The degrees of Ahaz (2 K. xx. 11) cannot be explained. It may have reference to a dial with degrees numbered. This, it is supposed, might have been a present from Tiglath Pileser, the ally of Ahaz, and made in Babylon.

Dian'a (Roman-Greek, Artemis). Twin-sister of Apollo, the sun-god. She is the goddess of the moon. The Assyrians named them Adrammelech and Anamelech. Diana was called the goddess of hunting, chastity, marriage, and nocturnal incantations. In Palestine the name was Ashteroth. The services were performed by women (melissai), and eunuchs (megabissoi), with a high-priest (essene). The great temple at Ephesus, and grove at Daphne, were the most noted shrines of this worship. The image at Ephesus was said to have fallen from heaven. The great temple was 425 by 220 feet, and had 127 columns of marble, each 60 feet high. See EPHESUS.

DIANA.

Dib'laim. Mother of Hosea's symbolical wife Gomer (Hos. i. 3).

Dib'lath. By some supposed to be the same as Riblah. By others it is located in Moab, where it is applied to a district in which was Almon-Diblathaim (Num. xxxiii. 46), and Beth D. (Jer. xlviii. 22). S. E. of Heshbon.

Dik'lah (palm-tree). A district in Arabia, extending along the Red Sea from Edom to Medina, called Dakalah, from its palm-groves. Another district in Yemen, now called Minair, and also fruitful in palms, is thought to be the real location; while there is a tribe of Arabs called Duklai. (Burckhardt; Gen x. 27, 31; 1 Chr. i. 21.)

Di'nah (acquitted). Daughter of Jacob by Leah. Her history is a tragedy (Gen. xxxiv.). Her two full brothers took her part against Shechem, and for their deceit and cruelty were condemned by Jacob on his death-bed. Among all tribes of the East, to this day, any wrong to a sister must be avenged by her brothers or father, or the whole family is disgraced. She may have gone with Jacob into Egypt (xlvi. 15, but she is not mentioned again, nor is her death recorded.

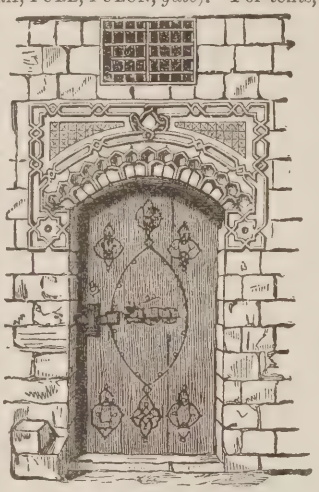
Dionys'ius, The Areop'agite. (Acts xvii. 34.) Dionysius or Bacchus. He was one of the supreme court of the Areopagus, and one of Paul's converts at Athens. A. D. 420, a writer called Pseudo-Dionysius wrote a book in the name of the disciple, which for a long time was believed genuine, but is now condemned.

CLOAK.

Disper'sion, The Jews of the. Those who remained in Babylonia after the return from captivity were called the "dispersed" or "of the dispersion," or in Heb. "stripped naked." Removed in Deut. xxviii. 25; Jer. xxxiv. 17. This included the 12 tribes. The Jewish faith succeeded to the kingdom of David at the return of the remnant. Faithful Jews everywhere contributed the half-shekel to the temple services (Jos. Ant. xviii. 9, 1). Three sections of the dispersion are noticed in history, of Babylon, Syria, and Egypt. The Greek conquests, by securing greater liberties to the Jews, extended the limits of the dispersed. See Antiochus, the Great. The African dispersion centred at Alexandria, the best fruit of which is the Septuagint. After the rise of the Jews, in Trajan's time, they were nearly exterminated, and the remnant driven into Europe. Those in Rome followed Pompey after his victories in the East. They were banished from the city under Claudius, because they "were continually raising disturbances, Chrestus being their leader." Suetonius, c. 25.) Probably on account of their opposition to the preaching of Paul and others. The dispersion influenced the spread of the gospel, because the apostles and preachers followed the Jews into "all the world" (Acts 11).

Dī'ves (Gr. rich), a word which Jesus used in the parable of Lazarus and the "rich" man (Luke xvi. 19). Since Chaucer's time (see SOMPNOURE'S TALE, "Lazar and Dives") it has been used in theological literature as a proper name.

Divinā'tion (Heb. kesem, to divide). The art of pretending to foretell future events, from the appearance of cards, dice, liquids in a vial, or sediment in a cup (Gen. xliv. 4), which had magical writing or engraving on it; of the earth, sea, and sky; entrails of animals; the flight of birds; of graves; in dreams (Num. xii. 6), ("good dreams are one of the great parts of prophesy"—Koran); by talismans, images, oracles; by arrows (see Assyrian sculptures, where the king holds divining arrows, or a rod); and also by magic arts. Plato calls it science without reason. It was thought that the gods gave signs, all through the universe, of future events, and that men of observation and study could read these signs. Moses condemned the whole system, and those who practiced it as impious impostors (Deut. xviii. 10–12). The superstition is found among all people, and is even now practiced under the name of clairvoyants, second-sight, trance-mediums, seventh daughter, or son; by cards, water, rods, the palm, etc. The result is the same in all ages, a certain loss of judgment, purity, and piety, and is as hateful now as ever (1 Sam. xv. 23). Divination by lot seems to be an exception, and is said to be divine (Prov. xvi. 33), and was conducted by the Hebrews solemnly and with religious preparations (Josh. vii. 13), as in the case of Achan, and of the division of the Promised Land (Num. xxvi. 55), the election of Saul (1 Sam. x. 20), and the choosing of Matthias to the vacant apostleship. (Acts i. 26.)



Many appearances are recorded as of the direct work of God, as the serpent rod of Moses; leprous hand; burning bush; plagues; cloud; Aaron's budding-rod; the dew of Gideon, etc., and also visions (Num. xii. 6). See CUP.

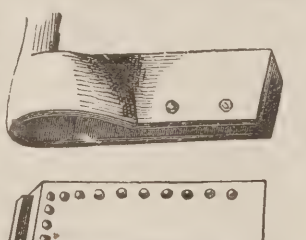
Do'eg (fearful). Chief of Saul's herdsmen (1 Sam. xxii. 9). He killed the priests of Nob (85, and their families also), at the command of Samuel. He was a proselyte to the Jewish faith.

Dog (Heb. KELEB, seizer; Ar. KEIB). Always the humble friend and servant of man. Sculptured on Egyptian and Assyrian monuments. Mentioned as shepherd-dogs by Job (xxx. 1); by Moses as property (Deut. xxiii. 18), and by Solomon (Eccles. ix. 4). The vile rulers of Israel were compared to dogs by Isaiah (lvi. 10, 11). The dog runs, half wild, in the streets of the East, never caressed or made a pet of, and seldom admitted to a house or tent. They eat almost anything, even each other, if a dog strays from his proper district. Jezebel's fate (2 K. ix.) might be repeated any day or night in any city of the East.

Door (Heb. SHAAR, to divide, gate; PETHAH, entering; SAPH, threshold; DALETH, to hang down, as a curtain, a door; TERA, PULE, PULON, gate). For tents, the door was an opening in the side, and for houses, it had a threshold, side-posts and lintel; generally of wood, sometimes cedar, handsomely carved; and also a cloth for inside use. In the Hauran, doors are now found of stone, on hinges of stone, dating from antiquity. In the East they are generally small and mean in appearance compared with ours, or with the interior to which they open.



MODERN EGYPTIAN DOORS.

The gates of cities are built strong, with towers and chambers (2 Sam. xviii. 24), and rooms inside for public assembly, hearing the news, buying or selling, or judicial affairs. They are the same in Assyrian cities, and in temples highly ornamented with sculpture and colors. The doorway in the engraving, from the ruins of the palace (or temple) at Koyunjik (a part of Nineveh), shows the magnificent style of sculpture, in the use of ideal figures of men, animals, and birds. (See cut on page 41.)

In palaces the principal doorways were guarded by symbolic bulls, or winged gods. Images of the gods were hidden in the walls and floor as a kind of protection.

The Egyptian temple was built with massive walls, and the gate had strong high towers. The doors had double leaves, often plated with metal. They had locks and bars of metal.

The gates of Babylon are said to have been of bronze. On the doors of Egypt in our day there are sentences from the Holy Book, following the ancient custom (Deut. vi. 9; Is. liv. 12; Rev. xxi. 21; Lane, Mod. Egyptians, Wilkinson). Petitions were presented to the king at the gate; and it was sometimes made a place of refuge.

ANCIENT STONE HINGES.

The doors of Solomon's Temple are described as richly carved, and overlaid with gold (1 K. vi. 34, etc.). Those of the holy place were double. The Beautiful Gate of Herod's Temple is said to have been of bronze (Jos. Wars, v. 5, § 3), and required twenty men to move it.

The gates of precious stones of Revelations and Isaiah were suggested by the stone doors of the Hauran, which are often several inches thick, of fine hard bazalt, beautifully carved.

To open, or lift up as a curtain, a door to a coming guest, was and is an especial honor, as in Ps. xxiv. 7.

Dor (habitation). A royal city of the Canaanites (Josh. xvii. 11; 1 K. iv. 11), 14 miles S. of Carmel, 7 miles N. of Cæsarea, on the Great Sea. The ancient people were never expelled, though its king was defeated with others near the waters of Merom (Judg. i. 27), in Manasseh. They were forced by Solomon to pay tribute. It was the most southern city of the Phœnicians. The ruins extend half a mile along a hill. A tower, called Tantura (the horn), is the most conspicuous.

Do'than, Dothaim (two wells), 14 ms. N. of Shechem (Gen. xxxvii. 17). Joseph was sold there by his brothers to the Egyptians (ib. 25). Elisha, the prophet, lived at Dothan when Benhadad thought to capture him (2 K. vi. 8–23). Tell Dothan is at the S. end of a rich plain, separated by small hills from Esdraëlon, and its ruins are on a very large hill; with a fine spring at its foot. A massive ancient Jewish or Roman pavement can be seen in the road that runs near, from Peisan to Egypt.

Dove (Heb. YONAH). Two species are mentioned in the law: turtle-dove and pigeon. Both were to be used for burnt-offering (Deut. i. 14). It symbolizes the Holy Spirit, and the meekness, purity, and splendor of righteousness. Two ancient relics show its use as a national ensign, — one a Phœnician coin, where the dove, with rays about its head, and wings closed, stands on a globe; the other, a sculpture in the Hauran, where the dove's wings are spread, and it also stands on a globe, the rays behind terminating in stars.

Carrier-pigeons are figured in Egypt. A dove has carried a letter in two days from Babylon to Aleppo.

The Dove's Dung of 2 K. vi. 2, has been explained as chick-peas, or the roots of the Ornithogalum umbellatum, or Star of Bethlehem, used now by the poor. Pigeon cotes are common all over the East, made of coarse stone jars piled into a kind of house, by itself, or on a roof.

Drag'on (Heb. TANNIM, dragons). A mammal crying like a child, living in the desert (Is. xiii. 22; Job xxx. 29); probably the jackal, which has a mournful howl. Another (Heb. TANNIN) was a great sea-monster. Used as a metaphor of Pharaoh (Is. li. 9; Ez. xxix. 3), meaning the crocodile (Jer. li. 34). It is also used as a metaphor for the devil (Rev. xii.).

Dream. God needs no rest, and is as active when we sleep as when we wake, and so we may suppose that divine influences form our dreams, as well as direct our waking thoughts. God appeared to Moses, Abraham, Jacob, and Joseph in dreams.

The Greeks believed in similar divine visitations (Homer, Il. i. 63). Moses promised such visitations (Num. xii. 6); Peter (Acts x.), and Paul (2 Cor. xii. 1), had such dreams. Jeremiah condemns those who pretended to have revelations in dreams (xxiii. 25), and in visions, etc. (xxvii. 9), and Ezekiel also (xiii. 2–9). Modern Spiritualists pretend divine converse — perhaps through self-delusion — believing that the wild fancies of their trances are the work of the Divine mind.

Dress. Dress in Oriental countries has preserved a peculiar uniformity in all ages, from Abraham to the modern Bedouin. The monument at Behistun exhibits the antiquity of the present costume, which can be compared with that of figures of modern Syrians and Egyptians. The dress for men and women differed but very little; many articles, being worn by both in common, varied only by the manner of putting them on. Men wore the shawl over the head and shoulders, or over the shoulders, while the women used it around the waist.

The drawers are scant or full, gathered around the waist, and show, when on, as in the figure of the women in street costume. They are fastened just below the knee by garters.

The shirt reaches to or falls a little below the knees, and is worn outside of the drawers generally. When dressed in the drawers and shirt only, a person was said to be naked (Mark xiv. 51). They also wear a vest, like ours, buttoned up to the chin. The buttons are sewed on the edge of the garment, and passed through a loop, never using a buttonhole.

The coat has sleeves to the wrist, or longer, and skirts to the knees or ankles.

Over the coat is worn the girdle (Acts xxi. 11), which is two or three yards long and about half a yard wide, and is made of any material, from a strip of leather or a rope, to the finest silk, with embroidery. The coat, when cut off at the hips, is sometimes embroidered very highly. The same garment is worn by women, and is called Yelek. This is the robe of ceremony for both sexes, referred to in 1 K. v. 5, and 2 Chr. ix. 4, and (the long skirt) the present that Jehu gave the prophets of Baal (2 K. x. 22).

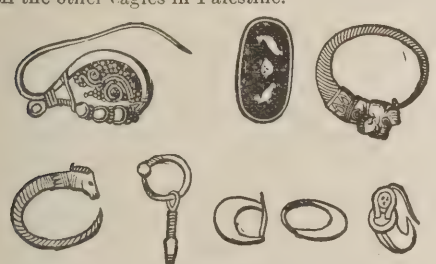
The cloak (ABBA, LEBUSH) is a large square bag, open on one side, with holes at the upper corners for the hands, and a band around the neck. Goat's or camel's hair is used in the desert (Matt. iii. 4) as worn by John the Baptist. Joseph's coat of (many) colors was of this pattern; and such rich garments are common among the wealthy, being made of silk or wool, and richly embroidered. The same garment is called a burnoos when it has a hood, as worn in Algeria. The hyke is a square shawl, folded cornerwise. The Bedouins use a cloth woven with threads of silver or gold, called Akal. The head is covered first with a white cotton cap (libdeh), over which is worn the tarbush (see HEAD-DRESS), a red woollen cap, generally with a blue tassel. Around the tarbush a narrow shawl (three or more yards long) is wound, forming the turban. Women cover themselves with a thin cloak and a veil, leaving only the eyes (or only one eye) visible, as in the figure (Oriental street costume). The ancient Jewesses did not veil their faces, but covered the hair only. Women wear the hair long, braided, curled, etc., and decorated with jewels and coins. Men generally shave the head (2 Sam. xiv. 26). The ancient Jews probably wore the hair as low as the ears or neck, and, as Josephus says of the body-guard of Solomon, used powder (Ant. viii. 7, 3). In mourning the head was shaved (Is. xxii. 12, etc.).

There are many ornaments in use for the hair, head, ears, nose, and neck, not very much different from those in use here, except the nose-ring. The eyebrows and lashes are frequently colored.

TUNIC. CAFTAN. COAT.

The feet are loosely covered, and are seldom deformed by tight shoes. The inner slippers are very sort, and only worn in the house; the overshoes and boot being worn out-doors, and always left at the door. Stockings and leggings for cold weather are in common use.

Sandals are still used in the house, but could never have been in common use out-doors, because of the many thorns and briers. The Kubcobs are high wooden stilts, used in the bath, or on wet floors. See SANDALS.



E.

Eagle (Heb. NESHER; Ar. NISS'R, to tear with the beak). Several species in Palestine. 1. Imperial: 2. Short-toed; 3. Golden; 4. Spotted; 5. White-tailed; 6. Bonelli's Eagle; 7. Gier Eagle, or Egyptian Vulture, and others. The Nesher is not an eagle, but a Griffon-vulture, which is found in all hot countries. It measures nearly eight feet extent of wing. The allusion in Matt. xxiv. 28, is to vultures, because eagles do not gather more than two or three, while vultures assemble in large flocks. In Micah i. 16, its bare head is alluded to. Job (xxix. 27–30) mentions its strong eye-sight and wing. "The cliffs are perforated with caves, at all heights, wholly inaccessible to man, the secure resting-place of hundreds of noble griffons." (Tristram, Land of Israel.) The god Nisroch which Sennacherib, the Assyrian, specially worshiped, was a vulture-headed figure, with wings. Ezekiel and John use this vulture as one of the heads in their symbolic figure (Ez. x. 14; Rev. iv. 6). Its longevity is alluded to in Ps. ciii. 5. "Thy youth is renewed like the eagle's" (Nesher). They can always be seen in the East, any day of the year. Its care for its young is twice used as an example of God's fatherly care (Deut. xxxii. 11; Ez. xix. 4).

The Gier-Eagle (Lev. xi. 18) called in Hebrew and Arabic Rachmah, is the modern Pharaoh's Hen, or Egyptian Vulture. In Palestine, it is migratory, ranging from Asia Minor to Cape Good Hope. The Dayah is probably a kite (Lev. xi. 14), of which four kinds are known in Palestine. (See KITE.)

The Golden Eagle lives in pairs only, and requires a wide extent of country, five pairs occupying as much as twenty miles. It is smaller than the Griffon and not so strong.

The Short-toed Eagle is strong and handsome, about two feet long, dark-brown and marked with black spots. There are twice as many of these as of all the other eagles in Palestine.

EAR-RINGS.

Ear'rings (Heb. NEZEM). Earrings were made of gold, silver, brass or bronze, and glass, in many forms, from half an inch to three inches across. The nose-ring is peculiar in the East, and is mentioned in Genesis (xxiv. 47), where Abraham's servant gave one to Rebekah. With the exception of the nose-ring, men in Oriental nations have worn these ornaments from remote antiquity, as appears on monuments in Egypt and Assyria. Rings were especially used for purposes of superstition and idolatry. The ring of Abraxas is an instance of superstitious use, as employed by Christian Gnostics, and the museums of Europe and America have many specimens of similar design. Rings, coins, and medals are hung in strings around the neck, by the sides of the face, and across the forehead, sewed to the edge of the tarbush (see HEAD-DRESS). Some earrings are very large, two or even three inches across, and loaded with pearls, precious stones, or glass.

Earth (Heb. EREZ, Gr. GE). The whole visible surface of the globe, land and water. The Hebrew writers often used the term as we do, meaning a local and limited space (James v. 17; Lev. iv. 25), and especially in the account of the crucifixion, where the darkness may have been over all the land of Israel, but probably not over all the world (Matt. xxvii. 45; Luke xxiii. 44).

Earth'quakes. They have been frequent in all ages in Palestine, and their ravages may be traced at Aleppo (1616, 1812), Antioch (1737), Laodicia, Beirut, Sidon, Tyre, Safed, and Tiberias (1837). One is mentioned at the time of king Uzziah (Zech. xiv. 5); another 31 B.C., destroying a great part of Jerusalem, and killing 10,000 people. Josephus speaks of one about the time of the crucifixion (Ant. ix. 10, 4), when a large rock fell from Olivet.

East (Heb. KEDEM) (before or in front). By the east is often meant sunrise. So the Jews used to designate the lands lying east and north-east of Palestine. (Gen. xxv. 6.)

Ebony. True Ebony is a native of the coast of Malabar and Ceylon. The tree is large, nine feet in circumference, and shoots up 29 ft. before it branches. The branches are stiff, irregular, and numerous. It furnishes a fine material for inlaying; its closely grained wood being sometimes black, gray, or green.

Ecbata'na. Achmetha (Ezr. vi. 2). There are two cities of this name.—1. Capital of N. Media; Atropatene of Strabo; and the seven-walled town of Herodotus, said to have been the capital of Cyrus. Here the roll was found which proved to Darius that Cyrus had made a decree allowing the Jews to rebuild the Temple. Antique ruins of the most massive kind, now called Takht-i-Suleiman, are on a conical hill 150 ft. above the plain, enclosing 2400 by 1200 ft. There is a very clear artificial lake 300 ft. across. The walls of the Temple were of seven tints, in the order of the days dedicated to the planets—black, white, orange, blue, scarlet, silver and gold. So late as the 13th century it was an important city, called Gaza, Gazaca, Canzaca by the Greeks and Romans, and Shiz by the Orientals.—2. The southern city, capital of Greater Media, now called Hamadan, and one of the great cities of Persia, with 20,000 inhabitants. It was the summer residence of the Persian kings from Darius down. It was occupied by Alexander. The Jews say it was the residence of Ahasuerus, and show near it the tombs of Esther and Mordecai.

Eden (garden of God). Among all nations and in every religion is the idea of a paradise of purity and happiness. The location of the garden is not known. Dr. Robinson proposed as its site the ruins called Jusichel Kadimeh, in the valley of the Orontes, 30 ms. N. of Baalbek, 3 ms. S. E. of Riblah. There was a fortress there 396 ft. sq., with corner towers. Houses and streets can be traced among the ruins over a space of 2½ ms. Much of the material has been carried away to build a new town of Jusieh, 1 m. N.W. toward Riblah. Ptolemy, Strabo, and Pliny place Paradise in this district. It is now a desolate place, and water is found only in cisterns.—2. Beit-Jenn (the house of Paradise). S. W. of Damascus, on the E. slope of Mt. Hermon, on a branch of the Pharpar, near Mejdel.—3. Ez. xxiv. 23. In Assyria, with Haran Canneh and Sheba, trading with Tyre. Supposed to be Aden.—4. Beth E. A country residence of the kings of Damascus (Amos i. 5). There is a village of Ehden near the cedars of Lebanon, but it is not identified with any historical event.

MODERN EGYPTIANS.

E'dom. Idumea (Mark iii. 8). The name of Esau (Gen. xxv. 29–34). The country settled by his descendants. The ruddy hue of the mountains may have been the cause of the name, which means red. The ancient name was Mt. Seir, meaning rugged. On the E. side of W. Arabah, from Elath on the S. to Moab on the N., at the brook Zered (Deut. ii. 13, 14, 18), about 100 ms. long by 20 ms. wide. The whole country is rugged, and full of deep glens, but it is very fertile on the terraces; while the desert on each side is barren. The people lived on the rocky heights, in caves, and houses built on dizzy crags, and lived by their swords (Gen. xxvii. 40; Jer. xlix. 16); yet as Isaac promised, this land possessed "the fatness of the earth, and of the dew of heaven" (Gen. xxvii. 39). Bozrah was the ancient capital. Sela (Petra) was the stronghold, and Ezion-geber the seaport, where Solomon built a fleet (2 Sam. viii. 14; 1 K. ix. 26). The crusaders built a fortress 12 ms. N. of Petra on Mons. Regalis, now a ruin called Shobek. The people were always idolaters (2 Chr. xxv. 14; Jos. Ant. xv. 17, § 9). The temples and dwellings were cut in a soft rock; were large, well lighted, dry, and a safe protection against robbers.

E'drei. Bashan, one of its two capitals, the residence of Og (Deut. i. 4). In Manasseh (Josh. xiii. 12, 31). The ruins of Edhra are extensive and more important than any others of the region; on a rocky projection from the Lejah, 3 ms. in circuit, 30 ft. above the plain, which is wide and very fertile. Walls, roofs, and doors are of a dark stone. There were many public buildings.—2. Naphtali, 3 ms. S. of Kedesh (Josh. xix. 37).

Educa'tion. It was the law among the Jews to educate their children (Deut. iv. 9), but probably only in moral and religious discipline. The exception was in the case of those intended for priestly or civil office, as Moses, Paul, Ezra, Daniel. There were schools of prophets (singers?), one of which, kept by Samuel, David attended. The sect of Essenes instructed children.

ACHMETHA.

Eglon. Judah, in the Shefeleh (Josh. xv. 39; x. 3–5). Now Ajlan, ruins 10 ms. S.W. of Beit Jibrin, on the road to Gaza, from which it is 13 ms. Name of a very fat king of Philistia (Judg. iii. 14).

E'gypt. The country watered by the Nile below the cataracts of Syene. It is about ten miles in average width, fenced in by high walls of rock (the edge of the desert on the west and of the mountains on the east), and more than three hundred miles long, from the cataracts to the Mediterranean Sea.

Its history is closely associated with the early accounts of the Hebrews, from the time of Abraham's visit to the end of the Jewish nation. The records of its manners and customs, laws, and accounts of its antiquities, are very valuable to the student of the Bible, in confirming the truth of the Scriptures.

EGYPTIAN KING. RHAMSES IV

We learn from this source, as found in the writings of Herodotus and other ancient historians and poets, that Egypt was, in the time of Abraham, a rich and powerful country, with a numerous and civilized population, living in a land that was watered by the Nile, which inundated the whole country every year at a certain season; its kings were called Pharaoh (Phrah); slaves were held; cattle, sheep, horses, camels, and other animals were a part of their possessions; gold and silver and precious stones were abundant, in coins, ornaments, and decorations; and the accounts of their magnificent temples and tombs are confirmed by the ruins which make Egypt one of the most attractive and wonderful countries in the world.

The Scriptures inform us that Joseph was sold to some wandering Arabs, who took him (probably with others) to Egypt, where he was sold as a slave, to Potiphar, an officer of the court. His abilities and fidelity soon elevated him to the rank of an overseer in the royal household, when, on being charged with a crime of which he was innocent, he was thrown into prison, and, liberated after interpreting the Pharaoh's dream, restored to favor; appointed prime minister, and invested with the badges of office, especially a ring and robes of state, and given a new name or official title, which was ZAFNATH-PAANEAH (preserver of the world) (Gen. xli. 37–45). In confirmation of the story so far as the ring is concerned, we have relics of rings and chains, from the ancient tombs of Egypt, on one of which there is the name of a Pharaoh, in hieroglyphic writing, which is read as SUPHIS, with the title PAANEAH, and was found on a mummy in the royal cemetery at Memphis (Sakkara), and this ring is now in the Abbott Egyptian Museum of the Historical Society, New York

The mummy was cased in gold, even to the fingertips, and written all over with hieroglyphics, giving accounts of the virtues and services of the departed, and the honor in which the people held his memory. The ring was attached to a chain, which passed around the neck of the mummy, and the chain is now in the Leyden Museum.

SIGNET-RING OF SUPHIS.

The pictures of brick-making (see BRICKS) remind us of the period of bondage of the Hebrews. The ancient paintings on the temples and tombs include nearly every incident of domestic and public life, arts, manufactures, business affairs, war, and religion, carefully recorded in picture-writing.

The question as to whether the Jews of the Exodus had the requisite skill to make a golden calf, is answered by the monuments whereon are pictured Jews at work at the art of working in metals. They made, it is quite certain, many images of the sacred bull Apis, while slaves in Egypt, for use in the worship in various parts of the country (see SHISHAK).

The word mizraim (the two Egypts) in the Hebrew Scriptures is translated Egypt in many passages (Ez. xxix. 10, etc.). Misr is red mud in Arabic. The name on the monuments is KEM (black). Upper E. extended from the cataracts to Memphis, and was called THEBAIS; and Lower E. from Memphis to the sea, called the DELTA. Upper E. was also called PATHROS (Is. xi. 11). Land of Ham (Ps. cv. 23). The sign for Upper E. was a bent reed, and for Lower E. a bee (Is. vii. 18).

Ek'ron (Heb., eradication). A royal city in the north of Philistia (Josh. xiii. 3), now Akir, built on the ruins of past ages. Baalzebub was worshiped here. Ekron was the last place to which the Ark was carried before it was returned to Israel.

KINGS IN CAPTIVITY.

E'lam. Oldest son of Shem (Gen. x. 22). His descendants peopled the country along the Ulai, its capital being Shushan, one of the most powerful and magnificent cities of antiquity. The name is found in ancient inscriptions. Also called Nuvaki. The country extended from the Persian Gulf to Assyria on the N., to the Zagron Mts. on the E., and the Tigris on the W. The king of Elam, in Abram's time, was one of the most powerful in Asia (Jer. xlix. 34-39). The people were idolaters, and images are found in the ruins. Elamites were at the feast of Pentecost (Acts ii. 9).

E'lath. Idumæa, on the E. gulf of the Red Sea. First named in Deut. ii. 8. The reference in 1 K. ix. 26, shows that it was more ancient than Ezion-gaber. Solomon built a navy here. There is a garrisoned fort here now, called Akaba, for the benefit of pilgrims to Mecca.

El'der (Heb. ZAKEN; Gr. presbyter). An old man. A title of honor and respect given persons in authority (Gen. xxiv. 2, 7), as stewards or master-workmen. He was a political officer among the Hebrews, Moabites, Midianites, and Egyptians (Num. xxii. 7). The office is the keystone of the political system among modern Syrians, who use the name Sheikh, meaning old man, for the chief, or head of the tribe. Moses adopted it, and regulated it by laws (Ex. iii. 16; iv. 29). Their authority was almost unlimited, within the law and customs (Josh. ix. 18). They became the judges or magistrates of Canaan, in the local towns, sitting in the gates (Deut. xix. 12). In 1 Macc. xii. 6, they are called the Senate.

DEACON. The office of elder in the Christian Church was taken from the Jewish custom.

Elect' (chosen, selected). Election. Designation of persons to office (Acts ix. 15); of people or nations to the enjoyment of peculiar privileges (Deut. vii. 6–8); and of persons to eternal life (2 Thess. ii. 13). This subject is one of the mysteries of God, and cannot be so stated as to leave no uncertainty in the mind. The position is: That God will save a number of persons, and He does so according to a plan formed before the world was made; and He has never changed the plan, and never will (Eph. i. 4; 2 Tim. i. 9); their election is from grace and love, and not for any good of the person (Eph. i. 5); the redemption through Christ is included in the great plan. One chosen or set apart, "Behold my servant whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth." (Isa. xlii. 1). Those who are chosen or separated for salvation. "Shall not God avenge his own elect"? (Luke xviii. 7). Chosen as the object of mercy or divine favor; set apart to eternal life.

El'ephants (Heb. SHEN-HABBIM). Used in war (1 Macc. i. 17; iii. 34). See IVORY.

Eleutherop'olis. On the E. border of the plain of Philistia, at the foot of the hills of Judea, in S. Palestine, 25 miles S.W. of Jerusalem. Not named in Scripture, but was an important city in early Christian times, when its name was Betogabra (House of bread). Eusebius mentions it as the seat of a bishop, and reckons distances from it as a centre to other cities. Ruins are still seen of a fine chapel, and of a fort built by the Crusaders, 200 feet square, in the 12th century. Now called Beit-Jibrin, having about 50 houses. The great attractions are the caverns, or houses cut in the solid rock. Rooms 100 ft. or more in length, with smooth, ornamented walls, and lofty arched roofs; some 40 to 70 ft. by 60 ft. high; most of them lighted by openings in the roof, and connected by doors. Jerome says they were built by Idumæans.

Eleu'therus. River in Syria (1 Macc. xi. 7; xii. 30). Strabo says it divided Syria from Phœnicia. It is now Nahr el Kebir (great river), rising in Lebanon, passing through the entrance to Hamath (Num. xxxiv. 8), emptying into the Great Sea 18 miles N. of Tripoli.

Eli (high). A high-priest descended from Aaron (1 K. ii. 27; 2 Sam. viii. 17). He was a high-priest when the Ark was at Shiloh (1 Sam. i. 3), and was the first in the line of Ithamar, Aaron's youngest son, the other lines having failed. Eli was also civil judge, or supreme ruler of the nation after the death of Samson, which office he held 40 years (Septuagint says 20). It may be that he was high-priest 20, and judge also 20 after that, making 40 in all. He was a religious man, but had an easiness of temper which was very damaging to his usefulness in his high office, and led to the outrageous conduct of his sons, Hophni and Phinehas, whom he had appointed to places of honor and authority; and so excited the contempt and dislike of the people against them, which brought down the judgment of God on the house of Eli. The Ark was taken, and the two sons of Eli were killed by the Philistines, and Eli died of a broken heart at the news, in his 98th year (1 Sam. iv.). Abiathar, the last of this line, was removed by Solomon, and Zadok, of Eleazar's line, was appointed in his stead.

EGYPTIAN PRIESTS.

E'li la'ma (my God) sabachthani (wherefore hast thou forsaken me?). Words uttered by Christ on the cross (Matt. xxvii. 46; Ps. xxii.).

Eli'hu (Jehovah). 1. Son of Barachel (Job xxii. 21). He was one of the chief debaters with Job, and the youngest in the party. What he said came nearer to the point than many things said by the elders, and he was honorably excused from the sacrifices required of the others after Job's recovery (xlii. 7–9). —2. Son of Tohu (1 Sam. i. 1).—3. (1 Chr. xxvii. 18.) "Of the brethren of David."—4. Captain of the thousands of Manasseh (1 Chr. xii. 20). A Levite (1 Chr. xxvi. 7).

Eli'jah (Heb. ELI'AHU, God-Jah, El-Jehovah). (1 K. xviii. &c.; 2 Kings i. ii.; Matt. xi. 14; Luke i. 17.) ELIAS in the N. T. Called the Tishbite, from his native city Thisbe, in Galilee. He appears in Sacred History as the great prophet and reformer, whose sole object was to awaken Israel to the conviction that Jehovah is the only God, and that idols and idolatry were vain. He was the honored instrument of several instances of miraculous power, and was exempted from death by being translated, 895 B. C.

Elim (trees). Had twelve fountains (not wells), and a grove of palms, being a kind of desert paradise (Ex. xv. 27). Wady Shurundel has now several fine fountains, and more trees, shrubs, and bushes than any other spot in the desert. The plain ends here, and the mountain begins.

Eliz'abeth (fullness of God).—1. Wife of Zaccharias, and mother of John the Baptist (Luke i. 5, 42), and cousin to Mary, mother of Jesus.—2. Wife of Aaron (Ex. vi. 23).

Elisens. Name of Elisha in the Apocrypha and N. T. (Luke iv. 27).

Eli'sha (God for salvation). (1 Ki. xix. 16–21.) Son of Saphat, and a native of Abel-Meholah, where Elijah found him, whose pupil and successor he was from 903 to 838 B. C. (1 K. xix. 16). He was with Elijah when he divided the Jordan, and was carried away by the chariot of fire and the whirlwind. Elijah's mission was to show that EL (Jehovah) was God of Israel,—Elisha's, to show that God would also be the salvation of his people. Elisha's chief work was beneficent working and kindly blessing. He performed many miracles between the years 890 and 840 B. C. He had no successor. The Greek church honors him as a saint, on June 14.

Eli'sha (firm bond). Son of Jowan (Gen. x. 4), who named the "Isles of Elisha," which traded with Tyre (Ez. xxvii. 7). Elis is from the same source, and Hellas, ancient Greece.

MUMMY.

Elkosh' (El's power). Birthplace of Nahum (1 i.). There is a place so named in Assyria (34 ms. N. of Mosul), and modern Jews and resident Chaldee Christians show a tomb of Nahum there. Jerome says the place was in Galilee, where there is now a traditional tomb of the prophet at KEFR TANCHUM, near Tiberias.

Elm. Error for oak (Heb. ALAH) in (Hos. iv. 13).

Elō'him. A plural word in Hebrew, meaning the true God.

Elo'i. When applied to heathen idols, it means gods. My God (Mark xv. 34).

Embalming (em-bä-ming). Was the art of preserving, by spices, gums, etc., dead bodies from decay. Two instances are mentioned in the O. T.: Jacob's and Joseph's bodies (Gen. l. 2, 26). The soft parts of the interior were removed, and spices, gums, etc., filled in their stead, and the whole was then steeped for 70 days in natron (petroleum or asphaltum), after which the body was carefully wrapped in strips of linen, dipped in gum, and delivered to the friends, who put it in the coffin, which was of wood carved and painted, or of stone, sculptured. The whole art was carefully guarded by strict laws. The body could only be cut by an authorized person, with a stone knife (see KNIFE). Embalming was not practiced by the Hebrews. Asa was laid in a bed of spices (2 Chr. xvi. 14), and Jesus had a hundred pound weight of spices placed in the tomb (John xix. 39, 40).

The Egyptians practiced the art because of their belief in the doctrine of transmigration of souls.

Embroidery (Heb. ROKEN), (Ex. xxxv. 35). Needlework. Two kinds of extra fine cloth were made; one by the roken (embroiderers), of various colors and figures, called rikmah; and the other by the chosheb (cunning workmen), into which gold or other metallic threads are woven, besides the usual colors, both of which were made in the loom. The needle was used where the figure was wanted on one side only of the cloth. Wilkinson says that "Many of the Egyptian stuffs presented various patterns, worked in colors by the loom, independent of those produced by the dyeing or the printing process, and so richly composed that they vied with the cloths embroidered by the needle." The art was known in Assyria also, as the sculptures show. Ezekiel mentions embroidered work as the production of Egypt and Assyria, imported by way of Tyre (Ez. xxvii. 7, 23, 24). See DRESS.

EMBROIDERED ROBE.

Emmā'us. Now called Kuriet El Enab, 7½ ms. west of Jerusalem. Josephus mentions it (Wars vii. 6, 9). Jerome mistook Nicopolis, the present Amwas, for this place, a proof of how early some Scripture localities of the N. T. times were lost. — 2. In the plain of Philistia; fortified by Bacchides (Ant. xiii. 1, 3; Mac. ix. 50). Destroyed A. D. 4, by the Romans. Rebuilt A. D. 220, and called Nicopolis. — 3. A village on the shore of the Sea of Galilee, S. of Tiberias, the same as Hammath (hot baths).

Encamp'ment (Heb. MAHANEH). The camp of the Lord's host, with the Lord himself symbolically resident among them.

The modern Bedouins now camp in any fit place, near water, if possible. The Sheikh marks his place by his spear standing in front of his tent. The walled cities were fortified camps. See EXODUS.

Engē'di (spring of the kid). In the wilderness of Judah, on the W. shore of the Dead Sea (Josh. xv. 62). HAZEZON TAMAR (the pruning of the palms) was its original name, from its palm-groves (2 Chr. xx. 2; Eccl. xxiv. 14; Jos. Ant. ix. 1, § 2). A rich plain half a mile square, gently sloping up from the water to the base of the mts., watered by a fountain a mile from the sea, up a ravine 400 ft. above the level plain; the water is sweet and warm (81° Fahr.). Ruins of the ancient city are scattered over the hills and plain. The soil is rich and fertile, and the variety of trees even now produced gives evidence of its ancient fruitfulness. The vineyards mentioned in Cant. i. 14, are still represented by fine vines. Its history is 4000 years, but may be told in a few words. The Amorites dwelt here (Gen. xiv. 7; 2 Chr. xx. 2). David cut off the skirt of Saul's robe in a cave at E. (1 Sam. xxiv. 1–4.)

Engra'ver (harash, in Ex. xxviii. 11, etc.). Any fine worker in wood, stone, or metal. The work was cutting names or devices on rings or seals; as on the high-priest's dress, breast-plate, etc. The art was known among all ancient nations, as evidences from the ruins witness. Many beautiful specimens of engravings on rings, etc., are preserved in the museums of Europe and in the Abbott Egyptian Museum, New York.

E'noch, HENOC (teacher). The eldest son of Cain, who named his city after himself (Gen. iv. 17). — 2. The son of Jared, and father of Methuselah, the seventh from Adam (Jude, 14). Enoch was a type of perfected humanity, "a man raised to heaven by pleasing God, while angels fell to earth by transgression." Some have thought Enoch was the god of the new year, because he lived 365 years, and did not die. The phrase "walked with God," is also used of Noah (Gen. vi. 9), and of Abraham (xvii. 1), and of others, as well as of people, and means a spiritual, upright life. The Greek and Latin fathers used the instances of Enoch and Elijah as evidences of the possibility of a resurrection and a future life. He is supposed to be one of the two witnesses alluded to in Rev. xi. 3. He is called Edris (the learned) in the Koran, and is credited with having invented the art of writing and the sciences of arithmetic and astronomy.

The Book of Enoch is accepted by the Abyssinians as a part of the Holy Scriptures; but it is placed in the Apocrypha by all other Christians, who suppose that it was written in the first century, by some devout believer, who gives a vast amount of information on the subject of beliefs in his days, and on this account the Book of Enoch is of great historical value.

En-rōgel (fuller's fountain). Spring near Jerusalem, at the junction of the valleys of Jehoshaphat and Hinnom (Josh. xv. 7; xviii. 16). Jonathan and Ahimaaz hid here (2 Sam. xvii. 17). Adonijah held a feast here, by the stone Zoheleth; his first and last attempt on the crown (1 K. i. 9). Josephus (Ant. vii. 14, § 4; ix. 10, § 4) mentions the royal gardens. The well is 125 feet deep, walled up square with large stones, and arched over. It overflows underground most of the time, and over the top only a little while in the rainy season. "It is a singular work of ancient enterprise" (Thomson, Land and Book, ii. 528).

Enshē'mesh (spring of the sun). Landmark on the N. of Judah (Josh. xv. 7). The only spring now known east of the Mt. of Olives is the Well of the Apostles, so called because it is supposed that Christ and his apostles rested there often, about a mile east of Bethany. The sun shines on the spring all day long.

En'sign. STANDARD. Several Hebrew words are so rendered: NES, an elevated signal, not a military standard, having on it a device, emblem, or inscription, as "Jehovah nissi" (Ex. xii. 15); the pole on which the brazen serpent was lifted is so called (Num. xxi. 8), which was an ensign of deliverance. DEGEL was the standard given to each of the four divisions (see ENCAMPMENT) of the Israelite host in the Wilderness (Num. i. 52). The Egyptian banners had on them sacred emblems — as a boat, an animal, a bird, or the king's name. The Hebrew banners are described by the Rabbis as follows: Judah, a lion; Reuben, a man; Ephraim, an ox; Dan, an eagle. It is more probable that each tribe and each company in a tribe had a particular ensign for its own use — as a figure or inscription. The Romans made images on their standards of certain gods and of deified men, which they worshiped. The Assyrian standards were very similar to those represented here as Egyptian and Roman.

ETHIOPIAN HOG.

Eph'esus. Near the middle of the Western part of Asia Minor, opposite the island of Samos. It was the ancient capital of Asia, which province under the Romans included only the W. part of the peninsula. Built partly on hills and partly on the plain. The climate was excellent. The country around the city was very fertile, and its position most convenient for traffic with other regions of the Levant. In the time of Augustus it was the great metropolis of this section of Asia Minor. Paul's journeys indicate the facilities for travel by sea and land.

The harbor was elaborately constructed, and at its head stood the famous temple of Diana (see view of the site). The first temple was burnt on the night Alexander the Great was born; the second, which stood in Paul's time, was built by the contributions of all Asia: 425 feet long by 220 wide, with 127 marble columns, each 60 feet high. Built in the Ionic order, perfected here first. The magnificence of this great temple was a proverb throughout the world. Here the people held an "uproar" against Paul for two hours (Acts xix. 23. See PAUL). Public games were held in the month of May, which was sacred to Diana, and Paul was probably there at that time (1 Cor. xvi. 8). Plutarch mentions the charms and amulets which were made and sold here, and accounts of faith in their value reach as far down as the 6th century. The coins of E. have many allusions to the Diana worship. Josephus says the Jews were numerous there. Disciples of John the Baptist were found here after the ascension of Christ (Acts xviii. 25; xix. 3). Paul established a church here, of which Timothy was at one time the head. It is supposed that St. John the Divine wrote his Gospel and Epistles here, the Apocalypse being written on Patmos. E. was one of the seven churches, and is named first; and its "candlestick" has been removed surely, for all is desolation now where the city once stood. The fine columns have been carried to other cities, chiefly Constantinople and Italy. Ruins cover the hills, and a swamp the plain. There is a tradition that the mother of Jesus was buried here, and also Timothy and St. John.

There is now a railroad from Smyrna to Aidin, with a station near the ruins of Ephesus, called Aysaluk (ā-sa-look, city of the moon). The whole district covered by the ancient city and suburbs is now almost a wilderness.

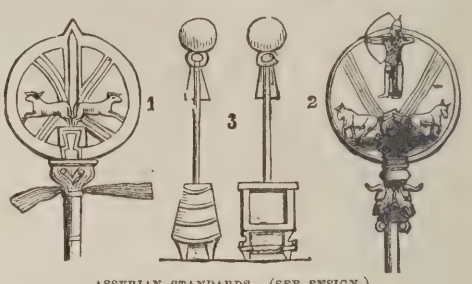
E'phraim (double fruitfulness). Second son of Joseph by his wife Asenath. Blessed by Jacob above his elder brother Manasseh (Gen. xlviii.). Joshua, the son of Nun, was of E. The portion of E. in Canaan was 55 ms. from E. to W. and 70 ms. from N. to S. in extent; elevated, hilly, and having the plain of Sharon, a narrow strip, on the W., Esdraëlon on the N., and the Jordan valley on the E., in the centre of the country, the whole called Mt. E. (1 Sam. i. 1; vii. 17; 2 Chr. xiii.; xv. 8). It had the "precious things of the earth, and the fullness thereof," as blessed by Moses. The finest and most fruitful of all the land. Afterward called Samaria. Its wealth and importance were increased by the presence of the Ark of the Covenant and the Tabernacle at Shiloh within its borders. The people were jealous, and at enmity with the tribe of Judah from the time of David. Very few attempts to conquer E. were ever made, and Shalmaneser only succeeded through the internal divisions of the kingdom of Samaria (B. C. 721. See SHECHEM, SAMARIA). — 2. A city on a hill N.E. of Jerusalem, 10 ms. See OPHRAH. — 3. A forest E. of Jordan, near Mahanaim, where Absalom was caught by his hair in a tree and was killed by Joab.

GAZA.

ROMAN STANDARDS.



Epicū'reans (Acts xvii. 18). Epicurus, an eminent Greek philosopher (B. C. 340–271), founded a new school of philosophy, which is named in his honor. "He had so many friends that even whole cities cannot contain them." He tried to find in his studies a practical guide to happiness. True pleasure and not absolute truth was his object. His was a system of materialism based on utility. He taught that the gods were many, and lived remote from men, in passionless repose, indifferent to human affairs. Temperance was necessary in order that we might enjoy the highest good, and the most durable pleasures. His purity in morals excited his enemies to declare him insensible to passion. The STOICS (led by Zeno) opposed the Epicureans, and taught the Fatherhood of God, brotherhood of men, and the supremacy of the soul. Christianity united the two sects, taking ideas from both. Among the Jews, the Sadducees held similar opinions.

E'ra. See CHRONOLOGY. The Christian era was fixed four years too late, by the Abbot Dionysius Exiguus, in the 6th century, A. D., and the true date now would be 1876 instead of 1872.

Esarhad'don (fire-given). King of Assyria, son of Sennacherib (2 K. xix. 37). He first appears in history B. C. 680, as king, after his father's murder (Is. xxxvii. 38). The monuments exhibit him as one of the most powerful of the Assyrian kings, who conquered all Asia, from the Persian Gulf to the mountains in Armenia and the Mediterranean Sea. He is the only Assyrian king who dwelt (a part of the time) at Babylon, where bricks are found bearing his name. It is while living there (B. C. 680–667) that Manasseh, king of Judah, was brought before him at Babylon (2 Chr. xxxiii. 11). He proved his great clemency by restoring Manasseh to his throne in Jerusalem, and by giving territory on the Persian Gulf to a son of Merodach-Baladan, whom he had conquered, and who submitted to him and became a refugee at his court. He was a builder of great works, such as his palace at Babylon, and three others, in different cities, for himself and his son; and one inscription mentions thirty temples in Assyria and Mesopotamia. These works were ornamented highly with silver and gold. The palace at Nimroud is the best preserved of any. Mr. Layard found its plan to agree quite closely with that of Solomon's palace (1 K. vii. 1–12), but much larger, the great hall being 220 by 100 feet, and the porch 160 by 60. The sculptures were winged bulls, sphinxes, and slabs, most of which were almost destroyed by fire. It is believed that Phœnician and Greek artists were employed as assistants on these works. His son, Asshur-banipal, succeeded him (SARDANAPALUS).

Esau (Heb. ESAV, hairy). Oldest son of Isaac, twin of Jacob, born B. C. 1836. The bitter enmity of the two brothers, and the strife between the two nations derived from them, were foreshadowed even in the womb (Gen. xxv. 22–27). He was called Edom (red), which name was given to the country that he afterwards lived in. At the age of 40 he married, against the will of his parents, two Canaanite women. Jacob was sent to Padan-aram, out of the way of Esau, who took another wife, Mahalath, his cousin, daughter of Ishmael (xxviii. 8, 9). He then went to Mt. Seir, where he was living when Jacob returned from Padan-aram, and had become rich and powerful. The brothers met on the east of Jordan (when Jacob again acted in a double-faced way), and parted to meet again only at the side of their dead father, twenty years after, at Machpelah. From this time he lived in Mt. Seir, but nothing is recorded of his later history. See EDOM.

Esdrae'lon. The Greek name of Jezreel (Judith iii. 9), the Great Plain of Josephus, the valley of Megiddo. It is very rich in soil, lying on a volcanic basalt, but there is not an inhabited village in its whole extent, which is triangular, 18, 15, by 12 miles, on the three sides. (See Map.) It is noted for the number and importance of the battles fought on its surface. "Warriors from every nation have pitched their tent in the plain of Esdraelon." The names Deborah, Barak, Gideon, Josiah, Holofernes, Vespasian, the Crusaders, Saracens, Turks, and French, give a hint of the events which have made the valley memorable.

ASSYRIAN STANDARDS. (SEE ENSIGN.)

Essē'nes. They combined the ascetic virtues of the Pythagoreans and Stoics with a knowledge of the Divine Law, and arose about B. C. 200. Their chief city was Engedi. The name is supposed to mean silent, mysterious, or pious (Dr. Ginsburg). The origin of the party was rather in a certain tendency of religious thought among all classes toward an ideal purity. Special doctrines had for their object a life of absolute purity and divine communion.

Jesus alludes to the Essenes in Matt. v. 34, "swear not at all," and in xix. 12, "who abstain from marriage for the kingdom of heaven's sake," and Paul in 1 Cor. vii., which is hardly intelligible without a knowledge of the tenets of the Essenes, and by James in v. 12, and the first church held all things in common as they did (Acts iv. 32–34). Their number was never larger than 4000. See JOSEPHUS, PLINY, and EUSEBIUS. They disappeared after the destruction of Jerusalem, and were not heard of again, although various orders of monks follow more or less strictly their rules and practices.

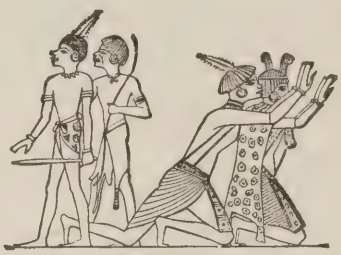
Es'ther (the planet VENUS, ASTER, ASTARTE, ASHTORETH, meaning good fortune). The Persian form of the Hebrew name HADASSAH (a myrtle). She was daughter of Abihail, son of Shimei, a Benjamite, cousin of Mordecai. Her parents did not return from captivity, but died, leaving her in care of her relative (cousin?) Mordecai. The Persian king having divorced his queen, Vashti (a beauty), for contempt, the royal choice fell on Esther, after passing many others by. In this position she delivered her people, who were still very numerous, from a threatened calamity, which was the origin of the yearly feast of Purim. See HISTORY OF THE BOOKS, Esther and Apocrypha.

EGYPTIAN STANDARDS.

Ethio'pia (burnt). In Hebrew CUSH. S. of Egypt, from Syene (Ez. xxix. 10). Libyan desert W., Abyssinian highland E. and S. The Hebrews traded with E. (Is. xlv. 14) in ebony, ivory, frankincense, gold, and precious stones (Job xxviii. 19; Jos. Ant. viii. 6, § 5). Settled by a Hamitic race (Gen. x. 6), dark (Jer. xiii. 23), men of stature (Is. xviii. 2), and fine-looking (xxxviii. 7). The Sabæans were the most noted tribe. There are ruins of many temples in E., built during the reigns of the Hyksos kings of Egypt. Queen Candace is mentioned in Acts viii. 27.

The official title of the queen was CANDAKE, and there was a line of queens who governed the country about the time of Christ, who successfully resisted even the Romans.

CANDACE (QUEEN).



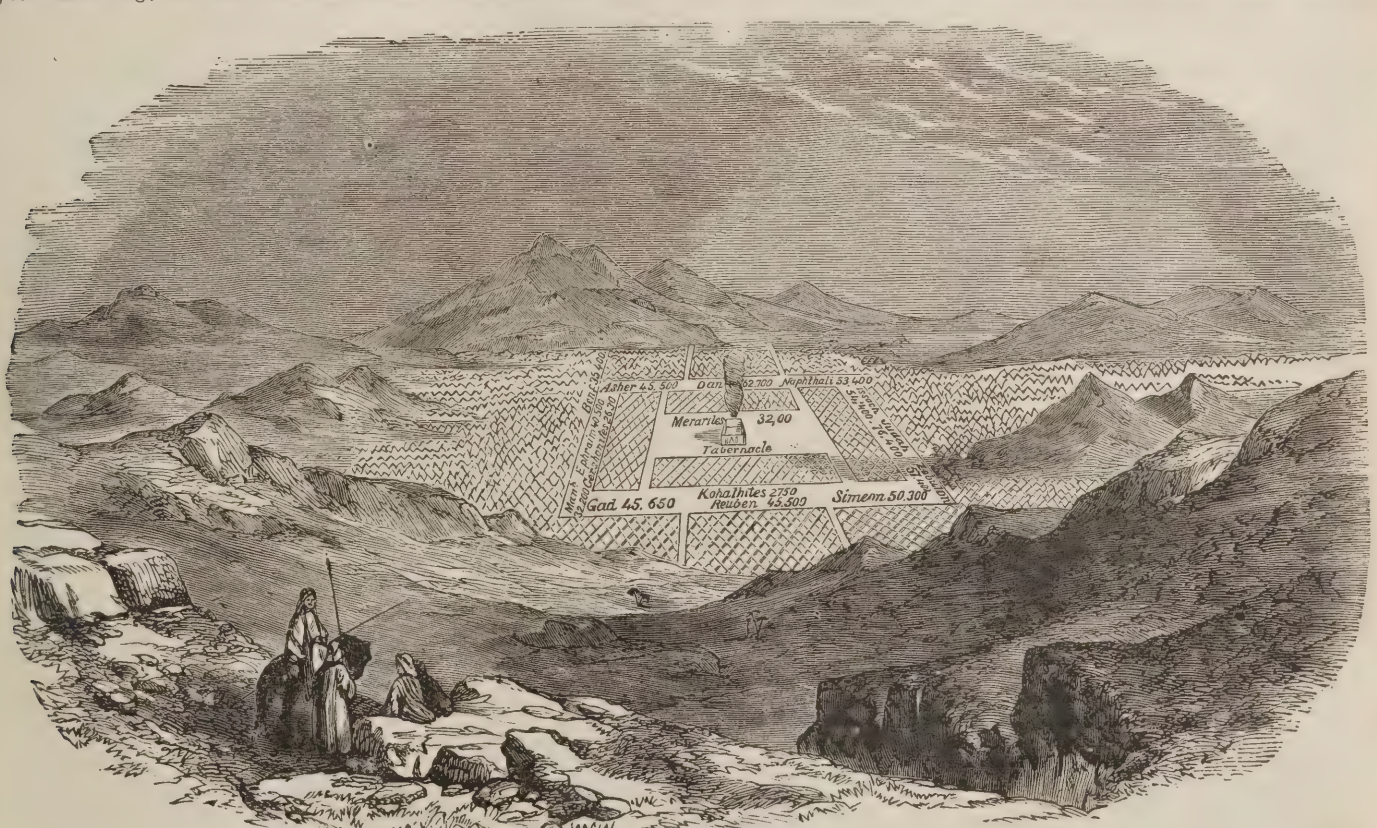
Eu'nuch (Heb. SARUS). Officer, chamberlain. The word indicates the incapacity which certain mutilation produces — a practice contrary to the law in Deut. xxiii. 1. The origin of the custom is ascribed to queen Semiramis, but is probably as old as Eastern despotism itself, which delights in servants who excite no jealousy. It is supposed that the prophet Daniel and his companions were so treated, because it was so prophesied (2 K. xx. 17). The ETHIOPIAN EUNUCH was probably an officer of the queen, perhaps a Jew.

Euphrā'tes (the good river). Now called Frat. In Scripture, the river. The largest, longest, and most important river in W. Asia. Rises in the mts. of Armenia, near Erzeroum and Mt. Ararat. Of two branches: one is called Frat, and Black River Kara su), and is 400 miles long; the other, Murad Chai (chief), 270 miles long; and both unite at Kebban Meden, in a stream 360 ft. wide, and from this point to the Persian Gulf it is 1000 miles, making in all nearly 1800 ms., 1200 of which is navigable for steamers. Nebuchadnezzar dug canals to carry the water of the annual inundation across the wide plains of Chaldea. Herodotus describes the river and its traffic (i. 185). First mentioned in Gen. xv. 18, in the description of the promised land (Deut. i. 7; xi. 24; Josh. i. 4). Fulfilled partially by Reuben (1 Chr. v. 9), and completely by David (Ps. cxxxvii. 1).

Evan'gelist (publisher of glad tidings). An order of men in the Christian Church. They were not attached to any particular locality, but worked wherever there was a field, by preaching or writing. Philip (Acts xxi. 8), and Timothy (2 Tim. iv. 5), and the four, Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, are examples.

Ēve (Heb. CHAVVAH, living). Name of the first woman. It is the feminine form of the noun which means life. There are two accounts of her creation in Genesis. 1. Gen. i. 27: "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them;" 2. ii. 18: "And the Lord God said 'it is not good that the man should be alone (his creation is noticed in verse 7), I will make him a help meet for him.'" Then, in verses 19 and 20, is the account of the creation of the beasts, and that among them there was not found a help meet for Adam. Verses 21 to 25 give the account of Eve's formation out of the rib of Adam. The story — or two stories — may mean simply that God holds both man and woman equal in duty and accountability, and one in nature and origin. Eve is not mentioned after the birth of Seth, and her death is not recorded.

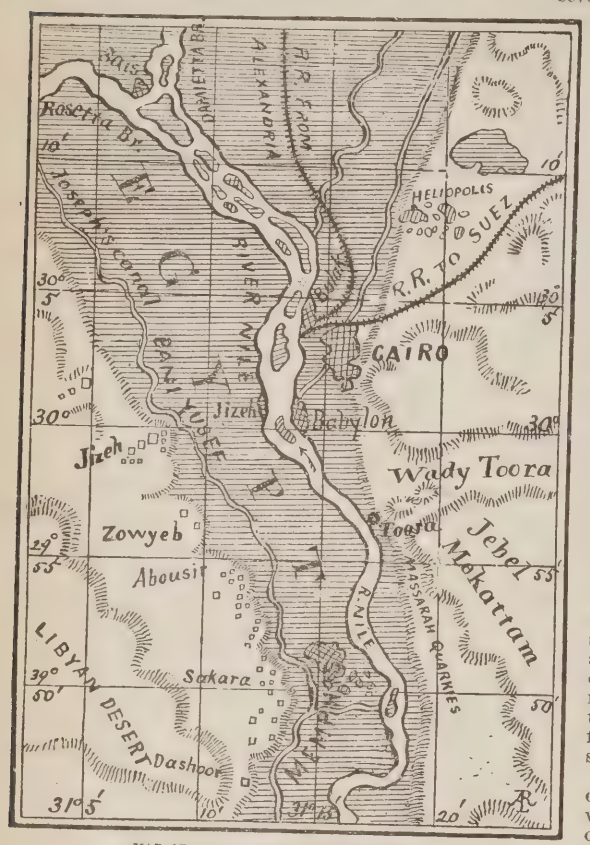
Excommunicā'tion. Putting one out of church society. The Jews had three modes: 1. For twenty-four minor offenses an offender was under NIDDUI. Keeping a fierce dog, swearing, etc., were instances. The penalty was to abstain from the use of the bath, the razor, wine, etc., and to keep at 6 feet (4 cubits) distance from every one. He could not worship in the temple in the usual manner, and this lasted 30 days. — 2. The second was CHEREM. He could not teach or be taught to work for or by any object not intended for food. — 3. The SHAMMATHA, an entire cutting off from the congregation. Moses did not make this law, but the natural right of societies for self-preservation gave rise to it. The cases in Num. xvi. (of Korah, etc.), Judg. v. 23 (Meroz), Ezr. vii. 26, x. 8; Ex. xxx. 33; and Lev. xiii. 46, xvii. 4, are precedents. One instance is recorded in the N. T., John ix., of the young man who confessed that Jesus was the Christ. The fear of the result prevented some from such a confession (xii. 42). The blessing in Luke vi. 22, refers to the three forms of this law. The excommunication founded by Jesus was to be executed only after due trial, and a settled contempt for the church in refusing to atone for a trespass which the person has committed (Matt. xviii. 15–18). The final act of exclusion was to be done only after two warnings. Paul commanded the same (1 Tim. i. 20; 1 Cor. v. 11; Tit. iii. 10), and frequently used the power. Restoration was possible, and is urged in 2 Cor. ii. 6. The censure of the church was not to include enmity, curses, and persecution, as among some sects, but rather to look upon the excluded "as a heathen and a publican," that may be brought in again. It is a spiritual penalty, not physical, separating from the communion of the church, aiming to benefit the person and the church, by excluding heresy and immorality, and only put in force by the authority of the church at large (by a vote?) and the sanction of the highest officer, whose sentence was declared in the congregation to which the offender belonged; and that penitence is a condition of restoration, which is to be as public as the exclusion.



ETHIOPIANS.

Ex'ōdus (going out). EXODE. The great deliverance of the children of Israel from the bondage of Egypt. For the book, see HISTORY OF THE BOOKS.

The date of the Exodus of the Hebrews from Egypt, led by Moses, is fixed by different writers: as Poole, B. C. 1652, Hales, 1648, Usher, 1491, Bunsen, 1320. The patriarchal institution ended and the era of the Law began at the Exodus — the family had become a nation. The departure was begun at Raamses (Rameses) in the early morning of the 15th of Nisan, which was from that time called the first month. Three stages brought them to the Red Sea, where they were overtaken by Pharaoh and delivered by Moses, as celebrated in the songs of Moses and Miriam (Ex. xv.).



The great difficulty in tracing the route of the Israelites from Egypt to Canaan has called out a large number of travelers in our day, who have minutely examined the district (or a part of it, omitting the region of the 38 years' wandering, because there are no records from which to form a base of exploration), and from their researches it is "possible by the internal evidence of the country itself to lay down not indeed the actual route of the Israelites in every stage, but in almost all cases and in some cases the very spots themselves."

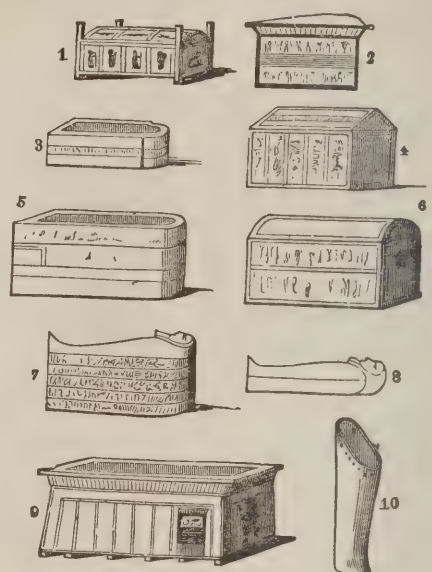
The question of the passage of the Red Sea is referred to MIRACLES.



MAP OF THE PYRAMID DISTRICT, EGYPT.

ETHAM was a district on both sides of the N. end of the Red Sea. The place of crossing might have been anywhere between Suez and Jebel Atakah, which is a steep, high promontory standing out into very deep water.

(bitter), and the rest at ELIM (stags), where there were twelve fountains, and a kind of desert paradise, among a grove of palm-trees. Wady Ghurundel has several fine fountains, a perennial stream, and more trees, shrubs, and bushes than any other place in the desert. Here the mountain district begins. The next camp was by the Red Sea, where, in a wild and lonely plain, there is a sublime view of Sinai's granite peaks on one side, and the blue sea on the other.

The WILDERNESS OF SIN is a continuation of this valley on the south, widening into the broadest plain in the whole region. Here they first murmured, and the quails were sent in answer to their cry, and the first fall of manna. DOPHKA and ALUSH were probably in the same plain. REPHIDIM (supports) is located in Wady esh Sheikh, the most spacious valley in this region, and the most fertile. Here the people found no water to drink, and Moses brought water out of a rock (Ex. xvii. 5, 6). The Amalekites attacked the people, and were routed. Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, visited him here and counseled him. They next pitched in the plain of Rahah (rest, Ex. xix.) in front of SINAI. Jebel Musa (Mount Moses), the Sinai of recent tradition, is in the midst of a group of mountains, and is 7000 feet high. Katerin is 8700, and Om Shomer is 9300 feet high. On the summit of Jebel Musa is a platform nearly 100 feet across, partly covered with ruins, a chapel at the east end, and a small mosque. Ras es Sufsafeh (peak of the willow) is the Sinai of many scholars, because from it the plain can be seen, and every other requirement of the text answered, and every incident illustrated by the features of the surrounding district. They stayed almost a year at Sinai. While Moses was on the mount, receiving the two tables, Aaron (his brother) made a calf of gold, probably in imitation of the Egyptians. Aaron's sons offered strange fire (Lev. x.), and were destroyed, and the second passover was held.

On leaving Sinai a certain order of march and of camping was adopted (Num. x.), and Hobab was engaged as a guide, to be unto them "instead of eyes" (ver. 31), as is the custom now in crossing the desert. From Sinai to Kadesh the route cannot be clearly laid down. After three days they pitched in Paran, at a place afterwards called TABERAH (burning, Num. xi. 3). Quails were sent here (ver. 31), the people suffered from a plague after eating them, and the place was named a second time KIBROTH-HATTAAVAH (graves of lust, ver. 33). The next station, HAZEROTH, has been identified with Ain Hudhera, a little fountain in a wild, dreary waste, among naked hills, 40 miles from Sinai. The place was noted for the foolish rebellion of Miriam and Aaron (xii.). The fountain of El Ain, north of Hudherah, is the most important watering-place in the district. The next station that can be located is EZION-GEBER, at the head of the Gulf of Akabah. Between this station and Kadesh, in the Arabah, there were many stations, and, as appears from the two accounts in Num. xxxiii. and in Deut. ii. 8, x. 6, they wandered up and down the valley many times.

COFFINS.

KADESH was the most important station after Sinai. From there the 12 spies were sent into Canaan, and from that station the 38 years of wandering began, of which there is no record (besides the ceremonial law) except the execution of the man who gathered sticks on the Sabbath day (Num. xv.), the rebellion of Korah (xvi.), and (either during that time or soon after) the writing of the ninetieth Psalm by Moses. The great desert from Akabah to Gaza is now called Et Tyh (the wandering), and it may be the very region; but having no names to locate or compare, there is nothing left us but conjecture.

CEDARS OF LEBANON.

SHUR (wall) is a name for the whole desert from Suez to Beersheba, N. of the plain Er Ramleh, also called PARAN. The first water was found at MARAH

They visited Kadesh a second time, where Miriam, the sister of Moses, died and was buried (Num. xx. 1). Moses brought water out of the rock, and the people and their beasts drank. Their flocks had survived through 38 years. Then they sent messengers to the king of Edom, asking permission to pass through his country, and making the fairest proposals, but they were denied their request (xx. 14).

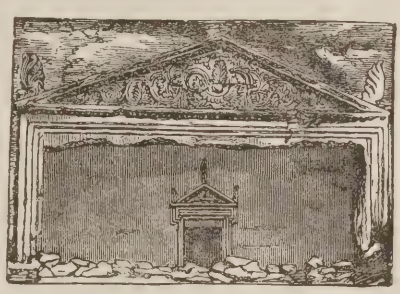
Leaving Kadesh they moved to Mt. Hor, where their first high-priest, Aaron, died and was buried, and Eleazar his son was invested with the "holy garments" and the office of his father. See AARON.

HOLY SEPULCHRE SEAL OF A. D. 1150.

The next place that is identified is the pass through the east wall of the Arabah, up into the Arabian desert—Wady Ithm—by the way of the Red Sea (to compass the land of Edom, xxi. 4). Here the fiery serpents were sent, killing many: and the brazen serpent was set up, which became a type of the greater salvation. IJE ABARIM was reached, and then the willow brook (ZERED), and soon also the ARNON, and they were out of the desert. Sihon, king of the Amorites, opposed their advance, and Israel smote him, and possessed his land from the Arnon to the Jabbok. They next conquered Og, the king of BASHAN. His "giant cities" are still standing, deserted but not ruined, all over the vast plain of the Hauran. The king of Moab sent the prophet Balaam to curse Israel as they were encamped in the plains of Moab, and he blessed them, but laid a snare which caught them, and caused the loss of thousands of lives (xxxi. 16).

SARCOPHAGUS FOUND AT SIDON.

Moses numbered the people in the plain of Moab, and found 601,730 men above the age of 20 (being only 1820 less than the number at Sinai, 39 years before), and of all these only three were among those who came out of Egypt, all the rest having fallen in the desert (Num. xiv. 29), leaving only Moses, Caleb, and Joshua. After looking at the land from the heights of Nebo, Moses died, and was buried (by the Lord), "but no man knoweth of his sepulchre" (Deut. xxxiv. 6). With his death the wanderings ended.



The route, except the 38 years of wandering, may be traced on the map.

The region west of the Arabah has not been explored, and it may be that the locality of the wanderings will be traced there, or at least as possibly on those high plateaux.

Eye (Heb. AYIN). Used as a symbol of many objects and ideas. Among the Hebrews a few uses were: 1. A fountain, or spring (AIN). 2. Color (Num. xi. 7; Prov. xxiii. 31). 3. Face; as in eye to eye (face to face), (Num. xiv. 14). 4. Look, as in Cant. iv. 9. 5. "In the eyes," means in his presence, or in his judgment (Gen. xix. 8, xxix. 20; 2 Sam. x. 3). 6. "To set eyes on one," is to look with favor (Job xxiv. 23), and also to express anger (Amos ix. 8). 7. Evil eye (Matt. xx. 15); wanton eyes, etc. In Zech. iv. 10, God's angels are "his eyes," and in Persia the ministers of state are "the king's eyes." In the East servants watch the hands of their master, receiving orders and directions by motion of the hand. PAINTING THE EYES is an ancient practice among Orientals, and referred to in 2 K. ix. 30, where Jezebel is spoken of as "painting her eyes," not "face," in Jer. iv. 30, where "rending the face," means "painting the eyes," and by Ezekiel in xxiii. 40. Lane says, of painting eyes: "Their charming effect is much heightened by the concealment of the other features (however pleasing they may be) and is rendered still more striking by a practice, universal among the females of the higher and middle classes, and very common among those of the lower orders, which is, blackening the edge of the eyelids, both above and below the eyes, with a black powder called kohl. The paint is made by burning a resin and catching the smoke on glass or any hard substance. Almond shells also make good black smoke. The black is moistened with rose-water. The ancient sculptures show the antiquity of the practice.

PAINTED EYE.

DOOR OF A TOMB.

Ezē'kiel (Heb. YEHEZEKEL, God will strengthen). One of the four greater prophets. Son of Buzi, a priest, and carefully educated. We know that he was in captivity, because his prophesy is dated on the banks of the river Chebar, in the 5th year of Jehoiachin's captivity. Josephus gives other particulars. His age is not known. It is supposed, from several concurring allusions in his writings, that he was twenty-five when carried to Assyria a captive, and thirty at the time he wrote his first prophesy. He was energetic, earnest, spiritually-minded. He prophesied twenty years, B. C. 595–575, ending with the 14th year after the last deportation from Judæa. The first 8 years were contemporary with Jeremiah. See HISTORY OF THE BOOKS, for the BOOK OF EZEKIEL.

E'zion-ge'ber (giant's backbone). At the head of the eastern arm of the Red Sea. Now Akabah (Num. xxxiii. 35; Deut. ii. 8; 1 K. ix. 26, xxii. 48; 2 Chr. viii. 17). Station of the Exodus. Port for Solomon's fleet. Jehoshaphat's fleet was broken here (2 Chr. xx. 37).

Ez'ra (help). 1. In the line of Judah (1 Chr. iv. 17). —2. The famous Scribe and Priest (Esdras in the Apocrypha), son of Seraiah 7 and descendant of Hilkiah 2, high-priest in Josiah's reign (Ezra vii. 1). His history is given partly in Ezra vii. to x. and in Nehemiah viii., xii. 26, 36. His narrative includes 80 years, during which period, in Persia, there were Cyrus, Cambyses, Smerdis, Darius Hystaspis, Xerxes, and Artaxerxes Longimanus. The last-named gave Ezra men, money, and letters of power, and permission to return and rebuild the house at Jerusalem.

He collected and revised the books of the O. T. Tradition says he died at Babylon (or Zamzumu on the Tigris), aged 120. A tomb is shown as his, 20 ms. above the junction of the Euphrates and Tigris.

The works credited to him are: 1. Founding the Great Synagogue. 2. Forming the Canon of the O. T. 3. Introduction and Use of the Chaldee instead of the Old Hebrew letters. 4. Authorship of Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Esther. Some also add Ezekiel and Daniel. 5. Institution of Synagogues.—3. Another Ezra was head of one of the 22 courses of priests which returned with Zerubbabel and Joshua.—4. One who assisted at the dedication of the repaired walls of Jerusalem (Neh. xii. 33). See HISTORY.

F

Fa'ble. A fiction intended to instruct or amuse. They are of two kinds, called the mythus, and the parable. The mythus grows from traditional sources, the parable assumes that what is related might have been true. The fable uses animals who are supposed to act and speak like men, and treats of affairs between man and man; the mythus includes imaginary persons, or animals, and the parable only deals with human beings as its actors, and exhibits relations between God and man.

The fable of Jotham about the trees of Shechem is the oldest extant (B. C. 1209), and as beautiful as any that has been made since (Judg. ix. 8–15). Ezekiel gives a fine instance in chapter xvii. 1–10. The most famous Arabian writer of fables was Lokman (B. C. 1025). The Greeks had Æsop and Hesiod (B. C. 550). See 1 Tim. iv. 7; Titus i. 14; 2 Pet. i. 16.

Face. The peculiar human feature. In the Scripture language the face is the presence; that is, to stand before the face is to stand in the presence. It means also favor; the prince's, or king's face (favor). To turn away the face is a sign of denying a favor. So the face of the Lord is his presence and favor. No one can see the face of God and live; that is, can stand in the presence of God (Gen. xxxii. 30).

Fair Ha'vens. Harbor on the south side of Crete, east of Cape Matala, and near Lasea (Acts xxvii. 8). Visited by Paul on his voyage to Rome, A. D. 60. (Gr. Kaloi Limenes.)

Fairs (Heb. IZEBONIM). Only in Ezekiel xxvii., where it is found seven times, once translated wares in verse 33. The word means exchange, and the sense of the chapter is much improved by this rendering.

Faith (Heb. EMUN, faith; EMUNAH, faithful; Greek elpis, faith or hope; pistis, one belief). Faith is the assent of the mind to the truth of God's revealed will. There are two kinds: 1. Historical, which assents to the statements about the life and works of Jesus and the apostles, as historical truths. 2. Evangelical, or saving faith, an assent to the truth of revelation, and an entire trust and confidence in God's character, and Christ's teachings, with an unreserved surrender of the will. Jesus Christ is then received into the heart as the Saviour, Prophet, Priest, and King, to be loved and obeyed. This is instrumentally a means of salvation, an essential grace, and a mainspring of Christian life.

Fallow-deer (Heb. YACHMUR). Permitted as food by the law, and supplied to Solomon's table (Deut. xiv. 5; 1 K. iv. 23). Two kinds of deer were known to the Hebrews in Palestine. Jacob refers to one in his blessing on Naphtali. Its beauty, speed, and agility are frequently used by the poets and prophets. The opening of the xlii. psalm is as beautiful as familiar:

> "As the hart pants after the water-brooks,
> So does my soul pant for thee, O God."

This was written by David when Saul was hunting him from one place to another like a deer or "a partridge." Figures of deer are sculptured on the ancient monuments in Egypt. The bubale is classed among cattle in the East, and is found from Gibraltar to the Persian Gulf, living in small herds. The fallow-deer is quite rare, a few living around Mt. Tabor, and Lebanon and is not found in Arabia, but Persia and Armenia are its peculiar home.

HEAD ORNAMENT OF GOLD AND JEWELS.

Fa'ran (place of caves). Name of a mountain and a wilderness. The mountain is only mentioned in two poetical passages (Deut. xxxiii. 2; Hab. iii. 3). This name is preserved in Wady FARAN (fāran), in Sinai; and the mountain is probably that now called Serbal, one of the grandest in the region (Bartlett, Forty Days; Stanley). The wilderness is described minutely in the Scriptures; and had Palestine on the north, Arabah on the east, and Sinai on the south; corresponding to the desert Et Tyh (the wandering) of the present (see SINAI). This region is not a desert, or a wilderness, but is what was called by the Hebrews Midbar (pasture-land).

Fast. There is no word in the Pentateuch which means to fast. It was a voluntary, not a legal act. It was probably a silent protest against the tendency to asceticism so prevalent in the East. The vow of the Nazarite was voluntary, and only excluded wine and things related to it in origin, and the cases where it was necessary were few. Once a year, at the yearly atonement, the people were called to do what became, after a while, a fast in common terms (Lev. xvi. 29; Acts xxvii. 9), but there is no rule against eating or drinking, while there is against work—it was to be "a Sabbath of rest." Isaiah notices that when the spiritual element declined, the ceremonial increased, and fasts became popular as an easy means of atonement (Is. lviii. 5). The true fast is to have a serious and heartfelt sorrow for sin, with earnest strivings to be delivered from it, as Isaiah says. Holiness and mourning are always, in the Hebrew mind, contrasts—opposite states of feeling. The public fast anciently among the Hebrews, as well as among the modern Arabs, was a total abstinence from food for twenty-four hours, beginning at sunset. The forty days' fast of Moses, Elijah, and Jesus were miraculous. Jesus did not institute a fast, except the lifelong fast of his disciples, after his death, intimated in Luke v. 34, 35, and directed those who did fast to conceal the fact by washing and dressing as usual, so as not to appear to fast before men and not really fast before God (Matt. vi. 17). The mere fast is no essential part of the gospel plan, although it was practiced by the apostles (1 Cor. vii. 5; Acts xiii. 2, etc.). The real fast is the sacrifice of the personal will, which is meant by the term afflicting the soul (Is. lviii. 5).

THOTHMES' RING.

Father. 1. Male parent. — 2. Any male ancestor, as Father Abraham. — 3. Any man in the position of a father, as Joseph to Pharaoh.— 4. The inventor or teacher of an art was called its father, and the father of those who practiced it. "Jubal was the father of all such as handle the harp or organ," that is, he was a teacher of music, if not its inventor; and "Jabal, the father of such as dwell in tents" (Gen. iv. 20, 21). —5. The builder or founder of a city, as Salma, the father of Bethlehem (1 Chr. ii. 51).—6. Any one who makes a thing or produces it, or tells a story, or recites a poem, is called the father of such a thing or poem. The authority of the father was sanctioned by the law of Moses, as standing between God and man. His blessing conferred special benefits, and his curse special injury. His sins affected his children, but they were not liable to punishment for them. The command to honor the parents was the only one to which a promise was attached, in the Decalogue, while disrespect and filial insubordination were the worst of crimes.

The principle of respect to age and authority, so universal in the East, is derived from the patriarchal spirit, which still prevails outside of the walled cities, especially among the Arabs.

IMPRESSION OF BOTH SIDES OF THOTHMES' RING.

Fe'lix. Claudius Antonius Felix was the Roman governor (procurator) of Judæa, from A. D. 53 to 62. He was originally a slave and was freed by the Emperor Claudius. His brother Pallas was also freed by the Emperor's mother Antonia, and deservedly had great influence with Claudius. He exercised the sovereign power with the character of a slave (Tacitus). (Acts xxiii. 24, xxiv. 24, 27.)

Festivals. The law of Moses plainly intended stated and regular meetings for worship, at shorter or longer intervals. No rule was made for any particular form of gathering, but each community was left to direct its own affairs. When synagogues were built, after the Captivity, the service was made more uniform. These gatherings were intended to be holy (Is. i. 13; Ps. lxxxi. 3, etc.). They were sacred seasons—feasts of the soul.

1. THE WEEKLY SABBATH (Heb. SHABBATH, a day of rest). The 7th day of the week (Gen. ii. 3) was established by law (Ex. xvi. 23, 29), to be kept by the whole people (Ex. xxv. 25). Isaiah utters solemn warning against profaning, and promises blessings for the due observance of it (Is. lviii. 13). The Scribes and Pharisees invented many strict rules, which hedged about the day and bound the people hand and foot, so that Jesus found it necessary to repeat the saying that "the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." It was the keynote to a system consisting of 7th day, 7th week, 7th month, 7th year, and year of jubilee, which was at the end of 7 times 7 years. Each of these periods had its sacred day. It was lawful and customary for the priests to light fires, bake the shew-bread, and do other needed work about the Temple. "There was no Sabbath in holy things"

2. PASSOVER OR FEAST OF UNLEAVENED BREAD. It was kept in the 14th day of the first month, "between the two evenings"— that is, late in the evening is the Lord's Passover. On the next day, the 15th, is the feast of the unleavened bread, continuing 7 days (Lev. xxiii. 5). The lamb sacrificed for the passover must be of the first year, and without blemish (1 Cor. v. 7). The flesh of the paschal lamb was eaten to show the actual fellowship which the partakers of the feast held with God as the result of the atoning sacrifice.

THE PASSOVER was the annual national birthday festival, and was held in the first month when the ears of grain were forming. The Pharisees excused the custom of reclining at the table in their day, by saying that it was a sign of the rest that the Lord had granted his people. Leavened bread was not to be eaten for a week — unleavened bread was "the bread of affliction," "for they came out of Egypt in haste." Leaven is a species of corruption — against which Jesus warned his disciples as in the peculiar errors of the Pharisees (Matt. xvi. 6). The feast also pointed to the future — to the sacrifice of the Paschal Lamb (Luke xxii. 15, 16).

THE FEAST OF WEEKS (Greek name PENTECOST). The presentation of the first ripe ears of barley. It was also the feast of first-fruits and of harvest. The offering was made by the priest waving two loaves, made of the best of the crop, of fine wheat flour, leavened and baked, but not put on the altar (where no leaven could be placed). (Deut. xxvi. 2.) This feast was in memory of the giving of the Law. It was the end of the harvest, as the second day of the Passover was the first, and it was the end of the Week of Weeks — seven times seven days. Canaan was in a peculiar sense God's land; and as He manifests his care in providing, He should be honored by those who are partakers of his bounty. In spiritual matters it was also the harvest season — the end of Christ's personal ministry on earth.

THE FEAST OF TRUMPETS, or NEW MOON. The year was reckoned by the moon, twelve or more moons making a year (see CHRONOLOGY). Besides the usual offerings (Num. xxii. 11–15), there was a blowing of trumpets, as sung in Ps. lxxxi. 3. (Ex. xix. 16–19.) It was a symbol of the mighty voice of God. The first was the sacred month, and was therefore placed seventh in the calendar. Four days were sabbaths, the 10th was the Day of Atonement, the 15th was the Feast of Tabernacles.

THE FEAST OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT (see ATONEMENT). It was the occasion above all others, on which the ideas of sin and atonement rose to their highest potency in the ritual of the old covenant, exhibiting those ideas in their clearest light, how one ordained from among men, for the purpose of drawing near to God, mediates in behalf of his fellowmen in things pertaining to sin and salvation.

THE FEAST OF TABERNACLES was the last of the appointed festivals, under the old covenant, and began on the 15th of the 7th month, and lasted seven days. The real name is booths. It was celebrated "in the end of the year, when they had gathered in their labors out of the field" (Ex. xxiii. 16). The crops and the vintage are supposed to be ended, and this was practically the end of the year.

THE FEAST OF THE DEDICATION was held in later times, in memory of the renewed consecration of the Temple after the profanation by Antiochus Epiphanes (1 Macc. iv. 52–59, B. C. 164. See John x. 22. Began on December (9th month) 15th, holding eight days. The Jews now call it the feast of lights, and light one lamp on the first day, two on the next, etc. (Ant. xii. 7, 7).

Fes'tus Porcius. The successor of Felix as governor of Judæa, A. D. 62. His term was short, for he died in a little while (A. D. 64). He was superior to Felix, and would have set Paul at liberty, if he had understood the case, which Paul seeing, he appealed to Cæsar (Acts xxiv. 27). He gave the apostle a hearing in the presence of Agrippa and Berenice, and was astonished at his preaching, but supposed it came from a heated imagination aided by the peculiar dreamy speculations of the East. He quarreled with the priests at Jerusalem, and built a dining-room in the governor's house, which overlooked the temple courts, when the priests built a high wall, cutting off the view. The emperor afterward sustained the priests (Ant. xx. 8). He was a good man and governor, but indifferent to religion.

Fig (Heb. TEENAH; Arab, tin, the ficus carica tree; Gr. sukē, fig-tree; suka (sycamore) figs. Three kinds are cultivated: — 1. The early fig (Heb. BOKKORE, early fig; BICCURAH, first ripe), ripe in June, green in color. — 2. The summer fig (KERMOUS), ripe in August, is sweet and the best, purple in color; and the green fig (pag) which remains on the tree all winter. (Beth-phage, place of figs.) DEBELAH, cake of figs in 1 Sam. xxx. 12. It is still used in the East as the most convenient and the best poultice (2 K. xx. 7; Is. xxxviii. 21). It is one of the few plants which grow wild all over the country. The fig-tree puts forth its earliest fruit-buds before its leaves, and the foliage forms a very dense shade. "To sit every man under his vine and under his fig-tree," indicates in the East the fullest idea of peace, security, and prosperity. Jeremiah (as well as several other prophets) uses the fig through all of his books as an emblem of good or evil, and particularly in chap. xxiv. Jesus made frequent use of the tree or its fruit as an emblem or a means of instruction, especially in the case of the barren fig-tree, as a lesson against deceit. It grows best near a fountain or stream. The sycamore fig grows to a large size in Palestine and Egypt — sometimes 50 feet in circumference — and is evergreen. The fruit is purple, smaller than the other kinds, sweetish, and not so valuable. They ripen from November to June. The wood is used for many purposes, as it is almost the only large tree in Egypt.

Fir (Heb. BEROSH, BEROTH, to cut up into boards). Pine, cypress, juniper, or various evergreen trees.

Found in the mountains. The timber was supplied to King Solomon by Hiram for the Temple, for the floors and doors. It was used for musical instruments (2 Sam. vi. 5). The tree is next in size to the cedar. It is used by the poets and prophets among their figures.

Fish (Heb. DAG, DAGAH; Gr. icthus). No particular kind of fish is mentioned by name in the Bible; but there are frequent references to fish generally. It is a little remarkable that the apostles, who were professed fishermen, did not designate by name any kinds of fish, salable or unsalable, and especially the one bearing the tribute-money. It would have been interesting to know the name of the fish, as well as that of the coin. Even the law of Moses does not mention names (as among animals), but character only, as fins and scales for pure or clean, that might be eaten. Solomon's treatise on fishes (1 K. iv. 33) is lost. The Greek furnishes 400 names for varieties of fishes, but the Hebrew has not one. Jacob knew how rapidly they increase, for he alludes to this fact in his blessings (Gen. xlviii. 16), "multitude," etc., meaning in the original "as fishes do increase." Fish were eaten from the earliest times (Num. xi. 22), and one of the gates of Jerusalem was called Fish Gate. In Egypt, the monuments show many pictures of fish and fishing. The historians speak of the vast quantities of fish taken, from which the royal revenue was derived for the queen's special use, for jewelry, perfumery, etc., of $350,000 a year. The Assyrian sculptures also show men fishing. The Egyptians also dried and salted fish, as shown in the sculptures.

FITCHES.

Fitches (Heb. KEDZACH). "The fitches are beaten out with a staff," (Is. xxviii. 27). The fennel-flower, a coarse kind of pea, hard, but nutritious. In the great famine in England in 1555, wild fitches saved many people from starving. It grows all over Europe and Asia. The "fitches" in Ezekiel's symbolized bread (iv. 9), was spelt (Heb. KUSSEMETH), a grain something like wheat.

Flax (Heb. PISHTAH, peeled). Very few plants are so beautiful and so useful as the slender flax, with its tall, taper leaves, large purple flowers, and its strong fibre from which the most delicate lawn or coarsest canvas is made. The holy garments of Aaron, and the curtains of the tabernacle were partly of linen. Its whiteness, in linen, was a symbol of purity. The ancient sculptures represent the manufacture of linen (Prov. xxxi. 13).

Flies, Fly (Heb. ZEBUB, AROB). House-flies swarm in great numbers in the East. The peculiar gray fly (Ar. thebab) which comes with the annual rise of the Nile is productive of disease in both man and animals. The arob was the fly, or swarm of insects of one of the plagues in Egypt. The Philistines had a god, Baal-zebub, whose special duty it was, they said, to take care of flies. (Judging from their number, they are well provided for.) The "ointment (perfume) of the apothecary" (Eccles. x. 1) was attractive to flies, and their dead bodies spoiled its odor, and so would little follies spoil the reputation of a wise man. The man is the perfume, his little folly the dead fly, his disgrace the bad odor.

Flowers. Flowering plants and shrubs are found in great numbers and variety all over Palestine, except in the highest regions of the mountains, and in the shifting sands of the desert. 2500 have been named and classified, 500 of which are well known in Europe. The most abundant families of plants are Leguminous (pod-bearing, such as peas, beans, pulse), the Astragalus and the Acacia. A vast number of thistles, centauries, and other like plants, cover the richest plains and the stony hills. Many sweet flowering shrubs, such as marjoram, thyme, lavender, calaminth, sage, and others similar. A vast number and variety of weeds, mustard being the king of all. Fennel, Bupleurum, and Eryngium, form dense rows of foliage and flowers along the border of woods, and in damp hollows. Soap-plant is conspicuous, and the Boragineæ, annual weeds, besides which are the Echiums, Anchusas, and other fine species. Scrophularia, Veronica, Linaria, and Verbascum (mulleins) are very abundant. Grasses are very numerous, many species bearing silky plumes of flowers of great beauty and grace. The variety and beauty of the family of lilies is nowhere exceeded. The lily springs up everywhere, and the Amaryllids are of great size, beauty, and variety. Fritillarias and squills are in abundance, and bear pretty flowers. Violets and geraniums are very numerous and finely colored. Roses are a subject of profitable cultivation for attar, and a valley near Jerusalem is called the Valley of Roses (Wady el Werd). The Narcissus is very beautiful, abundant, and in several varieties, and is believed to be the flower alluded to by the poet in Cant. ii. 1, and the prophet in Is. xxxv. 1. Several other Amaryllids are found in great numbers, and almost the most showy plants in the field. Iris, crocus, and gladiolus grow very large and showy. Broom, ivy, dog-rose, elder, honeysuckle, berberry, hawthorn, and jasmine are found in Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon, at and above 4000 feet elevation. Rhododendrons, primrose, and a great variety of plants, from 5000 to 7000, and some kinds are found even up to the limits of the snow line; at 8000 Vicia forms tufts of pale blue; at 9000 there are Arenaria, Arabis, Drabas, Festuca, and Potentilla; while the little Nocæa and the Oxyria grow on the very summit of Khodib, 10,200 feet high.

Foot (see WASHING FEET). The foot was used as a symbol of many ideas. Such phrases as "slipping of the foot," "stumbling," and "from head to foot," need no explanation. "To be under the feet," means subject to a king, or as a servant to the master (Ps. viii. 6; Heb. ii. 8); derived from the symbolical act of a conqueror who placed his foot on the neck of his subdued enemies in token of triumph (Josh. x. 24), as may be seen in the sculptures on the ancient monuments. To be at any one's feet meant service or pupilage (Judg. iv. 10), and Paul actually sat at the feet of Gamaliel (who sat on a raised seat), as was the custom then (Acts xxii. 3). "Lameness of feet" is affliction or calamity (Ps. xxxv. 15). To set one's foot in a place is to take possession (Deut. i. 36). To water with the foot is to turn the little rills easily (this was a mark of the superiority of Palestine to Egypt, because rain and brooks were there instead of the Nile and the artificial canals); (xi. 10.) To walk with a straight foot "uprightly," in Gal. ii. 14. Naked feet (out of doors) was poverty or mourning (Ez. xxiv. 17). Uncovering the feet, or taking off the overshoe in the East, is equivalent to taking off the hat with us. Uncovering the feet was a part of the act of adoration (Ex. iii. 4), as Moses before the burning bush. "How beautiful on the mountains are the feet of him who brings glad tidings" (Is. lii. 7).

The Hebrews were modest in their writings, and used the word foot for certain parts and actions which could not be named. "Hair of the foot," "water of the foot," "between the feet" (Deut. xxviii. 57), "he covereth his feet," (Judg. iii. 24,) for "dismisses the refuse of nature."

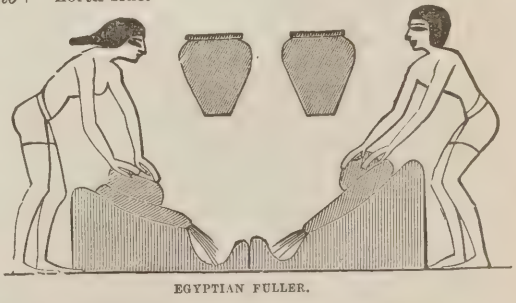
FRINGE.

Foun'tain (Heb. AYIN, to flow; MAYAN, a gushing; BOR, a cistern; MABBUA, to bubble out; MAKOR, to dig). These several words are translated fountain, but only one, AYIN, really means a spring of water. The springs of Palestine are remarkable for their great number, and some of them for their immense volume. Water there is fertility and life, and the whole land is full of great fountains, such as those of the Dog River; of the River of Beirut; Damur; Owely; Zahrany; Litany at Baalbek; Zahleh; Ainjar, and Mushgarah; Ras el Ain at Tyre; Kabery and Naamany near Acre; of the Kishon at Janin, Lejjun, and Wady Kusaby; Zerka near Cæsarea; Aujeh at Antipatris, and the Ras in Sharon. And so we might go all through Palestine, on both sides of the Jordan. Some are hot, as at Tiberias, Gadara, and Callirrhoe; others are intermittent, as the Fuarr, the source of the Sabbatic River, and the Menbej east of Beit Jenn, Mt. Hermon (Land and Book, i. 405). The fountain at Nazareth has a traditional antiquity and importance. Wealthy men in the East have built many handsome structures over fountains for their preservation, and the benefit of residents and travelers.

Fringes (Heb. ZITHZITH, flourish). Bobs, tassels, or fringes (Num. xv. 38). They are shown on many ancient figures. See ASSYRIA; DRESS; EMBROIDERY.

Fowl (Heb. BARBURIM (1 K. iv. 23) fatted fowl). Barn-door fowl, or geese. The Egyptian paintings represent catching, keeping, feeding, killing, salting, cooking, and eating of fowl.

Fox (Heb. SHUAL, to dig through). The Arab name for jackal is shikal, but a little different from the Hebrew SHUAL, and it is evident from the habits of the animal referred to that the jackal is meant. They are plenty now in Palestine, and are night-prowlers, lying concealed in the day-time, in holes, caves, and among the ruins. They go in packs of hundreds. They eat any carcass of either animal or man (Ps. lxiii. 9, 10). The Orientals never spare pain in men or animals, and Samson, who was revengeful and unscrupulous, tied a fire-brand between two jackals, and sent them into the dry wheat-fields of the Philistines, destroying vast fields probably. Jackals are very fond of grapes. (Matt. viii. 20; Luke xi. 58.)



GREEK IDEAL FIGURE OF VICTORY.

Frank'incense (Heb. LEBONAH). Resin of the Boswellia tree, which grows 40 feet high in India and Arabia Felix. It has a balsamic smell, and burns with a white flame and fragrant odor. Its burning was symbolical of the holiness of Jehovah (1 Chr. ix. 29) and of prayer (Ps. cxli. 2; Luke i. 10; Rev. viii. 3).

Frontlet (Heb. TOTAFOTH). Something bound on the forehead "between the eyes," and as a sign or token in the hand (a ring?). Originally the meaning of the law or direction was to keep in memory, as in Prov. vi. 21: "Bind them on the heart, and tie them on the neck." But after the return from captivity, the Jews made the law literal, and wrote it out (Ex. xiii. 2–10, 11–16; Deut. vi. 5–9; xi. 13–21) on bits of parchment, called Phylacteries, which were put in little cases of leather (metal in our day), and tied on the forehead and left arm. The ribbon for tying them was colored purple by the Pharisees, and made showy and broad (Mark vii. 3, 4), and were worn by all Jews, except Karaites, women, and slaves. The Rabbis made many rules about their uses.

Fuller. One who cleans and whitens. The business was carried on outside the city of Jerusalem, where was the Fullers' Field, mentioned three times in the Bible (2 K. viii. 17; Is. vii. 3; xxxvi. 2), so close, that one speaking in the field could be heard by one standing on the city wall. Perhaps near the pool of Gihon, or it might have been at En Rogel. Rabshakeh and his great host must have come on the north side.

EGYPTIAN FULLER.

Fur'long. Roman, 201$\frac{4.5}{1000}$ yards; English, 220 yards. Stadium (Luke xxiv. 13).

Fur'nace. Several kinds were used. 1. TANNER, oven (Gen. xv. 17); 2. KIBSHAN, lime-kiln (xix. 28); 3. KUR, furnace for smelting metals; 4. ATTUN, furnace (Dan. iii. 6); 5. KAMINOS, baker's oven (Matt. xiii. 42).

G

Ga'ash (earthquake). Mount Gaash on the north side of which was Timnatheheres, the city given to Joshua at his request (Josh. xix. 49, 50), and where he resided and was buried (Josh. xxiv. 30; Judg. ii. 9). Lost.

Gad (troop). Jacob's seventh son, first-born of Zilpah, Leah's maid; brother to Asher (Gen. xxx. 11–13, xlvi. 16, 18). The country given to the tribe was the centre of the east of Jordan (Deut. iii. 12), from Heshbon to Mahanaim. On the east was Aroer, that faces Rabbah (Josh. xiii. 25); west was Jordan (v. 27), and including the Arabah, from the Jabbok to the Sea of Chinnereth. The most beautiful district in Syria. It is a high range of purple-tinted mountains, cut down by deep ravines, partially clothed with forests of oak, terebinths, sycamores, ilex, beech, fig, and evergreen shrubs. The climate is fine and soil fertile, affording the best pasturage. At one time the tribe possessed the land as far east as Salcah (1 Chr. v. 11, 16). Jephthah was a Gadite of Mizpah (Judg. xi. 34). Carried into captivity, and its chief cities inhabited by Ammonites (1 Chr. v. 26; Jer. xlix. 1).

Gad'ara, Gadarenes. Five miles southeast of the Sea of Galilee, three miles from the river Hieromax. There were warm springs near the river, called Amatha. Josephus says it was a Greek city, and the capital of Perœa (Jos. B. J. iv. 7, § 3; Mark v. 1; Luke viii. 26–37). Here the Lord healed the demoniacs (Matt. viii. 28–34; Mark v. 1–21; Luke viii. 26–40). The most interesting ruins at Gadara are the tombs, which are very numerous in the cliffs around the city, cut in the solid rock, being rooms ten to twenty feet square, and some larger, with small recesses out of them for bodies, the doors being stone, turning on stone hinges. The space over which the ruins are scattered is about two miles, on a narrow, high ridge, sloping east, anciently walled all around. There was a straight street from end to end, with a colonnade on each side, and two very large theatres, now in ruins. Not a house or a column is standing.

Gal'atia (country of the Galli, Asia). Used in two senses — 1. Some suppose France (Gaul) is meant in 2 Tim. iv. 10, and 1 Macc. viii. 2. France (Gaul) may have been the origin of the people who invaded Greece and Asia Minor in the 4th century B. C., and were first checked by Antiochus, who was called Soter (savior) for the success, and were finally subdued by the Roman Manlius, B. C. 189, when they gathered into a district in the central region of Asia Minor. Visited twice by Paul (Acts xviii. 23). The Epistle to the Galatians was written after the second visit.

Galilee (GALIL, a circle). At first applied to a small district about Kedesh, on the N.W. shore of the Sea of Galilee (Is. ix. 1). Afterward, during the Roman rule, the name of the whole country north of the Kishon river and Mount Gilboa, to the Leontes and Hermon, from the Jordan to the sea (Josephus, Life, 12, Wars, iii.). Divided into Upper, as far as the N.W. angle of the Sea of Galilee, and Lower, as far south as Ginea (Jenin), including the great plain of Esdraëlon. The hills are now wooded, with gentle slopes, and are fruitful of all that man uses, and luxuriant in flowers of every variety (Deut. xxxiii. 18; Gen. xlix. 20). The chief towns were Capernaum, Kedesh, Bethsaida, Tiberias, Nazareth, Cana, besides many other smaller, the ruins of which are scattered over nearly every hill-top or hill-side. Here was the scene of the greater part of the works and life of Jesus, which are the subject of the first three Gospels almost wholly. See THE SEA OF GALILEE, GENNESARET.

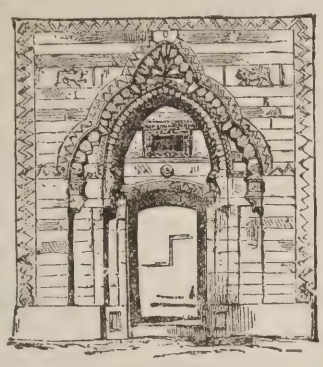
Gal'lio Ju'nius Annæ'us. Elder brother of the philosopher Seneca, who dedicated to him his treatise De Vita Beta, and in another work describes him as a man universally loved, and who especially abhorred flattery. He was the proconsul of Achaia, and by his prudent course much assisted Paul (Acts xxiv. 12–17). He was a victim to Nero's cruelty.

Gamā'la (camel). Built on a hill, near the middle of the E. shore of the Sea of Galilee. Described by Josephus as an important town.

Gama'liel (benefit of God). 1. Son of Padahzur (Num. i. 10, ii. 20), head of the tribe of Manasseh, in the Exodus. — 2. A Pharisee, and a celebrated doctor (Acts v. 34, xxii. 3); a Rabbi, teacher of Paul. He was grandson of the famous Hillel, and son of Rabbi Simeon, and president of the Sanhedrin during the time of Tiberius, Caligula, and Claudius. He lived 18 years after the destruction of Jerusalem.

Gāmes. The ancient (and modern) Orientals are represented as very fond of games of many kinds, private and public, frequently mentioned in Scripture. The sculptures and paintings of antiquity exhibit these in every variety. Job alludes to one in xli. 5, and Jeremiah in xxx. 19, and Jesus, in Matt. xi. 16. Music, dancing, and song were always enjoyed on festive occasions (Ps. xxx. 11; Luke xv. 25). Armed men jousted (2 Sam. ii. 14); played with single-stick; the cestus; wrestled; quoits; at leaping; running; and all Grecian games. The rewards in the Grecian games were of several kinds: A chaplet of wild olive; palm-branches; and the honors freely given him by his friends and fellow-citizens, of sacrifices to the gods, and poems in his praise, exemption from public service, and a pension. There were four more celebrated: Olympic, Pythian, Nemean, and Isthmian, among the Greeks, in which the most eminent men contended for the prizes, which fact made them a fitting illustration of the Christian life. Temperance in eating and drinking was the rule, and severe exercise at stated times. The Romans added brutality and cruelty, and men were required to fight each other, and wild beasts also. Paul witnessed the games in various cities where he preached, and is the only one in the N. T. who makes use of them as illustrations of the strife for good against evil in the theatre of life.

Gar'den (Heb. GAN GINNAH; Gr. keros). The garden was and is essential in Egypt. They made constant and general use of fruits and flowers at the table, which required careful cultivation. Their residences were surrounded with gardens, laid out with skilful care, with ornamental beds of curious devices, arbors of trellis-work, basins and rills of water with fish, and paved walks. The Israelites remembered the gardens when they were in the desert, and did not neglect them when in Palestine. Everywhere we find traces of such cultivation; in terraces, cisterns for water, springs cared for, and names of places compounded with Gan or Gen (Engannim, Gennesaret). The garden was often away from the village or house half a mile perhaps, in some favored spot for water and good soil. The summer-house was decorated with handsome designs and showy colors. It was a place of retirement (John xxviii. 1), and also of merry-making (Is. li. 3). They were inclosed with walls, hedges, and had watch-towers; and even the poorest a booth to shelter the watchman (Is. i. 8; Mark xii. 1; Job xxi. 18). A family tomb was sometimes built in the garden (2 K. xviii. 18, 26; John xix. 41, 42).



GETHSEMANE.

Gāte (Heb. SHAAR, gate; PETHAH, entry; SAPH, threshold, door-post; DELETH, door, two-leaved gate; Chal. tera, gate, door; Gr. thura, pule, pulon). An entrance into a camp, a house, a tent, a temple, a city, etc. "To possess the gate," was a term meaning power and wealth (Gen. xxii. 17). It was the place of assembly (Prov. i. 21) for social (Ps. lxix. 12) and legal purposes (Ruth iv. 1). Daniel sat in the gate of the king of Babylon (iv. 49); for attracting the notice of the king (Esth. ii. 10), and for marketing (2 K. vii. 1). The gate was spoken of as meaning the city (Gen. xiv. 60; Ps. lxxxvii. 2), or the people of the city (2 Sam. xv. 2). There was (and is) generally an open place both outside and inside the gate. In such a one the king of Ai was buried (Josh. viii. 29), and Jeremiah the prophet was set in the stocks (Jer. xx. 2).

GATE AT SIDON.

The Assyrian palaces furnish many illustrations of Scripture, and especially in the architecture, paintings, and sculptures of the gates. They were lofty, magnificent, built for the ages, guarded by symbolic figures never used inside of buildings, who present to the visitor the fir-cone, a symbol of life. In the floor of the doorway are usually found concealed curious small images of baked clay, with animal heads on human (or lion) bodies, and bull's legs and tail, which were the guardian divinities of the gate (terafim Arabic tarf, boundary).

Gath (wine-press). One of the five royal cities of Philistia. The residence of the Anakim giants (Josh. xi. 22). The ark was carried there by the Philistines (1 Sam. v.). David was in danger of his life at Gath, and saved it by a ruse of madness (ib. xxi. 10–15). Many of the people were attached to David all his life (2 Sam. vi. 10, xv. 18). The site has been lost for ages, and is now located by Robinson at Deir Dubban; by Thomson at Beit Jibrin: and by Porter at Tell es Safieh.

Ga'za (strong). AZ'ZAH (desert). The last town in the southwest of Palestine, on the coast toward Egypt. On the high-road between Egypt and Syria. Mentioned in Genesis (x. 19), one of the oldest cities in the world (Gen. x. 17), and is a town now. Joshua could not subdue it (x. 41). Held by Judah a short time (Judg. i. 18; iii.; xii. 1). Samson carried off its gates (xvi. 1–31). Gaza is mentioned in the inscriptions at Nineveh (Layard, p. 144). The Ethiopian was baptized by Philip on the way to Gaza. There are deep wells of good water, orchards of varieties of fruit, and palm-trees and olive groves. Settled by Avim or Hivites, who were driven out by the Caphtorim from Egypt. Became one of the five royal Philistine cities, the last home of the giant Anakim (Josh. xi. 22). Taken by Alexander the Great, who was wounded there (Arrian, ii. 26). A church was established there early, but idolatry was only abandoned publicly when the last eight temples were destroyed, A. D. 406. Taken by the Saracens A. D. 634. The Crusaders built a fort in 1152. The ancient harbor is covered by the sands. Now called Guzzeh.

Gē'bal (a line, or mountain ridge). (Ps. lxxxiii. 7.) A district S. of Moab, from W. el Ahsy S. to Shobek, near W. Shuweir. The cities were Arindela, Bozrah, Shobek, Tophel, and others smaller. — 2. A very ancient city on a spur of Lebanon, close to the shore, anciently having a fine harbor, which is now choked up with sand and ruins of buildings, quays, etc. The castle is one of the best specimens of ancient masonry, having stones 20 feet long and beveled. The columns and walls, and their great extent especially, prove the splendor and importance of the city (Ez. xxvii. 9; Joshua xiii. 5). Workers in stone from G. were employed on Solomon's Temple (1 K. v. 18 — stone-squarers being a translation of Giblites — people of Gebal). Jebail.

Genealogy. The Orientals are peculiar in keeping genealogies of their families, and also of horses and camels. They made them the means of proving titles to property and offices. No list is so long or complete as that of Jesus.

Generation (Heb. DOR, a period of time). Now about thirty years. The Hebrews had no fixed limit. One term is mentioned as 86 years (Gen. xv. 16), another 130 (v. 3), and one 500 years (v. 32). Its average was 30 to 40, probably, as now.

Gennes'aret, SEA OF (the garden). The Sea of Tiberias; the Sea of Chinnereth; the Sea of Galilee (Num. xxxiv. 11; Josh. xii. 3). Named from a town of the same name (Josh. xix. 35), which is lost, if it is not the site between Tiberias and the hot baths (Josh. xi. 2; Deut. iii. 17). Most of the life of Jesus was passed near this lake. Capernaum was on its shore, "His own city" (Matt. iv. 13). He called his first disciples from among its fishermen (Luke v.). Near it were spoken many of his parables, the Sermon on the Mount, and a number of the miracles were performed. There were 9 cities on its shores, and many others near. It is about 13 ms. long and 6 ms. wide, and the surface is 700 feet below the level of the ocean. The water is, in some places, 250 feet deep. The E. shore is 2000 feet high, bare of trees, and cut down by deep ravines, quite flat and uniform on the summits. The W. banks are similar, but not so regular in height, and being opened for the plain of G. The whole basin has a scathed, volcanic look. The climate is quite tropical. Palms and all kinds of trees and vegetables grow luxuriantly, and indigo is cultivated. The beach is pebbly everywhere, and is covered by small, twisted shells, purplish-gray. Only one of the 9 cities now remains, Tiberias, almost in ruins, and even the sites of the others are disputed and in doubt.

Ger'asa. In Matt. viii. 28, mistaken for Gadarenes. On the E. border of Peræa (Jos. Wars, iii. 3, § 3), in the Mts. of Gilead, 20 ms. E. of the Jordan, 25 ms. N. of Rabbath Ammon, Philadelphia. It was once one of the proudest cities of Syria, as its abundant ruins testify. The Saracens have never occupied it. Built in a narrow valley, on both the sloping sides, 5 miles from the Jabbok. Through it a small creek winds, fringed with many trees and shrubs. There was a colonnade from end to end of the city, with a circular forum at one end. Hundreds of columns are still standing.

It was one of the cities of the Decapolis, but is not mentioned by name in the Bible. The present people are active and prosperous.

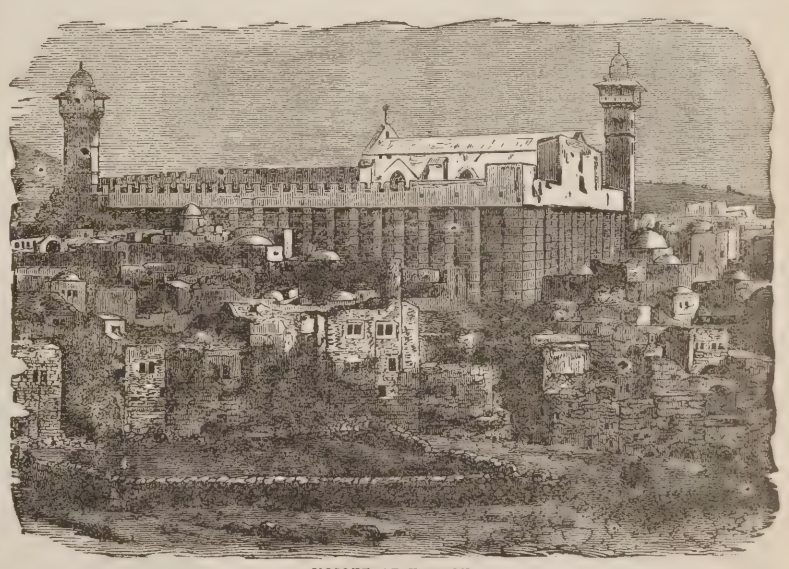
Geriz'im (desert or shorn). S. of Shechem. The law was given on Mt. Sinai, and the blessing and cursing on the two mountains Ebal and Gerizim. (See EBAL.) Jotham stood on G. when he denounced Abimelech (Judg. ix.). When Alexander took Palestine he gave Sanballat (the Persian governor under Darius) permission to build a temple on Mt. G.; and Manasseh, brother of Jaddua the high-priest at Jerusalem, was made high-priest at Shechem, about B. C. 420. This temple was destroyed by the Jews, B. C. 129. The ruins are still shown. The Samaritans worship here yet, without temple or altar. The view from the summit is one of the finest in Palestine, commanding the deep blue of the Great Sea, snowy Mt. Hermon, purple Gilead and Moab, and the lovely green valley of Mokhna at its foot.

Gersa. The ruins of this place are on the east side of the Sea of Galilee, on the left bank of Wady Semakh, just at the foot of the hills, having a little plain half a mile to three-quarters of a mile in width between the site and the water. The city was enclosed with a wall about three feet thick. The largest ruin is of a rectangular building, which was built east and west, but which cannot now be identified either as a temple, synagogue, or church. Near the water there are a few ruined foundations and walls, which were the port of the ancient city.

There is a hot spring in the hills a mile south of the site, where they come close to the sea, leaving only a roadway and a little beach, and forming a steep, even slope, which may have been the "steep place" mentioned in Matthew viii. 28.

There are no rock-hewn tombs (as far as has been examined), and the two demoniacs must have lived in one that was built above ground, similar to those described at Capernaum.

Gethsem'ane (oil-press garden — wine-press, GATH, wine). "A small farm." In the Kidron valley, on the lower slope of Olivet, 850 feet from St. Stephen's Gate, and 800 feet from the closed Gate, at the angle between the direct road leading up to Olivet, and that leading to the right around the hill (both leading to Bethany). Tradition only locates the "garden" (John xviii. 1) here; the "place" (Matt. xxvi. 36; Mark xiv. 32) was "over the brook Kidron," on Olivet somewhere, perhaps nearer Bethany on the road to the right; or rather away from any road. From the days of Eusebius, Jerome, and Adamnanus, some such place has been spoken of as "a place of prayer for the faithful" (Jerome), and having a church built on it. The place might have been selected by the Empress Helena (as many others were), to represent that mentioned in the Gospels. It is now walled in, enclosing eight very old olive-trees, and ornamented with beds of flowers. One of the trees is 25 feet in girth. The city walls and the top of the dome on the Great Mosque are in plain view. The Turks have pleasure-grounds or gardens further up the valley, where they resort to enjoy the cool shade of the olive-trees, some of which were quite as large as those in "Gethsemane." The antiquity of these trees is argued from the tax of one medina for each tree, which rate was fixed for trees that stood at the time of the conquest; all those planted since being taxed one-half their produce. (Chateaubriand.)



COIN OF HADRIAN AUGUSTUS.

This would carry the date back to A. D. 634, when Omar took Jerusalem; or, if the tax was decreed after the Turks took the city, to A. D. 1087. Pilgrims pay the guide for showing this place, with others at the Holy City.

Gibeah (rounded — a hill). 1. G. OF SAUL (1 Sam. xv. 34). The native place of Saul (1 Sam. x. 26; 2 Sam. xxi. 6), where he was a farmer. He made it his capital (xxii. 6). Seven of his descendants were hanged by the Amorites (Is. x. 29). The site is pointed out four miles north of Jerusalem, at Tuliel el Ful (little hill of beans), where there is an ancient ruin on the top of a conical hill.

Gibeon (belonging to a hill). (Josh. ix. 3–15.) One of the 4 cities of the HIVITES, the people who made a league with Joshua by an artifice, and so escaped the fate of Jericho and Ai. It was in Benjamin (xviii. 25). TULIEL EL FUL (hill of beans). The contest of the two parties of 12, of David and of Ishbosheth, was by the pool of Gibeon. Joab killed Amasa (2 Sam. xx. 10) at the great stone in Gibeon; and Joab himself fled to Gibeon for sanctuary, when condemned by Solomon, and was killed by Benaiah (1 K. ii. 34).

Gib'eonites (Josh. ix. 17). Hivites who played a trick on Joshua, saving their lives, but accepting a life of servitude (v. 23, 27). Saul attempted their destruction (2 Sam. xxi.), and his sons were "crucified" to appease them.

MOSQUE AT HEBRON.

Gib'lites. Natives of Gibal (Josh. xiii. 5). The "land of the Giblites" was among the Promised Land, to be governed by Joshua. They were noted as ship-carpenters in Solomon's time, and as stonemasons. Their chief city, Byblus, was the seat of the worship of Adonis (Ez. viii. 14).

Gil'boa (bubbling fountain). A mountain range between the plain of Esdraelon and the Jordan, near which is the city of Jezreel (1 Sam. xxviii. 4; xxix. 1). Mentioned only in connection with the death of Saul and Jonathan (xxxi. 1; 2 Sam. i. 6; xxi. 12; 1 Chr. x. 8). The fountain from which it was named is at its northern base, and was called the well of Harod (Judg. vii. 1), and the spring of Jezreel (1 Sam. xxix. 1). The modern name is Jebel Fukuah, and it is 600 feet high above the plain, and there is on its highest summit a village and ruin called Gelbus by Eusebius, and Wezar by the Arabs.

BALM OF GILEAD.

Gil'ead (rugged), Mount. the Land of (Gen. xxxi. 21). First known in Jacob's time. It next appears when the Israelites were on the march from Egypt, as divided in two sections and governed by Og and Sihon. It is rich in pastures and forests, well watered, and the great number of ruins bear witness of a former numerous population. It was occupied by Reuben and Gad. The whole extent, from Rabbath Ammon to the Hieromax, is one broad, elevated region or mountain (Deut. iii. 12). The same elevation is called Bashan, north of that river. The Lord showed Moses, from the top of Pisgah, all the land of Gilead unto Dan. Probably a popular phrase, as was "from Dan to Beersheba" (Josh. xx. 8). The Gadites are supposed to have imitated the habits of the people they displaced, which are now preserved by the Bedouins in the same district. Thus Jephthah appears like an Arab sheikh of our day (Judg. xi.); and some of David's captains were trained there (1 Chr. xii. 8, 15). RAMOTH GILEAD was its chief city (1 K. xxii. 4). Gilead first fell before the Assyrians (2 K. xv. 29). It was an asylum for refugees (2 Sam. ii. 8), David fleeing there from Absalom. It is now known south of the Jabbok as Jebel Jilad, and north of that river as Jebel Ajlun, and the capital is Es Salt, on the site of the ancient Ramoth Gilead. The whole country is like a fine park. Graceful hills, rich vales, luxuriant herbage, bright wild-flowers, noble forests, wooded heights, and winding glens clothed with tangled shrubbery, open glades and flat meadows of richest green, all so strongly in contrast.

Gil'gal (circle), (Josh. iv. 19.) Near Jericho; the first encampment of the Israelites in Palestine, where they set up twelve stones as a memorial of the passage of the Jordan. An ancient city (Deut. xi. 30). It was for centuries the great place of the nation's assembly (ix. 6, x. 6, 43). The Tabernacle was pitched here until it was removed to Shiloh (xviii. 1). It was visited by Samuel and Saul and David (1 Sam. x. 8, xi. 14, xiii. 4, xv. 12, xix. 15). There was a high place there for idolaters (Hos. iv. 15; Amos iv. 4, v. 5). As prophesied, the place is utterly desolated. It is impossible now to find where the city was. It was probably not far from Jericho. — 2. A royal city of the Canaanites, near Dor (Josh. xii. 23). Jiljuleh (?) 4 miles south of Antipatris. — 3. G. IN THE MOUNTAINS (2 K. ii. 1), Jiljilia, 6 miles north of Bethel.

Glass. So many specimens of ancient glass vessels have been found lately, that there is no longer any doubt as to the remote antiquity of the manufacture of glass. It was practiced in Egypt, where the ancient paintings represent men at work over the furnaces, and in the laboratory blowing vessels of glass, at least 1400 B. C. Images, beads, cups, vases, bottles, even coffins, and a great variety of useful and ornamental articles, were made of this material, which are now shown in the museums at New York and in Europe. The emperor Hadrian was presented by an Egyptian priest with some glass vases, so rare and excellent as to be reserved for unusual occasions of display. Clear glass was not valued, but colored, every variety of tone and tint, was sought after. The allusions to glass in the Bible are never to a transparent substance, but to a shining, brilliant, colored mass (Rev. iv. 4). But two colorless, transparent drinking-cups were bought by Nero, at a great price. Glass was not used in windows; a thin stone, mica, or talc being used until long after our era. Mirrors (looking-glasses in Ex. xxxviii. 8) were made of metal, not of glass. (MIRROR.) The Egyptians (and other ancients) practiced the art of grinding, engraving, and inlaying it with gold enamel, and of working elaborate designs in colors (as an image of a duck with the feathers imitated in form and color) in the midst of masses of clear glass. Precious stones were very successfully imitated by colored glass.

GLASS-BLOWERS.

Goat (AKKO, YEELIM, AZELAH, wild goat; ATTUD, ZAFIR, SAIR, hairy, he-goat (Greek satyr); EZ, she-goat, or goat; TAISH, GEDI, kid, Gr. eriphion (Matt. xxv. 33). Goats are an important part of pastoral wealth in the East. Neither Abraham nor Job had them, unless they were included in the "flocks." Jacob tended them (ATTUDIM, he-goats, is rendered rams in Gen. xxxi. 10, 12). The goat was used in sacrifice as the type of the Christ, and the paschal lamb could be from the sheep or the goats (Ex. xii. 5), as also the burnt-offering (Lev. i. 10), the peace-offering (iii. 12), the sin-offering (iv. 23), and the trespass-offering (ver. 6); the scape-goat (see ATONEMENT) was a peculiar type of Christ as the sin-bearer (xvi.). The flesh of the kid is excellent; of the old goat not very palatable. An old Karaite gloss says: "The idolaters seethed a kid in its mother's milk, and sprinkled the broth on their trees, gardens, etc., and Moses therefore condemned the practice." Goat's milk is very valuable (Prov. xxvii. 26, 27), and is milked at the door of customers every morning. The skin is used for bottles. The hair for cloth, for cloaks, or tents (Cant. i. 5; Ex. xxxvi. 14), or pillows (1 Sam. xix. 13). The Angora goat has the longest and best hair for cloth. The long-eared Syrian goat is peculiar to Syria. The ears are sometimes 2 feet long. A delicate gray wool under the long hair is the valued stuff for cloth, only three ounces being had from each goat, but of extreme fineness. The goat was a symbol of Macedonia. It is used often by the prophets, poets, and evangelists, as a symbol or type.

GEM. (FLORENCE.)

GOAT.

Go'lan (Deut. iv. 43). A district and a Levitical city of Bashan in Manasseh (Josh. xxi. 27). One of the cities of refuge (xx. 8). The site is lost. The city is not mentioned after the time of Joshua in the Scriptures, but the city and the district of the same name is often mentioned by Josephus. Gamala (El Husn), on the east shore of the Sea of Galilee, was in the district (B. J. iv. i. 1). Its principal cities were Golan, Hippos, Gamala, Julias or Bethsaida, Seleucia, and Sogane (Josephus), and about 121 others, nearly all of which are unknown. The country is high (2500 feet), flat, and fertile, well watered, with good pasture. This is the MISHOR of 1 K. xx. 23, 25, where the Syrians were defeated near Aphek (now called Fik). The low, rounded hills, called Tells, extending south from Hermon for about 20 miles, are partly covered with forests or groves of oak and terebinth. The wandering Bedouins (Anazeh) visit the Jaulan every year in May, with their flocks and herds.

Golgo'tha (Hebrew, meaning skull; Greek, kranion; Latin, Calvary). Skull-shaped hill north of Jerusalem, at the place now called the Grotto of Jeremiah. The question as to the true site of the crucifixion has very much depended on the theories respecting the location of the two more ancient walls of Jerusalem. W. C. Prime has within the year just past found some remains of the long-lost second wall in its original position, and so definitely settled that point, although he argues that his finding is in favor of the claim of the so-called Church of the Holy Sepulchre. It may argue that the Mary church built by Helena was on the same site, but cannot determine that the site selected by Helena was not adopted for convenience rather than fixed by actual knowledge of the ground.

The recent examination of the skull-shaped hill, north-east of the Damascus Gate (formerly St. Stephen's Gate, which for convenience is now located on the east of the city), suggested twenty or thirty years ago by Thenius, and adopted by many other scholars (and published by Fisher Howe, Oriental and Sacred Scenes, M. W. Dodd, 1854; and The True Site of Calvary, A. D. Randolph & Co., New York, 1871; and also on a New Map of Palestine, A. L. Rawson, Boston, 1856), has led to the conclusion that the place named on the maps the Grotto of Jeremiah is the true site of Calvary. The hill, or knoll, above the so-called grotto is very distinctly skull-shaped, as seen from several directions, and besides, it answers in its location better than any other place to the requirements of the text.

The points in favor of the site as the true Golgotha are:

1. The place was out of the city, as this must have been then, and is now.
2. It was also "nigh unto the city," as this is about five hundred feet from the nearest part of the city wall.
3. The hill is shaped like the upper part of a skull.
4. The place was near a main road to and from the city, as this is.
5. The spot was very conspicuous, and this is also.
6. There were gardens and sepulchres near, and now, (and probably also there were anciently) there are rock tombs of great extent and magnificence of design and finish, which give an idea of the wealth and splendor of the ancient Jews.
7. And, finally, there is no other spot that claims equal attention to respect.

Go'shen. Is located in that part of Egypt, east of the Delta, near the way of the land of the Philistines (Ex. xiii. 17), where there was pasture-land, suited to the habits of Joseph's brethren. The only limits that can be indicated from the ancient accounts are the present Wady el Tumeylat, and the desert lakes, Temsah and Bitter Lakes. This region is still very productive wherever it is watered, either from the Nile or from wells (Gen. xlv. 10, xlvi. 28, xlvii. 27, l. 8; Ex. viii. 22, ix. 26). The plagues of Egypt did not affect this land. The soil is capable of tillage to an indefinite extent.

Greece (Greek Hellas; Heb. JAVAN). Greece in the New Testament times included the four provinces of Macedonia, Epirus, Achaia (Hellas), and Peloponnesus (Morea). Generally only Hellas and Peloponnesus are meant. The grand features are mountain and sea, which exerted a strong influence on the character of the people, as appears in their poetry, religion, and history. The climate is very temperate, the air salubrious, and the soil fertile. Its history extends back to B. C. 776, in authentic records, and beyond that in traditions and myths, such as that of Ægialus, who founded Sicyon B. C. 2089, and of Uranus, who settled there B. C. 2042. The Greeks said they received from Asia Minor, Phœnicia, and Egypt letters and laws, and certain tenets in religion. The Egyptian Inachus founded Argos B. C. 1856, and Cecrops led a colony 300 years earlier to Attica, carrying with him the worship of the goddess Neith (Athenæ). The Phœnician Cadmus founded Thebes in Bœotia, and taught the Greeks letters. (See MOABITE STONE, in the article KIR.) The Phrygian Pelops took possession of the south, B. C. 1283, naming it after himself. The famous expedition of Jason and the Argonauts in search of the golden fleece, is dated B. C. 1263, and the siege of Troy, 1193. From the First Olympiad, B. C. 776 to B. C. 300, Greece was a leading power in polities and religion. It is chiefly from Alexander's time down, that the Bible has to do with Greece. First known to the Jews in the slave-market of Tyre, where the prophet Joel charges the Tyrians with selling Hebrew children to the Grecians (Joel iii. 6), B. C. 800; and Ezekiel says, "traded the persons of men and vessels of brass in thy market" (Ez. xxvii. 13). Greek slaves were highly valued in all the East (Bochart i., c. iii. 175).

MODERN SMYRNA.

Daniel mentions Greece (viii. 21, etc.) in his sketch of Alexander and his successors. Alexander visited Jerusalem, and respected its religion (Ant. xi. 8, 3). The Lacedæmonians sent an embassy and a letter to the Jews, B. C. 300 (Ant. xii. 4, 10), when king Areus claims kinship for his people with the Jews. Paul visited Greece (Acts xx. 2), staying there three months. The Greeks, and their language, were so influential in Paul's time that the name Greek stands in the N. T. as the synonym for the Gentile in the O. T. Their influence on the spread of the Gospel by a peculiar preparation of the mind for the Gospel teachings was very great, in quickening thought and destroying indifference to religion. (See GOSPELS in the HISTORY.) The arts of war, and the fine arts of peace were carried to a great perfection. Their Asiatic empire spread their institutions, and filled half of Asia Minor with temples, theatres, aqueducts, and well-built cities. The Church did not flourish in Athens, but was more eminent in Corinth.

Greek. Educated in the religion and language of Greece. A barbarian was any one who was not a Greek in language and manners.

Grove (Heb. ASHERAH, an image worshiped in the grove), (2 K. viii. 6). A wood dedicated to idolatry. The sacred symbolic tree of Assyria refers to the same idea. The Hebrew word ELON also means grove, (translated oak of Mamre, in Gen. xiii. 18, and of Moreh, in xii. 6, etc). The grove took the place of the church building in the ancient heathen religions, where altars were erected to the gods. Pliny says trees were the first temples. Afterwards the temples were built in the groves. The Temple of Solomon had figures of trees on its interior walls for ornaments. The mosque which stands on its site now has olive, palm, and cedar trees growing round it. Tree-worship was wide-spread, and is not yet passed away. The Buddhists of India venerate the banian (fig-tree). The Etrurians worshiped a palm, the Druids and Celts an oak.

H

Habor (1 Chr. v. 26). A river and district in Assyria, where Tiglath Pileser placed some of the Jews of the tribes of Reuben and Gad during the First Captivity; and where, 17 years after, Shalmaneser, his successor, settled captives from Samaria and Israel (2 K. xvii. 6, xxviii. 11). The Khabur (name of a river) is found in an Assyrian inscription of the date of 900 B. C.

Hachi'lah, the Hill (1 Sam. xxiii. 13, 19). On the S. of Jeshimon (the barren district), near Ziph, in a forest, where David and his 600 men hid from Saul, and David in the night took away Saul's spear and bottle of water from his couch, and showed them to Abner, the captain of Saul's guard, next morning from the opposite bank of the ravine (xxvi. 5, 20). See DAVID.

Hādes, HELL (covered), Heb. SHEOL (hollow). The unseen world, the state (and condition) of the dead, both good and bad; Greek gehenna, from the Hebrew GE-HINNOM, the valley of Hinnom (Josh. xv. 8). This place became infamous because of the sacrifice of infants there by Manasseh, to the god Moloch (2 Chr. xxxiii. 6), at a spot called Topheth (Is. xxx. 33), and a type of torment in the spirit-world. The Jews held a belief in a condition of the souls after death, in SHEOL, in reward or in punishment, and this, they thought, was in the bowels of the earth.

In the New Testament the word Hades, like Sheol, sometimes means merely "the grave," or in general, "the unseen world." It is in this sense that the Creeds say of our Lord, "He went down into hell," meaning the state of the dead. For though Hades signifies the grave and often invisible region of separate spirits, without reference to their condition, yet in Luke xvi. 23, "In hades he lifted up his eyes, being in torments," it is clearly used for a place and condition of misery. "How shall ye escape the damnation of hell?"

Had'ŏrăm. Fifth son of Joktan (Gen. x. 27; 1 Chr. i. 21). Probably located, with Joktan's other descendants, in South Arabia, but not yet identified. The Adramitæ and Hadramaut have been suggested, but rejected on philological grounds.

Ha'gar (stranger). An Egyptian slave (Gen. xii. 16, xvi. 1). Presented to Abraham by Pharaoh. Mother of Ishmael. The Hagarites settled in Paran (Gen. xxi. 21; Gal. iv. 22). They are mentioned in 1 Chr. xi. 38, where Mibhar, a Hagarite, is one of David's captains. Jaziz, a Hagarite, had charge of David's flocks, and an Ishmaelite of his camels, because they had experience in the care of such animals (1 Chr. xxvii. 31). The HAGARITES occupied the country south of Palestine, from the sea to the Euphrates, as the Bedouins do now. Hejer is the capital of a district in the province of El Bahreyn, in N. Arabia, near the Persian Gulf.

Hag'gai. The tenth in order of the minor prophets, and first of those who prophesied after the Captivity. With regard to his tribe and parentage, both history and tradition are alike silent. Some, indeed, have imagined that he was an angel in human shape. (Jerome, Comm. in loc.) In the absence of any direct evidence on the point, it is more than probable that he was one of the exiles who returned with Zerubbabel and Joshua; and Ewald (die Proph. d Alt. B.) is even tempted to infer, from ii. 3, that he may have been one of the few survivors who had seen the first temple in its splendor. The rebuilding of the temple, which was commenced in the reign of Cyrus (B. C. 535), was suspended during the reign of his successors, Cambyses and Pseudo-Smerdis, in consequence of the determined hostility of the Samaritans. On the accession of Darius Hystaspis (B. C. 521), the prophets Haggai and Zechariah urged the renewal of the undertaking, and obtained the permission and assistance of the king. (Ezr. v. 1, vi. 14; Jos. Ant. xi. 4.) Animated by the high courage (magni spiritus, Jerome) of these devoted men, the people prosecuted the work with vigor, and the temple was completed and dedicated in the sixth year of Darius (B. C. 516). According to tradition, Haggai was born in Babylon, was a young man when he came to Jerusalem, and was buried with honor near the sepulchres of the priests. (Isidor. Hispal, c. 49; Pseudo-Dorotheus, in Chron. Pasch. 151 d.) It has hence been conjectured that he was of priestly rank. Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, according to the Jewish writers, were the men who were with Daniel when he saw the vision, related in Dan. x. 7, and were, after the captivity, members of the Great Synagogue, which consisted of 120 elders (Cozri, iii. 65). The Soder Olam Zuta places their death in the 52d year of the Medes and Persians; while the extravagance of another tradition makes Haggai survive till the entry of Alexander the Great into Jerusalem, and even till the time of our Saviour (Carpzov, Introd.). In the Roman Martyrology Hosea and Haggai are joined in the catalogue of saints.

Hair. The Egyptians were very uniform in their habits of dressing the hair. Herodotus says that they let their hair and beard grow only in mourning. The priests, who were to be clean to the highest possible degree, had to shave their whole bodies every third day. Other men shaved the head only—or the beard also. The women wore their hair natural, but braided, and dressed with strings of silk with ornaments. The Assyrian men wore their hair combed and curled, falling quite low about the neck; wearing the whiskers curled also. Among the Greeks and Romans the fashion of wearing the hair passed through many changes.

The Hebrews cut the men's hair quite short, almost to the ears (Ez. xliv. 20), and kept the beard a proper length by trimming it, but did not shave either hair or beard. The NAZARITE was an exception, who let both hair and beard grow uncut or uncombed during the time of his vow.

The head-dress is a very important matter in the hot climate of the East, besides its use "for glory and for beauty" (Ex. xxviii. 40). There are several names of different articles used by different persons, or at various times. 1. ZANIF (to roll or wind), worn by nobles (Job xxix. 14), and ladies (Is. iii. 23), and kings (lxii. 3; mitre in Zech. iii. 5), was a turban intended for display. 2. PEER, modern name tarbush (or kaook) the red cap. The Bedouin head-dress (keffieh) is formed by folding a square cloth across from the corners, and tying it on the head, so as to have one (double) corner behind, and one on each side of the neck. The Assyrian was probably made of bright and mingled colors (Ez. xxiii. 15).

The extent and magnificence of the Egyptian head-dresses, as shown on the ancient monuments, calls forth our admiration, and also our wonder that such a mass could have been worn in that hot climate.

Halicarnas'sus (1 Macc. xv. 23). In Caria, on the Ceramian gulf. The birthplace of Herodotus and of Dionysius. The Jews residing here were, by a decree of the Romans, allowed the exercise of all their sacred rites. Alexander destroyed the city by fire.

Hall. Court of the high-priest's house (Luke xxii. 55; in Matt. xxvii. 27, and Mark xv. 16). Hall, in John xviii. 28, "judgment-hall." A covered space, surrounded by rooms opening into it; or, perhaps, a large audience-chamber. The court of a dwelling-house is not covered.

Hallelu'jah (praise ye Jah). Praise ye the Lord. Alleluia, in Rev. xix. 1–6, Ps. cxiii.–cxviii., were called hallel (praise), and were used on special occasions.

Ham (warm), (Egyptian chem, dark). One of the sons of Noah (Gen. vi. 10), perhaps the third, if Japheth was the elder brother (x. 21). Settled in Africa (Ps. lxxviii. 51, cv. 23, cvi. 22), and also sent many branches into Asia (Canaanites). There is no ancient name so well preserved and located. Ham is identified with JUPITER AMMON, and also ZEUS, because both words are derived from a root meaning hot, fervent, or sunburnt. For the last 3000 years the world has been mainly indebted for its advancement to the Semitic races; but before this period the descendants of Ham — Egypt and Babylon — led the way as the pioneers in art, literature, and science. Mankind at the present day lies under infinite obligations to the genius and industry of those early ages, more especially for alphabetic writing, weaving cloth, architecture, astronomy, plastic art, sculpture, navigation, and agriculture. The art of painting is also represented, and music indirectly, by drawings of instruments.

Hā'man (magnificent). The prime-minister of king Ahasuerus (Esth. iii. 1). After he failed in his conspiracy, he was hanged on the same gallows he had made for Mordecai. He is called a Macedonian in Esther xvi. 10 (Apocrypha).

Hā'math (to defend). The principal city of North Syria and capital of a district of the same name (Gen. x. 18). In the centre of the Orontes valley. Toi, king of Hamath, paid tribute to David (2 Sam. viii.). Hamath was conquered by Solomon (2 Chr. viii. 3). Alexander took it, and changed its name to Epiphania, in honor of Antiochus Epiphanes. It has now 30,000 people, and is a well-built city, in a narrow and rich valley. Four bridges of stone span the river. The chief trade is in silk, woollen, and cotton. "The entrance to Hamath," so often used as a landmark in the O. T. (Land and Book, i. 354, and Tristram, Land of Israel, 621), is the entrance into the valley as you look north from Baalbek. There are ancient ruins for a mile or more around.

Handi'craft. Skilled workmen in all the various callings of the mechanic arts, were among the great benefactors of ancient times, and were honored as the chief favorites. God is honored for his "handiwork," (Ps. viii. 3, xix. 1; Gen. ii. 2; Job xxxiv. 19). Several men are so honored in the O. T. for their work, as Tubal-Cain, a worker in metals; Jabal, a tent-maker (as Paul was); Jubal, a musical-instrument maker; and Bezaleel, who had charge of the furniture and decorations of the Tabernacle, which were of metal, wood, or stone, while Aholiab directed the textile-fabric work. The Hebrews were more agricultural than scientific or artistic, and invented little; yet their skill is recorded in the cases of the Tabernacle and the Temple. Among the metal workers were goldsmiths, silversmiths, coppersmiths, and ironworkers, whose work is often mentioned. The tools noticed are forceps (tongs, in Is. vi. 6), hammer, anvil, bellows. The carpenters (wood-carvers) were skilful (Is. xli. 7). Their implements were the rule (chalk-pencil), measuring-line, compasses, plane or smoothing instrument, saw, hatchet, knife, awl, nail, hone, drill, mallet, chisel, etc. There were boat-builders also. Spinners, weavers, fullers, dyers, tent-makers, embroiderers. Tanning and dressing leather. Masons, bakers, butchers, cheese-makers, shoemakers, barbers, are mentioned in the Bible, and drawn on the monuments engaged in their proper avocations. There are many illustrations of this subject scattered all through this book.

Hā'ran (Gen. ix. 31). Terah and his family (including Abraham) came to Haran and dwelt there; where Terah died. Called Padan Aram (plain of Aram). Aram Naharaim (A. of the two rivers). In 2 K. xix. 12, it is connected with Gozan, Mesopotamia, taken by the Assyrians. Ezekiel groups it with Canneh, Eden, and other cities in Assyria (xxvii. 23). Haran (of the Arabs) stands on the banks of the small river Belilk, a branch of the Euphrates. From it a number of roads radiate to the great fords of the Tigris and Euphrates. Being in the route of the trade between Central and Western Asia, it attracted Terah and explains the allusion of the prophet Ezekiel. There is a Harran el Awamid (Harran of the columns), 10 ms. east of Damascus, on the shore of the Lake Ateibeh, between "the two rivers" Abana and Pharpar. In 1861 Dr. Beke made a journey to Palestine especially to follow the route of Laban and Jacob from Haran, and walked over this ground in about 5 days, a time and distance which agree with the Bible narrative. The flocks, herds, and little children could not have been driven across the desert, 300 miles, 25 days without water. The route in the Hauran is well watered, and has good pasture all the way.

BOAT-BUILDERS.

Haro'sheth of the Gentiles (Judg. iv. 2). The home of Sisera. Tell Harothieh is an immense double hill, covered with the ruins of old walls and buildings, commanding a narrow pass where the Kishon flows close to the foot of Carmel. Barak and Deborah chased Sisera and his scattered host as far as the pass, after their terrible defeat and slaughter along the plain of Esdraelon. (Thomson, Land and Book.)

Hau'ran. Part of the district of Bashan, east of the Jordan. Ezekiel (xlvii. 16, 18) probably meant a region including the Lejah, Batanæa in the mountains (where the oaks of Bashan still grow around the ruins of ancient cities), and what is now Hauran. The Hauran is a vast fertile plain, the "granary of Damascus." Not a rock or stone encumbers its soil. More than a hundred ruined cities are found, deserted, not ruined; for the houses are quite perfect and habitable still, being built of stone, even to the doors, window-shutters, hinges, and roofs—of fine solid stone. Some of the dates are before our era, and it is quite probable that these cities are the very same that Moses described (Deut. iii. 5). For views of the ruins of some of them, see BOZRAH RABBAH.

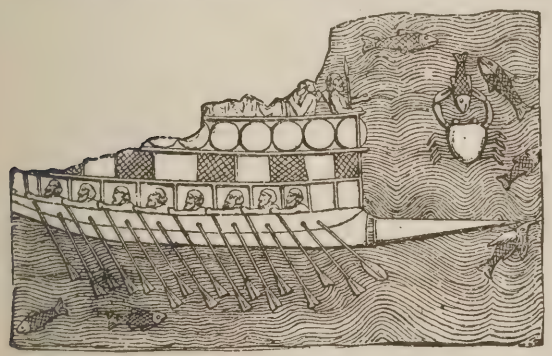
Havi'lah (sand). 1. Son of Cush, (Gen. x. 7); and, 2. A son of Joktan, (x. 29).—1. On the Red Sea, in Arabia, between Mecca and Sanaa. It is a fertile region, abounding in fruit, gum, and myrrh; mountainous, well-watered, and has a numerous population. The people were called by Eratosthenes (in Strabo), Chaulanitæ. — 2. A district southeast of Sanaa. A third district of the same name is sought for in answer to Gen. ii. 11, which was compassed by one of the rivers of Eden. In Gen. xxv. 18, it is stated that the tribes of Ishmael dwelt from "Havilah unto Shur;" and this seems to call for a locality on the Persian Gulf or the Euphrates.

Hā'voth Jā'ir (Num. xxxii. 41). Jair took a number of small towns in Gilead, in the mountain district south of the Hieromax, and named them "Jair's villages." A descendant of his, of the same name, was a judge of Israel, and lived here in 30 cities (Judg. x. 3, 4). Bashan-havoth-jair were among the 60 cities of Argob (Deut. iii. 14, etc.).

Hawk (NEZ; Arabic nez). In Job xxxix. 26, "does the nez fly by thy wisdom?" It was migratory, as are 10 or 12 kinds now. The sak'r is used to catch partridges, grouse, quail, herons, hares, and gazelles.

Ha'zer (enclosed as a court-yard or camp). These walls are found in many parts of Palestine and Arabia. Sometimes they are roofed in with a tent and become a dwelling for a short time (Is. xxxviii. 12) by shepherds. The name is used with others for several places.

Ha'zor (Josh. xi. 1–12). An ancient royal city, fortified, near Lake Merom. "The head of all those kingdoms," i. e., the chief city in North Canaan. Taken by Joshua, and given to Naphtali. In after-times, a king Jabin, of Hazor, held the Israelites in subjection 20 years. Jabin's army, including 600 chariots of iron, led by Sisera (perhaps intending to conquer all Palestine), were routed by Barak and Deborah (Judg. iv.). Fortified by Solomon (1 K. ix. 15). Referred to by Josephus, and in Macc. xi. 67. — 2. (Josh. xv. 23.) Judah, south. Lost. — 3. (Neh. xi. 33.) Benjamin after the Captivity. Tell Azur, 5 ms. N.E. of Bethel. — 4. (Jer. xlix. 28.) Some noted camping-ground of the Arabs. Lost. There are two or three Hazors named in Josh. xv. 23–25; one of them a new village (Hadattah); and one changed to Hezron. There were also BAAL HAZOR and EN HAZOR.



Heathen (GOI, GOYIM). All nations have a term for distinguishing other people from their own. The Hebrews were very particular in this matter, because they were forbidden to marry out of their own nation, or even to mingle in society with them. The heathen were worshipers of false gods. After the Greeks came into power their name meant the same as heathen (Greek hethen), and is the same or similar to "uncircumcised." Goyim also meant wicked as opposed to the righteous Jews.

Heaven 1. RAKIA, firmament, expanse. — 2. SHAMAYIM, the high, the heavens and earth). Always plural in the Hebrew of the O. T. — 3. MAROM (mountain), height, high region; SHAHAKIM, expanse, skies. — 4. ARABAH (the desert), the heaven: ARIFIM (distilling), clouds; Greek, ouranos (air), heaven: hupsos (height), on high; another (from above), heaven. The "third heaven" of Paul, in 2 Cor. xii. 2, is explained from the Jewish way of naming three parts in heaven, as: 1. The place of clouds in the air; 2. The place of the sun, moon, and stars; 3. The place of God and his angels. Heavens and earth meant the entire universe. Once heaven, earth and under the earth (Phil. ii. 10).

ANIMALS PROHIBITED TO BE USED AS FOOD.

ASSYRIAN GALLEY.

Heb'rew. This name was first used of Abraham in Gen. xiv. 13. Four sources have been offered: 1. From Abram; 2. From ABAR; 3. From EBER (country beyond); and 4. From EBER, the patriarch (this would have been IBRI). Hebrew of the Hebrews; a pure-minded Jew.

Heb'ron (the friend). Was the third son of Kohath, who was second son of Levi (Ex. vi. 18). The clan is mentioned in the time of David (1 Chr. xv. 9, xxiii. 19), as of the sons of Levi, who only ought to carry the ark of God; and also mighty men of valor, of Jazer, in Gilead (xxvi. 31), who were officers in David's government; and another branch held the same rank on the west side of Jordan. There was a Hebron among the sons of Caleb. The CITY OF HEBRON is one of the most ancient, (built 7 years before Zoan, Num. xiii. 22,) and even older than Damascus (Gen. xii. 18). Its original name was Arba, or Kirjath Arba (city of Arba), from Arba, the father of Anak (xxxiii. 2; Josh. xiv. 15, xv. 13). It was also called MAMRE (Gen. xxiii. 19, xxxv. 27). The ancient city was in a valley, and its pools help to fix its site and identity (2 Sam. iv. 12). Many years of the lifetime of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were spent here, where they were all buried; and from Hebron Jacob and his family set out for Egypt by way of Beersheba. The city was given to Caleb by Joshua, who drove out the Anakim. One of the CITIES OF REFUGE. It was David's royal residence for 7 years and a half; where most of his sons were born; and here he was crowned king over all Israel (2 Sam. ii.), when David changed the royal residence to Jerusalem. Fortified by Rehoboam. It was occupied after the captivity; but fell into the hands of the Edomites, from whom it was recovered by Judas Maccabæus (1 Macc. v. 65). It was called Hebron or Castle of Abraham during the Crusades. The modern town is called Khulil (the friend "of God"), by the Arabs, and lies on the eastern and southern side of a beautiful valley. The houses are all of stone, well built, having flat roofs, with many domes. The streets are only a few feet wide, and the bazaars are covered either by awnings or arches. Glass is the only manufacture; lamps, and the bracelets and rings worn by women. The court in which the mosque over the tombs of the patriarchs is built is surrounded by an extensive and lofty wall, formed of large stones, strengthened by square buttresses, the greatest antiquity in Hebron, and probably the same as that seen and described in Josephus (Ant. i. 14; B. J. iv. 9, 7). The only other antiquities are the two cisterns for rain-water (pools). The one close to the south gate of the city is 133 feet square, 22 feet deep, and built of hewn limestone, with steps at each corner, down to the water. The other pool at the north end of the town is 85 by 55 feet, and 19 feet deep. The surrounding country is productive and the many ruins show a once dense population and high state of cultivation. Population 5000. Asher (Josh. xix.) 28. ABDON (?).

Heifer (AGLAH, the young of kine). They worked with other cattle, in treading out grain (Hosea x. 11), and in plowing (Judg. xiv. 18). Egypt was "a fair heifer" (Jer. xlv. 20), in allusion to the bull Apis worshiped there. Several names are made from it, as Eglah, En-eglaim, and Parah (young mother-cow). Heifers are used at the plow now as anciently.

THE ORDINANCE OF THE RED HEIFER (Num. xix.) is a very peculiar item in the ancient religion, concerning cleansing rather than atonement. It was intended to cleanse from the ceremonial defilement which followed from touching a dead body, or a bone of a dead man, or entering a house where there was a person dead. Purification in the usual way required 7 days of time. A son of the high-priest sprinkled the blood of a red heifer before the tabernacle (temple, not on the altar), and the carcass was to be burned entire, outside of the camp, in a clean place (with a bit of cedar wood, and of scarlet cloth), reserving nothing; the ashes were to be kept for use. Mixed with fresh water they were sprinkled on the unclean, on the third, and on the seventh day, with a bunch of hyssop. After changing his clothes and bathing, he was clean. His house or tent was also to be sprinkled, with all its furniture, etc.

Hem of the Gar'ment. The Jews attached a symbolical importance to the hem or fringe, because of the regulation in Num. xv. 38. See FRINGE.

Her'cules (Hera's glory). The national god of Tyre, called MELKART (king of the city). The worship extended to all colonies of Tyre, especially to Carthage. This was the Baal also. The Greeks make him the most famous hero of their fabulous history, remarkable for his great strength (SAMSON), and especially for 12 "labors" which were connected with the health and safety of men. Hera was the Greek dame of Juno, who was the guardian deity of married women. In Assyria she was Astarte, "Queen of Heaven;" and as such is sculptured at Hierapolis, in Asia Minor.

HERA.

Herd. Herdman. The herd was one of the chief sources of wealth, and the ox the most precious, next to the horse and mule. The herd yielded the most esteemed sacrifice. Its supply for sustenance was most important, in flesh, milk, butter, and cheese. The cattle were broken to service in the third year, after which they were rarely killed. The harvest is gathered and threshed by the help of cattle. Pharaoh made some of Joseph's brothers overseers of herds, and David's herdsmen were among the chief officers of his court.

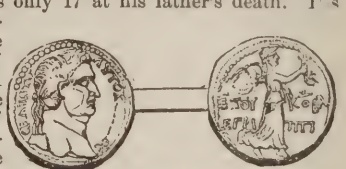
Her'mon (nose of mountain). The highest peak of Anti-Lebanon, on or beyond the north border of the land (Josh. xi. 17; Deut. xxxiv. 1; 1 Sam. iii. 20). The Amorites called it Shenir (to shine, as a coat of mail); the Sidonians, Sirion (to glitter); also called Sion (elevated); and now by the Arabs Jebel esh Sheikh (chief mountain), and Jebel eth Thelj (snowy mountain). Its rivers are Jordan, Abana, Pharpar, Orontes, and Leontes. It was the religious centre of pagan Syria, and the temples of Baal gave it a name. The ruins of these temples are now found on many of its lower shoulders, as at Rakleh, Sed Dan, Bustra, Mutaleih, Kefr Kuk, Burkush, Aiba, Hibariyeh, Tilthatha, Ain Hersha, Asheir, Bekkeh, Munseh, and Paneas. At Rakleh there is a god's face, 40 inches in diameter, surrounded by a wreath, all well cut in bold relief, and set in the wall of the temple, which is a ruin, and one of a circle of temples all around, facing the summit of Hermon. The temple at Asheir is on an elevated platform (which is ornamented with a frieze and cornice), 126 by 69 feet, and itself 89 by 40 feet, and 54 feet high. In the Ionic style, with cup and ball ornaments. On the very highest peak are the foundations of a circular wall of large stones, enclosing hewn stones (some beveled), in heaps, disclosing the plan of a small temple (Deut. xii. 2; 2 K. xvii. 10). The central peak is a bald cone of gray limestone, 2000 ft. higher than the surrounding ridges. These lower ridges are thinly clothed with evergreen oaks. The whole of Palestine can be seen from the summit.

HIGH-PRIEST BOWING BEFORE THE ARK IN THE HOLY OF HOLIES.

The mountain is a beautiful sight from every side, wherever visible, near or afar off. Its summit is crowned with perpetual snow, and its lower slopes are clothed with forests. The summer sun melts the snow from the crests of the ridges, leaving it in the deep ravines, where it appears like long white lines at a distance, and has been compared to the white locks of an old man. The name Jebel-esh-Sheikh means the chief mountain, a title which every traveler gives it spontaneously. It may be seen from the hills a few miles north of Jerusalem, and from any part of the country north of that, and also from the heights of Moab. Its height is a little less than ten thousand feet; but as it stands alone and separated by several miles from any other high range, it appears even more majestic and lofty than Lebanon itself, which is higher. Whether this mountain or its slope near Paneas (Cæsarea Philippi) was the scene of the Transfiguration of Jesus, has not been determined; but the common consent of many writers on the subject has connected its name with that event, and the only other locality (Mount Tabor) which at one time was thought to have been the scene is now almost entirely rejected, partly because Josephus gives an account of a Roman fort on its summit, the foundations of which are still traceable.

Herod. (See TABLES for the Table of the Herod family.) Josephus says the Herods were Edomites (xiv. 15, § 2), but Nicholaus of Damascus, a historian of the times, says they returned from exile with other Jews (a story invented to please Herod). Antipater (1.) gained power, first in Idumea and then by fomenting the divisions between Hyrcanus, the high-priest, and his brother Aristobulus. He also came into power in Judæa, although Hyrcanus was nominal ruler. Herod (4.) the Great was only 15 years (20?) when he began to rule, and soon won a popular enthusiasm by good measures of public safety and quiet. Being summoned before the Sanhedrin, he appeared robed in purple, with a strong guard of soldiers, and was not sentenced. Not long after, receiving favor from Sextus, president of Syria, and Cassius, he punished Malichus, his father's murderer. He was made governor of Judæa jointly with his brother Phasael, B. C. 41. Antigonus being driven out of Judæa, joined the Parthians and got possession of Judæa, 40 B. C., Herod flying to Rome, while Phasael killed himself. Octavius Cæsar confirmed Herod in his office, and Herod returned to Judæa, where he tried to gain the favor of the Jews by rebuilding and ornamenting the Temple (commenced B. C. 24), and restoring such cities as Cæsarea, Antipatris, Sebaste (Samaria), and others, besides public buildings in Damascus, Tripoli, Ptolemais, Tyre, Sidon, Askelon, and Antioch (a large open space, paved with marble, having a cloister), and also frequent public games and feasts, all at his own expense. He also made costly presents to Cæsar and Agrippa. He is said to have destroyed the genealogies of the Jewish priestly families. These deeds were prompted by the ambition to connect his name with the prosperity of his country, like Solomon's. The close of his career was stained with many cruel and barbarous crimes. His wives and children plotted against each other. (He had ten wives, two of whom were his own nieces.) Three of his sons (9, 10, 11) he had killed, with the mother of two (10, 11). In the midst of these family troubles, and of seditions in the city, he was seized with a terrible disorder in the bowels, and tried to kill himself, after giving orders for a magnificent funeral. He attempted to destroy the infant Jesus by killing all the children in Bethlehem (about 12), to get rid of an object of jealousy, for Jesus was spoken of as born king of the Jews. He died B. C. 4. He maintained peace at home and abroad by his vigor and timely generosity, and conciliated the good-will of the Romans. Many coins of his reign are still extant. (See MONEY.)

HEROD ANTIPAS (15) had been destined as his father's successor, but was appointed "tetrarch of Galilee and Peræa." He first married a daughter of Aretas (king of Arabia Petræa, and afterwards Herodias, his half-brother "Herod-Philip's" wife. This Herodias caused the death of John the Baptist. Aretas, in revenge for the slight put on his daughter, invaded Herod's territory and defeated him. He went to Rome, at the suggestion of Herodias, to ask for the title of a king, but being there opposed by the friends of Agrippa, he was banished to Lugduni, A. D. 39, where he died, his wife being with him. It was to this Herod that Jesus was sent for examination by Pilate. He built Tiberias, and restored Sephoris, and Bethharem in Peræa, naming it Julias, after the emperor's wife.



ARCHELAUS (16). The kingdom which had been once intended for his brother Antipas, was left to Archelaus, who was educated in Rome, and Augustus confirmed the choice, giving him Idumea, Judæa, Samaria, Cæsarea, Joppa, and Jerusalem, with the title of Ethnarch. He broke the Mosaic law by marrying his brother's widow, Glaphyra; was denounced by his subjects, appealed to Cæsar, and was banished to Vienne, in Gaul, where he died (A. D. 39).

HEROD PHILIP I (14). His mother was daughter of the high-priest Simon. He married Herodias, sister of Agrippa I, and their daughter was Salome (31). Herodias left him for his half-brother Antipas (Matt. xiv. 3). He was excluded from all share in his father's possessions because of his mother's treachery, and lived a private life.

HEROD PHILIP II (19). He was brought up at Rome, and after his father's death was appointed governor (tetrarch) of Batanæa, Trachonitis, Auranitis, and Jamnia, which he ruled with justice and moderation, without taking part in the intrigues of the rest of his family. He rebuilt Paneas, and named it Cæsarea Philippi, and raised Bethsaida beyond Jordan to a city, naming it Julias after the daughter of the emperor, and died there (A. D. 31). He married Salome (31), but left no children.

HEROD AGRIPPA I (26).—Was educated in Rome with Claudius and Drusus, where Tiberius imprisoned him for an unguarded speech. Caius Caligula, the succeeding emperor, liberated him, and made him tetrarch of Galilee and Peræa (Lysanias). Herod Antipas and Herodias tried in vain to have him deposed, but he defeated their plans by a counter-charge of treason with the Parthians. Agrippa rendered important service to Claudius, and had his dominions enlarged by Samaria and Judæa, so that they equaled in extent those of Herod the Great. He was a strict keeper of the law, and was respected by the Jews. It is supposed that it was to increase their favor that he put to death James the Less, and put Peter in prison (Acts xii.). In the fourth year of his reign over Judæa (A. D. 44), he attended some games in honor of the emperor. Appearing in a robe ornamented with silver embroidery, his flatterers saluted him as a god, when he was seized with a sudden illness, and died in five days (eaten of worms).

HEROD AGRIPPA II (36). He was educated at Rome, and was only 17 at his father's death. His first appointment was the kingdom of Chalcis, and afterwards the tetrarchies of Philip and Lysanias, with the title of king (Acts xxv.). Nero added several cities. He built many splendid public buildings in Jerusalem and Berytus. Juvenal in his Satires notices his relation to his sister Berenice. He died at Rome in the third year of Trajan, A. D. 100, the last of the Herods.

HEAD OF TITUS. COIN OF HEROD AGRIPPA II.

Heron (ANAPHAH). An unclean bird (Lev. xi. 19; Deut. xiv. 18). There are several species "after its kind" in Palestine, one of which is called the White Ibis, which are found in immense flocks about the Huleh lake and marsh. The flesh is excellent.

Hesh'bon (Num. xxi. 26). Capital city of Sihon, king of the Amorites, on the western border of the Mishor (Josh. xiii. 17), and on the boundary between Reuben and Gad. The ruins are 20 miles east of Jordan, opposite the north end of the Dead Sea, on an insulated hill, scattering over a space more than a mile in circuit, with not a single edifice entire. Many cisterns are whole, and a large reservoir near the base of the hill recalls the text in Cant. vii. 4, "Thine eyes are like the fish-pools of Heshbon." The view from the summit is very extensive over the great undulating plateau, embracing the ruins of a great number of cities, whose names resemble those of the Scriptures. (See Tristram's Land of Israel.)

HERON, OR WHITE IBIS OF EGYPT.

Hezeki'ah (HIZEKIYAH, strength of Jah). 12th king of Judah, son of the idolater Ahaz. Made king at 25 (or 20), B. C. 726. He destroyed the images and the instruments of idol-worship, even the image of the brazen serpent, which had been preserved to his time as a precious relic of the wilderness, and repaired the temple and its furniture. He then held a solemn assembly, and after that a feast of the Passover, to which a great many came, and others sent gifts, and the seven days were fully honored, so much so that another seven days were added "with gladness" (2 Chr. xxx. 23). He refused submission and tribute to the king of Assyria, which brought the Assyrian army to Samaria in the fourth year of his reign, and in the 14th year the assault on Judæa was made (2 K. xviii. 13), when Hezekiah made peace, being compelled to rob the temple to pay the tax. A strong confirmation of the leading facts in the Bible narrative has lately been discovered at Nineveh, sculptured in stone, with the names of Hezekiah and others familiar, which leave no doubt in the matter. Sennacherib insisted on an unconditional surrender, in the most offensive manner. Hezekiah humbled himself before God, and being assured by Isaiah of the favor of Jehovah, he called his army together and prayed for help, which came as a plague upon the hosts of the Assyrians (2 K. xix. 35). Sennacherib was killed soon after his return home, in the house of his idol, by two of his sons. Hezekiah only lived a year longer, dying in his 54th year. He was one of the best kings of both Israel and Judah. — 2. Son of Neariah, in the royal line of Judah (1 Chr. iii. 23). — 3. Hizkiah in Zeph. i. 1.

SILVERSMITHS.

Hierap'olis (Col. iv. 13). Five miles north of Laodicea. There are mineral springs, whose waters form stalactites, which gave it an ancient celebrity (Strabo xiii. 629). A great number of sepulchres are found in its vicinity. The ruins show its ancient greatness, and traces are still distinct of a temple of Apollo, a theatre (346 feet), a gymnasium (400 feet sq.), and three Christian churches (one 300 feet).

High Places (bāmoth). From the top of Hermon to the crest of the low hills, all over the land, there are evidences that they were used for religious rites, both in idolatrous and in pure worship. The Temple on Moriah was intended to supersede all other high places, and no other worship was allowed, except on special occasions.

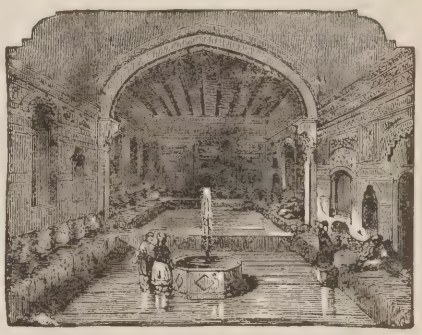
High-Priest. The office of the (COHEN, priest) high-priest was legal, theological, and historical. The legal included all the law of Moses alluding to it, as the substitute for the first-born. He alone was consecrated by the anointing oil, the under-priests being sprinkled only (Ps. cxxxiii.). His dress was symbolical. (See DRESS.) He alone could enter the Holy of Holies, which he did but once a year (DAY OF ATONEMENT) clothed in pure white. The accidental man-slayer was safe in the City of Refuge during his life-time, and at his death could return to his friends. He could not follow a funeral, nor disfigure himself by mourning. There was an assistant, called SAGAN (second priest), who could act in his stead (Luke iii. 2). The elders or Sanhedrim appointed him before the monarchy. No one could hold the office who was blemished, or was under 10 years (2 Chr. xxxi. 17), and it ended only at death, although one could be, or was deposed for ill-conduct. Theologically he was a type of Jesus the Christ. Historically his office concerns the history of the Jews for 1370 years, including nearly 80 different persons, from Aaron to Phannias.

EGYPTIAN HIGH-PRIEST.

Hinnom, the Valley of (Josh. xviii. 16). On the S. and W. of Mt. Zion. The origin of the name is unknown (Jer. vii. 31). An idol of bronze of great size was set up in the valley, facing Olivet, where children were sacrificed in the fire, which seems to have been kindled inside the idol. Josiah abolished the worship, and strewed human bones over the place, making it unclean, and thus prevented the renewal of the worship there (2 K. xxiii. 10). These inhuman practices gave the place a horrible character, and caused its name to be detested and used as a figure for a place of torment.

Hor, Mount (HAR, mountain), (Num. xx. 25). On the edge of Edom, not far from Kadesh and Zalmonah. Aaron was buried here (22–29). The ascent is very steep and difficult — rocky; and on its summit is a rude building called Aaron's tomb. Juniper grows almost to the top. The view from the summit is very extensive in every direction; on the north the passes of Akrabim, where the Jews were defeated, and the mountains around the Dead Sea; on the east the rugged range of Edom (with the Deir, or convent of Petra, in sight); red, bare, and desolate; southward, the wide downs of Mt. Seir; and westward the Arabah, with its hundred watercourses; and above it the great white wilderness, fading into the hot and trembling distance. 5,000 feet high.

Horn (KEREN). Horns on cattle; often used as weapons, and for trumpets for calling workmen to dinner, the soldiers to the field, and for announcing religious ceremonies. Used also for bottles. The elephant's tusks were called horns (from their shape), as also trumpets of metal. The summit of a hill was a horn, as also the corners of the altar for burnt-offerings. The modern Druses wear a horn on the head for ornament, but it was not an ancient custom of the Hebrews. In poetry the horn is strength, and also a nation, or a king or a god.



Horse (SUS). Not mentioned among Abraham's animals, but first as coming from Egypt (Gen. xlvii. 17). The horse is almost exclusively used in war in Scripture, and is so sculptured on the monuments both of Egypt and Assyria. Job gives a most poetic description of a war-horse in ch. xxxix. 19–25. "A horse is a vain thing for safety" (Ps. xxxiii. 17), said the poet and the prophet also (Deut. xvii. 16). Solomon disobeyed the letter and spirit of the prohibition not to multiply horses, and his successors did also. Horses are used as symbols by the prophets, as in Zech. i. 8, "a man riding on a red horse;" and he also mentions speckled (or bay) and white horses. John, in Rev. vi., saw four horses go forth: white, red, black, and livid (green), indicating the spiritual condition of the nations. White horses are an emblem of triumph and power. Successful generals rode in triumph on white horses (Rev. xix. 11–15).

Hōsan'na (save now). Ps. cxviii. was sung on joyful occasions, such as the feast of Tabernacles. Verses 25 and 26 were sung with loud acclamation. "Hosanna to the Son of David" in Matt. xxi. 9.

Hosē'a (salvation). A prophet, called of God, with Amos, to declare his word to Israel. He is supposed to have lived B. C. 785 to 725. His book is the most obscure and difficult to understand of the twelve minor prophets.

Hoshē'a (safety). Hosea I, son of Nun (Deut. xxxii. 44). OSHEA, the prophet. — 2. The last king of Israel (Is. vii. 16). Shalmanezer, king of Assyria, besieged and ended the kingdom of Israel B. C. 721 (2 K. xvii.). — 3. Son of Azaziah (1 Chr. xxvii. 30), and the ruler of Ephraim. — 4. One of the people who signed the covenant (Neh. x. 23).

Hospital'ity. One of the chief virtues among the Orientals, and it is most highly esteemed on the desert, being less needed and less valued in the towns. The ancient Egyptians limited their practice to their own people, having a superstitious dread of all foreigners. The O. T. is full of allusions to the rites and the divine commands for their practice, and instances of the national belief of the Hebrews in their value. The laws of Moses give many directions for special cases, as with the stranger, "for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt" (Lev. xix. 34), the poor and the traveler. To break the law was a very great offense, as in the case of Benjamin, at Gibeah (Judg. xiii. 15, xix. 17–21). The Good Samaritan stands for all ages as an example of Christian hospitality. The account of Abraham entertaining the three angels is a perfect picture of how a modern Bedouin sheikh would treat a traveler in our day. (See ABRAHAM.) Oriental respect for the covenant of salt (and bread) is a part of the law of hospitality. To taste another's salt is to make yourself his friend for the time. In every village there is a mewsil, inn, for the use of travelers, where they are supplied with food by certain families near it. No money is paid, but presents may be made equivalent to the value of the articles used.

INTERIOR OF A HOUSE IN DAMASCUS.

House (BETH, to pass the night). A dwelling for man or cattle. House, tent, palace, tomb, tabernacle, temple; heaven; family. The houses of the rich are made of stone, with two or more stories arched over the rooms and passage-ways, with fine stairways, supplied with wide galleries or verandas, and open places for light and air, generally built around two or three sides of a court, in which is a fountain or pool of water. The wall next to the street is usually blank, with a small door, and a window or two, high up and latticed. (See WINDOW.) The door often has an inscription, seldom the name of the resident. The poor live in houses of mud, sun-dried, usually of one story, roofed with mud laid on poles which are covered with grass or palm-leaves. In the rainy season the rain leaks through (see DROPPING), if not prevented by rolling the mud with a stone roller. When of two stories, the lower is for the use of animals and for storage. In hot countries, people sleep on the roofs, under tents of cloth, or booths of branches. The cool of the evening is also passed on the roof, when proclamation is made by the public crier of any command of the ruler, or news of any public kind. It is also a place for prayer. Some roofs have vines, so trained as to form a shelter from the sun or neighbors. The space is found useful for drying grain, fruit, and clothing from the wash. Stairways lead from the roof to the ground in the court without passing into the house. It is quite usual to build pigeon-houses of bottles on the battlements, and sparrows build their own nests in any corner or hole, even plugging up the chimneys (Ps. lxxxiv., cii. 7), and are caught in great numbers, being almost worthless (Matt. x. 29). Very large houses, convents, and inns, have several courts connected by passages. South of Nablus (Shechem) the roof is supplied with domes for lighting and enlarging the rooms below. The upper room or chamber is the choice place, given only to strangers or friends of distinction. The sculptures of Egypt and Assyria present houses of more than one story. The guest-room, or divan, is provided with seats all around the room, except by the doors, like wide, low sofas; no chairs are used. The Romans and Greeks used chairs and reclining seats or sofas around the table at banquets. The walls are often ornamented with carvings of wood, and sometimes painted in beautiful patterns. (See CARPENTER.) The furniture is much more simple than ours, and less expensive, except in the houses of the rich.

COURTYARD WITH A FOUNTAIN.

Hul (region), (Gen. x. 23). Second son of Aram, grandson of Shem. The plain or valley of the Jordan north of Lake Merom is called Ard el Huleh, and the lake's most ancient name is Huleh, and it is still so called by the Arabs.

Hul'dah (weasel), a prophetess (2 K. xxii. 14; 2 Chr. xxxiv. 22), whose husband, Shallum, was master of the wardrobe to king Josiah (2 K. xxii. 14). Huldah was famous as an oracle when Jeremiah was a boy in the school at Anathoth.

Hūram (high-born). 1. Son of Bela (1 Chr. xiii. 5). — 2. King of Tyre (1 Chr. xiv. 1). — 3. Hiram, the artificer (ii. 13). He was called Ab (father), a title of respect used now in the East, and the origin of the title of the Bishop of Rome (pope, papa, father).

Husks (Gr. keratia). The fruit of the carob-tree, which is very common in the East and in the Greek islands, where it is in great request for fattening hogs. It has a sweetish pulp when tender. The ripe pods (10 inches long) are dry and have seeds like beans. The leaves are like our ash, but dark and glossy. It blossoms in February, and the pods are ripe in May.

Hyē'na. Not mentioned by name in the O. T. as translated, but meant in the original by the word ZEBUA (Ar. dabba'), which is rendered streaked bird in Jer. xii. 9 (Hyena in the Sept.). Valley of Zeboim (hyenas in 1 Sam. xiii. 18). It is still found in numbers, ready to attack wounded, dying, or dead animals, eating all, even the very bones, its jaws being most powerful. Their flesh is not eaten, having a bad odor.

Hymn. "In psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs." The Greek word Umnos, or humnos, means a song (in praise of Deity), as a part of worship, and there are several collections of such as were used in ancient times, written by Callimachus, Orpheus, Homer, Linus, Sappho, and others. Jesus and his disciples sang a hymn before going out, on the eve of the last supper (Matt. xxvi. 30). The words used are supposed to have been Ps. cxv., cxviii., called the Hallel. Paul and Silas sang hymns in prison at Philippi (Acts xvi. 25; Gr. humnoun, praises); and Paul commends their use in his epistles (Eph. v. 19; Col. iii. 16). The hymn differs from the psalm in thought and composition. The different meters were adopted from the Greek models.

Hyssop (EZOR; Gr. hussopos). The Arabic zufa is a plant growing on a slender square stem, free from thorns or spreading branches, ending in a cluster of heads, having a pleasant aromatic odor, growing on the walls in Palestine. No plant in the East is better fitted for purposes of sprinkling. Its leaves are often eaten (like summer savory) with bread.

HYSSOP.

I

I Am, and I Am that I Am (Heb. AYA ASHER AYA). JAH.

Ib'zan (of tin). A native of Bethlehem. Judge of Israel for seven years (Judg. xii. 8, 10). He had thirty sons and thirty daughters.

Ico'nium (Acts xiii. 51). Konieh, a large city; is on a table-land, a fertile plain, near a semicircle of snow-capped mountains in Asia Minor. This level district was Lycaonia, of which Cicero says it was the capital. It was on the route leading from Ephesus to Tarsus, Antioch, and the Euphrates. Here Paul was stoned, and left for dead (xiv. 19). The city is built of the ruins of the ancient structures, and pieces of marble columns, capitals, and carved cornices appear everywhere in the masonry. It is now quite large, the residence of a pasha, surrounded with beautiful groves and gardens, well-watered, and the resort of pilgrims who visit a saint's tomb. In the middle ages it was the capital of the Seljukian Sultans, and is called the cradle of the Ottoman empire. The traditional story of Paul and Thecla is located here. (See Conybeare and Howson's Life of Paul.)

Idol. There are 21 Hebrew words for idols or images for worship. 1. AVEN, nought (Beth*el*, house of God, Beth*aven*, house of vanity); nothing, iniquity; 2. ELIL, no god, as contrasted with ELOHIM, God; 3. EMAH, terror; 4. MIFLEZETH, horror (Phallus, the productive power of nature and the nature-goddess Ashera; Priapus); 5. BOSHETH, shameful; 6. GILLULIM, filthy gods; 7. SHIKKUZ, impurity; 8. SEMEL, likeness; 9. ZELEM, shadow; 10. TEMUNAH, model; 11. ATSAB, shape; 12. EZAB, fashion; 13. OZEB, figure; 14. ZIR, a shape; 15. MAZZEBAH, statue; 16. CHAMMANIM, sun-images; 17. MASCHITH, device; 18. TERAPHIM, idols (see TERAPHIM); 19. PESEL, carved image; 20. PESILIM, graven images; (quarries, in Judg. iii. 19, 26;) 21. NESEC, molten image; MASSEKAH, shaped in a mold. These various terms are obscure, because very little material has come down to us from antiquity which fixes the form of these images. Jeremiah described in a sarcastic way how these so-called gods were made, but he did not give an idea of the particular shape. All these terms expressed worthlessness and vanity, contempt and abhorrence.

Idolatry (TERAPHIM; Gr. idolatreia). The worship of deity made visible, whether of true or false ideas, in images, pictures, stars, fire, or ideal statements, as shown in business pursuits, or in pleasure, or for honor, where self is preferred above the honor and glory of God. Nearly three in four of all the human race are open idolaters; and if judged by the strict moral sense of the term, very many of the other fourth worship self rather than God (Col. iii. 5). By the Jewish law, the idolater was to be stoned to death, and a city given up to it was to be wholly destroyed, with all it contained (Deut. xiii. 12, xvii. 2). The laws of Moses imply that idolatry was known to him, and the paintings and sculptures of Egypt prove its existence there before the time of Moses, but the earliest mention in the Bible is in the incident of Rachel stealing her father's teraphim (images in Gen. xxxi. 19), by which he was guided, as some who consult the clairvoyant or other "fortune-tellers" of our day (a species of idolatry very prevalent among the ignorant and superstitious). The story of Micah and his images shows how widespread the custom was in the age succeeding Joshua and the elders. Solomon did much to encourage idolatry of many kinds, which were brought into the country by his foreign wives (1 K. xi. 7; 2 K. xxiii. 13). It has been a question whether the Hebrews did not so lapse into idolatry as to lose all knowledge of the true God. They lost the true sound of his name, for which we now substitute Jehovah. They may have only mingled foreign rites with the true worship, as many pagan ideas are now adopted into some branches of the Christian Church. We know that the Hebrews worshiped the sun (Baal), moon (Astarte, Diana), the stars (Ashtoreth, Mazaloth in Job), planets, Chiun or Remphan (Saturn, Acts vii. 40–43), and made representations of celestial bodies or ideas, in human form, for worship, as of the sun, moon and stars, (Hera, Diana, see HERA, Cybele, Apollo, Adonis [Tammuz in 2 K. xxi. 3], Venus, etc.); of KEN, in Egypt, and MYLITTA, in Nineveh; and also images of beasts, as the ox (Ps. cvi. 20); Aaron's and Jeroboam's bull-calf; and of a goat (Ashima); fly (Beelzebub); a cock (Nergal); and fish (Dagon); the dog (Nibhaz); the mule and peacock (Adrammelech); the horse and pheasant (Anammelech). The Assyrians (Samaritans also) had a system of ancestor-worship (Asshur and others), and also a lower nature-worship, including the elements, trees, etc. The scapegoat of the Day of Atonement is a recognition of the existence of Satan (Typhon in Egyptian system), but was not a worship of that being, for only sins were sent to Asazel, nothing choice or precious.

The Christian Church now holds that God has sanctioned but one image, which was made by himself, for man's worship, which is the intelligent, rational, holy nature of man, which appears in all completeness and perfection in Jesus the Christ, and is reflected in his followers, as they have more or less received the spirit of the gospel. "God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship in spirit and in truth" (John iv. 24).

THE GREAT CAMEO.

Ijeab'arim (heaps, or ruins of Abarim), (Num. xxi. 11). This region, east of the Dead Sea, is still unexplored by any Christian traveler in our day, and therefore it is impossible to say whether the stations of the Israelites can be located or not.

I'jon (ruin), (1 K. xv. 20; 2 K. xv. 29). In the N. Jordan valley, now called Tell Dibbin. The hill is a favorable site for a city, overlooking the whole plain of Merj Aiyun, and on the road leading from the coast into the interior.

Illyr'icum (Rom. xv. 19). Paul preached the gospel of Christ "from Jerusalem round about unto Illyricum." A country on the east shore of the Adriatic Sea, north of Epyrus. Illyricum was at one time one of the four great divisions of the Roman empire, and included the whole country between the Adriatic, the Danube, the Black Sea, and Macedonia.

Imman'uel (with us El, or God with us). The name of the child (prophetic) which was to be given to the house of David (Is. vii. 14). Isaiah bids Ahaz ask a sign of Jehovah, which he, with pretended humility, refused to do, when this sign of a child by a virgin (virgin is a young woman) was given, and, as some think, the prophesy was fulfilled within a few years, and others look on the child as a type of Jesus the Christ, as seems to be the meaning in Matt. i. 23.

Immortal'ity (Gr. athanasia, deathless, not mortal). The Christian believes that the human soul will never die. Some hold the doctrine that only those who believe on Christ will be blessed with immortality, while those who deny him will die (Rom. ii. 7; 2 Tim. i. 10). The same Greek word is also rendered incorruption in 1 Cor. xv. 42, etc., and sincerity in Eph. vi. 24, etc.

In'cense (Heb. KETORAH, LEBONAH; Gr. thumiama). A compound of sweet-smelling gums used in acts of worship, and forbidden in private life (Ex. xxx. 27). The mixture is said to have been equal parts of stacte, onycha, frankincense, galbanum. The altar of incense was placed in front of the veil, from which on the great Day of Atonement the high-priest could raise a cloud of perfume which covered the mercy-seat (entered within and filled the holy of holies). It was a type of Christian prayer.

In'dia (Esth. i. 1, viii. 9). The extent of the kingdom of Ahasuerus was from India to Ethiopia, 127 provinces. Acts ii. 9, instead of Judæa read India. The country around the river Indus, now the Punjaub, which Herodotus describes as part of Darius's empire (iii. 98). At a later period it was conquered by Alexander. The name is found in the inscriptions at Persepolis (1 Macc. viii. 8). Modern India, or Hindostan, is more extensive than the ancient. The articles obtained by Solomon from the East were Indian, such as horns of ivory, ebony, broidered work and rich apparel, sandal-wood, apes, peacocks, and tin.

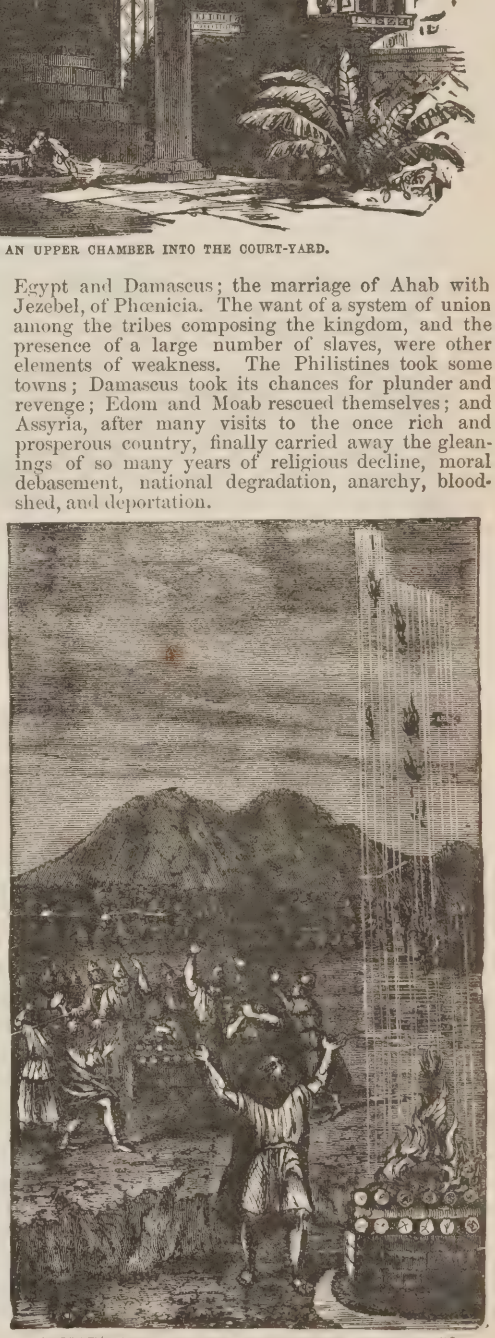
Inn (Heb. MALON). A lodging-place for the night. Only a room is to be had, the traveler must supply himself with furniture, bed, etc. They were built generally two stories high, and near water. One is mentioned in the history of Joseph (Gen. xlii. 27), and by Moses in his day (Ex. iv. 24); by Jeremiah, the habitation (inn) of Chimham (xli. 17), and the same by Luke, where Jesus was born (ii. 7). The Good Samaritan is said to have left money (in our standard about $2.50) to pay charges at the inn (Luke xxii.). The inn is usually built around a yard, having a well or fountain, and entered by a gate which can be closed against intruders at night. The baggage and animals occupy the lower rooms, and the people the upper and better chambers. When the upper rooms were full of crowds at feast times, the late comers would be obliged to take a lower room, among the animals ("in the manger").

Inspira'tion (from the Latin, in-breathing). The supernatural influence of God's spirit on the human mind, by which prophets, apostles, and other sacred writers were qualified to record divine truth without error. Others hold that it is only a divine impression on the mind, by which the understanding is informed. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God" (2 Tim. iii. 16).

INN. CARAVANSERAI.

Io'nia. That part of the coast of Asia Minor which is between Doris and Æolis. Ionia was celebrated for its 13 cities and its islands. The chief cities were Ephesus, Smyrna, Samos, Chios, and Miletus (Jos. Ant. xvi. 2, 3). India in 1 Macc. viii. 8.

I'ron (Heb. BARZEL; Chal. parzlah). The references are many to iron, and as early as the time of Tubal-Cain (Gen. iv. 22). A furnace of iron is taken as the image of the bondage in Egypt (Deut. iv. 28). Iron knives (or steel) are drawn on the monuments in Egypt. The remains of ancient Nineveh furnish articles of iron coated with brouze, which has preserved them. Tin melts at 470°, copper, silver, and gold at 1800°, and cast-iron at 3000°, while malleable iron requires a higher degree, but furnaces of clay, fed with charcoal and supplied with a blast of air from two skin bellows, are used successfully in the East.



LOOKING OUT FROM AN UPPER CHAMBER INTO THE COURT-YARD.

I'saac (Heb. YIZHAK, laughing). Born at Gerar, B. C. 1896, of Sarah (who was 90) and Abraham (who was 100), in fulfilment of a divine promise (Gen. xxi. 17; Gal. iv. 29). He married Rebekah, and was the father of Esau and Jacob. Of all the patriarchs none made so little noise in the world as Isaac, and none excelled him in gentleness and dutifulness as a son, and in faithfulness and constancy as a husband of one wife. His home for a long time was in the rich pasture-land of Gerar. Isaac died at the ripe age of 180. One of the wells at Beersheba is a memorial of him, having been dug as a record of the peace made with Abimelech, king of the Philistines. Buried in the cave of Machpelah.

Ish'mael (whom God hears). Son of Abraham and Hagar (Gen. xvi. 15, 16). First-born of the patriarch. Born at Mamre B. C. 1900, but was sent into the wilderness south of Beersheba, Paran, when he was 16 years old. He had a wife from Egypt (xxi. 21), who was mother of his 12 sons, besides a daughter. The prophesy, "He shall be a wild ass of a man, his hand against every man, and every man's hand against him," is now and ever has been true; and also the other saying, Ishmael "shall dwell in the presence of all his brethren," for they have always been free. The desert is called in Arabic, Bedu, and the genuine Arab calls himself Bedawee (desert-man), Bedawin (desert-men). 4000 years have not changed their disposition, manners, habits, occupation, government, or dress.

Is'rael (soldier of God). The name given to Jacob at the time he wrestled with the angel at Peniel. — 2. It was also used as the name of the Hebrew nation. — 3. The north kingdom, not including Judah.

Israel, Kingdom of. The ten tribes which were divided to Jeroboam by the prophet Ahijah of Shiloh (1 K. xi. 31, 35), leaving Judah alone to the house of David; Benjamin, Simeon, and Dan joining Judah afterward. SHECHEM was the first capital (1 K. xii. 25); TIRZAH the second (xiv. 17); and SAMARIA the third. Jezreel was occasionally a royal residence. The holy cities were Dan (Paneas) and Bethel. The population was at one time over three millions, if the number in the armies is correct as given in 2 Chr. xiii. 3. The area of the whole country, in the time of Solomon, occupied by the twelve tribes, was 12,810 sq. ms., of which 9,375 belonged to Israel and 3,435 to Judah. New Hampshire has about 9,000 sq. ms. Ephraim and Judah had always been rivals, and were nearly matched in numbers from the first, and the two largest of the twelve. For three, or, perhaps, nearly four centuries, the ark was in the territory of Ephraim, at Shiloh, until the time of Eli. But when the theocracy was superseded by the kingdom, Saul, the king, was a Benjamite, and Solomon, the son of David, of Judah; but Jeroboam, the leader of the revolt, was an Ephraimite, and, before Solomon's death, was accused of treason, and fled to Egypt. The burdensome taxes of Solomon's reign probably hastened, if it did not cause the revolt of the ten tribes; and the death of Solomon was the notice for Jeroboam's return, and the establishment of the new kingdom of Israel, B. C. 975. This was the most important event, and the greatest misfortune, since Joshua crossed the Jordan. Some of the mistakes which were fatal were: The driving out of the Levites from their possessions, for they carried with them their sacred character and powerful support of the king; the alliance with the kings of Egypt and Damascus; the marriage of Ahab with Jezebel, of Phœnicia. The want of a system of union among the tribes composing the kingdom, and the presence of a large number of slaves, were other elements of weakness. The Philistines took some towns; Damascus took its chances for plunder and revenge; Edom and Moab rescued themselves; and Assyria, after many visits to the once rich and prosperous country, finally carried away the gleanings of so many years of religious decline, moral debasement, national degradation, anarchy, bloodshed, and deportation.

ELIJAH'S ALTAR TO THE LORD, I KINGS, XVIII; Ch. 38

Is'sachar (hire,) (Gen. xxx. 17,) (Heb. ISASCAR). Ninth son of Jacob and fifth son of Leah. He is not mentioned again as a person — his name only, as the name of a tribe. In the order of march in the desert, Issachar's (the tribe's) place was on the east of the Tabernacle, with Judah and Zebulon. Only the tribes of Judah and Dan outnumbered them at the passage of the Jordan, Issachar having 64,300 fighting-men. (For location, see map of the Twelve Tribes.) Its location and boundaries are recorded in Josh. xix. 17–23. Its land was and is now the richest in Palestine. Esdraëlon, the plain (called Jezreel, the seed-plot of God, on account of its rich soil), Mount Tabor, and Gilboa were in its border, and the river Kishon ran through it. Jacob blessed Issachar in the image of "a strong-boned he-ass, couching down between two hedge-rows," which is a picture of contented ease and quiet. When David took the census, near the close of his reign, Issachar had 87,000, of whom 36,000 were mercenary "bands." Shalmaneser carried the tribe captive to Assyria. It was not known as a tribe after the return. We are left to suppose that the tribe fell into idolatry, because there is nothing recorded in favor of its religious history. — 2. The seventh son of Obed Edom (1 Chr. xxvi. 5).

It'aly. In the time of Paul the whole peninsula south of the Alps was included under this name (Acts x. 1). The ITALIAN BAND were soldiers recruited in Italy. Rome was the capital of the Roman Empire.

Ituræ'a (from Jetur, the son of Ishmael). (Gen. xxv. 15.) N.E. of Palestine, along the base of Hermon (Luke iii. 1). Philip was "tetrarch of Ituræa and the region of Trachonitis." Now Jedur. It is tableland, with conical hills at intervals, well watered, rich soil, and excellent pasture. The rock is basalt, and the houses are built of it. Its ancient cities are deserted, but standing. Bedawins still pitch their tents there.

crooked in its course, affording to the traveler new and pleasing views every step of the way.

Ja'besh Gil'ead. Jabeth, in Gilead, the largest city in the half-tribe of Manasseh, 6 miles from Pella, now called Ed Deir, on Wady Yabis. It did not send its contingent against Benjamin (Judg. xxi. 8), and was punished by the destruction of all its people but 400 young women, who were given to the Benjamites for wives. Nahash attacked it (1 Sam. xi.), but Saul came to the rescue. When the bodies of Saul and his sons hung on the walls of Bethshan, the valiant men of Jabesh Gilead made a raid at night and carried them off, and buried them honorably (1 Sam. xxxi. 11–13).

Ja'bin (intelligent). King of N. Canaan, at Hazor, who headed a most powerful army against Joshua (xi. 1–4), and was surprised and defeated near the waters of Merom (7). Joshua afterward burnt Jabin's city. — 2. King of Hazor, in the time of the Judges, who lived in the same city of Hazor (rebuilt), raised an army against Israel, and was defeated, etc. Some have thought that the two accounts were of one event, or of two victories over one Jabin: one by Joshua and another by Barak, but it is more probable that there were two kings of that name, as recorded, and there were 150 years between the two kings.

Ja'cob (supplanter). Esau and Jacob were twins, sons of Rebekah, wife of Isaac, born B. C. 1836, at the well Lahai-roi. He bought the birthright of his elder brother Esau (at an unfair price in his brother's when a famine brought about the migration to Egypt (see JOSEPH), where he was assigned a home in the pasture-land of Goshen, by the Pharaoh, and where he died, aged 130 (147). His body was borne to the cave of Machpelah, and laid in the tomb with those of Abraham, Sarah, and Isaac. The blessing that Jacob gave his sons was a proof that his faith in God's promise was strong — had increased — and that his idea of the true God had become clearer and more elevated. It is full of fine thoughts, poetic language, and abounds in the most beautiful images.

Jacob's Well. Is in a low spur of Mt. Gerizim, at the mouth of the valley of Shechem. "Formerly there was a square hole opening into a carefully built vaulted chamber, 10 ft. sq., in the floor of which was the true mouth of the well. Now a part of the vault has fallen in, and completely covered up the mouth, so that it looks like a shallow pit." The well is 9 feet diameter, circular, cut through limestone rock nearly 100 feet deep. It sometimes has water in it, but is often quite dry. There was a small church over it in the 4th century, and to the south-west there are a few shapeless ruins still left.

James. Three persons are mentioned by this name in the N. T. The original form of the name in Hebrew is Jacob, and it is so written now by the church in the East; St. Jacob (Mar Yacoob). The name has passed through several changes, in many languages. It was in Greek, Iakobos; Latin, Jacobus; Italian, Iacomo, or Giacomo, and Jacopo: Spanish, Iago

VIEW OF JERUSALEM FROM THE SPOT WHERE JESUS WEPT OVER THE CITY.

Ivory (SHEN, a tooth). The tusks of the elephant are called teeth, and also horns (Ez. xxvii. 15). Solomon made use of it (Ps. xlv. 8), and had a throne of ivory (1 K. v. 18), overlaid (inlaid) with gold. The tusk of the African elephant sometimes weighs 120 pounds, and measures 10 feet long. There are many beautiful relics of carved ivory that were found in the ruins of Nineveh, and from Egypt, of figures on boxes, and various toilet ornaments — works of art of a high order.

J

There is no distinction in the Hebrew between j and i. The proper sound is that of y when placed before a vowel, as jah, yäh; Jonah, yönah.

Jab'bok (flowing). River in Gilead, falling into the Jordan about midway between the Sea of Tiberias and the Dead Sea (Josh. xii. 2). The border of the Ammon was strong (Num. xxi. 24), the river running in a deep defile, deep, narrow, and wild, fringed by willows, cane, and oleanders, evergreen, oak, pine and arbutus. Wady Zurka. Some think it was the Hieromax, Wady Yarmuk.

The river is one of the very few that flow the year round, and would furnish water-power to drive mills for the supply of the whole region on both sides of the river. It is full of rapids, waterfalls, and is very distress) and got the patriarchal blessing from his father by a stratagem, in which he was aided by his mother. This blessing was material only, and did not include the spiritual promises. On the way to Padan-Aram, to find a wife among his mother's relatives, he had the dream of the ladder reaching from earth to heaven, at Bethel. Isaac had repeated his blessing when he left home, with the addition of the spiritual promises made to Abraham, and they were confirmed in the dream at Bethel. The beautiful incident of the meeting of Jacob with Rachel at the well exhibits the pure and simple habits of the time, and the courtesy and kindness so native to those who follow the shepherd's life. Jacob served 14 years for Rachel and married Leah besides. At the age of nearly 100 he returned to Canaan, and on the way his name was changed from Jacob to Israel (God's soldier) at Peniel, where he met his brother Esau, who was then a kind of Bedouin wanderer, such as now roam over the same district, although Esau appeared to be much the better man of the two.

The images (gods) that Rachel stole from her father's house, were small figures of certain designs (TERAPHIM), such as are often found buried among the ruins in Palestine, and were used in Pagan worship.

Esau and Jacob met again at Hebron, when they buried their father Isaac.

Soon after this Joseph was sold into Egypt.

Jacob was living at Hebron with his eleven sons, (Diego), and Xayme, or Jayme (hayme); French, Jacques, and Jame; and in English, James.

1. JAMES, THE SON OF ZEBEDEE. He first appears as a fisherman, A. D. 27, when he, and his brother John, were called by Jesus to be his disciples (Mark i. 20). His father owned a boat (ship), and employed help. James was numbered with the 12, among the first 4. He was always selected for any special duty. He was present at the raising of Jairus' daughter (Mark i. 29); one of the three on the Mt. of Transfiguration (Matt. xviii. 1); one of the 4 who heard the sermon on the last days (Mark xiii. 3); and one of three in Gethsemane (Matt. xxvi. 37). He joined his brother John in the request that fire should be called down on the Samaritans (Luke ix. 54); and in the ambitious request, with their mother, to sit nearest to Christ in his kingdom (Matt. xx. 20). These requests were refused with indignation by Jesus. He was a man of very resolute purpose and determined action, and was given a high position among the apostles (Acts xii. 2); and he is the only one of the twelve whose death is recorded, which took place about ten years after the crucifixion.

2. JAMES, THE LORD'S BROTHER. The children of Joseph and Mary were Jesus, James, Joses, Jude (Judas), Simon, and three daughters whose names are not given (Matt. xiii. 55, 56; Gal. i. 19, ii. 9, 12). His brethren did not believe in Jesus as the Christ at the first (John vii. 5), and some of them not until a few days before the Day of Pentecost (1 Cor. xv. 7).

JACOB'S WELL. — SHECHEM.

James occupied a prominent position among the apostles, and was surnamed "the Just." James and Peter seem to have been in authority on equal terms when Paul was admitted to the fellowship of the apostles on the word of Barnabas (Acts ix. 27; Gal. i. 18), and after that time he acts as the president of the council in Jerusalem (Acts xii. 17, xv. 13), whose decrees he delivered formally, a position recognized and recorded by Paul (Gal. ii. 9), and honored by a formal visit of ceremony in the presence of all the presbyters (Acts xxi. 18). He is believed to have been appointed Bishop of Jerusalem by Jesus in a vision, as is reported by Epiphanius and others of the early historians of the Church, only that Eusebius says the appointment was by the apostles. He was a very constant attendant on the services in the Temple, and prayed "on his knees" for the salvation of the people, so that he was looked upon as the "bulwark of the church," and it is said that "all who became believers believed through James." This same authority relates that he was thrown from the gable of the Temple to the ground, and then stoned to death, shortly before the siege of Jerusalem. See the HISTORY for the EPISTLE OF JAMES.

3. JAMES, THE SON OF ALPHÆUS (Clopas) and Mary (John xix. 25), one of the apostles (Matt. x. 3; Mark iii. 18, etc.), (Matt. xxvii. 56; Mark xv. 40), and is also called James the Less. He had a brother named Joses, and a sister Salome. The occurrence of the same name in the mother and children of two families does not argue a relation — rather the contrary, and it is not likely that these were relatives of Jesus. See MARY.

Jā'pheth (light-colored race, from YAFAH, fair). Second son of Noah (Gen. x. 2, 6). Who occupied the isles of Greece (shores and islands), coast of the Great Sea, Asia Minor, Asia, and Europe.

Jā'sher, the Book of (book of the upright). A book of heroic poetry and history mentioned in two places in the O. T. (Josh. x. 13, and 2 Sam. i. 18), and probably a book of songs and eulogies of distinguished men in Israel. The Vulgate has "the book of the just one;" the Septuagint "the book of the upright one;" the Syriac "the book of praises" or "psalms."

Jā'son. Greek form of the name Jesus; Hebrew, Joshua.

Jedū'thun (praising). One of the conductors of the temple music in the time of David (1 Chr. xv. 17; xxiii. 6). The three were ETHAN, the son of Kushaiah, the Merarite; HEMAN, the Kohathite; and ASAPH, the Gershonite. He played on cymbals in the procession when the ark was brought to Zion, but he was appointed to duty at Gibeon (Ps. cl. 5). His name is in the titles of several psalms (xxxix.; lxii.; lxxvii.), as choir-leader.

Jehō'ahaz (Jah holds). Son and successor of Jehu, who reigned 17 years, B. C. 856–840, in Samaria (2 K. xiii. 1–9). — 2. Shallum, 4th son of Josiah, whom he succeeded as king of Judah, being chosen over his elder brother, B. C. 610, but after a short reign he was deposed (2 K. xxiii. 32; Jer. xxii. 10) by Pharaoh Necho, taken to Riblah, put in chains, and taken to Egypt, where he died. The people lamented for him, and he was the first king of Judah who died in exile. — 3. Youngest son of king Jehoram. His name as king of Judah was Ahaziah.

Jehoi'achin (appointed by Jah). Jeconiah, Coniah, Jaconias, Joiakim, and Joacim. Son of Jehiakim and Nehushta, and 19th king of Judah, reigning 3 mos. 10 days. He was 18 years old (2 K. xxiv. 8), or 8 (2 Chr. xxxvi. 9), and was carried captive by Nebuchadnezzar, in revenge for the alliance that his father had made with Egypt. The best of the people, the sacred vessels of the Temple, and all the treasure of the people, were taken to Babylon, leaving a poor and feeble remnant. Jehoiachin was kept a close prisoner nearly all the rest of his life, 36 years, when Evil-Merodach liberated him. (See EVIL-MERODACH.) He was the last of Solomon's line, as predicted by Jeremiah (xxii. 30), the succession passing over to Nathan's line.

Jehoi'akim (Jah appoints). 19th king of Judah (B. C. 609–598), 25 years old at his accession. He was first named Eliakim, and was the son of Joash and Zebudah, but Pharaoh Necho changed his name when he made him king in his brother Jehoahaz's stead (2 K. xxiii. 33), who died in Egypt in captivity (v. 34), and he also collected a heavy fine ($200,000) from Judah for Josiah's part with Babylon against Egypt. The battle at Carchemish ended the rule of Egypt in Palestine for that time, and Nebuchadnezzar besieged and took Jerusalem, and carried some of the royal family to Babylon as hostages, among whom were Daniel and his three companions. The prophets Jeremiah and Ezekiel warned the king and people of the results of their idolatries, but instead of repenting, they burned Jeremiah's prophesy, put him in prison, and drove Urijah the prophet into Egypt, where he was killed, and his corpse treated in a barbarous manner (Jer. xxvi. 21–23; xxxvi.). According to the warnings of Ezekiel (xvii.) and Jeremiah (ii. xxvii.), enemies attacked them on all sides (2 K. xxiv. 7); the king lost his life and was buried without honor (Jer. xxii. 17, 19). The king of Babylon came in a few weeks after his death, and carried his son and all the best men and their families and treasures to Babylon. This act of the king in burning Jeremiah's book was the first recorded attack on the liberty of the public press, and it did not succeed; the second edition was enlarged and improved (Jer. xxxvi. 32).

Jehō'nadab (Jah incites). The son of Rechab (a Kenite), who assisted Jehu in his reforms, and in the destruction of the Baal worshipers (2 K. x. 15). Jeremiah holds up to the people the obedience of the Rechabites (pilgrims) who kept the law of abstinence from wine, and that to live only in tents, in contrast to the general disregard of the law of Moses (Jer. xxxv.), and prophesies an immortality of the house of Rechab. There is no historical trace of them after the Jewish nation went to pieces, and it is supposed that they became disciples of Jesus.

Jehō'ram (Jah has exalted). JORAM. 1. Son of Ahab, king of Israel, and successor to his brother Ahaziah, B. C. 896. His reign was noted for the lives of the two great prophets, Elijah and Elisha. He was killed by an arrow from Jehu's bow in Naboth's vineyard (1 K. xxi. 21). He was the last of the line of Omri. — 2. Eldest son of Jehoshaphat, succeeding him as king of Judah at the age of 32, reigning 8 years, B. C. 893–885. He murdered his 6 brothers, and (by the help of his wife Athaliah, the daughter of Ahab) revived the Baal worship (see ELIJAH). The latter part of his reign was a series of calamities to the nation, and death to his family, himself dying of a painful malady, not regretted, and being buried without honor. — 3. A priest sent to teach the law to the people (2 Chr. xvii. 8).

MODERN TARSUS.

Jehosh'aphat (Jah is judge). 1. Son of Asa and Azubah: succeeded to the throne of Judah at the age of 35, and reigned 25 years, B. C. 914–889 (1 K. xv. 24; 2 K. viii. 16; 2 Chr. xvii., xxi.). "The Lord was with Jehoshaphat, because he walked in the first ways of his father David, and sought not unto Baalim; but sought to the Jehovah God of his father." * * "He took away the high places and groves out of Judah" (2 Chr. xvii. 6; 1 K. xxii. 43). He sent out teachers among the people to instruct them in the law, set up just judges in the walled cities, forming a supreme court at Jerusalem, for references and appeals. He built castles and store-cities, and aimed to restore commerce in the Red Sea. The army was reformed in five sections, and the Arabians, Philistines, and Edomites were laid under tribute. He was saved from a very great danger by his trust in God (2 Chr. xx.; Ps. lxxxiii., xli., xlvii., xlviii.). He made a friendly alliance with the idolatrous kingdom of Israel, and to secure peace married his son Jehoram to Athaliah, the daughter of Ahab. He was saved by a miracle with his army in the desert (2 K. iii.), at the request of a prophet of Jehovah. He was prudent enough to appoint his successor (Jehoram, 2 Chr. xxi. 3) in his lifetime, as David had done to Solomon. — 2. Four others of this name were without note.

THE VALLEY OF TOPHET.

Jehosh'aphat, Valley of (valley where Jah judges). (Joel iii. 12.) The valley between Scopus and Olivet and Jerusalem, so named after the greatest king after Solomon (2 Chr. xx.). The nations are to assemble for judgment, where Christ will appear the second time (Acts i. 11). Kidron. The Mohammedans point out a stone in the east wall of the Temple area, near the S. end, from which a bridge will be stretched across the valley to Mt. Moriah, over which all souls must pass — the just in safety, the wicked falling off into Gehenna. This valley has been used as a burial-ground from the days of Josiah (2 K. xxiii. 6); and both Jews and Mohammedans look on the place as a most sacred resting-place; but the modern name cannot be traced beyond the 4th century A. D. Joel's prophesy was a poetical and symbolical figure, intended to teach that God is always present with and defending his faithful children. See JERUSALEM.

Jehosh'eba (oath to Jah). Daughter to Jehoram, king of Judah, but her mother is not mentioned. She married Jehoiada, the high-priest, being the only woman of Aaron's line who married into a royal family. She assisted her husband in preserving the young Joash (2 K. xi. 2).

Je'hu (Jah is he). 1. First in the 5th dynasty in Israel (see ISRAEL). He was the son of Jehoshaphat (2 K. ix. 2). His grandfather was Nimshi, who was better known than his father. Twenty years before he began to reign he was divinely singled out as the king of Israel by Elijah, and he was anointed by a servant of Elisha, when he was a general in the army, fighting against Hazael, king of Syria, at Ramoth-Gilead (vrs. 4–10). He carried out the directions of the prophesy to the very letter, and also destroyed the Baal (and Astarte) worshipers, their temple and images, but did not entirely purify the national worship, and therefore his line went to destruction in the 4th generation (2 K. xxix. 30; Hos. i. 4). — 2. Son of Hanani, a prophet of Judah, whose prophesy was directed against Israel. He also wrote a life of Jehoshaphat (2 Chr. xvi. 7, xx. 34; 1 K. xvi. 1). — 3. Man of the house of Hezron, in Judah (1 Chr. ii. 38). — 4. Chief in Simeon (iv. 35). — 5. "Jehu, the Anthothite," joined David at Ziglag (xii. 3).

Jeph'thah (Heb. YIFTAH, he will open), (Judg. xxii.). Son of Gilead by a concubine. Driven out of the family by the other children, he went to TOB, where he became a leader of a band of marauders, ready for any service except robbery. Samuel names him among those who were raised up by God for his people (1 Sam. xii. 11), and Paul mentions his special faith (Heb. xi. 32). The Elders of Israel not finding any one offering to lead against the Ammonites, who had been masters for 18 years, appealed to Jephthah, who solemnly accepted the position. He tried to secure the aid of Ephraim, but in vain, and also to reason with the king of Ammon; and then after making a rash vow he completely overthrew the enemy, taking 20 cities; when having punished the Ephraimites, he held his office for 6 years. The story of his daughter's sacrifice by his vow has been variously understood. Josephus says she was made a burnt-offering, but modern scholars have inclined to the notion that she was devoted to perpetual virginity, and the sacred service of God in the temple. The story of Iphgenia (doomed as a sacrifice to Diana, and made a priestess in her temple), has been cited as a parallel example of the spirit of the Greeks in that age. The vow that he made was that the first person that came out of his house to meet him should be the Lord's, that is, should be devoted to the Lord; if a man, he should serve as a priest's servant; if a woman, she should be devoted to the sacred duties of religion as a holy virgin (Judg. xi. 39), a companion to the women of the Gibeonites.

Jeho'vah. The short form Jäh (yan), which is used in forming such names as Eli-jah, Isa-jah, Jerem-jah (Jeremiah). GOD (German Gŏtt). The Hebrew names are: 1. EL, might, as EL-SHADDAI, God Almighty (Gen. xiv.); EL-ELOHIM, God mightier than all gods, God of gods; EL-BETH-EL, the place of the mighty God; also in compounds, as AREZE-EL, the cedars of God, that is tall and strong; and peculiarly in poetry. — 2. ELOAH, strong; ELOHIM, the plural. ELOAH is used only in poetry, and ELOHIM in both poetry and prose. The plural is used in Hebrew to enlarge and intensify the idea expressed by the singular. ELOHIM is not the gods, but is the strongest of all strong beings, the fullness of divine perfections, the sum of all the powers of all imaginable gods. All true sons of Israel were called sons of God (Elohim, John x. 35). The Cainites claimed to be "sons of God" in distinction from the Sethites, who took the more humble name of "sons of Adam," or "sons of the Man" (Gen. vi. 4). The peculiar name of God in relation to the covenant, is — 3. JEHOVAH; but in reading the Scriptures the Jews always pronounced the word ADONAI, which is Lord. The vowel points now in use were not invented for centuries after the Hebrew ceased to be a living language, so that the true pronunciation of the name Jehovah was lost, and the word was written YHVH, and pronounced Adonai or Elohim. The vowel points of Adonai (ADONAI) were placed in Jehovah (JAHOVAH), but this is not found in the old copies, and not older than about 1500 A. D. Diodorus Siculus gives the Greek IAŌ for the Hebrew JHVH. The meaning of Jehovah is underived existence, HE IS, OR I AM BECAUSE I AM, the God of Abraham, of grace, and truth, and love; self-existence, eternity. Elohim is God in nature, Jehovah is God in grace. (The temple of Isis, at Sais, had this inscription: "I am all that has been, that is, and that will be," meaning Isis, the universal mother.) The word Jehovah is supposed to mean YAHU, joy; VAH, pain — the God of good and evil. In Greek, the word is — 4. THEŌS, any deity, idol, or the true God (Matt. i. 23), and Satan (God of this world).—5. KURIŌS, Lord in Matt. i. 20; and in the Septuagint as the translation of Jehovah.

Jeremi'ah (Jah throws). 1. The great Hebrew prophet. (See HISTORY OF THE BOOKS.) Seven others of the same name. Jeremiah was one of the most faithful and important of the great spiritual teachers and prophets of the Old Testament age. He was a son of the priest Hilkiah, and, judging from the excellent character of his writings, must have been carefully and thoroughly educated in the school of the prophets. His book is full of the spirit of devotion to Jehovah and his country, and exhibits his entire readiness, under all his severe trials and sufferings, to sacrifice himself for his cause, which was the redemption of Israel from the gross idolatry of the age. He was thrown into prison because he predicted the captivity of the Jews, an event which quickly followed his warning. The book gives a history of about forty years, B. C. 628 to 586, but the chapters are not arranged in chronological order. The Lamentations of Jeremiah are among the finest writings of the Hebrews.

Jer'icho (city of the moon; and another, a fragrant place). (Num. xxii. 1.) In the Jordan valley, 8 miles from the Dead Sea and 6 from the Jordan. When the Jews crossed the Jordan, Jericho was a large and strong city, whose origin is not recorded. Since it is not mentioned in Gen. xiii., when Abraham and Lot looked over the plain, it must have been built after that time. It was anciently surrounded by palm-trees, of which there were many kinds (Deut. xxxiv. 3; Jos. B. J., 8, § 3), thickly dotted about in pleasure gardens; besides balsam, figs, rose-plants, cypress, and many others. Josephus says, "It will not be easy to light on any climate in the habitable earth that can well be compared to it." It was the first city W. of the Jordan taken by the Israelites. Joshua cursed the city (Josh. vi. 26), and the curse was fulfilled in the person of Hiel the Bethelite (1 K. xvi. 34).

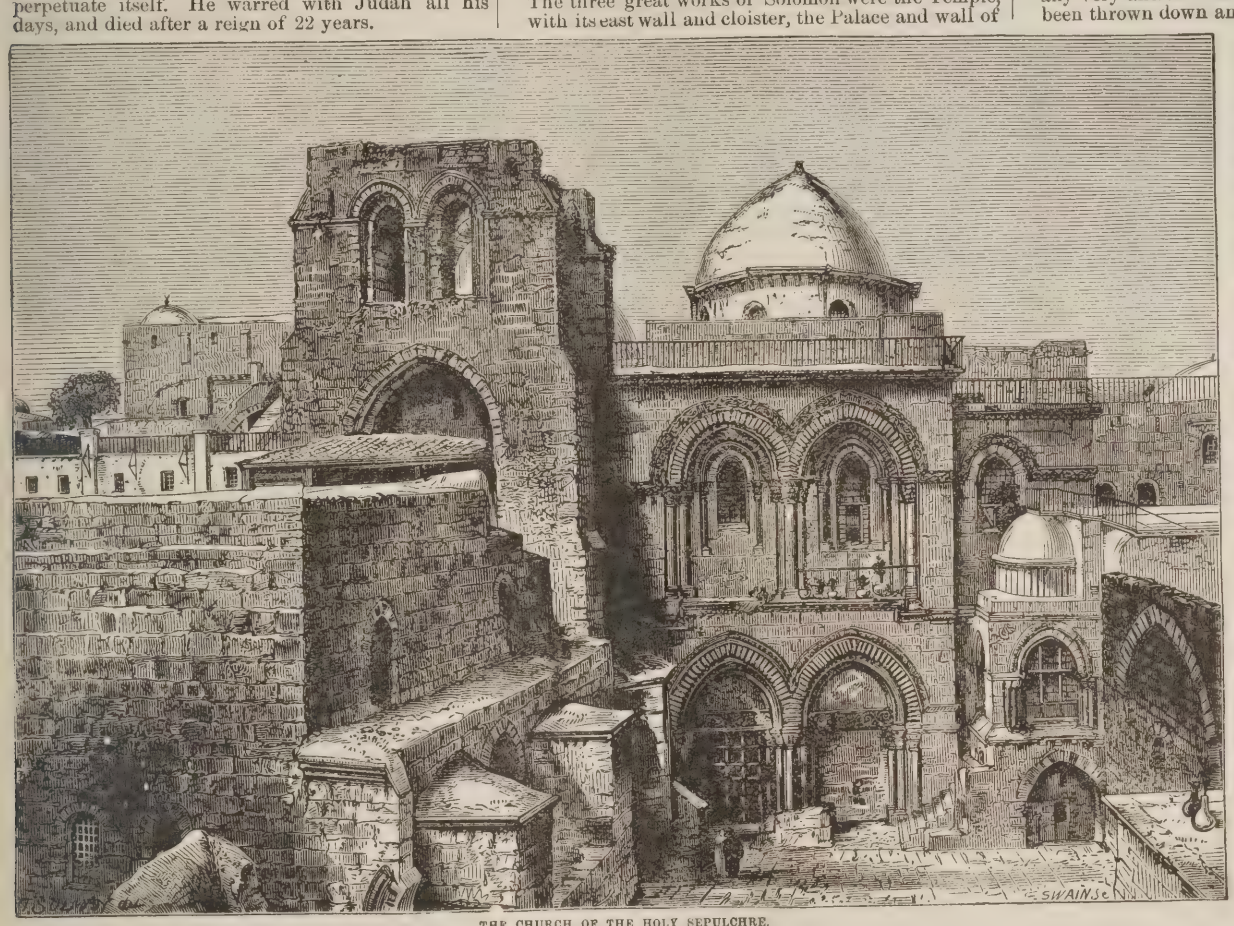
The Roman general Pompey camped there one night, and Gabinius made it one of the five cities of assembly. Under Herod the Great it rose to some importance; was full of treasure of all kinds, and had valuable revenues. Antony gave it to Cleopatra. Herod built a fort there, which he named Cyprus, in honor of his mother; and a tower, Phasælis. He also built a new town higher up the plain, which he also called Phasælis. Norman McLeod thinks the modern village marks the site of Gilgal (Eastward, p. 198,.

Near Jericho was a copious spring, which was healed by Elisha (2 K. ii. 19–21), and is now called Ain es Sultan. It is about a mile and a half from the modern village of Er Riha.

There are extensive ruins, rubbish and foundations, in several places, on both sides the Wady Kelt (Brook Cherith) and at the Ain es Sultan, marking ancient sites — the most ancient at the fountain. The city of the New Testament was on the banks of the Wady Kelt, on the direct route from Peræa to Jerusalem. It was visited several times by Jesus. Approaching it he cured one blind man (Luke xviii. 35), and leaving it he cured another (Mark x. 46). In the house of Zaccheus (probably in a garden in the suburbs) he related the parable of the Ten Pounds.

Vespasian made it the head of a toparchy. It was destroyed during the siege of Jerusalem. It revived under Saracen rule, and in the time of the Crusades was one of the most fertile regions in Palestine.

The Latins have a tradition that Jesus was baptized in the Jordan, opposite Jericho, and the Greeks point to another place not far off. Both places are visited by great numbers of pilgrims, especially at Easter. Many bottles and cans of the water of the Jordan are carried away as mementos of the place.



Jer'icho, Plains of. The wide valley of the Jordan around Jericho, about 8 or 10 miles across (2 K. xxv. 5; Jer. xxxix. 5).

Jerobō'am (Heb. YARAB'AM, many people). The founder of the kingdom of Israel, an Ephraimite, the son of Nebat by Zeruah, a widow (1 K. xi. 26). He was obliged to fly to Egypt for plotting against Solomon, when a young man, even after Solomon had given him an office of honor and profit (ver. 28). He found an asylum and a kind reception in Egypt, from the Pharaoh Shishak (Sesonchis), successor of the father-in-law of Solomon, who had also received kindly Hadad another enemy of Solomon. On the death of Solomon, and on the request of his friends, Rehoboam hastened to fulfil Ahijah's prophesy in forming a kingdom out of the 10 tribes, being chosen king B. C. 975. He made haste to change the religion of his people, in order to more certainly separate them from Jerusalem, and set up the calf-worship at Bethel (Bethaven), and Dan, and changed the time of holding the feasts. His hand was paralyzed because he attempted to arrest the prophet from Judah who predicted the overthrow of his idolatry, but was restored sound on the prayer of the same prophet. His political policy also was unsound, and did not perpetuate itself. He warred with Judah all his days, and died after a reign of 22 years.

had rested at Kirjath-Jearim 20 years after Eli's death, was brought to Zion, and David assumed the duties of priest as well as king, offering burnt-offerings and peace-offerings under a new tent in the citadel of Zion. The ark was only removed from here to the Temple of Solomon. David's royal gardens were in the valley at En Rogel. David and most of his successors were buried in the citadel, but there are no traces of their tombs. (See p. 27). The sepulchres of David were in or near Ophel (Neh. iii. 16, xii. 37). The three great works of Solomon were the Temple, with its east wall and cloister, the Palace and wall of above at its level, resting on the uneven surface of the original hill. The piers or columns are from 3 to 8 feet in diameter, and from 5 to 23 feet apart, and there are 15 rows; and opening into this place, which is called Solomon's stables, is a triple gate, under the Aksa mosque. West of these, under the actual Temple site, now under the Aksa mosque, is another series of piers and vaults, which seem to have been built up from more ancient materials. Besides the citadel, now called David's tower, there are scarcely any very ancient remains in the city that have not been thrown down and built up again several times.

THE CHURCH OF THE HOLY SEPULCHRE.

"Wilson's" arch is one of a series forming an approach from Zion to the Temple enclosure. Solomon's aqueduct from the Pools above Etham passes over this arch, and under the street above. This arch has at one time been used as a cistern. The rock was found on sinking a shaft 51 feet 6 inches below the floor. Below this room there were found vaults, tanks, etc., and a secret passage east and west, probably connecting the Temple with Zion.

The extent of the filling up above the original rock can be seen from this plan, where the debris is 85 feet deep at the S. W. corner of the Haram wall. The "chippings" of the stones and absence of any pieces of pottery, etc., show that this dirt close to the wall has never been disturbed since Hiram's builders put it there. The spring of "Robinson's Arch" is seen in its place; and the stones composing the arch were found by Lieut. Warren buried under 40 feet of rubbish: one stone, having broken through the roof of an aqueduct, lay on the rocky bottom at the depth of 63 feet.

This plan is of the city as it now is; with a few signs indicating ancient works, sites of ancient walls, churches, towers, and other structures in different ages; as many as could be laid down without confusing the work.

The city is small, but there is scarcely a place of any note, not even Nineveh or Babylon, that has been, to modern scholars, such a profound puzzle. The descriptions of Josephus are minute, his knowledge being exact and complete; and the hills on which the city stands are so marked and distinct from each other, that it seems almost marvelous that there could have been any difficulty, until we are reminded of the fact that during the middle ages, and especially during the Crusades, it was regarded as a peculiarly sacred city, and as such must needs have every event that is mentioned in the Bible as having happened in or near it located and honored with some monument, costly and showy in proportion to the importance of the event so honored.

Jerobo'am II. Son of Joash, of the dynasty of Jehu, 13th king of Israel (B. C. 825). Corruptions of all kinds, political and religious, were notorious, and were condemned by the prophet Amos (vii.) He reigned 41 years, and extended his father's conquests, taking Hamath, Damascus, the Hauran, Gilead, Ammon, and Moab, and advanced his kingdom to its highest point of prosperity. These successes had been predicted by Jonah (2 K. xiv. 25–28). Amos was falsely reported by Jeroboam's high-priest at Bethel as having said that the king should die by the sword, but Amos meant (vii. 9–17) the house of Jeroboam, which was the recognized idea in the N. T. times (John viii. 52; Mark xiv. 57; Acts vi. 13). Ps. xlv. may refer to Jeroboam. He was buried in state with his ancestors.

Jeru'salem (foundation of peace.). First mentioned in Gen. xiv. 18, by the name of Salem, whose king was Melchizedek (who is said by the Rabbis to be the patriarch Shem). The name Shalaim (Ps. lxxvi. 2) means two cities, and is applied to the cities or quarters on (modern) Zion and in the Tyropœon valley. At the conquest of Canaan the name of its king was Adoni-zedek (lord of justice), (Josh. x. 1, 3,) similar to Melchizedek (king of righteousness). Joshua speaks of the city as "The Jebusite" (xv. 8), after the name of its occupiers. In the time of the Judges the name was JEBUS (xix. 10, 11). Judah could not and Benjamin did not drive out the Jebusites (Josh. xv. 63; Judg. i. 21), and the city only became the capital of the nation after about 450 years from the time of Joshua, when David made it his royal residence, and the sanctuary near the centre of his kingdom (Ez. v. 5); leaving Hebron, where he had reigned 7½ years. The seat of the religion had been before this at Shechem, Shiloh, Gibeah, Nod, and Gibeon. Zion was now called the CITY OF DAVID, and was soon enlarged by walls, strengthened by towers, and beautified by a palace for the king, built by the mechanics of Hiram, king of Tyre. The ark, which Jerusalem (Josephus). Also a palace for his Egyptian wife; which was not on Zion (1 K. vii. 8, ix. 24; 2 Chr. viii. 11). "All of these were costly stones, * * sawed with saws," just such stones as are now found in the great quarry under the city, north of the Temple area, which may be sawed almost as easy as chalk; the buildings probably required for residences by the thousand women of Solomon's house, who were of several nations and of different religions; the colleges for the several priests (very much such a state of things as is now found in the city, except that the various sects support themselves independently of each other); the 1400 chariots, and 12,000 riding-horses requiring stables; and besides all these "all that he desired to build in Jerusalem and in Lebanon," shows the activity of his reign. He also built shrines for Ashtoreth, Chemosh, and Milcom, heathen divinities, on the site now occupied by the village of Siloam, on that part of Olivet called the Mt. of Corruption (1 K. xi.; 2 K. xxiii.); which Josiah destroyed, together with an image of Molech in Hinnom, 360 years after.

The first important relic that we have in our day of the time of Solomon, is a part of the foundation wall of the Temple platform, lately uncovered, a sketch of which is in the margin. These are the kind of stones that were "sawed," now very much harder, after long exposure.

The Son of Sirach (and also Tacitus) speaks of a "sea" of waters that was under the Temple, and this was recently brought to light by Robinson and Barclay, (City of the Great King, 526.) It is 736 feet in circuit, 42 in depth, and capable of holding two million gallons.

The columns were once covered with metal, but are now bare, or plastered stone. The rain from the mosque of Aksa and other buildings is drained into it. No fountain has been discovered.

Under the S. E. corner of the Temple area are many columns, arched over, supporting the platform

UNLEAVENED BREAD.

One of the most extensive of these monuments is the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, a collection of buildings in a vast mass, without order, 350 ft. long by 280 wide, including 70 sacred localities, presided over by 17 different sects in separate chapels inside the edifice. To describe these various "stations" would require a volume. Although it is no proof of the truth of the traditions which locate the "stations" in this church, yet De Vogue and others (Sandys) give us a great mass of historical evidence that there has been a Church of the Holy Sepulchre for many ages in the city. The oldest engraved seal of the city is that here given, dated A. D. 1150; and there seems to have been a small church inside the larger one at that time, as there is now. The next one, dated 1162–'72, gives the Tower of David and the Temple, besides the Sepulchre; which would favor the opinion of Fergusson, in Smith's Dict. (article Jerusalem), that Moriah, Zion, the City of David, and the Holy Sepulchre were all on the same hill, now called the Haram. The history is continued in the seal of Baldwin IV, 1174, with the inscription "Tower of David;" and also by many others, which may be seen in De Vogue's work. The plan of the church of those ancient times is very much like that of the present day. That in Sandys, of 200 years ago, is almost identical. The Knights of St. John, the ruins of whose hospital are in the next block south of the Sepulchre Church, have left a seal of their order, which gives a hint of their objects and duties also. Jerusalem is now a sort of collection of churches and hospitals, with a great many vacant places strewed with ruins. Pilate's house, where Jesus was judged, is located at the N.W. corner of the Haram area, and it probably stood on the site of the Citadel of David. The Crusaders respected the Dome of the Rock, and held sacred service in it, but used the Aksa mosque for a stable, despising it as a work of the Jews, the Temple of Solomon. It was so only in location, for El Aksa was built by the Mohammedans in the seventh century, on the site of the Temple of Solomon, whom they reverence among the prophets, as well as David, and also Jesus, the son of David.

The twelve columns around the centre (with four square piers at equal intervals) are of porphyry, and have gilded capitals; the canopy is of crimson silk. The outside of this church is eight-sided, of marble, covered in the upper part with the finest glazed tiles, in colors, to the top of the dome, which is finished with a spire and bronze crescent. The piece of native rock, the top of which shows white in the picture, is 60 feet long by 55 feet wide, and 12 feet high above the floor at the highest point, and is hollowed out underneath — forming a large room, which is believed by many to have been the real sepulchre of Jesus, now very much enlarged.

was about four miles. Josephus says (Wars, v. 4), there were many towers 30 feet square (some larger), and solid for a height of 30 feet. Above the base there were rooms for the soldiers; and over these again rooms and cisterns for water. There were on the third wall 90 towers, 300 feet apart; 40 on the middle wall, and on the old wall 60. Psephinus, the most northern, was on high ground, N.W. of the city, was 105 feet high, and eight-sided. From its top could be seen the Jordan and the Dead Sea eastward, and the Great Sea westward. The tower Hippicus was named by Herod after his friend; and Phasælus after his (Herod's) brother, and it was 135 feet high; finished inside and outside "like a royal palace." Another was named after Mariamne, Herod's queen. It was 75 feet high, and equally splendid. The Castle of Antonia, at the N.W. corner of the Temple area, was built by John Hyrcanus. Pilate's judgment-hall was in this castle, which was probably on the site of David's citadel (John xviii. 28, xix. 9). The towers of Meah and Hananeel are also mentioned in Neh. iii. 1; Jer. xxi. 38.

The ancient plans located St. Stephen's Gate on the north side of the city, at what is now called Damascus Gate. The view shows a few of the tombs and DOME OF THE ROCK, JERUSALEM.

The Temple has so entirely disappeared, that "not one stone is left on another." And, besides, its very location is still a matter of guesses and speculation. Several churches, a pagan temple, and other buildings, have occupied the platform for ages, and have disappeared, leaving very few traces.

The first mention of a street in the city is in 2 Chr. xxix. 4, where Hezekiah gathered the priests and Levites into the East street and his soldiers in the street of the City of David (xxxii. 5, 6). The Bakers' street is mentioned as that from which the prophet Jeremiah was to receive his daily allowance while he was in prison (Jer. xxxvii. 21). The Cheesemongers' street of Josephus is supposed to have been in the Tyropœon valley.

gravestones, of which there are thousands in this valley of Jehoshaphat. The lions on each side of the gateway may date from the Crusades.

The water supply of the city has been remarkable in all ages for being sufficient in times of extreme drought, siege, and famine. Hezekiah "stopped" some sources, which have remained hidden to the present; and it can only be supposed that they were north of the city (2 Chr. xxxii. 4, etc.). Nearly every house has its cistern, or several, large or small. But the one pool of all others was Bethesda, which was near the Sheep-gate.

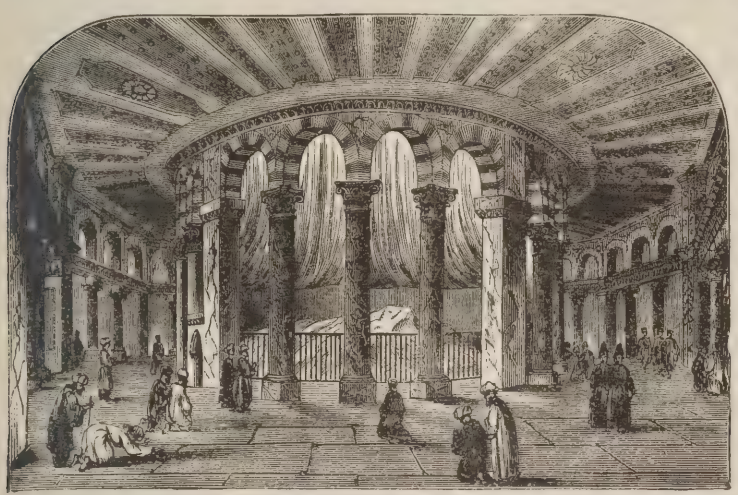
The masonry is of large blocks of stone, 18 to 20 inches square (A). (See cut, SECTION OF POOL.) The joints are hollowed out, and blocks 16 inches deep inserted half their length (B); the spaces between these blocks being filled by others 8 inches deep. Over these is a coarse plaster with gravel (D); and the inside finish is a thick coat of cement.

The identity of this pool with that mentioned in the Gospel has been the source of many and long arguments, but the conclusion that it is the real Bethesda seems to be gaining in favor. The Siloam is supplied by an underground passage from the Virgin Fountain, 1700 feet long. Recent explorations have discovered a water supply of the Virgin Fountain from a vault in the side of Ophel above it, shown in the plan and section here given. From this and many other recent discoveries it appears that Jerusalem is undermined with a series of water-courses, which are frequently alluded to by Josephus and other ancient writers.

TURRIS DAVID.
Baldwin IV. 1174—1184. A.D.

In all the accounts of the sieges of the city we read of the besiegers suffering from thirst, but of the besieged from hunger only, since there never was a scarcity of water inside of the walls.

The proof of the connection, by an underground passage, of the Fountain of the Virgin with the Pool of Siloam was obtained, with great labor and peril and imminent risk of life, by Lieut. Warren, Sergeant Birtles, and an Arab laborer. They were obliged to crawl along on their backs, carrying instruments, books and pencil, a lighted candle in the mouth, and in a stream of dirty water 12 inches deep, in a passage which was sometimes only 16 to 20 inches high. The passage is about 1700 feet between the two pools, crooked, and occupied the party about four hours in its exploration.



HOSPITALIS JERUSALEM.
Knights of St. John.

Abundance of water was required in the Jewish public worship, a part of which was a ceremonial of ablution. The many sources of supply, and the means of storing it for use during the dry season, sieges, and times of drought, may be seen in the following list of fountains, pools, etc.

The brook Kidron. There was "a little river" in this valley, seen by Sir John Maundeville, as late as 1322; the waters of Gihon were called "the brook that flowed through the land," and was brought straight down to the west side of the City of David (2 Chr. xxxii. 30). Solomon was anointed king at the lower fountain of Gihon (1 K. i. 33–45), which was located somewhere between Acra, Bezetha, and Moriah, and not in Hinnom, as now stated (Barclay); the Gihon valley would then commence north of the Damascus Gate, and end in the Tyropœon; Siloam; En Rogel; Motza (spring-head), Ain el Durrage (?) S.E. of En Rogel; Dragon's Well (in Hinnom, not far from the Jaffa Gate, the ancient Valley Gate); Aqueduct of Pilate, "whereby he brought water from a distance of 400 furlongs" (Josephus, Wars, ii. ix. 4); the Stone Aqueduct described by Aristeus, Solomon's Pools at Etham, and the aqueduct from them to the city, giving off a branch to the Great Pool, now Lower Gihon. Barclay thinks Herod brought the water from Etham by a more direct route than Solomon, and supplied the Upper Gihon Pool, the Serpent's Pool of Josephus. Pool of Hezekiah, built by Herod; a very large pool near the Fish Gate (near St. Ann Church, Brocardus, in 1283); Lacus Quidam, not located; The Pool that was made somewhere in the Tyropœon, of which there are no traces; Ditch between Zion and Ophel — bears all the marks of having been an ancient pool; a large pool (100 feet around), near the Absalom Pillar; the Well of Flagellation and two large tanks near Damascus Gate; the "Sea" under the Temple site, into which there are eight well-holes, from the platform above; 43 well-mouths in the Haram area lead down to wells or reservoirs; Well of the Healing, in Valley street; the Pilgrim Pool, near the Herod Gate; Helena's Cistern, in the Coptic convent; Cotton Megara Pool; Lady Mary Pool, near the St. Stephen Gate; Bath of Tiberius, on Zion, near the English Cemetery; several very large pools, or tanks, within a mile radius of the city, more or less in ruins; and the great number of cisterns before mentioned, under private houses, into which rain-water is conducted.

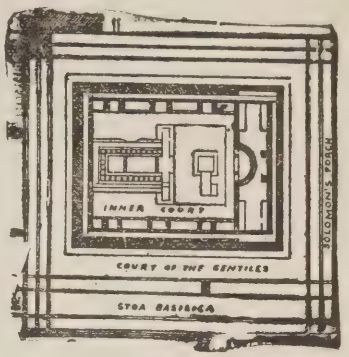
A picture of a siege of the city was found sculptured on a slab in the ruins of Khorsabad (see cut on page 38), in the "Retiring Chamber" of the palace, and is a concise and interesting record. At that time, it seems that the brook Kidron was full of water, and there was a plenty of olive-trees on the hills about the city. There are now but very few trees near the walls, the most interesting being those in the Garden of Gethsemane. Titus cut down all the trees around Jerusalem, and his tenth legion was camped on Olivet, building their part of the wall surrounding the city along the bottom of the valley of Kidron. The Turks have pleasure-grounds, or gardens, farther up the valley (half a mile or so), where they resort to enjoy the cool shade of the olive-trees, some of which are quite as large as those in Gethsemane, and, it may be, as old. The antiquity of those in Gethsemane is argued from the tax, which is fixed by the Turks at one medina for each tree, which rate dates from before or at the time of their conquest; all those planted since everywhere in the empire being taxed one-half of their produce. This would carry the date back to A. D. 634, when Omar took Jerusalem; or to the time when the Turks took it, A.D. 1087.

INTERIOR OF THE DOME OF THE ROCK.

There are no level streets, and the passenger is always ascending or descending, over rough and uncared for ways. The houses are built on heaps of rubbish, which have been gathering for ages. The foundations for the Church of St. James (English) rest on piers built up from the rock through 40 to 50 feet of debris. The streets are often very narrow, the widest being only eight to ten feet. The houses are often built across the street on arches; and the custom of shading them with awnings of mats or boards, suspended by ropes, makes them dark and cool, which is very grateful in that hot climate. Only two or three streets have a name, except such as are being adopted lately by the Franks, generally those used by the Crusaders.

The materials used for building is the native limestone, generally broken into squares, not hewn, or sawn, except by the most wealthy. In many walls may be found fragments of ancient structures, such as cornices, columns, capitals, and mutilated sculptures, built in as raw material. Timber is only brought from other countries, and therefore very costly, and is only used for window-frames and doors, but not for floors or roofs. The windows are always small, and, if large enough to admit a thief, are barred with iron, and give the house a jail-like appearance. Window-glass is only found in the houses of the rich. Only one door opens on the street, and there are no windows in the lower story opening on the street, secluding the houses, but making dismal streets. The interior of the rooms is pleasing, because of the arches and domes required in forming the upper stories and roof. The floors are frequently laid with colored stones, arranged in most beautiful patterns.

The principal trade is in beads, crosses, incense, crucifixes, pilgrim-shells, staffs, pressed flowers, and other keepsakes (besides relics, which are made in great quantities), with the thousands of pilgrims and other travelers, who visit the country every year. Soap-making, and weaving of coarse cotton cloth, are almost the only active manufactures in the city.



A vast number live professedly on charity. There are separate bazars, frequented by the different people: By the Jews, in the street near their great synagogue, on the east slope of Mount Zion; by the Turks, in David, Damascus, and Temple streets; by the Arabs, in Via Dolorosa (El Wad), near the St. Ann church; and by the Christians, in Patriarch street. The Cotton Bazar was once a very grand structure, but it is now abandoned to rubbish, and only used as a passage-way to the Haram area.

This short account of the "Holy City" would be still more incomplete without some brief notice of Solomon's Temple, and its successors.

Whatever we know about them is to be found in the First Book of Kings, in Jeremiah, in Ezekiel (who saw the first Temple in a vision, ch. xl.), in Josephus, in Aristeas; and after these, the modern books of Williams, Robinson, Barclay, and Paine, in our language; and of those in foreign, the best is the German of Dr. Neuman, of Gotha (Die Stiftshütte). Mr. Paine's plan is copied here, because of its simplicity, and seeming fidelity to the original, as critically and clearly interpreted by the author (Solomon's Temple. — T. O. Paine). Of the temple of Zerubbabel there is a very short account in Ezra, and in Hecatæus, quoted by Josephus. The size was a third larger than Solomon's, but its ornamentation was less showy. The size of either was less than the average of our churches in the country villages. Josephus is almost the only authority for all we know about the Temple of Herod, which was the one seen by Jesus. There is not a word in the New Testament about its appearance, nor even its location. But it is supposed that while the figures of Josephus are correct as to the ground-plan, his figures of the elevation are twice the real height (Ant. xv. 11, 3).

The bridge on which Titus stood at the siege and destruction of the city (described by Josephus), had fallen long ago, but its remains have been discovered by Robinson and Lt. Warren, and minute accounts published. The view engraved here shows the spring of the arch which rested against the Temple wall (BR., in the plan of Herod's Temple). The bridge was 51 ft. wide, and extended across the valley to Zion, 350 feet; probably resting on 5 or 6 arches. Some of the stones used were of immense size — one, for instance, being 29 ft. long and nearly 6 ft. wide.

The picture also shows where the Palestine Exploration began work on their shaft near this southwest corner of the Temple wall, in which shaft were found the foundation stones of the Temple wall, the stones (voussoirs) which once formed the arch that Titus destroyed (with the bridge from the Temple to Zion), besides many small articles, pottery, etc., of antiquity. The results of the explorations in Jerusalem may be summed up in a few words. The waterworks (aqueducts, cisterns, etc.) of Solomon's age have been traced out, their plan and present condition. Many points in the course of the ancient walls have been brought to light, but not enough to settle the vexed question, except that the so-called Church of the Holy Sepulchre is not on the site of Golgotha, even if it may possibly be over the sepulchre (of Joseph of Arimathea). The area of the Temple platform has been determined almost beyond dispute. The antiquity of the wall is understood to be proven by the marks of the builders which have been untouched and are readable now. Several very ancient houses have been uncovered, and found to be of stone, arched and well built. The text of Josephus which gives the great height of the west wall of the Temple platform has been confirmed. The fragments of the arch (called Robinson's, because he first called attention to it in our day) that connected the Temple platform with Zion, passing over the Tyropœon valley, were found in the rubbish below.

PLAN OF HEROD'S TEMPLE.

A few antiquities, such as coins, pottery, glass, etc., have been found in and around the city, and some of them are engraved in this volume.

The famous "Wailing-place" of the Jews (where they go to bewail the desolation of Zion) is a few rods north of this place.

"The past of Jerusalem is overflowing with thought. But the future is equally impressive. These ruins are not always to remain. The future Temple, and the restored Israel, when 'Jerusalem shall be the throne of the Lord to all nations,' claim the most earnest thought. The day when 'the feet' of the Lord 'shall stand on the mount of Olives, which is over against Jerusalem toward the east,' is full of importance; and whether we look back or forward, we have to speak of Zion as 'the joy of the whole earth,' for 'salvation is of the Jews.' The present missionary work in Jerusalem is deeply interesting. * * But surely there is no spot on earth like Jerusalem." (Dr. Tyng.)

Jesh'imon (desert). A more desolate region or place than a MIDBAR (wilderness), and applied to the plain and hill-sides at the N. end and on the W. side of the Dead Sea. It consists of a level plain of nitrous earth, into which the feet sink several inches as into ashes, and hills of chalky limestone, without herbage, except a few alkaline plants, and the usual fringe of the Jordan river. The Hill of the Hachilah (dark red cone) may have been Sebbeh (Masada), so well described by Josephus, as Metsadoth (strong-holds in 1 Sam. xxiii. 19), and the word CHORESH (Heb. for wood in verse 19) means a thicket, dense and thorny, such as is found along the shore there now.

Jē'sus (Gr. and Latin form of the Heb. Joshua, or Jehoshua, the help of Jah, or Saviour). 1. The father of SIRACH and grandfather of — 2. The SON OF SIRACH (Eccles. i. 27), author of the BOOK OF ECCLESIASTICUS, or the WISDOM OF JESUS, THE SON OF SIRACH. See HISTORY OF THE BOOKS. He was also known as Ben Sira, a writer of proverbs which closely resemble those in Wisdom.

2. Jē'sus, called JUS'TUS (the just). A disciple of Paul at Rome (Col. iv. 11). Tradition makes him Bishop of Eleutheropolis.

3. Jesus Christ. The name of Jesus means Saviour, and was a common name, derived from the ancient Hebrew Jehoshua.

The title CHRIST means anointed, consecrated, sacred, and is used only for the MESSIAH, who came in fulfilment of prophesy.

The date of the birth of Jesus, the Christ, is fixed by scholars at four years before the present era, so that our date should be 1876 instead of 1872.

Jē'thro (superiority). JETHER. Father-in-law of Moses (Ex. iv. 18, xviii. 1), and also called Hobab (Num. x. 31; Judg. iv. 11). Reuel (Raguel) was the head of the family into which Moses married (Ex. ii. 18), but was probably his wife's grandfather, for Hobab was his son (Num. x. 29). He became a convert to the worship of Jehovah, and sacrificed (Ex. xviii. 12).

Jō'ab (Jah his father). Son of Zeruiah, David's sister. He and his brothers Abishai and Asahel cast their lot with David (1 Sam. xxii. 3), and their history runs close to his. Joab's native power and martial deeds made him the most famous of the three brothers, and he was ambitious and crafty, jealous and revengeful, as is shown in his history as "captain of the host." Joab earned at Jebus his title of commander-in-chief. The duel between 12 young heroes on each side, between the forces of Joab and Abner, took place at the pool of GIBEON, and brought on a general battle, which turned in favor of Joab and David's forces. Abner quarreled with Ishbosheth and went over to David, when Joab killed him, treacherously pretending it was "in blood-revenge" for his brother Asahel, whom Abner had killed. David dared not punish Joab, because he and his two brothers were so useful to him in the army. In the war against Hanun, Joab made a speech which is justly noticed as a perfect model of military address: "Be of good courage, and let us play the men for our people and for the cities of our God, and the Lord do as seemeth him good," (2 Sam. x. 12.) It was in the second year of this war that Uriah was murdered by David, by the help of Joab. He also, at the close of the siege, sent for David, and gave him his share of the spoil, generously waiving his own right.

Jōb (Heb. IYOB, afflicted). Job lived in the land of Uz, which was in the south part of the Syrian desert, near the border of Arabia. The many correct allusions in the Book to the manners, customs, occupations, and faith of the people of Arabia and Syria, make it almost certain that the author must have lived in that region, and in some age before or soon after that of Moses.

John. Short form of Jehohanan (Jah's gift). There are seven of this name, of no particular note, besides JOHN THE APOSTLE. He was the son of Zebedee and Salome, a native of Bethsaida. He was acquainted with the character of Jesus as the Messiah before his call to be an apostle. In company with his brother James, and Peter, he was specially favored by Jesus on several occasions: at the Transfiguration; the restoring of Jairus' daughter; in the garden Gethsemane; and (including Andrew) at the discourse on the fall of Jerusalem. He was mistaken, with the others of the twelve, in his idea of the temporal mission of the Messiah; and with James joined his mother in the ambitious request for places of dignity and honor. He and James were called Boanerges, for their zeal. John was called also the DIVINE and the REVELATOR, from his writings. His family could not have been poor, because they kept servants, and contributed to the support of Jesus; and he received Mary into his home at Jerusalem, after the crucifixion. He also enjoyed social privileges, and the acquaintance of the high-priest. See HISTORY OF THE BOOKS for the GOSPEL, EPISTLES, and the REVELATION.

EASTERN WELL.

Jō'nah (YONAH, dove). Son of Amittai, of Gath-hepher, in Zebulon. See JONAH, in the HISTORY OF THE BOOKS.

Jōn'athan (Jah gave). JEHONATHAN. 1. Eldest son of Saul the king. He is first mentioned at the age of 30, when his father was made king (1 Sam. xiii. 2). He was married, and had one son, Mephibosheth (if no more), born about five years before his death (2 Sam. ii. 8, iv. 4). He was the heir to the throne. He was the most intimate friend of David. He fell in battle on Mount Gilboa at the same time with his father, and his death is mourned by David in one of his most beautiful poems (1 Sam. xviii. to xx.; 2 Sam. i. 17–27).

Jop'pa (YAFA, beauty). In Dan on the seashore, a seaport in Solomon's time (Josh. xix. 46; 2 Chr. ii. 16). The cedar for the two temples, Solomon's and Zerubbabel's, and the palaces of David and Solomon, was landed here (Ezr. iii. 7). Jonah embarked here when trying to escape from the unpleasant mission to Nineveh. During the wars of the Maccabees it was a stronghold (1 Macc. x. 75). Peter's "vision of tolerance" was on a house-top in this city (Acts x. 9–18). A Christian bishop resided here until the Saracens took the place. Pilgrims from all lands have landed here for many ages to go up to Jerusalem. It was taken and retaken many times during the Crusades. Saladin destroyed, and Richard (Lionheart) rebuilt the fortifications. In the 13th century there was not a house entire on the site. It has now 5000 people, 3 convents, Greek, Latin, and Armenian, and several mosques. The bazaars are interesting and antique. The city is on a hill, close to the sea, and is surrounded by miles of orchards — orange, lemon, and many other fruits, besides gardens, which are scarcely surpassed.

The poet Ovid located here the beautiful myth of Andromeda and the sea-monster, a poetical allusion to the rocky barriers of the port, which to this day make approach to Joppa impossible by sea in a storm.

Jōr'dan (the descender). (Heb. YARDEN; Ar. El Urdon, descender, and Esh Sheriah, the watering-place.) The largest river in Palestine. Rises in Mt. Hermon and empties into the Dead Sea. The sources are in the south, west, and north-west slopes of Hermon, whose melting snows supply the fountains, some of which are so copious that each one of three forms a full stream at once. These three are: the Hasbany, the most northern, longest, and muddiest; the Leddan (Ar. El-ed Dan), the largest, but shortest; and the Baniasy (of Paneas), the clearest.

There are, also, a fountain and stream from Ijon; one from Belat, 3 miles N.W. of the Huleh lake, another from Ain Mellahah, one mile N.W.; all of which are perennial, and large enough, each one, to turn a mill. About a mile S. of Hasbaiya the fountain of Shiba, 5 miles up the slope of Hermon, sends a stream north of the hill on which stands the Pagan temple of Hibbariyeh in ruins; another stream from the same direction is the Lūsiāny, and flows into the Jordan at El Gujar, after coursing around the ruined castle of Bostra. These streams flow in deep, rocky channels, several feet below the general level of the country. The slopes of Hermon are "alive with streams" which supply the Jordan. The Hasbany, Leddan, and Baniasy unite in the Huleh marsh, pass S. into the Lake Huleh, and flowing west from its S. angle, tumbles down a rocky ravine, with cliffs on each side, full of rapids, sinking 700 feet in 9 ms. to the Sea of Galilee.

From the S. of this sea the Jordan flows in a channel 100 feet wide, rocky, winding, always descending; falling over about forty cascades and rapids, sinking

600 feet in 60 miles, in a straight line, but making nearly 200 by its windings, to the Dead Sea, where it is a shallow stream, 500 feet wide, and deep in the rainy, or shallow in the dry season. The surface is there 1300 feet below the ocean. (SEA.)

The tributaries below Genessaret on the east are the Yarmuk (Jabbok?), 5 ms. S. of the sea, 120 feet wide and 4 deep; and the Jabbok, which has two outlets into the Jordan, about midway between the two seas.

There are many winter torrents, dry in summer, and several fountains, as at Pella, Wä'dy Shē'riah, Nim'rin, on the east; and on the west, Bethshan (from the well of Harod), Sā'lim, Wä'dy Fer'räh (from Mokhua), Wä'dy Fasā'il, Wä'dy Nemāirah, Wä'dy Kelt, and the Fountain of Elisha at Jericho, besides many small and nameless fountains and streams on both sides.

This section is the only part referred to in the Bible.

Nearly the whole course is below the ocean level.

ordan Valley (ARABAH) is a long, narrow plain, N. to S., bordered by steep and nearly parallel ridges; Gilead on the east, rising 3,000 to 5,000 ft., and Samaria, on the W., rising from 2,000 to 3,000; and is about 6 ms. wide in the northern part, widening to 10 or 12 at Jericho. The sides are not regular, but are broken by ridges, or spurs, from the mountains, which run out into the plain at several places, indicated on the map, as at Bethshan, and SURTABEH (Zarthan). See GEOLOGY in PALESTINE. The surface is not level, but lifted into low hills and ridges. The map shows the course of the river through the Ghor as very winding. The upper Jordan, above the lake and marsh Huleh, is fordable in many places, the brooks being shallow, with stony beds. In the rainy season they often overflow, and are then impassable for a few days at a time. S. of the lake Huleh there is more water, and the fords are fewer. Just north of the Sea of Galilee, near Bethsaida Julias, there is a ford over sand-bars in the dry season. The road from Damascus into Galilee passes over a bridge about 2 ms. S. of the Huleh, called Jacob's Daughters (after a mythical race said to live in oak-trees). Half a m. S. of the Sea of Galilee there is a Roman bridge in ruins, and a ford called SEMAKH. The bridge Mejamia is Saracenic, 5 ms. further S., but there is no ford.

There is no mention of a bridge over the Jordan in the Scriptures, and the Mejamia is the only one now in use, S. of the Sea of Galilee. Opposite Bethshan the river is fordable in the dry season. Near Succoth, just N. of Wady Yabesh (Jabesh), there is an island with sand-bars on each side, forming a ford in summer. This is probably the Bethabara of Judg. vii. 24. S. from this place to the mouth of the Jabbok there are several fords at low water. 10 ms. S. of the Jabbok is the ford on the Shechem Es Salt road, and traces of a Roman bridge. There is a ford both above and below the pilgrim's bathing-place, opposite Jericho. The upper one, called El Mashrāā, is the supposed one crossed by Joshua.

The banks of the river are fringed with trees, flowering shrubs, canes and reeds; oleanders, hollyhocks, purple thistles, marigolds, anemones, willows, tamarisk, cedar, arbutus, aspen, and ghurräh; where beasts and birds in great numbers find shelter.

Jō'seph (he will increase). The son of Jacob by Rachel, born in Haran, near Damascus, B. C. 1726. He was the favorite son, and on account of the jealousy of his brothers was sold by them to some Ishmaelite traders, who sold him as a slave in Egypt. He was advanced to a post of the highest honor and responsibility by the Pharaoh, and proved worthy in every way of the trust. His descendants formed the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh, and exerted a great influence in the nation (Gen. xxxv. to l.).

Jō'seph. Son of Heli, husband of Mary, and legal father of Jesus (Matt. i.). He descended from David. Joseph was an artisan of some kind (the original Greek word meaning smith, or maker of articles out of any material); and it is probable that he was a carver of wood for interior decoration (a carpenter), and that his son Jesus was taught the same trade. All handicrafts were held in honor, and they were learned and followed by the sons of the best men.

When Jesus was 12 years old, his parents went up to Jerusalem, to the annual feast of the Passover, when the incident of the child among the doctors occurred.

Joseph is not mentioned again in the gospels after that journey.

It is supposed that he died before the crucifixion, from the words of Jesus when on the cross, recommending his mother to the care of the beloved disciple (John xix. 26). The question of his neighbors at Nazareth, as recorded by Mark, seems to indicate that he was then dead.

CITY OF ASKELON.

Josh'ua (Jah is help). (The same in the Hebrew as the original of Jesus.) Called also O'SHEA, the son of Nun. The successor of Moses as leader of the people (Num. xiii. 8). In the N. T. he is called Jesus (Acts vii. 45; Heb. iv. 8). The future captain of invading hosts grew up a slave in the brick-fields of Egypt. Born about the time when Moses fled into Midian, he was a man of nearly forty years when he saw the ten plagues, and shared in the hurried triumph of the Exodus. The keen eye of the aged Lawgiver soon discerned in Hoshea those qualities which might be required in a colleague or successor to himself. He is mentioned first in connection with the fight against Amalek at Rephidim, when he was chosen (Ex. xvii. 9) by Moses to lead the Israelites. When Moses ascended Mount Sinai to receive for the first time (compare Ex. xxiv. 13 and xxxiii. 11) the two Tables, Joshua, who is called his minister or servant, accompanied him part of the way, and was the first to accost him in his descent (Ex. xxxii. 17). Soon afterward he was one of the twelve chiefs who were sent (Num. xiii. 17) to explore the land of Canaan, and one of the two (xiv. 6,) who gave an encouraging report of their journey. The 40 years of wandering were almost passed, and Joshua was one of the few survivors, when Moses, shortly before his death, was directed (Num. xxvii. 18) to invest Joshua solemnly and publicly with definite authority in connection with Eleazar the priest over the people. And after this was done, God himself gave Joshua a charge by the mouth of the dying Lawgiver (Deut. xxi. 14, 23).

Under the direction of God again renewed (Josh. i. 1), Joshua, now in the 85th year (Joseph. Ant. v. 1, § 29), assuming the command of the people at Shittim, sent spies into Jericho, crossed the Jordan, fortified a camp at Gilgal, circumcised the people, kept the passover, and was visited by the captain of the Lord's Host. A miracle made the fall of Jericho more terrible to the Canaanites. A miraculous repulse in the first assault on Ai, impressed upon the invaders the warning that they were the instruments of a holy and jealous God. Ai fell; and the law was inscribed on Mount Ebal, and read by their leader in the presence of all Israel. The treaty which the fear-stricken Gibeonites obtained deceitfully was generously respected by Joshua. It stimulated and brought to a point the hostile movements of the five confederated chiefs of the Amorites. Joshua, aided by an unprecedented hailstorm, and a miraculous prolongation of the day, obtained a decisive victory over them at Makedah. He was noted for his bravery and military skill. He died about B. C. 1438.

There were several other persons of this name, of whom very little is known.

Josi'ah (YOSHIAHU, Jah heals). 1. Son of Amon, and 15th king of Judah, from B. C. 641 to 610, reigning 31 years, from 8 years old. His history is given in 2 K. xxii., xxiv.; 2 Chr. xxxiv., xxxv., and Jeremiah i. to xii. In his day the Temple was repaired and the BOOK OF THE LAW was found (see HISTORY OF THE BOOKS). He was wounded in a battle against Pharaoh Necho, and died near Jerusalem, where he was buried with great display. — 2. Son of Zephaniah (Zech. vi. 9).

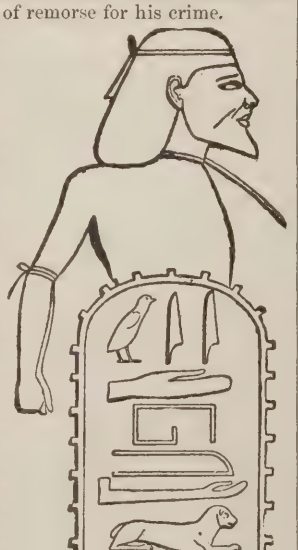
TOMBS IN THE VALLEY OF JEHOSHAPHAT.

Jō'tham (Jah is upright). 1. Son of Gideon (Judg. ix. 5.) His parable of the bramble is the oldest of its kind. He lived at Beer. — 2. Son of king Uzziah, succeeding him to the throne of Judah, B. C. 158, at the age of 25, and reigning 16 years (2 K. xv.; 2 Chr. xxvii.). — 3. Son of Jahdai, in Judah's line (1 Chr. ii. 47).

Jū'dah (YEHUDAH, praise Jah). The Hebrew. JUDA. JUDAH. 1. Fourth son of Jacob, by Leah. His brothers were Reuben, Simeon, Levi (Judah), Issachar, Zebulon. He was a leader in family matters from his youth up, and more is known of him than of any other of his brothers except Joseph. Reuben advised the brothers to throw Joseph into the pit, and Judah proposed the sale to the traders, both acting honorably to themselves, wishing to save the life of Joseph (Gen. xxvii. 26). See JOSEPH for Judah's conduct in Egypt (Gen. xliv. 14, 16–34). Judah went before Jacob into Egypt (xlvi.). Jacob honors Judah first in his blessings (xlix. 8–10). He had 5 sons, 3 by a Canaanite, the daughter of Shuah — ER, ONAN, and SHELAH — and 2 by the widow of Er (TAMAR), Pharez and Zerah. (See 12 TRIBES.) The boundaries of Judah are more carefully noted than any of the others (Josh. xv. 20–63). The district occupied by the TRIBE OF JUDAH was about 45 miles N. to S., and nearly 50 wide E. to W. See PALESTINE, GEOLOGY, CLIMATE, KINGDOM OF JUDAH. There were several others of this name, but none were specially noted.

Jū'dah, Kingdom of. The kingdom began with the revolt of the 10 tribes, but was really a continuation of the kingdom of Saul and David. Rehoboam, Solomon's son and successor, lost the ten tribes, and also suffered from the Pharaoh SHISHAK, who robbed the Temple (2 Chr. xii.).

Jehoshaphat was the greatest king after David, and increased the power and wealth of his people. His ships being destroyed in a storm, his scheme for commerce was given up.



A grave error was committed in a marriage with the house of Ahab, Jehoram taking Athaliah for a wife, who introduced her mother Jezebel's image-worship.

The treasures of the Temple or of the king were several times carried away from Judah. All the vast hoards of David and Solomon were lost by Rehoboam to Shishak (1 K. xiv. 26); Benhadad took from Asa the savings of 40 years. Jehoash sent to Hazael all that Jehoshaphat, Jehoram, Ahaziah, and himself had dedicated, besides his private wealth (2 K. xii. 18); Jehoash of Israel took from Amaziah all the treasures (xiv. 11–14); Ahaz surrendered to Tiglath Pileser (xvi. 8); Hezekiah to Sennacherib 300 talents of silver and 30 of gold (xviii. 14–16); in the days of Josiah (or after he was killed) the Pharaoh could only collect 100 talents of silver, and 1 talent of gold, by taxation, there being no treasure in the Temple, and (perhaps a mistake) Nebuchadnezzar carried off all the treasures of the Temple, with the very vessels that Solomon had made (xxiv. 13), 5400 in number (Ezra i. 11). The royal line was twice almost destroyed, by Jehu and by Athaliah. The real cause of decay in this power was the contest between the church and the state; the priest grew stronger as the king was weaker. Faction grew bold and fierce, and bloodshed was common (Ez. xxii). The nation grew wealthy, luxurious, superstitious, idolatrous, with only a formal show of true religion. The king appointed the high-priest, but did not dare to depose one. The high-priests gained more honor than the kings — especially was it a great honor to trace to Zadok the priest. But the nation could not be saved even by a pure high-priesthood. Society was corrupt and full of contention, and unable to defend itself against Egypt and Babylon. The kingdom lasted 487 years; 387 after Israel seceded, and 133 after Israel's captivity.

Jū'das (Greek-Latin form of Judah).

Jū'das Iscar'iot (from KERIOTH, his native place). Son of Simon (John vi. 71). His early life is not recorded. He was awarded the unhappy notoriety of betraying Jesus, his Lord and Master. He must have been a useful man among the 12, because he was appointed their steward (John xii. 6). Jesus knew his character from the first (vi. 7); but no one else even suspected him up to the very last day, when Peter and John were only made to know by a private sign from the Master who was the betrayer (xiii. 26). He received from the high-priest 30 shekels, the price of a slave, but returned the money when repentance overtook him, after the crucifixion. His tender heart and quick conscience appears in the fact that he killed himself rather than live with the feeling of remorse for his crime.

It seems probable that Judas did not stay to the end of the Lord's Supper.

KING OF JUDÆA, from the Sculptures of Karnak, Egypt. (See SHISHAK.)

Ju'das, JUDE. A disciple, and the writer of the Epistle (see HISTORY OF THE BOOKS). He was "brother of James" (Jude 1), "the Lord's brother" (Gal. i. 19; ii. 9, 12; Matt. xiii. 55; Mark vi. 3). He was not an apostle, for he did not believe on Jesus as the Christ until after the crucifixion (John vii. 5). Only one question of his to Jesus is all that is recorded of him (John xiv. 22). Eusebius (History iii. 20, 32) says, the Lord's relatives were feared by the Emperor Domitian, and were known as late as the end of Trajan's reign.

Jūdæ'a. JUDE'A (Jewish). The Roman name of the territory of Judah, or the southern of the three divisions, Galilee, Samaria, Judea. (See the Map.) Jewry in John vii. 1, and Dan. v. 13. Judea also in Ezra v. 8, on the return from the captivity. The chief interest in Judæa is in Jerusalem and its vicinity, although there are many names of cities all over its territory, connected with interesting persons and events.

Judæ'a, The Wilderness of. Was along the west shore of the Dead Sea.

Judg'es (SHOFETIM). Patriarchal seniors who administered justice, usually the chief or head of a tribe (Sheikh). Moses introduced the system on the advice of his father-in-law, Jethro (Ex. xviii.). There were two distinct orders of judges. 1. The leader, or chief of the whole nation, instead of or before the kings were elected. — 2. The elder princes or chiefs of families. A list of judges over all Israel is given in CHRONOLOGY, page 20. For BOOK OF JUDGES, see HISTORY OF THE BOOKS.

Jū'niper (ROTHEM). A white-blossomed broom, found in Spain, Barbary, Syria, and the desert of Sinai, and called Spanish broom, in Arabic Bethem. The bush is the largest in the desert, and gives shade from the sun, wind, and rain, and the Bedouins make charcoal from the twigs (illustrating Ps. cxx. 4). Job speaks of eating rothem roots (xxx. 4), as a picture of abject poverty and want. Elijah slept under a broom bush (Rob. i. 203).

Jū'piter (Gr. Zeus, Latin Jupiter, Divum-pater, heaven-father). The son of Saturn and Ops, brother and husband of Juno, father and king of gods and men, and supreme ruler of the universe, in the Greek and Roman mythology. Jupiter Tonans, the thunderer; fulminator, the lightning-wielder; Pluvius, the rain-giver. See PAUL.

JUPITER TONANS.

Jut'tah (YUTAH, inclined). An ancient city of Judah, allotted to the priests (Josh. xv. 55). The residence of Zecharias, a priest, the father of John the Baptist. It is now a large village, five miles south of Hebron. (See Luke i.) It is found on the Egyptian monuments as tah-n-nu, a fort of the Anakim, near Hebron. Called "a city of Juda" in Luke i. 39.

K

Kab'balah. Reception; doctrine received orally. The teachings are: 1. God is above everything; even above being and thinking. Therefore it cannot be said truly that he has either a will, desire, thought, action — language, because these belong to finite man. He cannot be comprehended by the intellect, nor described with words. He is in a peculiar sense without life, for he cannot die, and he in a certain sense does not exist, because that which is incomprehensible does not exist to us. He therefore made known some properties of his existence to us.

The will to create implies limit, therefore the imperfect world, limited and finite, is no work of the infinite; but since there cannot be any accident or chance where infinite wisdom resides, the world (and universe) must have been indirectly created by the 10 intelligences (SEFIROTH), which emanate from the One original emanation, the infinite intelligence (EN SEF). These 10 powers have bodies, the one original emanation (not created) has a form also. They are divided into 3 groups, which operate on the 3 worlds, of intellect, of souls, and of matter.

Kā'desh, K. Barnea (holy places). El Mishpat (spring of judgment), which is Kadesh (Gen. xiv. 7). The most northern place reached by the Israelites in their direct route to Canaan. Located at Ain el Weibeh, on the western side of the Arabah, N.W. of Petra, where there is the most copious fountain and the most important watering-place in that valley. There are no ruins of any "city" (v. 16), nor of the tomb of Miriam (Jerome, Onom.). See EXODUS.

Kē'desh (sanctuary). 1. Kedesh in Galilee, one of the Cities of Refuge. A fortified city in Naphtali (Josh. xix. 37). The residence of Barak (Judg. iv. 6), where he and Deborah assembled their army.

Kē'lah (fort). Judah, in the Shefelah (Josh. xv. 44). David rescued it from the Philistines in harvest-time (1 Sam. xxiii. 1). It was then fortified (ver. 7). After the return from Babylon the people of Keilah assisted Nehemiah in rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem (Neh. iii. 17, 18).

Kē'nath (possession). A strong city of Bashan, or rather Argob. Taken by Nobah, who changed its name to Nobah (Num. xxxiii. 42).

Kē'nite (smith). A tribe much mentioned, but whose origin is not recorded. They may have been a branch of Midian, for Jethro is a Kenite, and lived in Midian when first known by Moses. The RECHABITES are the most noted of this people. Jael, who killed Sisera, was a Kenite (Judg. iv. 11).

Kē'rioth (cities). (Josh. xv. 25.) Judah, south. Kuryetein (two cities), 15 miles S. of Hebron. The town from which Judas Iscariot was named. — 2. A town in Moab, mentioned with Dibon, Bozrah, and others (Jer. xlviii. 24). Now Kureiyeh, six miles east of Busrah, on the west slope of the Hauran. There are many ruined columns; and a cisterr having a stone roof supported on a triple row of columns, under which are benches, rising like a theatre. A Greek inscription on one of the benches dates the cistern A. D. 296. The houses had walls four to eight feet thick, of solid basalt, with roofs of slabs of stone, reaching across from wall to wall. In Amos ii. 2, Kirioth means the "cities of Moab."

Kid'ron (turbid). In the original Hebrew it is always called a dry water-course or wady (nachal. See RIVER). East of the walls of Jerusalem, at the foot of Olivet (2 Sam. xv. 23; John xviii. 1). Now called the Valley of Jehoshaphat. See page 52.

Kidron Valley, from AKELDAMA. The valley of the brook Kidron below Jerusalem is full of gardens, which are supplied with water from Siloam, and in the rainy season it is really a beautiful spot; but in the hot, dry, and dusty summer it is almost a desert. In the view the Mount of Olives rises to the right, and the village of Siloam is at its foot, bordering the edge of the Kidron. Scopus is seen in the distance, and the corner of the Temple wall rises high over Ophel, which falls steep down on the west side of the Kidron. Both of these slopes are covered with tombstones, every one of which indicates a dozen graves below, or it may be a hundred bodies to each, for this has been a vast cemetery for all devout persons, both Christian and Mohammedan, and especially Jew, for many ages, and never in higher request than now.

It is thought by some that Solomon's idol shrines were built on the site of Siloam, or on the summit behind it to the right, while others think the pagan high place was more probably on the summit of Olivet. There were also shrines to Moloch in the valley of Tophet or Hinnom, where children were offered to the god in burnt sacrifice. This valley, with its horrid associations, has become the poetic type of hell.

Kir (a wall). Where the people of Damascus were carried by the king of Assyria (2 K. xvi. 9). Elam and Kir are mentioned together by Isaiah (xxii. 6).

Kir Hā'resh, Kir Har'aseth, Kir Har'eseth, Kir Hē'res (brick fort), and Kir Mō'ab (2 K. iii. 25; Is. xvi. 7; Jer. xlviii. 31, 36). One of the chief fortified cities of Moab (built of brick—heres). When Joram, king of Israel, invaded Moab, Kir was the only city not taken, and this was saved by the sacrifice by the king of Moab of his eldest son, on the wall (2 K. iii. 27). Kerak (the modern name) stands on the top of a rocky hill, about 10 miles from the Dead Sea, and 3,000 feet above its level.

THE MOABITE STONE.

Rev. Mr. Klein (of the Palestine Exploration) in 1868 found a Semitic monument in Moab, on which there is an inscription (translated by Mr. Deutsch, of the British Museum), giving an account of many cities named in the Bible, which king Mesha built, among which is Karkha (Kerak). This is the oldest monument in the Phœnician language that is known. It adds to our knowledge of that day. In 2 K. i. 1, is a mention of a rebellion of Moab, which was put down by Israel and Judah. This stone gives particulars, not in the Bible, of the acts of the king of Moab; his conquest of cities; rebuilding others; his religious wars; and that he believed himself divinely guided by the god Chemosh.

Almost the whole of the Greek alphabet is found on this stone, such as is in use now, and identical with the Phœnician, even including those letters which were supposed to have been added during the Trojan war; and also the Greek letter ūpsilon, which was supposed to have been added later. The most ancient letters are here shown to be the most simple—mere outlines.

Kir'iah (town). Kerioth, Kartah, Kartan, Kiriathaim (Ez. xxv. 9). In Moab. One of the "glories of the country," named among the denunciations of Jeremiah (xlviii. i. 23).

Kir'jath (Josh. xviii. 28). In Benjamin. Lost. — 2. KIRJATHAIM, KIRIATHAIM (double city). Reuben, a little south of Heshbon (Num. xxxii. 27). It was a large Christian village in the time of Eusebius and Jerome. Kureiyat is a ruin near Jebel Attarus south of Wady Zurka Main, south of which is a level plateau called el Koura (plain), which may be the Plain of Moab. It is one of the oldest of Bible cities (Gen. xiv. 5). It was on the "Plain" (shaveh) Kiriathaim that the Emims were smitten by the eastern kings who plundered Sodom. — 3. A town of Naphtali (1 Chr. vi. 76). Kartan. — 4. KIRJATH ARBA. Hebron. It is supposed that Hebron was the ancient name, the Canaanites calling it Kirjath Arba on their taking possession, when the Israelites restored the ancient name. A tradition says the city was called Arba, or four, because Adam, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were buried there. But Joshua says Arba was a great man (xiv. 15). — 5. KIRJATH BAAL (Baal's city), (Josh. xv. 60, xviii. 14). Kirjath Jearim. — 6. KIRJATH HUZOTH. Where Balaam was conducted by Balak to offer sacrifice (Num. xxii. 30). Kureiyat. — 7. KIRJATH JEARIM (city of forests), (Josh. ix. 17). One of the 4 cities of the Gibeonites, who tricked Joshua. Also Kirjath Arim, peopled after the Captivity (Ezr. ii. 25). — 8. KIRJATH SANNAH (city of palms), (Josh. xv. 49). KIRJATH SEPHER (city of the book). Judah, called also Debir.

Kiss (NASHAK; Gr. phileo). The kiss is used to denote: 1. on the lips, affection; 2. on the cheek, respect, or salutation; 3. a symbol of charity in the early Church (Rom. xvi. 6; 1 Cor. xvi. 20; 2 Cor. xiii. 12, etc.); 4. on the beard, respect to age or authority; 5. on the forehead, condescension; 6. on the back, or palm, of the hand, submission; as also to kiss the feet; 7. on the ground near, a mark of respect; 8. to kiss the hand to an idol, worship (1 K. xix. 18; Hos. xiii. 2).

Kite (AYAH, vulture, in Job xxviii. 7). A bird of prey (Lev. xi. 14; Deut. xiv. 13). The word AYAH was probably the name of the species, and is well translated kite.

Knife (CHEREB), (Josh. v. 2), sword; MAAK'ELETH (Judg. xix. 29), table-knife; MACHALAPHIM (Ezr. i. 9), slaughter-knives; SAKKIN, knife (Prov. xxiii. 2). The most ancient historians mention knives of stone and of iron. The Easterns make little use of the knive at the table. Jeremiah speaks of a pen-knife KNIVES.

(xxxvi. 23). The razor was used to shave the head of the Nazarite (Num. vi. 5, etc.), and the bodies of priests in Egypt (Herodotus ii. 86).

Knop (CAPTOR, crown, Ex. xxv. 31). Imitation of the blossom of an almond-tree; and a small gourd or cucumber (PEKAIM, cucumbers, in 1 K. vi. 18; vii. 24). See FRINGE, on page 39. Fringes, tassels, and borders were symbolical in the dress of the high-priest and of the Jews generally.

Kō'hath (assembly). Son of Levi (Gen. xlvi. 11). KEHATH. He died aged 133 (Ex. vi. 18). Moses and Aaron were of his line. The posterity of Kohath in the Exodus numbered 8600 males, 2750 being over 30. They (except Aaron and his sons) bore the ark and its furniture (Num. iii. 31).

Kō'rah (bald). 1. Son of Esau (Gen. xxxvi. 5, 14, 18), one of the "dukes" of Edom. — 2. Another duke, son of Esau (xxxvi. 16). — 3. Son of Hebron (1 Chr. ii. 43). — 4. Son of Izhar, a Levite, and ringleader of a rebellion against Moses and Aaron; the only person of note in it. His sons were not guilty, and escaped his doom. Samuel the prophet was of this family (1 Chr. vi. 22). Ten psalms bear their names in the titles, as choristers in the temple.

Ko'rahites, The. Descendants of Korah 4 (Num. xxvi. 58). KORAHITE.

Kō're (partridge). 1. A Korahite, ancestor of Shallum (1 Chr. ix. 19, xxvi. 1). — 2. Son of Imnah, an overseer of offerings (2 Chr. xxxi. 14). — 3. (1 Chr. xxvi. 19). "Sons of Kore."

L

La'ban (white). 1. (Deut. i. 1.) Libnah? (Num. xxxiii. 20). Ptolemy mentions an Auara; the Peutinger tables a Hauarra; and the Arabs have a place called Ain Howara — all of which mean white, and may refer to the same locality.

ANCIENT METAL VESSELS.

La'chish (obstinate). An ancient royal Amorite city (Josh. x. 3), whose king, Japhia, joined the alliance with Adonizedec, king of Jerusalem, to smite Gibeon for making a treaty with Joshua.

EARTHEN LAMP.

Laha'iroi, the Well (the well where God was seen by one who still lives). Where Hagar took refuge from her imperious mistress, in the desert between Kadesh and Bered, in the way to Shur (Gen. xvi. 14). It was afterwards a favorite camping-ground of Isaac (xxiv. 62; xxv. 11).

La'ish (strong lion). An ancient Phœnician city, occupied by a colony of Sidonians, in the valley between Hermon and Lebanon, at one of the great fountains of the Jordan. Its ancient name was Leshem (Josh. xix. 47), and it was an ancient sanctuary.

The LAISH of Isaiah x. 30 was near Jerusalem. Another (Laisa) is mentioned, where Judas encamped, in 1 Macc. ix. 5.

Lamb (Chal. Immar). Heb. 1. KEBES (Ez. vi. 9), a male, and KIBSAH, female of the first year. — 2. TALEH (1 Samuel vii. 9), the young of any animal, especially a sucking lamb. — 3. KAR (2 K. iii. 4), a fat ram. — 4. TSON (Ex. xiii. 26), flock of lambs. — 5. SEH (ib. 3), the individuals of the flock. — 6. Greek Amnos (John i. 29, 36; Acts viii. 32; 1 Pet. i. 19), a lamb, and, figuratively, of Christ as the lamb for sacrifice. — 7. Greek Aron (Luke x. 3), Arnion, little lamb. See PASSOVER.

LAMP STAND.

Lā'mech (powerful). 1. A descendant of Cain (Gen. iv. 18, 24). He is the only one except Enoch whose history is sketched with a few particulars, before the flood, and is the first recorded polygamist, having two wives, Adah and Zillah.

Lamp (NER, light), (Ex. xxv. 37; 1 K. vii. 49, etc.). The lamp used in the tabernacle, and the ten in the Temple. The ancient lamps were rude in design, small, and were supplied with olive oil, and trimmed with a wick of flax. Many specimens have been found lately in Palestine, among anc. ruins. See cuts on pages 2, 59, etc.

ANCIENT LAMP, AS USED IN THE QUARRY UNDER JERUSALEM.

Laodice'a (Rev. i. 11, iii. 14; Col. iv. 13, 15). There were four of the same name: 1. In Phrygia, near Hierapolis; 2. In the east of Phrygia; 3. On the coast of Syria, the port of Aleppo; 4. East of Lebanon. The first is the only one mentioned in Scripture, as one of the SEVEN CHURCHES (which see).

Lap'wing (Lev. xi. 19). An unclean bird. Its feathers are long and very beautiful. The hoopoe (Solomon's bird with the golden crown) is supposed by some to be the one. The Sadducees supposed it was the common hen (DUKIFATH), and others that it was the cock of the woods. There are many legends about the hoopoe, one of which is that a vast flock flew over King Solomon's head, while on a desert journey, shadowing him from the sun, in reward for which he gave them a crown of golden feathers.

Lasæ'a (Acts xxvii. 8). City in Crete, identified in 1856 by Rev. G. Brown, 5 miles inland from Fair Havens. A Venetian MS. of the 16th century describes Lapsæa, with a temple in ruins, and other remains in the harbor. This city is one proof of the accuracy of Luke's account, even in minute details. 16 miles east of Gortyna.

La'sha (fissure). Southeast in Palestine, the limit of the country (Gen. x. 19). Callirrhoe answers to the text in its position and character. Herod built a residence there; and recently there have been found on the site tiles, pottery, and coins. En Englaim?

Laz'arus (ancient ELEAZAR, God is his helper). 1. Lazarus of Bethany, brother of Martha and Mary (John xi. 1).—2. Lazarus in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus (Luke xvi. 19–31). This is the only instance of a proper name in any of the parables.

Lead (OFERETH; Gr. molibdos). Was known very early to the ancient Hebrews, being found in Sinai and Egypt (Ez. xxvii. 13). It was used for weights (Ex. xv. 10; Eccles. xxii. 14). Oxide of lead was used to glaze pottery then as now.

Leath'er (2 K. i. 8; Matt. iii. 4). There are very few notices of leather, unless the word skin means leather in use, as in Lev. xi. 32, xiii. 48; Num. xxxi. 20, etc.

Lebanon (white). The white mountain of Palestine, on the north of the country given to the Israelites (Deut. i. 7, xi. 24; Josh. i. 4). There are two ranges, Lebanon on the west, and Anti-Lebanon on the east, almost parallel, extending from near Tyre to Hamath, about 110 miles.

Leeks (CHAZIR, grass). There are several plants offered in explanation of the 20 allusions in the O. T. to "leeks."

Lees (SHEMER, preservation). Wine was left standing on the lees to give it color and body (Is. xxv. 6). The wine undisturbed was thick.

Le'gion (Matt. xxvi. 53; Luke viii. 30). A portion of the Roman army, about 6,000 infantry.

Leha'bim (Gen. x. 13). Mizraim's third son, perhaps the ancestor of the Lubim, allies of the Egyptians, mentioned in the inscriptions on their monuments at Medinet Habu (dated 1250 B. C.); and also of the Libyans.

SIEGE OF LACHISH.

Len'tiles (ADASHIM). A bean-like plant much esteemed in the East as an article of food.

Leopard (NAMER, spotted). Mentioned in 7 passages. The word was compounded into several names of towns, as Beth-nimrah, Nimrah, Nimrim (Leopard-town), etc. (Is. xi. 6; Jer. v. 6, etc.).

ANCIENT PERGAMOS.

Law (TORAH). The Mosaic Law. A guide in the way of moral conduct. Greek nomos. The term law is used for the Old Testament as a whole in John x. 34, etc.

The Law of Moses depended on the Abrahamic covenant, which concerned the temporal promises, which were conditional on the keeping of the spiritual laws. Its principles were universal, but it had special rules for the Jews also.

Lĕper (ZARUA; leprosy, ZARAATH; Gr. lepra, lepros). Supposed to be the peculiar scourge of an offended deity. The white variety was more common (if there is more than one), covering the entire body, or the most of it, and was called the leprosy of Moses. This was the "clean" hind.

Le'shem (glancing—the stone jacinth). The city Laish (Josh. xix. 47; Rev. xxi. 20).

Lē'vi (to adhere). Third son of Leah, wife of Jacob. Born in Mesopotamia, B. C. 1750 (Gen. xxix. 34). When Dinah went out to see the young women of Shechem, as Josephus says, at an annual festival of nature-worship, such as that mentioned in Numbers xxv. 2, of the people in Moab, she was taken by Shechem as a wife; which was resented as an insult by her brothers, Jacob, Simeon, and Levi, who executed their revenge on the city in a fearful manner (Gen. xxxiv.), destroying the whole city for the error of one man. This is an early instance of a blood feud, which are so common in the East now. Levi plotted with others against Joseph. He went into Egypt with his three sons, Gershon, Kohath, and Merari, and as one of the eldest, was presented to Pharaoh. The descendants of Levi, among whom were Moses and Aaron, were made the ministers of religion and the representatives of the national faith. Jacob prophesied that Levi should be scattered among his brothers, which was fulfilled in the distribution of the tribe among the 48 Levitical cities, which were scattered throughout the whole country. The tribe displaced the earlier priesthood of the first-born as representatives of the holiness of the people.

Lib'nah (whiteness). Station in the desert (Num. xxxiii. 20), between Sinai and Kadesh, near Rissah, perhaps on the Red Sea. Laban (Deut. i. 1).—2. A city in the S.W. of Palestine, taken by Joshua next after Makkedah, on the day "that the sun stood still."

Life (HAY, or CHAY), living thing (Gen. i. 20); NEPHESH, soul (xii. 5; Ps. xi. 1); mind (xxiii. 8); person (xiv. 21); heart (Ex. xxiii. 9); Greek bios, present life (Luke viii. 14); zoe (Matt. vii. 14); zao, to live; pneuma, spirit, ghost (Rev. xiii. 19); psuche, soul (Matt. ii. 20). Life and to live used of the existence of men and animals, and of the enjoyment of what makes life valuable, as happiness (Ps. xvi. 11), and the favor of God (Rom. vi. 4). The true life is immortality in blessedness and glory, and it is believed by some that Jesus taught that such a life was only to be won by a pure life of faith and deeds, believing on him who is the Lord of Life (Matt. xix. 16, 17, 29; Rom. ii. 7, v. 17, vi. 23).

LENTILES.

Lil'y (SHUSHAH, SHOSHANNAH; Gr. Krinon). There is a great difference of opinion on this question as to what flower was meant by the Hebrews, or by Jesus, which appears in our translation as the lily. Dr. Thomson (Land and Book) says: "The Huleh lily is very large, and the three inner petals meet above and form a gorgeous canopy, such as art never approached, and king never sat under, even in his utmost glory. Nothing can be in higher contrast than the luxuriant, velvety softness of this lily, and the crabbed, tangled hedge of thorns about it."

Li'on. There are no lions now in Palestine, but they abound in the deserts, and the swamps of the COIN STRUCK BY THE ASIARCH AT LAODICEA.

Euphrates. There are several names of places compounded of the name of lion, which show that the animal was known there anciently, as Leboath, Laish (Josh. xv. 32; Judg. xvii. 7).

These seven names for lion indicate different ages: — 1. GUR, or GOR, a cub (Gen. xlix. 9); 2. KEFIR, a young lion (Judg. xiv. 5); 3. ARI, ARYEH, full-grown lion (Gen. xlix. 9); 4. SHAKHAL (the roarer), large, strong lion (Job iv. 10); 5. SHAKHAZ, in full vigor (xviii. 8); 6. LABI, or LEBBIYA, an old lion (Gen. xlix. 9), (Coptic labai, lioness); 7. LAISH, old, decrepit, feeble (Job iv. 11).

Litter. A couch or sedan chair, borne by men, between mules or on camels, now in use by the Egyptians (Num. vii. 3; Is. lxvi. 20). They are shown in use on the ancient sculptures and paintings.

Liz'ard (Heb. LETAAH). The fan-foot lizard is reddish brown, spotted with white, and lives on insects and worms. It is named from its note, which sounds like "gecko." They lay small, round eggs. Their feet cling to the wall like a fly's, and they run around the house, without noise, always at night.

Loan. The law of Moses required the rich to lend to the poor without interest, only taking security against loss. Foreigners were not included in this rule.

Lock. The common wooden lock of the East is a clumsy wooden bolt kept in place by a few loose pins, which may be lifted by a key with pegs fitted to match Bolts and locks were used. (Judg. iii. 23; Cant. v. 5; Neh. iii. 3).

Lo'cust. Heb. ARBEH (multitude), locust in Ex. x. 4, and many other passages; CHAGAB (locust generally) grasshopper in Num. xiii. 33, and others; CHARGOL (locust) grasshopper; beetle in Lev. xi. 22; SALAM (bald locust) locust in Lev. xi. 22; GASAM (palmer-worm); GOB (great grasshopper), in Nahum iii. 17; Is. xxiii. 4; CHANAMAL (hail or frost?) locust in Ps. lxxviii. 47; YELEK (rough), cankerworm in Nahum iii. 15; caterpillar in Ps. cv. 34; CHASIL (caterpillar); ZELAZAL, locust in Deut. xxviii. 42. The clouds of locusts sometimes obscure the sun, and they are very destructive, eating every green thing in their way. See cut

ANCIENT WRITING MATERIALS.

Lod. Built by Shamer (1 Chr. viii. 12). Always connected with Ono. It is called Lydda in the Acts (ix. 32), where Peter healed Æneas of palsy.

Lode'bar (without pasture). The native place of Machir ben Ammiel, in whose house Mephibosheth found a home after his father's death, on the E. of Jordan (2 Sam. xvii. 27, ix. 4, 5). This same Machir was one of the first to supply the wants of David when he fled from Absalom. It was near Mahanaim.

Loins. The lower region of the back, the seat of strength (Gen. xxxv. 11, xxxvii. 34). Figuratively, the source of progeny.

Lord's Day, The. (Greek, He Kuriakē hēmera, in Rev. i. 10). The first day of the week, the weekly festival in memory of the resurrection of the Lord on that day. Some of the "fathers of the early Church" understand it to mean Easter day.

Lord's Prayer, The. The name (not in the Scriptures) of the prayer spoken by Jesus as a model to his disciples, given in Matt. vi. 9–13; Luke xi. 2–4.

Lord's Supper (Gr. kuriakon deipnon, 1 Cor. xi. 20). The great central act of Christian worship described by Paul (verses 23–26) as having been instituted on the night of the betrayal. It was a continuation or a substitute for the Passover (Matt. xxvi. 19, etc.). See AGAPE.

Lot. Son of Haran, nephew of Abraham (Gen. xi. 27), born in Ur of the Chaldees, and settled in Canaan. He took refuge in Egypt with Abram during the famine (xii. 4, xii. 1), and returned with him into the south of Palestine. He chose the Arabah for his pasture-land, leaving Abram on the hills of Benjamin and Judah.

MOUNTAIN OF MOAB, PLAINS OF JORDAN.

Ammon and Moab were the children of Lot (Deut. ii. 9, 19), and as such were exempted from conquest by Moses. (See Ps. lxxxiii.) The Arabs have traditions of Lot (Koran, ch. vii., ix.), in which he is described as a preacher sent to the cities of the plain, which they call Lot's cities. The Dead Sea is also called the Sea of Lot (Bahr Loot).

Lud. Fourth son of Shem (Gen. x. 22), from whom descended the Lydians; who first settled north of Palestine, and afterward in Asia Minor. The name is found on the Egyptian monuments of the 13th, 14th, and 15th centuries B. C., as a powerful people called Luden. See LYDIA.

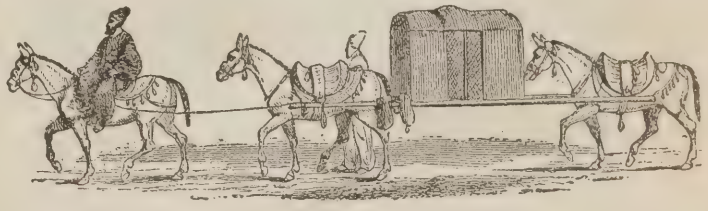
Luke (Gr. Loukas; Latin Lucas, born at daylight). A common name among Romans. A Gentile born at Antioch in Assyria, educated a physician, and an artist (Nicephorus ii. 43). Some have supposed him one of the 70, and also one of the two who saw Jesus at Emmaus, but without good reason. He first appears historically at Tros with Paul, going with him into Macedonia (Acts xvi. 9, 10), and writing his history after that as an eye-witness. See GOSPEL and ACTS in the HISTORY.

It is supposed that he died a martyr between A. D. 75 and 100, but no locality is given.

Lycao'nia (Lucos, a wolf, wolf-country). An undulating plain, 20 miles by 13, among the mountains in Asia Minor, north of Cilicia.

Ly'cia (LI'KEA). A province and peninsula southwest in Asia Minor, opposite the island of Rhodes; mountainous and well watered with small creeks.

Lyd'da. Greek form of Lod. The first historical notice of this city, since Christ, is the signature of Ætius Lyddensis to the acts of the Council of Nicæa (A. D. 325); after which it is frequently mentioned, especially during the Crusades. The Arabs have a tradition that the final contest between Christ and Antichrist will be at Lydda.



HEAD OF ALEXANDER. COIN OF LYSIMACHUS.

Ly'dia (from king Lydus). A province in Asia Minor, on the Sea, south of Mysia, and north of Caria. Taken by the Romans from Antiochus the Great, after the battle of Magnesia, B. C. 190, and given to the king of Pergamus, Eumenes II (1 Macc. viii. 8). The India and Media of this passage in Maccabees should be corrected to read Ionia and Mysia.

Lyd'ia (from Lydia?). The first convert in Europe, by Paul, and his hostess at Philippi (Acts xvi. 14, 15, 40). She was a Jewess and was found by Paul attending Jewish Sabbath worship by the side of a stream.

Lysa'nias (ending sorrow). Tetrarch of Abilene, in the 15th year of Tiberius, when Herod Antipas was tetrarch of Galilee, and Herod Philip was tetrarch of Ituræa and Trachonitis.

Lysim'achus (ending strife). 1. Son of Ptolemæus (Esth. xi. 1). — 2. Brother of Menelaus, the high priest, and his deputy at the court of Antiochus (2 Macc. iv. 29–42). He was killed by a mob, B. C. 170, on account of his tyranny and sacrilege.

LITTER.

Lys'tra. In Lycaonia. Where divine honors, after the Greek manner, were offered to Paul, and where he was at once stoned. It was the home of Paul's companion, Timothy. The extensive ruins of Bin bir Kilissi (one thousand and one churches) lie along the eastern declivity of the Karadagh (black mountain), where are to be seen the remains of about 40 churches, some 25 of which are quite entire (Hamilton, Asia Minor).

M

Ma'acah (oppression). MAACHAH. A small kingdom on the N.E. of Palestine, near Argob (Deut. iii. 14), and Bashan (Josh. xii. 5), founded by a son of Nahor, Abraham's brother (Gen. xxii. 24). The people were not expelled, but mingled with the Jews. Eliphelet, of this nation, was one of David's 30 captains (2 Sam. xxiii. 34), and Jaazaniah was a captain in the army of Israel at the time of the Captivity.

Ma'acah. Mother of Absalom (2 Sam. iii.). Eight others of this name were noted as wives or daughters of famous men.

Macedo'nia. The country N. of Thessaly and the Ægean Sea, S. of the Balkan mts., extending to Thrace on the E., and to Illyria on the W.

COIN OF MACEDONIA

Mach'pelah. The district in which was the field of Ephron the Hittite, containing the cave which was bought by Abraham, and became the burial-place of Abraham himself, Sarah, Isaac, Rebekah, Leah, and Jacob. This cave and the field around it was the only spot which belonged to Abraham in the country. The Haram at Hebron (see view of Hebron) is said to stand over this cave. It is a massive stone structure, in the ancient style, of dark gray stone, 200 ft. long, 115 wide, and 50 high. Some of the stones are 12 to 20 ft. long, by 4 to 5 thick, with beveled edges, like the temple wall at Jerusalem, and must be as old as Solomon's time.

Mad'ai (Gen. x. 2). Third son of Japheth, from whom descended the Medes. See 2 K. xvii. 6; Dan. xi. 1; Esth. i. 3, in all of which passages the same original word is found, although differently translated in each.

CAMEL POST.

Mad'ness (SHAGA, to be stirred or excited), (1 Sam. xxi. 13); HALEL, to flash out, as light or sound (Prov. xxvi. 18); MAINOMAI, or mania (John x. 20). Among Oriental nations madmen were looked upon with reverence, as possessed of a sacred character. LUNATICS.

Mag'dala (tower). In most of the MSS the name is MAGADAN. Christ came into the limits of Magdala after the miracle of feeding the 4000 on the other side of the lake (Matt. xv. 39). Now called El Mejdel, on the west shore of the Sea of Galilee, close to the water, about three miles north of Tiberias, at the southeast corner of the plain of Gennesaret. There was a watch-tower here that guarded the entrance to the plain. Here was the home of Mary Magdalene. Dalmanutha, in Mark viii. 10.

Ma'gi (Heb. CHARTUMIM; Gr. Magoi). Wise men, magicians, magians. They are credited all over the East with certain secret learning which in remote antiquity distinguished Egypt and Chaldæa. Among the Jews they were considered a sort of sacred scribes, skilled in divining, and interpreting the hidden meaning of certain passages of the Scriptures.

Magic. Wonder-working, in some way beyond the ordinary powers of man. This is only a pretense, and has nothing to do with Natural Philosophy. The belief in magic as a reality is very widespread in the East, and is simply an undue exercise of certain mental faculties, which take the place of religion in undeveloped persons. Some races in Africa have no higher conception of God and religion than the supposed magical powers of the air, minerals, etc., and worship by incantations. Even the Shemites were not exempt, as appears in the notices of Laban's images, but with them it took a kind of second rank to the true religion, being considered unlawful, but still very valuable as an aid to men in various selfish desires (Gen. xxxi. 19, 30, 32–35). This is the first notice of that superstition which in after times worked so much mischief in the Hebrew community. The name TERAPHIM has been derived from Egypt; TER, a shape, figure, or rather, in Coptic, to change figure.

Ma'gog. Second son of Japheth (Gen. x. 2), and founder of a race (Rev. xx. 8), the great Scythian tribe, now called Russian.

Mahanaim (two camps). 18 ms. E. of Jordan, and 10 N. of Jerash, now Birket Manneh (Tristram).

Mak'tesh (mortar). A quarter or part of Jerusalem (Zeph. i. 11). The merchants and mechanics gathered their shops in and around the Tyropœon valley. The Bazaar is now in the same ancient place.

Mam're (fruitfulness). An ancient Amorite in alliance with Abram (Gen. xiv. 13–24); his name was given to the site on which HEBRON was built (xxiii. 17, 19).

Mam're. Faces Machpelah (Gen. xxiii. 17, etc). One of Abraham's favorite camping-grounds. In its grove he had his sanctuary, which he called his Bethel (house of God). Here Abraham entertained the 3 angels, and Isaac was promised. The name has not been preserved in any locality.

Manasseh. There was no reason given for depriving Manasseh of his birthright, as there was in the case of his grand-uncle Esau. On leaving Egypt at the Exode, this was the least of the twelve tribes, numbering at Sinai only 32,200; but at the census, just before the crossing of the Jordan, they had increased to 52,700 men over 20 years old, at which Manasseh is honored with a first mention before Ephraim. The division of the tribe is one of the singular facts in the history of the Israelites, and seems to be at variance with the national feeling and laws. Some of this tribe were warriors, and made extensive conquests; as Machir, who took Gilead and Bashan; Jair, who took 60 cities in Argob; and Nobah, who captured Kenath and its vicinity, a tract of country the most difficult in the whole land, being full of fortified cities, and in the possession of Og and Sihon. (See HAURAN, BASHAN, HESHBON, ARGOB, KENATH, NOBAH, etc.)

Man'drakes (Cant. vii. 13). The mandrake is now called ATROPA MANDRAGORA.

Man'ger (Gr. phatne). The feeding-place for animals, or a trough made of mortar, or cut out of single stones. See INN.

Manna (Heb. MAN). A month after leaving Egypt the people were in want of food, and murmured against their leaders, when the quails were sent in the evening and the manna appeared in the morning, after the "dew was gone up." It was a small, round thing, like hoar-frost or coriander-seed, and the people said "what is this?" (MANHU.) Moses answered that it was the bread that the Lord had given them to eat (Ex. xvi. 1–3, 11–15).

DOD. LYDDA.

Ma'on. In the mts. of Judah (Josh. xv. 55), near Juttah. It was in the wilderness near this place (bleak and hilly pasture-lands) that David hid himself from Saul. Main 7 miles S.E. of Hebron (Rob.). On a conical hill, 200 feet high, are ruins of foundations of hewn stone, a square enclosure, towers and cisterns. The people use the caves near for dwellings, as of old.

Ma'onites (Judg. x. 12). An ancient and powerful nomad tribe, allied to the Phœnicians, first settled with the Amalekites in the vale of Sodom, and afterwards migrated eastward into Arabia. They named Maon in Judah, Beth-Maon in Moab, and Maan in Edom, 15 ms. E. of Petra. This last is now an important pilgrim station, on the caravan route to Mecca. A castle and other antiquities mark its ancient strength. Mehunim (2 Chr. xxvi. 7). Among the descendants of Caleb, the son of Shammai, the builder of Beth-zur (1 Chr. ii. 45).

MANDRAKE.

Mark. One of the four evangelists. He was a companion to Paul in his first tour, and afterwards of Peter (Acts xv. 39; 1 Pet. v. 13), and it is supposed founded the church in Alexandria. It is believed by many that Mark's Gospel was a report of Peter's preaching, and perhaps dictated by the apostle. He is said to have suffered martyrdom in Egypt, A.D. 68. (Col. iv. 10; 2 Tim. iv. 11.)

Mar'ket (MAARAB). An open place, where people came for business or to converse (Ez. xxvii. 13, 17).

Marriage. Instituted in the garden of Eden. (Gen. i. 27, 28; ii. 18, 24). The Saviour advocated the divine character of marriage apart from civil laws. He opposed divorces except for one cause (Matt. v. 32, xix. 3, 6, 9), and all breaches of the marriage vow (Matt. v. 28). Betrothal preceded the marriage rite and was a binding engagement (Matt. i. 18–25). Groomsman referred to as "the friend of the bridegroom" in John iii. 29. A procession formed part of the ceremony, and took place at night, accompanied by young unmarried women bearing lamps (Matt. xxv.).

WASHING HANDS BEFORE MEALS.

There were three kinds of legal marriage: 1. By written contract; 2. By payment of a sum of money (or an equivalent) before witnesses; and 3. By force — as a man compelling a woman to submit to him.

The wife's rights were food, raiment (including house), and conjugal privileges (Ex. xxi. 10). Her duties were as extensive as the entire household, as shown in Prov. xxxi.

Marriage is used as a type, in both the Old and New Testaments, of true religious union with God in many beautiful passages.

DINNER GROUP.

Mar'tha. Daughter of Simon the leper, and sister of LAZARUS and MARY of BETHANY. She was the elder sister, the head and manager of the household, and was present at the supper at Bethany (John xii. 2).

Mar'tyr (Gr. martus). "Witnesses" in Matt. xviii. 16. Simply witness. Witnesses of the gospel, suffering persecution, became martyrs in the modern sense.

Mas'aloth (terraces). Near Arbela: the great caverns in the Wady al Hamam (pigeon valley), which were fortified by Josephus (Josephus, Life, 37). Kulaet Ibu Maan. Herod drove a band of robbers out of them by letting soldiers down the face of the cliff to the mouth of the caves in large boxes.

Mash (Gen. x. 23). 4th son of Aram; settled in Mesopotamia. Mt. Masius (between the Euphrates and the Tigris, in the N.), and the river Masche flowing at its base, preserve the name. A prince of Masou was taken by Rameses II on the Orontes, at Kadesh.

Mas'tich-tree. The gum is used to strengthen the teeth and gums. It was prized by the ancients on this account, and for its medical properties. It is used in the preparation of spirits, as a sweatmeat, and in varnishes. The trees are very wide, and circular, 10 or 15 ft. high, and are found on the shores of the Mediterranean.

Matthew (Mattathias, the gift of Jehovah). Is only mentioned at the time of his call to be an apostle, when he was in "the receipt of custom" (Matt. ix. 9). Mark gives him another name — Levi, the son of Alphæus (Mark ii. 14; iii. 18), who has been supposed to have been the same as the Alpheus the father of James the Less, but without reason. On his call he gave a feast by way of a farewell to his friends, to which Jesus was invited (Luke v. 27). His humility is seen in his styling himself "the publican" (Matt. x. 3). He was with the other apostles after the resurrection (Acts i. 13). After this there is no record of him or his acts. It is not known how or where he died. There is a tradition that he lived in Jerusalem 15 years after the crucifixion, and that he became a martyr in Persia. See HISTORY OF THE BOOKS for the GOSPEL.

Mâuz'zim (forts). Layard (Nin. ii. 456), after describing Hera, the Assyrian Venus, as "standing erect on a lion, and crowned with a tower or mural coronet, which, we learn from Lucian, was peculiar to the Semitic figure of the goddess," adds, "May she be connected with the 'El Maozem,' the deity presiding over bulwarks and fortresses, the 'god of forces' of Dan. xi. 38." See cut, page 45.

Meals. The Jews generally eat their dinner before noon, and their supper after sundown. The chief meal of the Jews was in the evening; of the Egyptians, it was at noon. The early Hebrews sat or squatted round a low table upon which the meal was served, but in later times couches were used to recline upon before the tables. The guests were ranged in order of rank side by side (Gen. xliii. 33), resting upon the left elbow, the right arm being free — this posture explains the text "leaning on Jesus' bosom" (John xiii. 23, xxi. 20). The dishes, as they are to this day, were generally stews of rice, beans, and burgal (cracked wheat), with soups or sauces. The meats were so cooked that when served they fell to pieces. Knives and forks were not used at the table, but spoons, and generally thin slices of bread were doubled up and dipped into the dishes, all eating from the same dish. These pieces of bread also served the purpose of napkins. It was after this manner that Judas ate of the sauce or sop at the Last Supper (John xiii. 26). Washing of the hands, from being a necessity, was elevated to a form and ceremony.

Meat. LEHEM, bread (1 Sam. xx. 24): TEREF, spoil (Ps. cxi. 5); Gr. bromu and brosis (Matt. iii. 4; Acts xxvii. 33; Heb. v. 12). Anything that may be eaten. This word was never used for flesh-meat, unless it was included in a general sense, as we now say food.

Medes. Media (Gen. x. 2, Madia; 2 K. xvii. 6, Medes; Esth. i. 3, Media; Dan. xi. 1, Mede). 3d son of Japheth, and founder of a great race. 1500 years of their history is a blank, from their first mention to the time when Isaiah threatened to stir them up against Babylon (xiii. 7, B. C. 72).

Mediator (interpreter). Moses was the mediator between Jehovah and the Israelites (Gal. iii. 19, 20.) JESUS CHRIST is the one Mediator between God and men (1 Tim. ii. 5).

Med'icine. The Egyptian physicians (barbers?) were skilled, and perhaps also educated, if we may believe the Greeks, before the Exodus. The first mention of a physician was of the "servants of Joseph," who embalmed his father (Gen. l. 2); they were probably regular attendants on the royal house. Specialists are mentioned by Herodotus (ii. 84), "each physician is for one kind of sickness, such as for the eyes, teeth, head, stomach," etc. The practice of medicine was largely superstitious. The medicines mostly used were salves, balms (Jer. viii. 22), plasters or poultices (2 K. xx. 7); bathing (2 K. v. 10), oils, and mineral baths. Charms and amulets were used by the Jews, also charming by the hand, as in 2 K. v. 11. Knowledge of anatomy is suggested in Job x. 11, and also shown in monumental figures. Physicians received public salaries, and their office was held in high esteem. The Jews at a later period overcame much of their abhorrence of uncleanness, and of their reverence for human remains in the pursuit of medical knowledge. Alexandria became the centre for medical study. (See ALEXANDRIA.) Luke is referred to as "the beloved physician," and his medical education was probably Greek.

Megid'do (place of troops). An ancient royal city of the Canaanites, on the south border of the plain of Esdraëlon, commanding a pass leading from the plain to the Samarian hills (Josh. xii. 21). In the territory of Issachar, but belonging to Manasseh.

SHUSAN, THE PALACE.

Melchiz'edek (king of righteousness). He lived in the time of Abraham, worshiped God, and was "a priest of the most high God," perhaps a first-born, and a patriarch or elder in the city of Salem (Gen. xiv.). He received Abraham's homage and presents or tithes, and gave him a blessing, and gave bread and wine to his tired and hungry army.

STREET VIEW IN MALTA.

Some have thought that the bread and wine were sacrificial, and that Melchizedek was a type of Christ. Others have strangely imagined that it was an appearance of Christ himself in the disguise of the priest. He really was both a king and a priest — and so far typical of the spiritual king and priest, Jesus the Christ.

Mel'ita. MALTA. A small island, 20 by 12 miles in extent, and 60 miles south of Sicily, where Paul was wrecked when on his way to Rome (Acts xxvii., xxviii.). The island is full of mementos of Paul, who is its tutelary saint. The bay where the shipwreck occurred is called St. Paul's, and is a deep inlet on the north side of the island, 5 miles from the port of Malta, and is one mile wide and two miles long, inland, having the small island Salmonetta on the western side of the entrance. The whole island is a barren rock, but has been made fertile to some extent by great labor. The Phœnicians colonized it, from whom the Greeks took it about 736 B. C.; and in turn the Carthaginians became its masters in the Second Punic War, 528 B. C., and the Romans in 242 B. C., and whose officer, Publius, governed it when Paul was there. Its history since then has been full of changes in its masters, in which we read of Vandals, Greeks (A. D. 553), Arabs, Normans (A. D. 1090), Germans (1530, by whom it was given to the Knights of St. John, of Jerusalem), the French (1798), and finally the English, who hold it now. The Anglican Bishop of Gibraltar resides there. The island is a station for several lines of steamers and submarine telegraph cables. The island of Meleda, in the Adriatic Sea, on the coast of Dalmatia, 125 miles southeast of Venice, was once supposed to be the one on which Paul was wrecked; but a more careful examination of all the facts, and of the course of the prevailing winds, and position of the islands and places mentioned, both before and after the shipwreck, have determined the question in favor of Malta. The "barbarous people" of Acts xxviii. 2, were simply not Greeks. The Greeks called every nation or tribe barbarians who did not speak the Greek language.

Mel'ons (Heb. ABATICHIM). Melons are extensively cultivated in the East, and used as a common article of diet; here we make a luxury of them. Thomson says, "Nothing could be regretted in the burning desert more than these delicious (water) melons, whose exuberant juice is so refreshing to the thirsty pilgrim," (Num. xi. 5).

Mem'phis (the abode of the good one). In Hebrew MOPH or NOPH (Hosea ix. 6). The ancient Egyptian name was Men-nefru, the pyramid city. On the west bank of the Nile, just south of the junction of the three branches, Canopic, Sebennytic, and Pelusiac. It was built on a district which was reclaimed by Menes from a marsh, by turning the Nile into a new channel, east of the ancient one which ran close to the Libyan mountains; and in a position which commanded both the Delta and Upper Egypt. Of all the temples, palaces, walls, and houses which the ancient historians describe, not one stone is left on another — the pyramids only remaining. The necropolis in the vicinity witnesses the ancient importance of the city.

Mephib'osheth (shame-destroyer, or image-breaker). The name is given in Chr. as Meribbaal — Baal and Bosheth being synonymous. (See IDOL.) 1. Son of Saul by Rizpah (2 Sam. xxi. 8). He was crucified, with six others, by the Gibeonites (as an offering to the god of Famine?), and hung on the cross for five months. Their bones were buried by David in the cave of Kish, at Zelah, when the famine, which had continued for three years, ended. — 2. Son of Jonathan, Saul's son. His life was full of trial and suffering. He was but an infant of 5 years, when his father and grandfather were killed on Mt. Gilboa, living at Gibeah, when he was dropped from the arms of his nurse, both of his feet being permanently injured (2 Sam. iv. 4). He was taken to Lodebar, where he was cared for by Machir, the sheikh.

MELON.

Me'rab (increase). Eldest daughter of king Saul (1 Sam. xiv. 49). She was betrothed to David (xviii. 17), but married Adriel, to whom she bore five sons (2 Sam. xxi. 8). See DAVID.

Mera'ri (unhappy). Head of the 3d division of the tribe of Levi. The Merarites carried the boards, bars, pillars, sockets, pins, and cords of the Tabernacle, by the help of oxen and carts (Num. iii. 20, etc.). In the division of the land they had 12 cities, in Reuben, Gad, and Zebulon, (Josh. xxi. 7). They furnished a third part of the musicians, and a third of the door-keepers. They are frequently mentioned in the history until the return from captivity (Ezr. viii. 18).

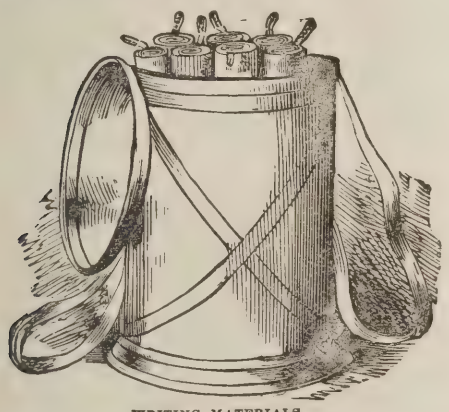
Mer'cy-seat (Heb. KAPPORETH). The lid of the Ark of the Covenant. See ARK.

Mer'ibah (strife). A fountain in the desert of Sin, which flowed at the command of Moses (Ex. xii. 1–7). The place was called Massah (temptation), and Meribah (chiding). — 2. Another fountain of the same character was near Kadesh (Num. xx. 13; Deut. xxxiii. 8). This is also called the Waters of Meribah (Ps. lxxxi. 7, cvi. 32). It was here that Moses sinned in impatience and assumption of power, for which offense he was not permitted to pass over Jordan (Num. xx. 12).

SELLING THE CHILDREN OF JEWISH CAPTIVES.

Me'rom, The Waters of (Josh. xi. 5, 7). Where Jabin, king of Hazor, and his allies were defeated by Joshua. The lake El Huleh or Samochonitis (Jos. Ant. v. 5, 1).

Mes'ech. The sixth son of Japheth (Gen. x. 2), and founder of a nation (Ps. cxx. v.), which traded with Tyre (Ez. xxvii. 13), and was ruined with Egypt (xxxii. 26), and a neighbor of Gog and Magog (xxxviii. 2).



Me'sha. The Joktanites dwelt from Mesha unto Mt. Sephar (Gen. x. 30). The mountain range of Zames (Mesha) runs from near the Persian Gulf S. W., nearly across Arabia. There is a Mount Zafara on the Indian Ocean. Here is now, and has been from remote times, the country of the Beni Kahtan (Joktanite Arabs), inhabiting Yemen, Hadramaut, and Oman, separated from the Ishmaelites by the Nejed mountain range.

Me'sha (safety). 1. King of MOAB (2 K. iii. 4), who revolted from the 10 tribes after the death of Ahab, against whom Jehoshaphat and Jehoram led their armies. He was a great sheep-breeder. A monument erected by him is mentioned in the article KIR HARESH, with an engraving of "THE MOABITE STONE." — 2. Son of Caleb, who founded Ziph (1 Chr. ii. 42). — 3. (retreat). Son of Shaharaim (1 Chr. viii. 9).

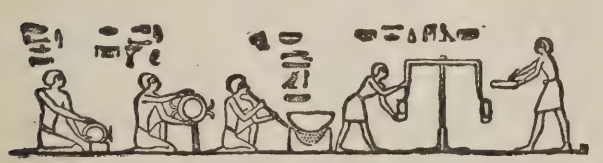
Mesopota'mia (between the rivers). Between the Tigris and Euphrates, 700 miles long by 20 to 250 wide. The Aram Naharaim (in the Hebrew) of Gen. xxiv. 10, and Padan Aram of xxv. 20. It is a plain, but is crossed by the Sinjar hills east to west, near its centre, not far from Mosul. The nomad tribes are the only people, and they are driven to the hills in the hot season, when the pastures become dry, dusty, and parched, except near the streams. (See ASSYRIA.) It is becoming the belief among scholars that the Mesopotamia (the city of Nahor) of Terah and Haran of Abraham were near Damascus (Dr. Beke), where Bethuel and Laban lived, and Abraham sent a servant to fetch Rebekah to be Isaac's wife; and a hundred years after that Jacob earned his two wives in 21 years. It was also the residence of Balaam (Deut. xxiii. 4). All of these references may apply to the region around Damascus, between the rivers Pharpar and Abana.

Messi'ah. CHRIST. The anointed, (as a king.) The word is found in the original Hebrew many times, in all of which it is translated anointed, except in Daniel ix. 25, 26. The ceremony of ANOINTING was intended to mark what God had set apart for his own purposes. It was His royal stamp, which was to be applied to the high-priest (Ex. xxviii. 41), the offerings, the tabernacle, table, ark, candlestick, altar of incense, laver and vessels attached to them, "to sanctify them, and they shall be most holy; whatsoever toucheth them shall be holy."



WRITING MATERIALS.

Metals. The earliest record of the production and manufacture of metals is in the reference to Tubal Cain, a Cainite, the son of Lamech (Gen. iv. 22). The first mention of metal as money is in Gen. xxiii. 16. The gold and silver possessed by the Jews was of vast amount, even allowing for over-statements (1 Chr. xxii. 14, xxix. 4). The trade in metals was mostly held by the Phœnicians (Ez. xvii. 7). Metals were also supplied worked in thin plates (Jer. x. 9). The holy vessels used in the Temple were mostly gold (Ezr. v. 14). Tin is mentioned among the spoils of the Midianites (Num. xxxi. 22), and lead in Ez. xv. 10. In the earliest times copper (NEKOSHETH) and bronze were used for many purposes in the place of iron introduced at a later period.

WORKING IN METALS.

WORKING IN METALS.

Methu'selah (man of offspring). Son of Enoch (Gen. v. 25–27). He lived 969 years, longer than any other PATRIARCH, and died the year of the flood.

Mi'chal (who like El?). The youngest daughter of Saul, espoused to David. Saul had intended to make her a party to his designs, but was foiled by her devotion to David. This was especially illustrated in the incident in 1 Sam. xix. 11–17, by which she assisted the escape of David. Saul afterwards canceled the marriage, but a reunion followed through the mission of Abner (2 Sam. iii. 12–21). Through her conduct on meeting David, after his return from celebrating the entry of the ark into Jerusalem, she was punished with the curse of barrenness (2 Sam. vi. 16–23). Thus it was that the races of Saul and David were not united.

THE PYRAMIDS OF JIZEH FROM THE NILE LOOKING EAST. SHOWING THE SITE OF THE SPHINX.

Mich'mash (something hidden). In Benjamin. A pass celebrated by the exploit of Jonathan, Saul's son (1 Sam. xiii., xiv. 4, 16). Jonathan Maccabæus also resided there (1 Macc ix. 73), on account of the military strength of the pass (Ant. xiii. 1, 6). Mukhmas, in the Wady Es Suweinit, has ruins of many foundations of hewn stones, columns, cisterns, etc., indicating a once strong place, perhaps a city devoted to the heathen deity Chemosh (the two names being similar). The two rocks (see BOZEZ and SENEH) may still be seen; one on each side of the narrow and precipitous valley (Rob). Isaiah, in speaking of the invasion of Judah by Sennacherib, says he laid up his carriages at Michmash (x. 28), which agrees with the character of the place, it being too steep for wheels.

Mid'ian (strife). Fourth son of Abraham by Keturah, and founder of a nation (Gen. xxv. 2; Num. xxii.), the rulers of Northern Arabia for a long time; inhabiting the peninsula of Sinai, where Moses fled after killing the Egyptian (Ex. ii. 15), and the country east of Edom and Palestine (xxxvii. 28).

Mig'dol (tower). 1. A place between which and the Red Sea the Israelites were directed to camp on leaving Egypt (Ex. xiv. 2).—2. A boundary town mentioned by Jeremiah and Ezekiel, on the N. as Syene was on the S. of Egypt. Hecatæus of Miletus places Magdolo 12 ms. S. of Pelusium.

Mile'tus. Seaport and the ancient capital of Ionia, Asia Minor, 36 ms. S. of Ephesus. The presbyters of the Church of Ephesus met Paul at this place on his return from his third missionary journey (Acts xx. 6).

Milk. There are two Hebrew terms for milk, one (CHELEB), meaning fresh milk, the other (CHEMAH) curdled. Both are frequently used in Scripture; fresh milk is figuratively used to mean abundance (Gen. xlix. 12; Ez. xxv. 4; Joel iii. 18, etc.). It is often mentioned with honey, as a "land flowing with milk and honey," applied to describe Egypt as well as Palestine (Num. xvi. 13). As a term of simplicity it occurs in 1 Cor. iii. 2; Heb. v. 12, 13; 1 Pet. ii. 3; Is. lv. 1). The milk was from goats, cows, sheep, and camels (Prov. xxvii. 27; Deut. xxxii. 14). "Thirty milch camels" were given by Jacob to Esau (Gen. xxxii. 15).

Mill (RECHAIM, the two mill-stones, Ex. xi. 5); used in the preparation of manna for food in Num. xi. 8. The ordinary mill was a household machine of two stones two feet in diameter and six inches thick, the lower one hollowed out a little, and the upper fitted to it, and turned from right to left around by a wooden handle. This is the work of women or slaves. Captives (as Samson) were often forced to grind (Judg. xvi. 21); but more generally women were thus employed, as in Ex. xi. 5, and Matt. xxiv. 41.

Mil'let (DOCHAN). Mentioned only in Ez. iv. 9. There was the "common millet" (Panicum Miliacum), and the "Turkish millet." It was probably the latter. Millet produced a bread of inferior quality.

Mil'lo (fullness). An ancient Jebusite name of a part of the citadel of Jerusalem (2 Sam. v. 9). Solomon raised a levy to build or enlarge this work (and others, 1 K. ix. 15). Hezekiah repaired Millo, the City of David (2 Chr. xxxii. 5). The HOUSE OF MILLO was a chief clan of Shechem (Judg. ix. 6, 20). King Joash was murdered by his slaves at "the house of Millo that goeth down to Silla" (2 K. xii. 20), which is supposed to have been the place mentioned first.

WOMAN CHURNING IN A SKIN.

Min'ister (Heb. MESHARETH). One who serves another; the term to distinguish from master; Solomon's servants and ministers (1 K. x. 5). "Moses rose up and his minister Joshua" (Ex. xxiv. 13). He who administers an office. "God's ministers" (Rom. xiii. 4. 6). "Ministers of Christ" (1 Cor. iv. 1). "Christ came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." Minister "of the circumcision" (Rom. xv. 8).

Min'nith (given). A town east of Jordan (Judg. xi 33), celebrated for its wheat (Ez. xxvii. 17), whic was exported at Tyre. Menjah, a ruin, 4 ms. N.E. of Heshbon (Velue).

Mines. MINING. (See METALS.) The ancients were skilful miners, and their operations are alluded to by Job (xxviii. 1–11). Evidences remain of Egyptian copper-mining in the Sinai desert. Palestine produced iron and copper. The Phœnicians brought tin from Spain, and possibly from Cornwall in England. There were lead mines bordering the coast of the Red Sea. Iron mining is referred to in Deut. iv. 20.

RUINS AT MILETUS.

Minni (division). Armenia (Jer. li. 27). The Minnai of the Assyrian inscriptions were located near lake Urumieh. See ARMENIA.

Mir'acles. Two Hebrew words, OTH, sign, and MOFETH, wonder (plural NIFLAOTH, wonders), and three Greek words, terata, wonders; semeia, signs; dunameis, powers, mighty works, are translated miracles. Natural and common events may be used for signs, and do indicate miracles if they were predicted.

The meaning of miracle in our day is a work or sign that is above and beyond nature. A miracle is the result of a new power, or new law, or rather, a law heretofore unknown to us, and higher than those with which we have been acquainted, which produces effects not included in our ordinary experience. It is simply one law operating on another so far as to neutralize it, and produce unexpected results.

A CART USED IN SOME PARTS OF ASIA MINOR.

In the case of healing sickness, the word, or touch, or gesture, is the prediction of the cure, and the supernatural is seen in the prediction, or seeing before time what will come to pass. The prediction and the fulfilment may occur near together, or at a great length of time apart, and two sets of independent witnesses depose to the prediction and the fulfilment, leaving no room for doubt or fraud.

Mir'iam (bitter). Sister of Moses, who it is supposed watched her infant brother when he was exposed on the Nile (Ex. ii. 4). Upon the flight of the Israelites from Egypt, Miriam is called prophetess (Ex. xv. 20), where she celebrates the passage of the Red Sea with music. The arrival of Zipporah, Moses' Ethiopian wife, excited the enmity of Miriam, who incited Aaron to sedition (Num. xii.); for this conduct Miriam was stricken with leprosy, and was recovered by the intercession of Moses. She died in the 1st month of the 40th year after the Exodus, at Kadesh-Barnea (Num. xx. 1). See HISTORY OF THE BOOKS.

Mir'ma (deceit). Son of Shaharaim (1 Chr. viii. 10).

Mityle'ne.—Chief town in Lesbos (Acts xx. 14, 15). The Romans called it "the beautiful," from its fine buildings. It was a free city in Paul's time. It is a city now, and gives its name to the whole island.

Mixed Multitude (a medley of people). Mentioned as amongst the Israelites in their journey from Rameses to Succoth (Ex. xii. 38). See Num. xi. 4. In the return from the Babylonish Captivity, mixed multitude refers to Arabians (Neh. xii. 4), which is probably the meaning in the other references.

Mizpah, Mizpeh (watch-tower, or look-out). Six places of this name: 1. Mispah (also Galeed), where Jacob and Laban set up a memorial stone-heap (Gen. xxxi. 45), saying, The Lord watch between us. Mizpah was the Hebrew form of the ancient name of the place. N. of Mahanaim, on some hill-top. Jebel Osha, near Es Salt? The top is broad and flat—a fine place for an assembly—and on the N. slope is a ruin, called Jilad (Gilead). (Grove, in Smith's Dict.) —2. THE LAND OF MISPAH. The Hivites of this land helped Jabin against the Israelites (Josh. xi. 3). —3. THE VALLEY OF MIZPEH. Where Joshua chased Jabin and his multitude (ver. 8). Cœle-Syria, or Bukaa? Perhaps the reference is to the Hauran, "eastward" from the waters of Merom.—4. (Ib. xv. 38.) In the Shefelah. Tell es Safieh (Velde).—5. A city of Benjamin (Ib. xviii. 26), on Neby Samwil, 4 ms. N.W. of Jerusalem. Here the whole nation assembled to avenge the Levite (Judg. xx.); and to sacrifice before attacking the Philistines by order of Samuel (1 Sam. vii.); and again to elect Saul king (x.); the city of Gibeon was about 1 m. N. of the hill; and perhaps on this very height Solomon offered sacrifice, and was endowed with wisdom (1 K. iii. 4). It was fortified by Asa, who took the materials from Ramah, 3 ms. N.E. Gedaliah, Nebuchadnezzar's governor, lived here when he was killed by the fanatic Ishmael (Jer. xl. 7, 8). After the destruction of the Temple it was held as a holy place, where sacrifice was made (xli. 5) in a house of the Lord. This character continued as late as the time of the Maccabees (1 Macc. iii. 46). There is a village and a mosque (formerly a church) on the summit of Neby Samwil. The hill rises steeply 600 ft. above the plain, and commands a very extensive view, especially E., as far as Kerak, in Moab, and W. to the Mediterranean.—6. MIZPEH OF MOAB (1 Sam. xxii. 3). Where David sought an asylum for his father and mother, with the king of Moab (among the relatives of Ruth?).

Miz'raim (the two Egypts). EGYPT (Gen. x. 6). This name (not of a man but of a country) represents a centre from which colonies went out from the remotest antiquity. Egypt is now called Misr in Arabic. See EGYPT.

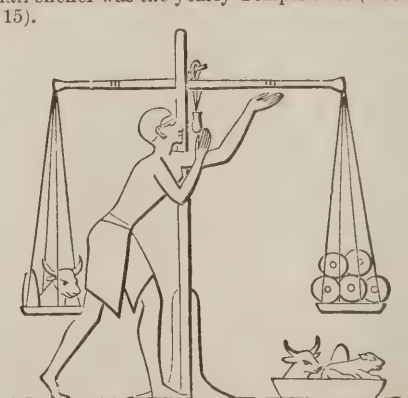
Mo'ab (from father). Son of Lot, and founder of a tribe, located E. of the Dead Sea (Gen. xix. 37), in the district once occupied by the Emims (Gen. xiv. 5; Deut. ii. 11). Zoar, the city of this tribe, was most probably N.E. of the Dead Sea, from which the Amorites drove them, and which was given to Reuben. The whole region is undulating, without any high ridges or sudden hills, except near the Dead Sea and Jordan, is covered with sites of ruined towns, on every hill or other convenient place, and its soil is rich. The country must, when prosperous, have presented a scene of plenty and happiness scarcely equaled. The Roman roads have not entirely disappeared, on which there are still milestones of the time of Trajan, Marcus Aurelius, and Severus, with the numbers yet readable.

Mo'lech (MELEK, king). The chief god of the Phœnicians—mentioned as the god of the Ammonites. Probably known to the Israelites before the time of Solomon. Human sacrifices (infants) were offered up to this idol, the victims being slowly burnt to death in the arms of the idol, which were of metal, hollow, and could be heated on the inside.

Mon'ey. The most ancient notices of money refer to certain weights of precious metals, but not to coins. The first mention of wealth in the Bible is of the wealth of Abraham when he left Egypt to return to Canaan; and of the 1000 pieces of silver that the Abimelech gave Abraham for Sarah's use (Gen. xiii. 2, xx. 16), unless Job lived before his time, when the "kesitah and ring of gold," which each of his friends gave him after his recovery, would belong to an earlier age.

Abraham bought the cave of Machpelah and weighed to Ephron 400 shekels of silver, current with the merchant (xxiii. 6). Jacob paid 100 kesitahs for a field at Shalem; Achan stole 200 shekels of silver, and a tongue of gold weighing 50 shekels (Josh. vii.).



Jewels in the East have in all ages been a convenient and recognized means of keeping property, the precious metals being always weighed, as in the case of the presents to Rebekah (Gen. xxiv. 22). Egyptian (and perhaps also other) money was made into rings, for convenience, as when the sons of Jacob carried bundles of money of certain weight to Egypt to buy corn (xlii. 35, xliii. 21). The Midianites were "spoiled" of jewels of gold, chains, and bracelets, rings, ear-rings, and tablets, of 16,750 shekels weight.

HALF-SHEKEL.

Jehoiada "took a chest, and bored a hole in the lid of it, and set it beside the altar, on the right side, and the priests put therein all the money" (2 K. xii. 9). This is the first mention of a contribution-box, 850 B. C. These small pieces may have been coins.

Saul's servants said that they had only the fourth part of a shekel to give the prophet, and it seems to have been customary to give more (1 Sam. ix. 8). A half-shekel was the yearly Temple dues (Ex. xxx 13, 15).

WEIGHING MONEY.

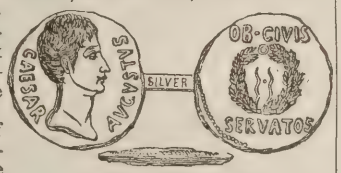
The credit for making the first coins is given to the Lydians, Asia Minor, by Herodotus (i. 94), which were of gold; and to Phidra of Argos, in the island of Ægina, 860 B. C., of silver, by the Parian Chronicle (a series of inscriptions, or records, on marble, dated 200 B. C.).

The earliest coins used in Palestine were Persian, and called Daric (king's money, from Darius) 450 B. C. (Ezr. ii. 69; Neh. vii. 70; 1 Chr. xxix. 7). The stater (standard) was another Persian coin, of silver and of gold, and also the siglos (Gr. for shekel?).

DARIC (gold.)

There are still to be found in the museums of Paris, Gotha, London, and in some private collections, coins of Sardis, Scythopolis (Bethshan), Joppa, Tarsus, Sycamina, Ascalon, Ephesus, Philadelphia, and several other cities of Palestine, of the date of Alexander, 350 B. C. (See pages 2 and 24, under the different names.)

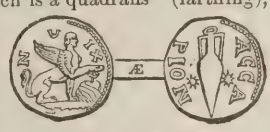
COIN OF TYRE.



Antiochus VII, 139 B. C., granted the privilege of coining money among the Jews to Simon Maccabæus, and the various pieces are dated "In the first, or second, year of Simon, benefactor of the Jews, High-Priest" (1 Macc. xiii. 34, 42; Ant. xiii. 6). The date was always given in letters. Some coins have "ethnarch." There are some shekels with the inscription SHEKEL HAKODESH, shekel of the Sanctuary, that is the Temple. (See page 6.)

COIN OF CORINTH.

The Port of Cenchrea (Kenkries).



Eleazar, son of Simon, struck coins, both of silver and bronze. Jehonathan, high-priest, struck coins, B. C. 105–78, of which some are still extant.

COIN OF CÆSAR AUGUSTUS

(Tribute Money.)

The money of Herod is less interesting, because of its Greek character, and being of bronze only. The farthing of the New Testament was the smallest of Herod's coins, unless the mite was smaller. The text in Mark xii. 42, is explained, "she threw in two leptra (mites), which is a quadrans" (farthing), as though we should say two mills, which are a quarter of a cent (nearly). Such very small coins are often found buried, with others, among the ancient ruins of Palestine. The modern Arabs also use small pieces, which look very much like fish-scales in size and thickness.

FARTHING. ASSARION.

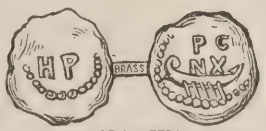
The coin which Peter found in the mouth of the fish was probably the stater, or tetradrachm, the only Greek silver coin in use at that time, equal in value to the shekel, which was not then coined, or in use, unless for Temple dues, (see pages 5, 6, and 8, for cuts of tetradrachm). The tribute-money (Matt. xxii. 15–21) bore the head of a Cæsar, Tiberius (see cut of PENNY) or some earlier one, and was a day's wages of a soldier, and such as was paid the laborers in the vineyard (Matt. xviii. 28, xx. 2, 9, 13, xxii. 19; Mark vi. 37, xii. 15, xiv. 5; Luke vii. 41, x. 35, xx. 24; John vi. 7, xii. 15; Rev. vi. 6).

ROMAN MEDAL.

(Struck in Memory of the Fall of Jerusalem.)

The piece of money paid Judas is represented by the tetradrachm of Antiochus IV (cut on page 8), which was equal to the shekel. As there were money changers in the Temple, who changed Gentile coins for the Temple money (shekel of the sanctuary), the thirty pieces may have been Jewish shekels of Simon or Eleazar (page 6).

COIN OF EPHESUS.



(Temple of Diana.)

The last coins struck by the Jews are those of Barkokab, A. D. 130. (This is doubted by some numismatists.)

COIN OF SARDIS.

The Romans struck several coins and medals in memory of the fall of Jerusalem, one of which is given in the article VESPASIAN. Herod Agrippa also gives a head of Titus, when Emperor, on one of his coins. The Aretas who ruled Damascus when Paul was there struck coins, one of which is now well known. The coin of Ephesus bears a model of the temple of Diana, and a head of Nero.

MITE OF ARCHELAUS.

SHEKEL. ("Year 4. half." "The redemption of Zion.")

There is a curious medal with a head of Christ on a cross, which was found at Urfa, Syria (by Rev. G. B. Nutting, missionary, who loaned it to me), (see cut on page 2). It is very ancient, but by coins, as for instance in the case of the port of Cenchrea, where the coin of Corinth confirms the text in Acts xviii. 18, and Rom. xvi. 1.

The frequent allusions to burying money and treasure was confirmed as true records a few years ago by the discovery of some earthen jars in a garden at Sidon, containing nearly 8000 pieces of gold, the coinage of Philip of Macedon, and Alexander, his son. There were no banks or places of secure deposit, and the only safety was in burying money or treasure in some secret place, as alluded to in Prov. ii. 4; and also in Jer. xli. 8, where the treasures hid were produced.

PENNY OF TIBERIUS.

DRACHMA OF ARCHELAUS.

Moon (Heb. YARE'AH, paleness; LEBONAH, white; HODESH, renewing, as the new moon). The new moon began the month, and the authorities set a watch on the hill around Jerusalem, who reported its appearance.

The moon was worshiped, as well as the sun, as a power, and was so personified; several moon goddesses being known (Astarte, Diana, Hera, Anaitis, Sin, Isis, Neith, Artemis) two of which are drawn in this work (HERA, DIANA). Moses specially denounced the worship (Deut. iv. 19; xvii. 3), but the idolatry was frequently practiced (2 K. xxiii. 5). The moon was regarded as the power to which women were peculiarly subject; and women worshiped it by offering incense, drink-offerings, and cakes, and by the kissing of the hand towards the bright orb.

The superstition that the moon has a powerful effect on both animal and vegetable life is very common in Palestine as well as in nearly all countries.

Mo'reh (a teacher). THE OAK OF MOREH (not plain), the first halting-place of Abram in Canaan (Gen. xii. 6), was near Shechem. (Land of Moriah?) The field which Jacob bought probably included this sacred grove. The name Morthia is found on some ancient coins as a title of Neopolis — Shechem. Josephus has a Mamortha, or Mabortha, which he says was a local name (Wars v. 8, 1). THE HILL OF MOREH. At the base of this hill the Midianites encamped on the night when Gideon attacked them with his 300 cannot be dated, except that it is probably later than the time of Constantius.

A coin, if genuine, is often the very best evidence concerning ancient persons and places, which cannot be denied or explained away. Even if they were forged, in some age near the true date, they have still a value according to their antiquity. It is often found that ancient records are confirmed

MITE OF HEROD.

(Judg. vii. 1). Now called Little Hermon or Jebel ed Duhy.

Mori'ah. In two passages only. 1. THE LAND OF MORIAH (Gen. xxii. 2) was more than two days' journey from Gerar, where Abram then lived (Beersheba being mentioned just before and just after the event of the journey), and probably in the same region with the oak of Moreh, Shechem. — 2. MOUNT MORIAH would in that case be Mt. Gerizim, according to the tradition of the Samaritans; but it is said, in 2 Chr. iii. 1, that Solomon began to build the house of the Lord at Jerusalem, in Mount Moriah. There must have been two mountains of that name, or the one at Jerusalem is the only one.

ROMANS AT SUPPER.

Mo'ses (Heb. MOSHEH, drawn out, of the water; Ar. MOUSA). Ex. ii. to xl.; Lev.; Num.; Deut. The son of Amram of the tribe of Levi. To save him from death, which was decreed by the Pharaoh to all the male infants of the Hebrews, his mother put him afloat, when he was three months old, on the river Nile, in a boat made of papyrus, where he was found by a daughter of the king, who adopted him as her own son (Heb. xi. 23–29). He was educated as an Egyptian in the priests' college at Heliopolis, and was initiated into the sacred order of the priests (Acts vii. 22) named Osarsiph, or Tisithen (Strabo, Ant. ii. 9, 7), and became acquainted in that seat of learning with Greek, Chaldæan, and Assyrian literature. He received a divine commission to deliver his people Israel from the Egyptian bondage, and at the same time the divine name Jehovah (Heb. YEHEVEH = self-existence) was explained to him, with a confirmation of his mission in the three miracles of the burning bush, the serpent rod, and the leprous hand. Supported by his brother Aaron, sustained in a wonderful way by the miracles of the ten plagues, the last of which was the most terrible, in the death of the first-born in all Egypt, Moses led out the Israelites by the way of the Red Sea, blessed with liberty, and a large tribute from their late oppressors.

On this occasion Moses wrote his first recorded poem (Ex. xv.). His sister Miriam also sang a song, the title, or subject only, of which is known.

Moses was at this time 80 years old. His life during the next 40 years is a part of the history of the Israelites, inseparable, and for 38 years entirely unknown. He died at the age of 120, and was not careful of his memory, leaving no monument of stone to mark his grave, which is unknown (Deut. xxiv.).

MOUNT TABOR FROM THE EAST.

He became the champion of his people from the first, and showed his compassion for their sufferings by killing one of the task-masters who was abusing a Hebrew. Pharaoh would have punished him with death for the murder, if he had not fled into Arabia, where he "sat down by a well" in the land of Midian. His first act there was to defend the daughters of Reuel (Jethro), a priest of Midian, against their oppressors, the shepherds. (See MIDIAN.) He became a shepherd in the service of Jethro, and married Zipporah, his daughter, by whom he had two sons, Gershom and Eliezer. During the seclusion of his shepherd life, in the valley of Shoayb (or Hobab), Mountain. The Hebrew words are, HAR, HARER, or HARAR, and the Chaldee, tur; which are translated mount, mountain, and hill. The various parts of a mountain were described by the names of parts of the human body: 1. Head (ROSH, Gen. viii. 5), meaning tops or summits. — 2. Ears (AZNOTH, Josh. xix. 34); projections or spurs. Uzzen Sherah. — 3. Shoulder (KATHEF, Deut. xxxiii. 12), meaning side or slope. — 4. Side (ZAD, 1 Sam. xxiii. 26). — 5. Loins (KISLOTH, Josh. xix. 12); Ha-Cesulloth (loins village). — 6. Rib (ZELA, 2 Sam. xvi. 13). — 7. Back (SHEKEM), the origin of the name Shechem, which is on the back of Gerizim. — 8. Thigh (JARKAH, Judg xix. 1, 18). — 9. The Chaldee tur is borrowed in the modern name of Olivet, Jebel et Tur.

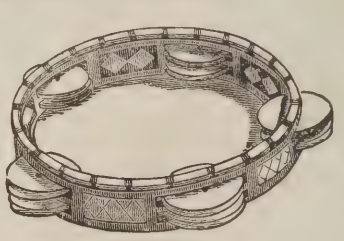
Mourn'ing. There are a great many allusions to mourning in the Bible. Its customs include: Beating the breast and body; weeping and screaming in an excessive manner; wearing dark-colored garments; songs and shouts of lamentation; funeral feasts; hired mourners; the disuse of perfumes, oil, and fine food, and the use of ashes, and coarse food and clothes. The time of mourning lasted from 7 to 30 days.

Mul'berry-Trees (BACA, BEKAIM). It is not certain that mulberry-trees are meant in 2 Sam. v. 23, 24; 1 Chr. xiv. 14. Some think it was a species of poplar.

Mule (PERED, mule; REKESH, dromedary; and YEMIM, warm springs; are all translated mule. First mentioned in David's time, when horses became common, and they appear to have become favorites all at once, being mentioned in hundreds (Neh. vii. 68). The king's son rode on mules. The law forbade the Jews from raising mules, and they either imported them or broke the law (Lev. xix. 19). Yemim, warm springs, were found by Anah (and not mules, as in Gen. xxxvi. 24), east of the Dead Sea, now called Machærus or Callirrhoe.



Murder. Was an outrage on the likeness of God in man, and also a damage to society in the loss of a member. There was to be no reprieve of the murderer, for money, as the pagans allowed. The accidental man-slayer might escape to the City of Refuge.

Music. The first record of music is in Gen. iv. 21, referring to Jubal (brother of Tubal-Cain) as the father (teacher?) of musicians upon the harp and organ; probably the lyre and the Pandean pipes. Music was used socially from an early date, as in Gen. xxxi. 27, both as an accompaniment to song and dance. Music was an especial employment of women, and, at a later period, "foreign girls" visited Palestine as musicians (Is. xxiii. 16). David was an accomplished musician, and gave much attention to its cultivation, and introduction into the Temple worship (1 Chr. xxv. 1). It is probable that in this service were female choirs (Ezr. ii. 65). There is no harmony in Oriental music; it is all unison, the several instruments playing the same melody arranged on a different octave. Minor keys are the favorites, and pathetic, expressive music the most acceptable.

MULBERRY.

Musical Instruments. There were three kinds in use. 1. Stringed (harp, guitar, viol, sackbut, kanoon, sheshta, etc.). 2. Wind (trumpet, horn, cornet, pipe, flute, organ, dulcimer). 3. Of percussion (bells, cymbals, timbrel, drums, tabor).

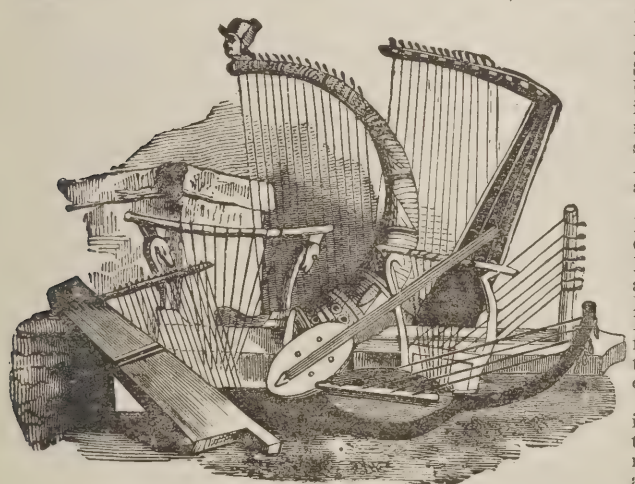
TIMBREL.

The Persians have influenced the art of music more than any other people in the Orient. The notices of their musical instruments in Daniel iii. 7, 15, are fully confirmed in the present condition of the art and variety of instruments in use in Persia. It may be safely said that nearly all of our instruments were borrowed from the Orientals, for they have had from the earliest times all the kinds used by us and others also, adapted to their peculiar ideas of music.

Myrrh (MOR). One of the ingredients in the "oil of holy ointment," and used as a perfume (Prov. vii. 17). It was one of the gifts brought to the infant Jesus (Matt. ii. 11). Myrrh was used for EMBALMING (John xix. 39).

Myr'tle-Tree (Heb. HADAS). It is a shrub or tree common in Southern Europe, North Africa, and Syria. Its berries are used as a substitute for spices. The Jews use it in their adornments at the Feast of Tabernacles (Neh. viii. 15), a custom which dates from the return from Babylon. In many synagogues there may be seen, on the week of the feast, sprigs of myrtle, willow, and sometimes also the flowering-almond, tied with a golden thread.

Isaiah prophesied blessings on the house of Israel by the use of the cedar, acacia, the myrtle, and the olive (Is. xli. 19, lv. 13); and Zechariah saw his vision of the Lord among myrtle-trees (Zech. i. 8, 10, 11). The myrtle was an emblem of justice; and was a common name for women in the form of Hadassah, the Hebrew name of Esther the queen.



N

Na'bal (fool). A large owner of sheep and goats, near Carmel of Judah, descended from Caleb. He refused to supply provisions requested by David, through his young men, whom he insulted (1 Sam. xxv. 10, 11). His wife Abigail saved his life by appeasing the wrath of David. The excitement caused by the danger and rescue of Nabal hastened his death, after which David married Abigail (1 Sam. xxv.). See ABIGAIL.

Na'both (fruit produce). A Jezreelite who was the owner of a vineyard coveted by king Ahab (see AHAB), near whose palace it was (1 K xxi. 1, 2). Naboth declined to part with his land. Through the order of Jezebel, Ahab's wife, Naboth was publicly accused of blasphemy, conveyed beyond the walls and stoned to death with his children (2 K. ix. 26); the punishment for that crime (Lev. xxiv. 16; Num. xv. 30). Ahab then took possession. Elijah uttered the prophetic curse, "In the place where the dogs licked the blood of Naboth, shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine" (1 K. xxi.).

The trial of Naboth was a fearful mockery of justice. He, as an Elder, was set "on high," that is, in the seat of honor, at the head of the divan, among the rulers, and then false witnesses, hired for the business, swore away his life. The prophet denounced the crime, and retribution followed the judicial murder. The same crime was planned against Jesus, and carried out. The retribution in this case being the total loss of judicial power, which had been so grossly abused by the Jewish nation.

Tristram thinks the site of the vineyard can be identified on the rocky slope, near the ruins of ancient Jezreel, where "not a shrub now clothes the bare hillside. A watch-tower there would have given a view of the country for many miles over the route of Jehu"

ANCIENT MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Na'in (pleasant). The scene of one of the greatest miracles of Jesus, the raising of the widow's son (Luke xii. 12). It is now a small village of 20 huts, on a rocky slope, in the midst of extensive ruins of an ancient place, on the northwestern end of Little Hermon (Jebel ed Duhy). There are sepulchral caves along the steep eastern approach from the plain, and also on the other side of the town (Rob.).

Nai'oth (college buildings). Where Samuel and his disciples lived (1 Sam. xix. 18, etc.). Where David fled for refuge from Saul. Samuel had a school here. Verse 20 is rendered by the Targum — Jonathan, "They saw the company of scribes singing praises, and Samuel teaching, standing over them." As Naioth was in Ramah (ver. 19), it was probably a dwelling used for a school in the town of Ramah. See 2 K. xxii. 14. Huldah lived in a college in Jerusalem.

Name (Heb. SHEM). The root GNA, to know, has given rise to the Sanscrit naman, Greek ŏnŏma, Latin nomen, Gothic nama, and our name.

No monuments are more enduring than names. Sometimes they are the most ancient records of persons, places, and things. They are fossils of thought. Bible names have almost always a meaning, which is often given by the writer for a purpose. The meaning of a name being known, we are able to get a better knowledge of persons and their history, especially if the name was given for some special reason or act. This work is very difficult, because men's names are so constantly changing with the growth or decay of language, and the substitution of one language for another.

The Hebrews gave but one name to a child, except in peculiar cases (as Solomon, Jedidjah), or where it was necessary to add the father's or mother's name, if the mother was the more noted. There is but one David, but there are several named Jesus, as the Son of Sirach, etc. The ancient custom was more simple than the modern, which (among the Arabs) exalts a man's external affairs by giving him names and titles carrying terms of flattery and display. The custom of naming — simple, compound, or ornamental — indicates very nearly the age of the person so named.

Naph'tali (NIPHTALI, wrestled). 5th son of Jacob, 2d-born of Bilhah (Gen. xxx. 8). He had 4 sons when Jacob went into Egypt (xlvi. 24). There is not a word said about him personally in the Scriptures. See EXODUS, TWELVE TRIBES.

Na'than (gift). 1. Hebrew prophet in the reigns of David and Solomon. In the consultation with David upon the building of the Temple (2 Sam. vii. 2, 3, 17) Nathan reproves David for his sin with Bathsheba, and prophesies in the form of a parable of "the rich man and the ewe-lamb" (2 Sam. xii. 1–12). Nathan was the educator of Solomon (2 Sam. xii. 25). In the last days of David Nathan assisted the cause of Solomon. He officiated at the inauguration of Solomon (1 K. i. 8). He had a son, Zabud, who was the "king's friend." He wrote a Life of David (1 Chr. xxix. 29) and a Life of Solomon (2 Chr. ix. 29). The loss of his biography of David is a heavy one to history.— 2. Son of David by Bathsheba (1 Chr. iii. 5, xiv. 4, and 2 Sam. v. 14). He appears as one of the forefathers of Joseph in Christ's genealogy (Luke iii. 31). — 3. Related to one of David's "valiant men" (2 Sam. xxiii. 36; 1 Chr. xi. 38).— 4. One of the chief men who returned from Babylon with Ezra on his second expedition (Ezr. viii. 16; 1 Esd. viii. 44).

Nathan'ael (given of God). Born at Cana of Galilee. One of the Twelve, under the name of Bartholomew (son of Talmai). (See BARTHOLOMEW.) He was one of the seven Apostles to whom Jesus appeared after the resurrection at the Sea of Tiberias. When introduced to Jesus by Philip, Jesus said, "Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom there is no deceit," thus making his name almost a synonym for sincerity. Tradition says he preached in Arabia Felix, having Matthew's gospel, and was crucified in Armenia or Cilicia.

Nazarene. An inhabitant of NAZARETH. Especially associated with the name of Christ and his followers, who were called Nazarenes (Acts xxiv. 5). It was used as a name of contempt for the disciples. In Christ's family making their home in Nazareth, the prophesy of Isaiah was fulfilled (Is. xi. 1; Jer. xxiii. 5), Christ being the young branch from the royal family of David.

Naz'areth (the branch). First mentioned in Matt. ii. 23, or rather, in the order of time, in Luke i. 26, as the scene of the Annunciation to Mary of the birth and character of Jesus (v. 31–33). Before this event the place was unknown to history, but since then its name has become a household word through all the Christian world, equally reverenced with Bethlehem and Jerusalem.

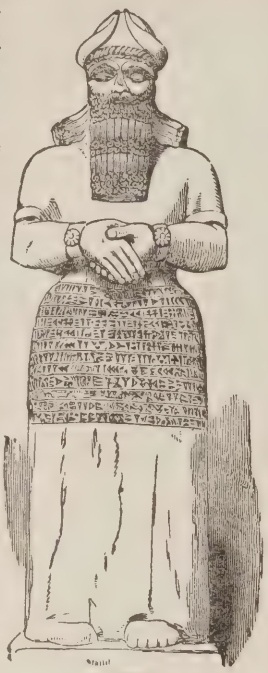
NAZARETH.

A low, undulating ridge of hills encloses the green plain that lies like a lake, with Nazareth built on one of its shores. The valley runs nearly east and west, is about a mile long, and a quarter of a mile wide; the hills vary in height from 100 to 500 feet above its level; the highest, Neby Ismail, being 1800 feet above the ocean. The soil is rich, and well cultivated, producing a great variety of fruit, grain, vegetables, and flowers, which ripen early and in rare perfection. Population about 4000, nearly all Christians (Latin and Greeks), except a few Arabs, and not one Jew.

Naz'arite (Heb. NAZIR). Either a man or woman who, under ancient Hebrew law, bound himself or herself to abstain from wine and all products of the grape; to wear the hair long and uncut, and to observe purification in abstaining from contact with the dead. If they witnessed death, or otherwise approached death, their consecration had to be entirely recommenced. The period of observance of this vow varied from eight days to a month, or even a lifetime. When this period had concluded, offerings were made, the hair was cut off and burnt, and the Nazarite was discharged from his vow (Num. vi.; Amos ii. 11, 12). Paul assisted four Christian Jews in this ceremony (Acts xxi. 20–26).

EGYPTIAN WAR-CHARIOT. TRAINED LEOPARD AS A COACH-DOG.

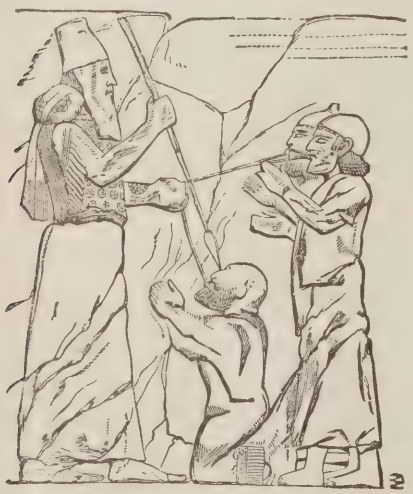
Neap'olis (new city). The first place visited by Paul in Macedonia (Acts xvi. 11). On a rocky promontory, in a wide and beautiful bay, stands the Turkish village Kavala (5000 inhab.), in the midst of the ruins of the ancient city. There was an aqueduct for bringing water from a distance of 12 miles; near the city, it passed a ravine over a double tier of arches, 80 feet above the brook below, in Roman style, hewn and cemented; fine sarcophagi, with inscriptions, of the age of Claudius, Ionic columns, and sculptured figures, besides foundations of ancient houses, etc., are witnesses of its ancient importance.



2. Shechem was also called Neapolis in Vespasian's time.

3. The bishops of Neapolis in Arabia were present at the councils of Chalcedon and Constantinople; a place now called Suleim, on Jebel Hauran (Porter, Damascus, ii. 85).

Nebai'oth. NEBA'JOTH. Ishmael's first-born (Gen. xxv. 13). Esau married Mahalath, the sister of Nebajoth (xxviii. 9). The country from the Euphrates to the Red Sea was called in Josephus' time Nabatene (Ant. i. 13, 4; Gen. xxv. 18). They were called by the Arabs Nabat (or Nabeet), and were celebrated for their agriculture, astronomy, magic, and medicine, accounts of which have been recently discovered in some ancient books of theirs, written from 2500 to 600 B. C., consisting of a book of agriculture, one of poisons, the works of Tenkeloosha, the Babylonian, and the Book of the Secrets of the Sun and Moon; all of which were translated in A. D. 904 by Ibn Washiyeh (Keyser). The rock-temples of Petra, in Edom, were the works of this people, who are thus proved to have been a highly cultivated race many ages before the Greeks.



Ne'bo, Mount. From which Moses took his first and last view of the Promised Land (Deut. xxxii. 49), and where he died and was buried in one of its ravines (xxxiv. 6). Located by Tristram (Land of Israel, 535) 3 miles S. W. of Heshbon; overlooking the mouth of the Jordan, over against Jericho, meeting every condition of the text.

NEBO.

Ne'bo (project). Town east of Jordan, on the Mishor, in Gad (Num. xxxii. 3, 38); a ruin, 3 miles west of Heshbon, on the side of Wady Heshban. — 2. In Benjamin, now called Beit Nubah, 12 miles N.W. of Jerusalem, in Wady Mansur. The Crusaders built the Castle of Arnaldi here (Will. of Tyre, xiv. 3).

Ne'bo (interpreter of the gods). A Babylonish god. Nebo was the god of learning and letters among the Chaldæans, Babylonians, and Assyrians (Is. xlvi. 1; Jer. xlviii. 1). Nebo was the Babylonian name of the planet Mercury. This word is in the formation of several names, such as Nebuchadnezzar, Nebuzaradan, Nebushasban, etc. The cut represents the statue of the god set up by Pul, king of Assyria, which is in the British Museum, London.

Assyrian king, holding prisoners with a bridle in the lip (2 K. xix. 28), and putting out their eyes (Judg. xvi. 21).

Nebuchadnez'zar, or Nebuchadrez'zar (NEBO THE MIGHTY). The son of Nabopolassar, king of Chaldæa and founder of the Babylonian Empire. Nebuchadnezzar, after having succeeded in recovering Carchemish, by defeating Necho, king of Egypt (Jer. xlvi. 2-12), and conquering Phœnicia, Palestine, and Jerusalem, marched into Egypt, when he was informed of the death of his father. Nebuchadnezzar left the conquered Jehoiakim, king of Judah, upon the throne as a tributary prince, but he soon after rebelled, probably anticipating support from Egypt (2 K. xxiv. 1). Phœnicia followed in the rebellion, and Nebuchadnezzar, after having invested Tyre, advanced upon Jerusalem, which immediately submitted. He punished Jehoiakim with death, placing that king's son, Jehoiachin, upon the throne of Judah. This king soon after revolting, caused Nebuchadnezzar for a third time to march to Jerusalem; he took Jehoiachin captive, together with ten thousand, among whom were Ezekiel the prophet, and Mordecai, the uncle of Esther (Esth. ii. 6). He also stripped the Temple and the treasury of riches, and placed the king's uncle, Zedekiah, upon the throne. After nine years, Zedekiah rebelled, the neighboring princes assisting him. The king of Babylon again marched to Judah, and after an obstinate siege of nearly a year, during which time he repelled an incursion of the Egyptians, he entered Jerusalem, seized Zedekiah, whose children he put to death before his eyes, and sent him, fettered, to Babylon, after having put out his eyes (2 K. xxiv. 25; 2 Chr. xxxvi.). Nebuchadnezzar raised his kingdom and city to the greatest splendor; the marvellous hanging-gardens are ascribed to him, erected to please Amytis, his queen, by imitating the groves of her native country, Media. The ruins of Birs Nimroud attest the magnificence of his works; these are situated a few miles from the site of the city of Babylon. He died about B. C. 562, after reigning forty years.

Ne'geb (south). The country S. of Beersheba. Its character is that of wide-rolling downs, green in winter but bare in summer, affording pasturage, but not grain-crops. The recent journey of Mr. Palmer, of the Palestine Exploration, through a part of this "south country," seems to have added very little to the stock of knowledge on this district, which is an almost unknown land.

Neg'inah (Neginoth, plural). (Heb.) A term by which all stringed instruments are described (Ps. lxi.; Job xxx. 9).

Nehemiah (comforter of Jah). His genealogy is not known, although he was perhaps of the tribe of Judah. He was the son of Hachaliah (Neh. i. 1). His brother was Hanani (Neh. vii. 2); most probably of royal descent, and not of the priesthood, as supposed from Neh. x. 1–8, but as a prince in Neh. ix. 38. His office was that of cup-bearer to King Artaxerxes Longimanus. At his own request he was appointed governor of Jerusalem about B. C. 444, when he relieved the people from the oppression of the Samaritans. In this good work he was assisted by Ezra (Neh. viii. 1, 9, 13, xii. 36). See HISTORY OF THE BOOKS.

Nehush'tan (brazen), (Num. xxi. 8). The brazen serpent which Moses set up in the wilderness. It was destroyed by Hezekiah, as it had become debased to the service of idolatry in the reign of Ahaz his father. Hezekiah gave the name Nehushtan to it as a term of derision, implying it to be mere brass (2 K. xviii. 4).

Ner'gal, an Assyrian god, called by the Greeks Mars. He presided over wars. In the monuments he is entitled "the storm ruler," "the king of battle," "the champion of the gods," "the god of the chase," etc. The allusion to Nergal in the Scriptures is in 2 K. xvii. 30, equivalent to the man-lion of Nineveh.

Ne'ro (brave). The Roman emperor (Lucius Domitius Ahenobardus), born A. D. 37. He was named Nero Claudius, etc., by his grand-uncle Claudius, who had adopted him. Made emperor A. D. 54. Accused of having burnt Rome, but Nero tortured and burnt Christians, charging them with the crime. Both Paul and Peter suffered martyrdom during his reign. He committed suicide A. D. 68, to avoid retribution. The Cæsar mentioned in Acts xxv. 8, xxvi. 32, xxviii. 19; Phil. iv. 22, is Nero; also Augustus in Acts xxv. 21, 25.

Nicode'mus (NAKDIMON, innocent of blood). A Pharisee, ruler of the Jews, teacher of the law (John ii. 23, iii. 1, 10), a member of the Sanhedrin. He was probably wealthy, as his valuable tribute to the tomb of the Lord indicates. His timidity was shown in his night-visit to the Great Teacher, where he received divine instruction, and a prediction of the crucifixion. When that prediction had been fulfilled, and Joseph of Arimathea had begged for and was permitted by Pilate to take the body from the cross, Nicodemus assisted. Tradition says that he lived in intimacy with Gamaliel, and was buried near the grave of Stephen.

Nicolai'tans. A sect of heretics of the Apostolic period. They held it lawful to eat food sacrificed to idols; to join in idolatrous worship; and that God did not create the universe. They held their women in common. John's Gospel, and also his Apocalypse, opposes their teaching. (See HISTORY OF THE BOOKS.) These doctrines have been supposed to have originated with the prophet Balaam. They are sometimes called Shuaibites, from the Midianite Shuaib, which is Balaam.

Nic'olas, Nich'olas, Nico'laus. One of the first seven deacons of the Church of Jerusalem (Acts vi. 5). He was a native of Antioch.

Nicop'olis (city of victory). Built by Augustus, in Epirus, on the site where his army encamped the night before the battle of Actium. The Temple of Neptune was placed on the spot occupied by his own tent. Paul requested Titus (iii. 12), to come to him from Crete, or from Dalmatia (2 Tim. iv. 10), to Nicopolis. He also urged Timothy in the same manner (v. 21). There are on the peninsula, N.W. of the Bay of Actium (Gulf of Arta), ruins of a temple, a theatre, walls, and other structures, on the hill and the low marshy plain; now deserted. It is possible that Paul was arrested here and taken to Rome for his final trial (Conybeare and Howson).

Night-hawk Heb. TACHMAS). In the enumeration of unclean animals in Lev. xi. 16, and in Deut. xiv. 15, this word appears. There is much controversy as to its meaning, whether the night-hawk or the white owl.

Nile. The Hebrew names of the river were SHICHOR (black); Yeor (the river); Sihor in Jer. ii. 18. The Sanscrit Nilah means dark blue; and one of the upper branches of the river is now called the Blue Nile. The name Yeor is Egyptian, and is written AUR on the monuments. It is also called HAPEE MU (the abyss). Dr. Livingtone's late accounts show this to be the longest river in the world; rising in or beyond the lake Victoria Nyanza, south of the equator, and emptying into the Mediterranean at N. lat. 30°; its course running through 36 degrees, having been traced more than 2700 ms., while it is quite certain that it will be found to be 1000 ms. longer. (The Amazon extends through 30 degrees, and the Missouri and Mississippi together about 35 degrees).

NILE EMBLEM.

Nim'rah (pure water). In the "land of Jazer," afterward called Beth Nimrah (Num. xxxii. 3, 36); in the tribe of Gad. The name of Nimrim (panthers) is found in several localities east of Jordan (Porter). Two miles east of the Jordan, on the road from Jericho to Es Salt, are ruins near copious fountains (Is. xv. 6; Jer. xlviii. 34). Eusebius says it was a village north of Zoar. If our location of Nimrah is correct, Zoar must have been north of the Dead Sea.

Nim'rod (the extremely impious rebel). Son of Cush (Gen. x. 8, 9). He established an empire in Shinar (Babylonia), the chief cities of which were Babel, Erech, Accad, and Calneh; and extended it northward over Assyria, including the cities Nineveh, Rehoboth, Calah, and Resen. There is no authentic account of his life. The tales of Ctesias, and others, except that in the Bible, are guesses or inventions; and of the great cities which he built, very little has been known until within the last twenty-five years, when Layard exhumed the palaces, sculptures, and inscriptions of Nimroud. See NINEVEH.

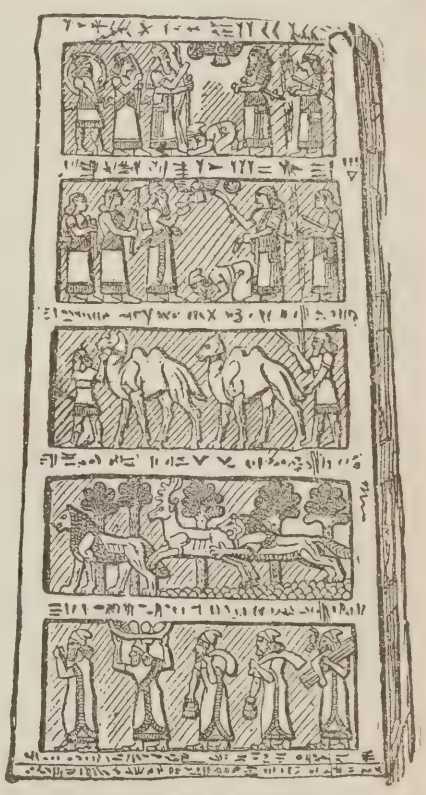
RESTORED FRONT OF THE GREAT ROCK TEMPLE AT IBSAMBUL, ON THE NILE.

Nin'eveh (Nin-navar = Nin-town). The ancient capital of Assyria. First mentioned in Gen. x. 11. The country was also called the land of Nimrod by Micah (v. 6). Balaam prophesied the captivity of Israel by Assyria (Num. xxiv. 22), and Asaph sings of their alliance with Moab (Ps. lxxxiii. 8). Jonah was sent to the city about 809 B.C., and Nahum devotes the whole of his book to "the burden of Nineveh," about 725 B.C. Isaiah says that Sennacherib resided in the city; and it was probably the scene of his death (Is. xxxvii. 37), while worshiping in the temple of Nisroch, his god. The last notice of it is by Zephaniah, B.C. 630 (ii. 13). Assyria is alluded to as having been destroyed, according to prophesy, by Ezekiel (xxxi.), and Jeremiah omits it from his catalogue of all nations (xxv.). The city is not mentioned in the inscriptions of the Persian dynasty. Herodotus passed very near, if not over, the site of the city, about 200 years after its destruction, but does not mention it, except as having once been there. Xenophon, with his 10,000 Greeks, encamped near the site (B.C. 401), but does not mention its name (Anab. iii. 4, 7), although he describes the mounds as they appear now. Alexander marched over the very place, and won a great victory at Arbela, in sight of it, but his historians make no note of it. The Emperor Claudius planted a colony there, and restored the name Nineve. Tacitus calls it Ninos, when taken by Meherdates. On the coins of Trajan it is Ninus, and on those of Maximinus it is Niniva; Claudeopolis being added on both coins. Many relics of the Romans have been found; vases, sculptures, figures in bronze and marble, terra-cottas, and coins. The site was again deserted when Heraclius gained a victory over the Persians, A. D. 627.

The Arabs named their fort, on the east bank of the Tigris, Ninawi (A.D. 637). The accounts of its immense extent are various, and not very reliable. Diodorus Siculus says the dimensions were (according as we estimate his figures, from 32 to 60, or even) 74 miles in circuit. The walls were 100 feet high, and wide enough for three chariots to drive abreast; flanked by 1500 towers, each 200 feet high (accounts which have not yet been verified). Layard says: "If we take the four great mounds of Nimroud, Koyunjik, Khorsabad, and Karamles, as the corners of a square, it will be found to agree pretty accurately with the 60 miles of Herodotus, which make the three days' journey of Jonah." Within this space there are many mounds, and remains of pottery, bricks, etc.

The name of Nineveh is found on the Egyptian monuments of the date of Thothmes III, who is supposed by some to be the Pharaoh of Joseph's time, about 1400 B.C.



The first notice in modern times of the ruins were by Mr. Rich, in 1820, who brought to London a few bricks, with inscriptions, some cylinders, gems, and other remains. Layard next visited them, in 1840; but Botta, a French consul at Mosul, found the first Assyrian monument, which was of value as a confirmation of Scripture. It was soon followed by a great variety of works of art, in 1844, at Khorsabad, the results of which exploration are in the Assyrian room at the Louvre, Paris. The great work of disentombing the remains of ancient Nineveh was performed by Layard, from 1845 to 1850.

The accounts of Layard's discoveries are published in minute detail, filling volumes, and will repay the time spent in reading them; for, besides giving undoubted and truthful glimpses of antiquity, in almost every phase of society, they are as startling and exciting as the wildest romance, both in text and illustration. But far beyond these in value to us are their uses in confirmation of the Scriptures.

ONE SIDE OF A DOORWAY AT KHORSABAD.

Place and Fresnel discovered, at Khorsabad, colossal, human-headed, winged bulls, which were in groups on each side of great doorways; besides other mythic figures. The most important inscription that has been brought to light, is that on two of the human-headed bulls from Koyunjik (now in the British Museum), giving an account of Sennacherib; his wars with Hezekiah, and the capture of Lachish, with pictures illustrating it (see LACHISH). Nearly equal in value is the Black Obelisk of Nimroud; a piece of black marble, 6 ft. 6 in. high, 1 ft. 6½ in. sq. at the top and 2 ft. sq. at the bottom, the upper half covered with 5 panels of figures, with inscriptions between each panel, and also many lines below the lower one: altogether 210 lines. One side only is engraved here: the four may be seen in the work on "Nineveh and its Palaces," by Bonomi. The story may be inferred from the text in 2 K. xvii., xviii. The first panel, at the top, exhibits the king, attended by his eunuch and a bearded officer (perhaps the returned conqueror); a captive kisses his foot, and two officers wait the king's orders. The image of Baal, and a circle enclosing a star (the sun?) are similar to those on the rocks at Nahr el Kelb. The same images, reversed in position, are in the second panel. One may mean Morning, and the other Evening; and both, with the figures in the other panels bringing and presenting tribute, indicate that the captives were so many, and the tribute so vast, that they consumed the whole day in their presentation. Some of the figures on the obelisk resemble those on the wall of the small temple of Kalabshe, who are enemies of Raamses II, and are understood to represent Jews in both cases. The inscription, as interpreted by Rawlinson, mentions the receiving by the king of tribute from the cities of Tyre, Sidon, and Gebal, in his 21st year; defeating the king of Hamath, and 12 other kings of the upper and lower country (Canaan, lower). Dr. Hincks reads the names of Jehu, king of Israel, and dates the obelisk 875 B. C. Dr. Grotefend reads the names of Tiglath, Pileser, Pul, and Shalmanassar, and refers to the accounts in Isaiah (xx.), and Nahum (iii).

from a few rods to several miles in extent. Those forming what is now called Nineveh are Koyunjik, which is 3,900 feet long by 1,500 wide and 96 high; Neby Yunas (traditional tomb of Jonah), about 40 acres in extent; Khorsabad, 6,000 feet square; Selamieh, 410 acres; Nimrud, 1,000 acres; and in this group of mounds (called Nimroud) there are indications of more than 100 towers, at regular intervals. On the S.W. of this group there is a mound 2,100 feet by 1,200, with a cone at one corner (N.W.) 140 feet high.

A treasure-house of records, such as is alluded to by Ezra (v. 17, vi. 2), was found at Koyunjik, filled with the archives of the empire, written on tablets of terra-cotta, and in perfect order and preservation, piled from the floor to the ceiling, most of which were sent to the British Museum.

Nis'roch (Heb.). The name of an idol of Nineveh (2 K. xix. 37).

Ni'tre (Heb. NETHER). Used as a wash (Jer. ii. 22). This substance is not the same as our nitrate of potassa.

ELATH

Sargon's name was found in another inscription, with his title, Shalmaneser, and the account of the capture of Samaria (which in Assyrian is SAMARINA). He carried off 27,280 families, and placed colonies, in their stead, of people from Assyria (2 K. xviii.). The king of Egypt is called PIRHU (Pharaoh), and Heliopolis is RABEK (Ra — sun, bek — city). Ashdod, Jamnia, Hamath, Berœa, Damascus, Bambyce, and Charchemish, are mentioned among his captures. He is also styled the conqueror of remote Judœa. He had a statue and inscription in his honor on the island of Cyprus. The son of this king was Sennacherib, who built Koyunjik; and in the great palace there were found inscriptions in honor of his capture of Babylon from Merodach-Baladan (2 K. xx. 12; Is. xxxix. 1); and of Sidon, under King Luliya; and of his expedition into Judœa, in which occur the names KHAZAKIYAHU (Hezekiah), URSALIMA (Jerusalem), and YAHUDA (Jews). The king of Pelusium is mentioned. The tribute of Hezekiah, as recorded, consisted of 30 talents of gold, 300 talents of silver, the vessels and ornaments of the Temple, slaves, both boys and girls, maid-servants and men-servants — confirming the Scripture account (2 K. xviii. 13–16).

The tells or mounds (see Ezr. ii. 59; Ez. iii. 15; 2 K. xix. 12), which are scattered all over the region watered by the Euphrates and Tigris and their confluents, contain the remains of Assyrian, Babylonian, and Persian occupation. They vary in size from 50 to 150 feet high, and also much more in length, being Natron was and is now used by the Egyptians for washing clothes, for yeast, and for soap; also as a cure for toothache, mixed with vinegar. It is found in the soda lakes of Egypt, 50 miles W. of Cairo.

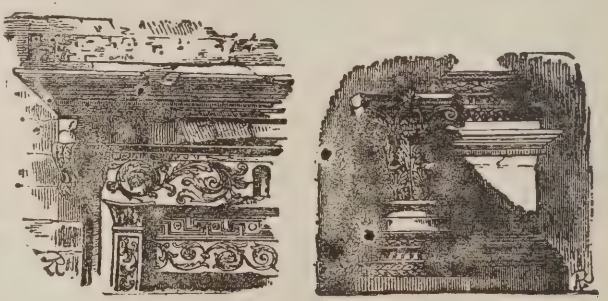
No'ah (NOACH, to rest, or give comfort). The second head of the human race, as Adam was the first. From his birth to the age of 500 years there is a blank in his history. Society in his day had become sadly corrupted by the custom of intermarriage of different races, especially of two distinct religious communities, called "The sons of God" (Elohim) and "The Sons of the Man" (Ha-Adam). There were also Nephilim, men of violence, who turned peaceable society upside down. The "Sons of God" (BENE-ELOHIM) were the descendants of Seth, and worshipers of God; the "Sons of the Man" were descendants of Cain, and probably idolaters. The union of the two families or races produced a mixed condition of religion, which could not be pure.

Nob (high). David fled from Saul and came to Nob (1 Sam. xxi. 1), which was near Anathoth (Neh. xi. 32). There are on a conical hill, 2¾ miles N. of Jerusalem, traces of a small, but very ancient city — cisterns hewn in the rock, large hewn stones, and ruins of a small tower, besides other indications. From the summit, Zion is in plain view (Is. x. 32).

No'bah (a barking). (See KENATH.) Most of the chief towns of the Hauran have traces of the architectural magnificence that Rome lavished on her colonies. The tanks, bridges, and many houses are solidly built, and even at this late day nearly as good as new.



Num'ber. Hebraic numerals were denoted by letters, as seen on the Maccabæan coins. Certain numbers were used as figurative representations, and not actual quantities, such as 7, 10, 40, 100, which represent completeness. 7 is thus used as "seven-fold" in Gen. iv. 24; seven times (meaning completely) in Lev. xxv. 24, and Ps. xii. 6; as also the general use of the number 7. 10 was a number of special selection. The number 12 was specially mystical, and is found in many instances; as 12 months, 12 tribes, 12 stones in the breastplate, 12 loaves of showbread, 12 disciples or apostles. 40 was also very mystical; as 40 days of Moses; 40 years in the wilderness; 40 days and nights of Elijah in the wilderness, and of Jesus on the mount; 40 years each the life of several kings and judges. Seventy-fold, as in Gen. iv. 24, Matt. xviii. 22, etc. The mystic number 666, in Rev. xiii. 18, still remains the subject of controversy. One theory suggests the numerals to mean Latin (l 30, a 1, t 300, e 5, i 10, n 50, o 70, s 200 = 666). In Gr. lateinos (Lat. latinus), beast, or kingdom.

Nuts (BOTNIM and EGOZ). Spoken of as among the good things of the land to be taken by Jacob's sons to propitiate the governor of Egypt. This nut was most likely the Pistachio. BOTNIM (Pistachio Town), a town of Gad (Josh. xiii. 26), probably derives its name therefrom. The word EGOZ occurs in Cant. vi. 11, and probably means walnut. On Arabic term (derived from the Persian) for walnut is jaws; another is chusf, which means tall tree. Walnuts were anciently very plenty around the Sea of Galilee. They are still cultivated near Sidon as an article of commerce.

O

Oak. There are several Hebrew words which are rendered oak in the A. V.: as EL, to be strong (Gen. xiv. 5); ELAH, terebinth (Is. vi. 13); ELON, oak (Gen. xii. 6); ILAN, strong tree (Dan. iv.); ALLAH, an oak (Josh. xxiv. 26); ALLON, evergreen oak (Hos. iv. 13). The most noted trees were Abraham's oak at Mamre, the oak of Shechem, of Deborah, Rebekah's nurse, of the wanderers. — 1. EL (AEL,) to be strong (Gen. xiv. 6); the plural of EL is ELIM, also ELOTH and ELATH. Elim is the name of the place where there were 70 palm-trees; the word EL, instead of meaning oak, is used in that instance for grove, ELIM, groves (Ex. xv. 27). There was also a palm-grove at Akabah. In Is. i. 29, ELIM means oaks; the same word, in Is. lxi. 3, and Ez. xxxi. 14, means any thrifty, large tree. — 2. ALAH, the terebinth. The most noted one was Abraham's Oak at Mamre, where the three angels appeared to him. It is now represented by an oak (Thomson thinks it was an oak and not the terebinth) of the species Quercus-pseudo-cocifera. (See cut on page) — 3. ELON, some kind of oak. Translated plain in the A.V. and in the Targum. — 4. ILAN, strong tree (Dan iv., only), and possibly an oak. — 5. ALLAH, an oak (Josh. xxiv. 26, only). — 6. ALLON, evergreen oak (Hos. iv. 13), and also the Holly-leaved oak; the Hairy-cupped oak; the Prickly-cupped; the Kermes, which furnishes the insect used in dyes (Is. i. 18, scarlet).

Oath. An appeal to Divine authority to ratify the truth of an assertion (Heb. vi, 16). Calling on God to witness, as, "God do so to me, and more also, if," etc. (Ruth i. 17; 1 Sam. ii. 17). Idolaters swore by their false gods. Many frivolous forms were used, as, "By the blood of Abel;" "By my head;" "By the Temple," etc. Jesus was asked by the high-priest to swear "By the living God," to the truth of what he was teaching of himself (Matt. xxvi. 63). Jesus is believed to have prohibited profane, and careless, or false swearing — not telling the truth under oath.

Obadi'ah (servant of Jah), also written ABADIAS and ABDIAS. There were 12 persons without note, except the prophet, for which see HISTORY OF THE BOOKS.

O'bed (serving). 1. Son of Boaz and Ruth (Ruth iv. 17). The Book of Ruth gives an interesting account of his birth and the social and religious life of the Israelites at that time. — 2. A descendant of Jarha (1 Chr. ii. 37, 38). — 3. One of David's men (xi. 47). — 4. Son of Shemaiah, first-born of Obed-edom (xxvi. 7). — 5. Father of Azariah. A captain (2 Chr. xxiii. 1).

BETHANY.

O'bed-e'dom (serving Edom). 1. A member of the family of Kohath (2 Sam. vi. 10, 11). After the death of Uzzah, the ark which was being taken to the city of David was carried into the house of Obed-edom, where it remained three months (1 Chr. xv. 25). — 2. Son of Jeduthun (1 Chr. xvi. 38). — 3. Treasurer of the Temple (2 Chr. xxv. 24).

O'bil (chief of the camels). An Ishmaelite who had charge of a herd of camels (1 Chr. xxvii. 30).

O'both (bottles). Encampment in Moab. Lost. (Num. xxi. 10.)

FRUIT, LEAF, AND FLOWER OF THE OLIVE-TREE.

O'ded (erecting). 1. Father of Azariah (2 Chr. xv. 1, 8). — 2. A prophet who secured the release of the captives from Judah (xxviii. 9). This incident in the history of the kingdom of Israel is in pleasant contrast with many others. A whole army were liberated, clothed, and fed.

Odonar'kes. Chief of a tribe slain by Jonathan (1 Macc. ix. 66).

Offense. The Heb. HET or CHET (Eccl. x. 4), is translated sin (Lev. xix. 17; xx. 20, etc.), also fault in Gen. xli. 9. MICHSHOL (1 Sam. xxv. 31; Is. viii. 14), "stumbling-block," Gr. skandalon in Matt. xvi. 23; xviii. 7; Luke xvii. 1. To eat with offense is to eat so as to be an occasion of sin in another (Rom. xiv. 20). "A temptation to sin," "perplexity," "danger," "that which produces disgust," etc.

Og (crooked). King of BASHAN, ruler over sixty cities. He was one of the giant (violent, strong) race of Rephaim (Josh. xiii. 12). This race was probably Shemite in origin, dating earlier than the Canaanites. Og's couch (palanquin, Amos iii. 12) is described as of iron, 15 ft. 9 in. long, and 6 ft. wide (Deut. iii. 11). This would indicate Og's height at 9 feet at least.

Oil. The olive was the chief source of oil (see OLIVES), (Ez. xvi. 13). It was used in the preparation of meat-offerings in the Temple (Lev. v. 11, vi. 21). The second pressing was used for lamps. Oil was an important article of merchandise (1 Chr. xxvii. 28; Ez. xxvii. 17). See OINTMENT, OLIVE.

Oil-tree (Heb. 'EZ SHEMEN). A tree bearing fruit resembling that of the Olive (Is. xli. 19). Olive.

Oint'ment (Heb. SHAMAN, to be fat; ROKAH, to anoint; MIRKAHATH, the vessel for holding the perfume, or ointment; MISHAH, oil). Ointment was a general term for perfumes, cosmetics, for substances used for medicinal, sacred, and ceremonial purposes. Olive oil formed the body of these ointments. A particular ointment was appointed for use in consecration (Ex. xxx. 23, 33, xxix. 7, xxxvii. 29, xl. 9, 15), of myrrh, cassia, sweet cinnamon, sweet calamus, and olive oil. With this, also, the furniture of the Tabernacle was anointed. Dead bodies were anointed with both ointment and oil. Christ refers to this in Matt. xxvi. 12; Mark. xiv. 38; Luke xxiii. 56. It was largely used in medical treatment, alluded to by Christ in curing the blind man (Is. i. 6; John ix. 6; Jer. viii. 22; Rev. iii. 18). As a cosmetic for the face, so common with the Greeks and Romans, it was also used by the Egyptians and Jews, and is now by the inhabitants of Palestine to this day. Allusion is made to the use of ointments in Ruth iii. 3; Eccl. vii. 1, ix. 8; Prov. xxviii. 9, 16; Matt. xxvi. 7; Luke vii. 42; Rev. xviii. 13.

Ol'ive (Heb. ZAYITH, or ZAIT). A tree from 15 to 30 ft. high, bearing berries, smooth, like an oval plum, violet color when ripe, having an oily pulp, and a hard, rough stone. The leaves are like the willow, and of a dull olive-green on the smooth upper surface, and silvery pale on the downy under surface. The flowers are small and white.

The body of the tree dies at the heart, and stands up on several legs. The bark of old trees is very rough, like that on old willow-trees. They live to a great age. (See GETHSEMANE.) A sacred olive-tree was kept in the court of the Temple of Pandrosus, on the Acropolis, Athens; and the allusion in Ps. lii. 8 would imply that they were grown in the Temple court on Zion.

Olives, Mount of (HAR-HAZ-ZATHIM, Zech. xiv. 4). "Before Jerusalem, on the east." Referred to as the "ascent of Olivet" in other places (2 Sam. xv. 30, etc.) in the Old Testament, and the various changes of the same in the New (Luke xix. 29; Acts i. 12). The first mention of the mount is at the time David fled over it, and the last is the triumphal progress of the Son of David over its slopes. The description, written, perhaps over 2500 years ago, is now a good one. It is near Jerusalem — a ravine between them — olive-trees (Neh. viii. 15; Mark xi. 8), and gives a very distinct view of the Temple site and the city from its summit, where there is now a chapel (2 Sam. xv. 23, 32). Solomon built chapels for the worship of Ashtoreth, Chemosh, and Milcom, heathen divinities, on a part of Olivet called the "Mount of Corruption" (2 K. xxiii. 13), which some believe to be the highest summit, where the chapel of the Ascension now stands — the same spot that was held sacred by David.

Olivet is a ridge, 300 feet higher than the Temple site, and a mile long, north and south, divided into three or four summits, which are named — commencing at the north — 1. Viri Galilæi, also Vineyard of the Sportsman; 2. Ascension, by the Arabs Jebel el Tur; 3. Prophets; and 4. Offense, Arab Baten el Hawa, Belly of the Winds.

Olym'pius. A title given to the Greek deity Zeus (JUPITER), (2 Macc. vi. 2), from his residence on Mt. Olympus, in Greece.

O'mega (Gr. Ω). The last letter of the Greek alphabet (Rev. i. 8, 11). Symbol of "the last," as A is of "the first."

Om'ri (servant of Jah). 1. "Captain of the host" to Elah, also the 6th king of Israel, a vigorous and unscrupulous ruler (1 K. xvi. 21), in Tirzah, his capital. He transferred his residence to the hill Shomron (Samaria), which he bought of Shemer, where he reigned 6 years more. — 2. Son of Becher (1 Chr. vii. 8). — 3. Son of Judah, a descendant of Pharez (ix. 4). — 4. Son of Michael (xxvi. 18).

On (Heliopolis). BETHSHEMESH (Jer. xliii. 13). Egyptian sacred name ha-ra (the city of the sun), and common name an. It was on the E. bank of the Nile, 20 miles N.E. of Memphis; once the capital of the district. Joseph's wife was a daughter of a priest of On (Gen. xli. 45).

O'nan. Son of Judah (Gen. xxxviii. 4). It was Onan's duty to marry his brother's widow, and perpetuate the race; but he took means to prevent the consequences of marriage. Jehovah was angry with him, and slew him as he had slain his brother (ver. 9).

Onē'simus. A slave who had escaped from his master Philemon of Colosse, and had fled to Rome, where Paul converted him and recommended his forgiveness by his master in an epistle (Philemon). (See HISTORY OF THE BOOKS.) Onesimus left Rome in the company of Tychicus, carrying the epistles to Philemon, to the Colossians, and Ephesians (Col. iv. 9). There is a tradition that Onesimus became Bishop of Berœa, where he is said to have been martyred.

Onēsiph'orus (profit-bringing). An Ephesian mentioned in 2 Tim. i. 16–18, who rendered Paul generous service during his second captivity in Rome, in acknowledging which, the apostle alludes to the "house of Onesiphorus," and in 2 Tim. iv. 19, to "the household of Onesiphorus," which suggests that the family might have shared in rendering services to Paul.

Oni'as (Heb. ONIYAH, strength of Jah). The name of five high-priests; two only are mentioned in the A. V., I and III.

BABYLON.

Father.	Son.
JADDUA	1. ONIAS I.....B. C. 330
1. ONIAS	2. SIMON the Just.
2. SIMON	3. ONIAS II.
3. ONIAS	4. SIMON II.
4. SIMON	5. ONIAS III.....B. C. 198.
" "	6. ONIAS IV (Menelaus).
5. ONIAS	7. ONIAS V.

Onias IV assumed the Greek name Menelaus to gain the favor of the Greek party. He had been reproved by his eldest brother, Onias III, for appropriating the sacred treasures, at which he murdered his brother through an assassin (Andronicus) about B. C. 171 (2 Macc. iii. 4).

Oni'as, The City of. Where stood a temple built by Onias V, and the Jewish settlements in Egypt. The site of the city of Onias was in the district north of Heliopolis.

have been imported there. Jeremiah (x. 9) and Daniel (x. 5) say gold of Uphaz, probably meaning Ophir. On the shore of the Red Sea, in Arabia.

Oph'rah (a faun). Two places of this name. 1. In Benjamin (Josh. xviii. 23), 5 ms. E. of Bethel, now called Et Taiyibeh, a small village on a conical hill, containing ancient ruins. Jesus retired to this obscure place, after the miracle of raising Lazarus, with his disciples (John xi. 54). (See cut on page 52.)

Os'pray (Heb OZNIYAH). An unclean bird. Very powerful; often weighing five pounds. It plunges under the water to catch fish. It belongs to the Falconidæ, or Falcon family, and is found in Europe, North America, and occasionally in Egypt (Deut. xiv. 12).

Os'sifrage (Heb. PERES,) (bone-breaker). The Lammergeier. An unclean bird (Lev. xi. 13). It attacks the wild goat, young deer, sheep, calves, etc. It is

CONTRIBUTIONS TO RE-BUILD THE TEMPLE.

Ophel. A part of ancient Jerusalem, first mentioned as having its wall built "much" upon by Jotham (2 Chr. xxvii. 3). Manasseh enclosed it with a wall (xxxiii. 14). It was near the water-gate (Neh. iii. 26), and a great corner-tower (v. 27). Josephus calls it Ophla (Ant. ix. 11, 2; B. J. ii. 17, 9). The prophet Micah (iv. 8) calls Ophel the daughter of Zion, which would indicate that Zion was the Temple-site, for Ophel is the hill S. of the S. wall of the Temple. — 2. The Ophel of 2 K. v. 24, was the residence of the prophet Elisha, to which Gehazi returned after begging a present from Naaman, near Samaria.

2. In Manasseh, the native place of Gideon (Judg. vi. 11, viii. 27), and where he was buried. The prophet Micah calls it Aphrah (dust, i. 10).

Ori'on. "God who made Arcturus, Orion, and the Pleiades" (Job ix. 9, xxxviii. 31, 32; Amos v. 8). KESIL in Hebrew. Called the giant by the Arabs, which was Nimrod among the Chaldæans. Aben Ezra says Orion means the constellation now called Scorpion, or the bright star in it called Antares.

Ornaments. The ancient monuments show that ornaments were used in great variety in ancient as well as modern times. Every rank uses them, rich or poor,

OPHRAH, ET TAIYIBEH.

O'phir (dust—red dust?). In the Himyarite language, ofir is red, and the people of Mahra call their country red, and the Red Sea Bahr Ofir. Ophir was a region from which Solomon obtained gold in Tyrian ships, by the way of Eziongeber. It was in Arabia (Gen. x. 29), where several sons of Joktan settled, giving their names to regions or tribes. Sophir is the form of the name in the Septuagint and Josephus. The gold, silver, precious stones, ivory, apes, peacocks, and almug-wood, are Indian articles, but may and as many as their means permit. If gold cannot be had, then silver, or brass, or tin, or glass, is used. Engraved gems were in use only by the most wealthy and educated. These bore, besides the words or letters, figures of gods or mythical animals, or the portraits of relatives or friends. (See PRECIOUS STONES.)

Or'pah (forelock). Wife of Chilion, son of Nõomi. She accompanied her sister-in-law on the road to Bethlehem, but went back to her people and her gods (Ruth i. 4, 14).

found in the highest mountains of Europe, Asia, and Africa, and is frequently seen in the sky flying alone. See EAGLE.

Os'trich (Heb. BATH HAYYA'ANAH, daughters of the wilderness — female ostriches. YA'ENIM, ostriches, and RANAN, to wail — sometimes rendered peacocks). The words are generally accepted to mean the ostrich. In Lam. iv. 3, appears the word YA'ENIM (plural), which rightly translates ostrich. NOTSEH, feathers, in Job xxix. 13.

Ov'en (Heb. TANNUR). The ovens in the East are of two kinds. The stationary ones are found only in towns, where regular bakers are employed (Hos. vii. 4). The portable ones consist of a large jar made of clay, three feet high, larger at the bottom, with a hole for removing the ashes. Every house possesses such an article (Ex. viii. 3). It was heated with twigs, grass, or wood (Matt. vi. 30), sometimes with dung, and the loaves were placed both inside and outside of it.

Owl. Heb. 1. BATH HAYYA'ANAH (daughters of the waste places). See OSTRICH. 2. YANSHUF or YANSHOF. The Ibis, an unclean bird, as in Lev. xi. 17 (See cut on p. 47). Probably not known in Palestine, but a native of Egypt. In Is. xxxiv. 11 it is mentioned in the desolation of Idumæa (Edom). 3. COS (cup), little owl (Lev. xi. 17, etc.). 4. KIPPOZ, the owl, which is common in the vicinity (and even in the city) of Jerusalem. LILITH, screech-owl, in Is. xxxiv. 14. The lilith was to the Hebrews what the ghost or ghoul is to the Arab, a "night-monster," and so they called the screech-owl by that name.

Ox. Heb. 1. BAKAR, horned cattle of full age (Is. lv. 25). — 2. PAR, BENBAKAR, calf. — 3. SHOR, one of a drove of full-grown cattle. THOR (the Chaldee form) in Ezr. vi. 9. — 4. AGAL, calf of the first year; EGLAH, a heifer (Hos. x. 11), giving milk (Is. vii. 21), or plowing (Judg. xiv. 18). — 5. AGIL, a bull two (7) years old (vi. 25). — 6. ABARIM (strong) bulls. — 7. TEO, wild bull (Is. li. 20); possibly the ORYX. Stall-fed cattle are alluded to in Prov. xv. 17, and 1 K. iv. 23. The cattle on the monuments are long-horned, short-horned, polled, or muley, besides the Abyssinian; and of every variety of color, as ours are. (See p. 5, 22, 66.)

Pa'dan A'ram. The family of the founder of the Jewish race settled here, with whom the descendants of Abraham married, as with an aristocratic people. (See HARAN.) Padan is Arabic for field, or ploughed land. The wife of the heir of the promise was sought here; and it was, probably, near Damascus, only a few days' journey from where Abraham was living, and not many weeks' (or months') travel, far away in Mesopotamia (Gen. xxxviii., xxxix.).

Pal'ace. The buildings, court-yards, etc., enclosed within the walls of a royal residence. The particular allusion to palace is that by the Herods, which was afterwards the residence of the Roman governor or prætor, hence it was called in Greek Pretorium. Christ was brought before the Roman governor or procurator, Pontius Pilate, in this palace (Mark xv. 16). The most celebrated palace mentioned in the Scriptures is that of Solomon, a detailed description of which occurs in 1 K. vii. 1–12, and in Josephus (Ant. viii. 5, 1, 2).

Pal'estine, Palæsti'na. The translation of the Heb. PELESHETH, which is found only four times, and always in poetical passages in the O. T. (Ex. xv. 14; Is. xiv. 29, 31; Joel iii. 4). The same word is translated "Philistia" in Ps. lx. 8, lxxxiii. 7, lxxxvii. 9. The two words were synonymous at the time our version was made, and Palestine in the Scriptures means only so much of the country as we now call Philistia.

On the Assyrian monuments there is a country described as PALAZTU on the West Sea, separated from Tyre, Damascus, Samaria, and Edom. The Egyptians wrote it at Karnak PULUSATU. The Greeks called it Philistine Syria. Jerome (A. D. 400) also restricts the name to Philistia, and is followed by Procopius.

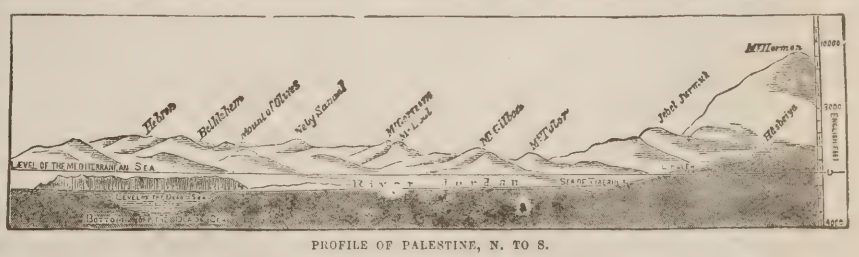
In our day the name is used of the whole country, including all that the Jews or Hebrews ever occupied.

It was originally called The Land of Canaan, low land (as compared to the high plateaus of Bashan and Gilead, Ps. cv. 11).

RUINS OF BAALBEK.

The name HOLY LAND (TA-NETR) is as old as the Pharaoh Rameses II, and Thothmes III. The Phœnicians called their own country Holy Land, and the Egyptians may have borrowed the term, which argues that the idea of Holy Land belonged to the country before the Hebrews took possession, and is the most generally known now.

OWL.



The Land of Israel (1 Sam. xiii. 19), land of Jah (Hos. ix. 3), the holy land (Zech. ii. 12), and the glorious land (Dan. xi. 41), were names in use during the monarchy.

The number of animals in the country is, for its extent, very large. There are now 80 species, and there were probably others that are now extinct, as the unicorn reem, and the lion, which are known to be, at least in the district west of the Jordan. The domestic animals are the same in number of species now as in the Bible age. Very few wild beasts now give any trouble to the flocks, or attack man. Wolves sometimes destroy a few sheep, jackals and hyenas make more noise than havoc, and the leopard skulks into the densest forests, while bears only haunt the highest mountains, as Lebanon and Hermon. Wild goats are still to be found in the wilderness, and gazelles in nearly all parts, but the antelopes and deer have long since been hunted out of the country, and only show themselves in Bashan and Gilead. Marmots, jerboas, rats and mice, are very numerous and troublesome.

Mr. Tristram described 322 species of birds gathered by him and his party, and now safely deposited by him in a museum in London. Swimmers and waders were not well represented; 27 species are native to Palestine. He caught an ostrich in the Belka, east of the Dead Sea. (See the articles on the name of each bird.) The whole country abounds in birds of every kind known in the temperate zone. Caged birds are found in almost every house.

Fish are caught in great plenty on the Great Sea and in Galilee; and one at least of its varieties is painted on the monuments in Egypt.

Reptiles are abundant, especially lizards, tortoises, geckos, and chameleons. The common frog and tree-toad abound in wet places. Snakes are not very numerous, and none large. There are 3 species of scorpion. Mollusks are very numerous, in more than a hundred varieties. Butterflies are as numerous, in proportion, as the flowers

PROFILE OF PALESTINE, N. TO S.

There is no record of any division of the land, except the names of the several peoples inhabiting it, until the 12 tribes took possession, when the several divisions were known by the names of the tribes.

After the Captivity (if not before, 2 Chr. ix. 11) it was called Judæa, meaning the land of the Jews. The Romans divided it into Galilee, Samaria, Judæa, Perea, and gave names and limits to the surrounding country; as Phœnicia, Cœle-Syria, Lysania, Hauran, Edom, etc.

The land is about 140 ms. (Dan to Beersheba) long, and 40 ms. average width, between the Jordan valley and the West Sea; fenced in by this valley on the east, the Lebanon on the north, the desert on the south, and the Great Sea on the west. The whole of this district is high land, from 100 to 3000 feet above the sea-level. The divisions are into Plain, Hill Country, Jordan Valley, and Mountains; each almost a strip from north to south, with a distinct history as well as structure.

GEOLOGY. The great masses of rock under the country are limestone, having few fossils. Over that there is a white cretaceous deposit, full of fossils, flints, ammonites, echinites (cidaris), petrified olives, fish, and others. This deposit is most noticeable on the western slopes of Lebanon, and the eastern slopes of Anti-Lebanon. Geodes of chalcedony, from an oz. weight to 100 lbs., are numerous in Galilee, besides jasper and agate. Soft friable sandstone is found in extensive beds in both ranges. Coal is found near Beirut, in thin veins, and of poor quality. Iron and copper mines were worked anciently (Deut. viii. 9, xxxiii. 25; Eusebius viii. 15, 17). There are two kinds of limestone: the lower, white; and the upper, creamy, with streaks. The great quarry under Jerusalem (cut on p. 59) affords both kinds. The white (Arabic melekeh) is chalky, and may be easily cut, and sawed into blocks; the dark (Ar. mezzeh) is much harder, and takes a fine polish. Many of the caves are in limestone, some of which, as those in the north at Paneas, and on the Dog river, are immense fountains. Many are used for storing grain, etc., and some for dwellings. The chalk deposits are found on summits only, N. of Hebron, as at Olivet, Bethlehem, Carmel, etc.; S. of Hebron it is more abundant, and near the surface, especially on the E. side of the Arabah, where the Romans named one place Gypsaria (Chalk-town). Flints are very abundant in the chalk on the W. shore of the Dead Sea. Sandstone is the under-stratum, in two layers, or series: one dusky-red, twisted, full of caverns, and colored with iron and other minerals, the other is dark-gray, compact, bearing fossils — the chief underlying rock of the whole region E. of Jordan. The chalk is not of so recent a deposit on the E. of Jordan, and is capped with a soft, friable sandstone, without fossils. The Abarim mountains are different, being sandstone, capped with chalk, bearing fossils. The red sandstone appears at Kerak. Both the sandstone and the limestone on the E. are of an earlier age than those on the W. of Jordan. At Zurka Main, and at Wady Mojib, they form cliffs 400 ft. high. From Hermon to Kerak the whole region is limestone; 1000 ft. higher than Canaan, W. of Jordan.

EARTHQUAKES have been frequent, even in the historical period, the most noted, since that in the days of Uzziah, being those at Aleppo, in 1616—1812; Antioch, 1737; Laodicea, Beirut, Sidon, Tyre, Safed, and Tiberias, 1837.

Palesti'na (Palestine). (Heb. PELESHETH.) (Ex. xv. 14; Is. xiv. 29; Joel iii. 4; in Ps. lx. 8; Philistia, which was a synonymous term at one time.) Palestine in the Scripture means Philistia only (which see).

Palm-tree (Heb. TAMAR; Gr. phoinix). The variety most common in the East is the date-palm (phœnix dactilifera). The palm-tree was always associated with Palestine; the name Phœnix being probably derived from Phœnicia. The coins of Vespasian, commemorating the conquest of Jerusalem by Titus, represent a woman of Judæa, weeping under a palm-tree. The date-palm is endogenous (growing from the end); its average height is about 70 ft. About 8 years after being planted, it yields fruit, averaging about 100 lbs., and continues productive for 100 yrs. Dates take the place of bread to a large extent in the East, and all the other parts of the tree are used for building, fencing, roofs, mats, baskets, couches, bags, etc. There is a saying with the Arabs that "The palm-tree has 360 uses." Jericho, "The City of Palm-Trees" (Deut. xxiv. 3; Judg. i. 16. iii. 13). The palm-groves of Jericho were always famous. See page 52.

VIRGIN'S FOUNTAIN. JERUSALEM.

HAZE'ZON TAMAR (the pruning of the palm-tree). Is alluded to in Gen. xlv. 7, and in 2 Chr. xx. 2. TAMAR (the palm), in the vision of Ezekiel (Ez. xlvii. 19, xlviii. 28). BETHANY (the house of dates) suggests that there were palms in the district of the Mt. of Olives, whence the people "took branches of palm-trees and went forth to meet Him" (John xii. 13); "Dwelt under the palm-tree of Deborah" (Judg. iv. 5). Women were named after the palm-tree, as the wife of ER, named TAMAR (Gen. xxxviii.; also in 2 Sam. xiii. 1, and xiv. 27). Its form used in decoration in the Temple (2 Chr. iii. 5; 1 K. vi. 29, 32, 35, vii. 36), and in Ezekiel's vision (Ez. xl. 16, xli. 18). "The righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree" (Ps. xcii. 12). Its grace — the lofty and ever-green foliage cresting the top of the tree near to heaven — all suggest abundant illustration. The Jews commemorated victories by carrying palms (1 Macc. xiii. 51; Esd. ii. 44–47), etc. Also, the glorified are mentioned in Rev. vii. 9, as "clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands." See DATES.

Pamphy'lia. A province of Asia (Minor), on the south coast, bordering the same sea as, and west of Cilicia (Acts xx. v. ii. 5). The sea is now called Adalia, from the ancient Attalia. The region was only 20 ms. wide, inland, between Taurus and the sea. Paul here first entered Asia, having just left Cyprus, landing at Perga (Acts xiii. 13), where John Mark left him and Barnabas. The language seems from Luke's account (Acts ii. 10) to have been corrupted to some local dialect. The region is now thinly peopled, with a few towns along the coast, in the midst of fine orchards, surrounded by fertile fields. Ruins here and there mark ancient sites.

Par'able (Heb. MASHAL; Greek parabole; Latin parabola). A similitude, a comparison. See FABLE. The Hebrews used the term marshal (similitude) for the Proverbs (1 Sam. x. 12, xiv. 13), prophesy (Num. xxiii. 7), enigmas (Ps. lxxviii. 2), and narrative (Ez. xii. 22). The parable was used by the Hebrew teachers from the earliest times, and especially by Hillel, Shammai, and other great Rabbis just before the Christian era. The parable is a low form of speech adapted to the ignorance of the great mass of mankind. The Scribes had a kind of parable that was understood by the few only, and therefore it is said that the Sermon on the Mount was open and plain instruction, and "not as the Scribes." Jesus chose this form of teaching the people, who were spiritually blind and deaf (Matt. xiii. 13). The parable attracts, and, if understood, is remembered, though sometimes the meaning is lost. There were probably many spoken which were not recorded (ib. 34). The number is about 30 or 31.

Pa'phos. At Cyprus at the west end of the island (Salamis being at the east end and a road between); the seat of the Roman governor, Surgius Paulus, who "believed" after hearing Paul and Barnabas (Acts xiii. 12). Elymas (magician, sorcerer) was struck with blindness (for a season), as a punishment for deceiving people with his magic. They had a fine temple in honor of Aphrodite (Venus), who was worshiped, and was fabled to have risen from the sea at this place (Homer, Od. viii. 362). The temple was at a place now called Kuklia, some distance from the new town called Baffa.

Pa'ran (place of caves). Name of a mountain and a wilderness. The mountain is only mentioned in two poetical passages (Deut. xxxiii. 2; Hab. iii. 3). This name is preserved in Wady FARAN (faran), in Sinai; and the mountain is probably that now called Serbal, one of the grandest in the region (Bartlett, Forty Days; Stanley). The wilderness is described minutely in the Scriptures; and had Palestine on the north, Arabah on the east, and Sinai on the south; corresponding to the desert Et Tyh (the wandering) of the present (see SINAI). This region is not a desert, or a wilderness, but is called by the Hebrews Midbar (pasture-land).

Pär'thia (Acts ii. 9). The Parthians here meant were Jews only, who were present at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost. Originally it was a small mountainous district N.E. of Media, between Aria and Hyrcania, but afterward included a large district. The country is mountainous, climate pleasant, soil fertile, well-watered by many small streams (which do not reach the seas, but are absorbed in the ground), and has many ruins of ancient cities, such as Ctesiphon, Akker-kuf, El Hammam and Takt-i-Bostan, some of the most remarkable Oriental remains, which are evidence of a former state of prosperity and wealth. It is now a part of Persia.

Par'tridge (KORE). The desert partridge, used as a simile by David when pursued by Saul (Sam. xxvi. 20), and as a simile of a man who reaps what he does not sow (Jer. xvii. 11). They are very prolific, laying 20 or more eggs. There are several species in Palestine. The word KORE may also include the black partridge of India and the sand grouse, which latter is very common in Syria.

PATMOS.

Pass'over (Heb. PESACH; Greek Pascha). The first of the three great annual festivals of the Hebrews, held in Nisan 14th to 21st. There are several distinct passages relating to the Passover in Exodus and Deuteronomy, where its original intention, the unleavened bread, the first-born sanctified, are mentioned, and the paschal lamb. In Ex. xxiii.14–19, the paschal lamb is mentioned as My Sacrifice, and the feast is called "of unleavened bread." The redemption of the first-born is noticed in xxiv. 18–26. In Deut. xvi. 1–8, the command is given to keep the Passover in Jerusalem. A lamb was roasted whole — not a bone of it to be broken — and eaten entirely, the same night, with bitter herbs; if not all eaten, the remnant to be burnt. The blood of the victim was to be sprinkled on the door-post.

Pa'triarch (Greek patriarches). Head of a family or tribe (Heb. vii. 4; Acts vii. 8, ii. 29). It is a title of many of the ancestors of the Hebrews, as David, Abraham, Noah.

They were the head of the religious faith and practice, as well as leader and judge in civil affairs, and represented God, who is the great father of all men. When the Temple worship took the place of family worship, the patriarch became a sheikh, and was no longer a priest.

The Arabs still keep up this form of government in civil affairs, but not in religious.

Pat'mos (Rev. i. 9). A rocky island, S. of Samos — one of the Sporades, in the Icarian Sea, a part of the Ægean Sea — 15 ms. around; divided almost in two by a narrow isthmus, on the E. side of which are the town and harbor, and near them, on a hill to the S., is the monastery of "St. John the Divine" (built by Alexius Comnenus). In the library of this church are many ancient MSS., two of which contain an account of John after the Ascension. There are no forest-trees, but many flowering shrubs and plants. Walnut and fruit-trees are grown in orchards; and the wine is famous for its strength and flavor. Now called Patina.

PROFILE ACROSS — JAFFA TO MOAB.

Paul. Saul of Tarsus, afterward called Paul, was a Hebrew of the tribe of Benjamin, of a poor family, and after having been taught the trade of weaving tent-cloth, was destined for the duties of a Rabbi, and sent to the school of the celebrated Gamaliel, after a short preparation in his native city.

His scholarship may be discovered in many of his references and quotations from the Scriptures, the philosophers, and poets.

His zeal for the Jewish church was displayed when Stephen was stoned, in holding the clothes of the executioners.

PAUL.
Engraved on copper, an ideal portrait, found in a cemetery, dated 450 A. D.

Tradition describes him as having a long face, high forehead, aquiline nose, and heavy eyebrows; a dark, but clear complexion, blue eyes, thin hair. The portrait engraved here was found in an ancient tomb, and was engraved on copper, in the fifth century. It is probably only an artist's ideal, and not a likeness, but interesting as a work of early Christian art.

He is one of the most wonderful characters in ancient history. Being called to a peculiar work, he was most peculiarly adapted to that work from nature, education, and circumstances. His labor in establishing the Church occupied nearly thirty years of constant application, in traveling, preaching, writing, and working with his own hands at his trade; sometimes while in prison, chained to a guard, or in a cell, ending when he was "ready to be offered" at the age of nearly 70.

The Table of Events will give an idea of the extent and importance of his work. See TABLES.

Peace-offering (Heb. SHELEM); (Lev. iii.–vii. 11.) There were three kinds: 1. Praise or thanksgiving. 2. Votive. 3. Voluntary or free-will offerings. The sacrifice was accompanied by an offering of "unleavened cakes mingled with oil, and unleavened wafers anointed with oil, of fine flour, fried" (Lev. vii. 12, 13). From the peace-offering the fat was burned on the altar; the right shoulder of the animal sacrificed was given to the priest; the breast was a wave-offering. The rest was to be eaten by the offerer upon the day of offering. This was the characteristic of the peace-offering, suggesting, figuratively, peace with God. See OFFERING; SACRIFICE.

PERGA.

Pea'cock (Heb. TUKIIM). Imported into Palestine by the navies of Tarshish by King Solomon (1 K. x. 22; 2 Chr. ix. 21). The importation of peacocks is named with that of ivory and apes. The birds were probably brought from India or Ceylon, where there is reason to believe the navies visited. (See TARSHISH.) The Cingalese word (tokei) for peacock bears a close resemblance to the Hebraic.

Pearl (Heb. GABISH). They are formed inside the shells of several species of mollusca, and consist of carbonate of lime and animal matter; are hard and smooth, and have a silvery-white lustre. Pearls were held among the most precious stones in the ancient world. Their beauty is due to Nature alone, as they are not improved by Art. The "pearl of great price" is a fine specimen yielded by the pearl-oyster, which is found in the Persian Gulf (Matt. xiii. 45, 46).

Pe'kah (open-eyed). Son of Remaliah, captain of Pekahiah, whom he assassinated, and succeeded to his throne B. C. 758, and thus became eighteenth king of Israel. He reigned twenty years, in the seventeenth of which he combined with Rezin, king of Damascus, against Ahaz, king of Judah (2 K. xvi., and 2 Chr. xxviii.).

Pel'ican (Heb. KAATH, to vomit). The bird is supposed to be so named from its habit of emptying the pouch under the beak to feed its young. Cormorant, translated in Is. xxxiv. 11, and Zeph. ii. 14, means pelican. It is mentioned as among unclean birds in Lev. xi. 18, and Deut. xiv. 17. "A pelican in the wilderness" (Ps. cii. 6) as a sign of desolation, for the solitary habits of the bird and its inhabiting desolated spots.

ANCIENT WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Perfumes. The Hebrews made their perfumes from SPICES imported from Arabia, and from aromatic plants of their own country. Perfumes were used in the Temple-service in INCENSE and OINTMENT (Ex. xxx. 22–38). They were used in private life both on the person and on garments (Ps. xlv. 8), and beds (Prov. vii. 17). When a royal person went abroad, "pillars of smoke" were thrown about his path (Cant. iii. 6). Perfume was not used in times of mourning (Is. iii. 24). See OINTMENT.

Per'ga. The ancient capital of Pamphylia, on the river Cestrus, 7 ms. from the sea. Diana (Artemis) was worshiped there, in a fine temple near the town. The coins of the city bear figures of Diana and the temple. Paul landed here from Paphos (Acts xiii. 13), and visited the city a second time on his return from the interior (xiv. 25). When Pamphylia was divided, Perga was made the capital of one section, and Side of the other. Called by the Turks Eski-Kalessi.

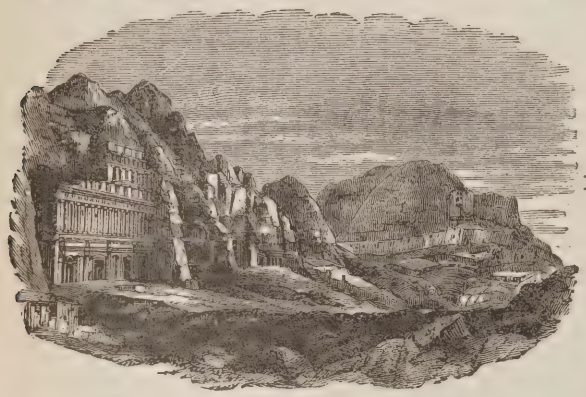
Per'gamos. In Mysia, 3 ms. N. of the ancient Caicus. (See SEVEN CHURCHES).

Persep'olis. The capital of Persia, and partly burnt by Alexander, the temples — built of stone — only escaping. Antiochus Epiphanes attempted to capture and rob the temples, but was defeated (1 Macc. vi. 1, 2; 2 Macc. ix. 2.) This city has been supposed to be identical with Passargadæ, the capital of Cyrus; but that city was 42 ms. N. of Persepolis, at a place now called Murgaub, where there is shown a tomb of Cyrus. The site of Persepolis is called Chehl-Minar (forty pillars, or minarets), from the remaining pillars of the palace built by Darius and Xerxes.

COIN OF PERSEUS.

Per'seus. Son of Philip V and last king of Macedonia. He continued the war with Rome after his father's death (B. C. 179). He was defeated B. C. 168 and died at Alba (1 Macc. viii. 5).

Per'sia (pure). The province of Fars — Farsistan; is now not very large; and north of the Persian Gulf. The ancient empire extended north to Media, south to the Persian Gulf, east to Caramania, and west to Susiana; and in its greatest prosperity, from India to Egypt and Thrace (Ez. xxxviii. 5). The north country is mountainous, with very few valleys or plains, but very picturesque, and generally fertile, among which is the famous Shiraz of Arabian poetry. That part bordering the Gulf is sandy, like Arabia, and not very productive.



KING AND QUEEN OF PERSIA.

Per'sian (Heb. PARSI). The Persians were probably of the same race as the Medes, both of the Aryan root. Their mention only occurs in the later periods of biblical history. In Daniel, Esther, Nehemiah, and Ezra, a very complete idea of the Persian court and administration is presented. The vizier or secretary of state was invested with great power, as illustrated in the cases of Haman and Mordecai. (See MORDECAI.) The royal signet was the badge of this office. The remarkable influence which Esther and Mordecai exercised over Xerxes was the result of the noble qualities of mind and body for which the Hebrew race was, and still is, conspicuous.

Pe'ter. Originally SIMEON, or SIMON, heard. (Cephas, a stone — Peter, a rock.) The son of Jonas, and a native of Bethsaida, in Galilee. He was married (his wife's name was Concordia?) at the time of his call to follow Jesus; and lived with his mother-in-law, at Capernaum. He was a fisherman, and was fishing with his father and brother Andrew, when Jesus found him. Peter and his brother Andrew were, probably, disciples of John the Baptist. Peter, James, and John, only, of the twelve, were witnesses of the transfiguration and the agony in Gethsemane. It seems that Peter was more intimate than any of the other apostles with Jesus, for the tax-collector asked him if his Master paid tribute; and to him and John was given the duty of providing the lamb for the paschal supper, although Judas carried the purse. He first advocated an exemption from the ceremonial law of Moses. Paul rebuked him for timidly dissembling on the question of the equality of the Jews and Gentiles, at Antioch. Here the Gospel history ends, and we have tradition only for the rest of his life, which says that he traveled (as Paul did) among the cities and churches to which his epistles were addressed, in Pontus, Galatia, Bithynia, Cappadocia, and Asia; that he visited Rome, and was made bishop of the church there, and suffered martyrdom under Nero, being crucified with his head downward.

PETRA. EDOM.

Pe'tra (Gr. rock). The Greek translation of Sela, a celebrated Edomite city (Is. xvi. 1).

Pha'raoh (Heb. PAR'ÔH, the king; from PHRA, the sun). The title of the kings of Egypt. The Egyptian king represents the sun-god. 1. The earliest mention of Pharaoh is in the history of Abraham (Gen. xii. 10–20); probably one of the shepherd-kings. — 2. The Pharaoh of Joseph (Gen. xxxvii. 36). — 3. The Pharaoh of the oppression, "who knew not Joseph." — 4. The Pharaoh who enslaved the Israelites is supposed by some to have been Rameses II; by others, as of Assyrian descent, from Is. lii. 4. The Exodus is dated in his time. — 5. Pharaoh the father-in-law of Mered (1 Chr. iv. 18). — 6. Pharaoh the father-in-law of Hadad (1 K. xi. 18) (see HADAD); perhaps Osochor. — 7. Pharaoh, father-in-law of Solomon, PSUSENNES II (1 K. iii. 1). — 8. Pharaoh, the ally of the Jews against Sennacherib (Is. xxxvi. 6). — 9. PHARAOH-NECHO (Jer. xlvi. 2). This and the Pharaoh which follows are the only two mentioned with proper names. He appears to have been an enterprising king, and to have reigned 16 years. He opposed the Assyrians, defeating and fatally wounding Josiah, King of Judah (2 K. xxiii. 29, 30). See also 2 K. xxiii. 30–34; 2 Chr. xxxvi. 1–4. This battle lost to Pharaoh all his Asiatic dominions (2 K. xxiv. 7). — 10. PHARAOH-HOPHRA (son of the sun) was the second successor of Necho, and mounted the throne B. C. 589.

Pharisees (Heb. PERUSHIM). One of three sects of Judaism in the time of Christ. The name means separated by special works. The sect included all Hebrews who separated themselves from every kind of Levitical impurity, following the Mosaic law of purity.

PHILADELPHIA.

They are first noticed as a sect about 150 B. C., but their origin is not recorded.

Their influence was very great, ruling, beyond question, the Sanhedrin, and all Jewish society.

Philadel'phia. In Lydia, near Phrygia. (See SEVEN CHURCHES.) There is a village on the ancient site called Allah Shehr — "City of God."

Philemon (Gr. affectionate). A Christian, probably a native of Colossæ, to whom Paul addressed the Epistle. See HISTORY OF THE BOOKS. In this Epistle Paul recommends the granting pardon to Onesimus, who conveyed the Epistle, with those to the Colossians and Ephesians, from Rome to Colossæ. See Philemon i. 2, iv. 7, 19, etc., and Col. iv. 9, 17. See ONESIMUS. Philemon was probably a man of wealth, influence, and liberality.

Phil'ip (fond of horses). 1. Father of Alexander the Great (1 Macc. i. 1, vi. 2). King of Macedonia, B. C. 359–336. — 2. Governor at Jerusalem (B. C. 170). He was very cruel toward the Jews (2 Macc. v. 22). — 3. The foster-brother (ix. 29) of Antiochus Epiphanes, regent of Syria and guardian of Antiochus V (B. C. 164), son of the king (1 Macc. vi. 14, 15, 55, 56, 63). — 4. Philip V, king of Macedonia, B. C. 220–179 (1 Macc. viii. 5).

Phil'ip. One of the twelve apostles. A native of Bethsaida, in Galilee (John i. 44). He became a disciple of John the Baptist, and was the fourth of the twelve in the order of his call. He introduced Nathaniel, who was afterwards called Bartholomew, the fifth apostle. Jesus asked Philip where bread (vi. 5) was to be found for feeding the 5000, and Philip did not even suspect the real source; nor did he seem to know the spiritual character of Jesus and his teaching much later, when he said to him, "Lord, show us the Father" (xiv. 8), and he had heard the voice from heaven, which was sent for the special instruction of such as were so slow to perceive the light — although he was at Cana when the water was made wine. He consulted with Andrew before gratifying the request of the Jews from Greece to see Jesus (out of curiosity only?). Philip was with the other apostles in that "upper room" (Acts i. 13) at Jerusalem, after the ascension, and on the day of Pentecost.

Tradition says he preached in Phrygia. There is no account of his death.

Philip, the Evangelist. A resident (in the latter part of his life) of Cæsarea, where he had a wife and family, of whom four daughters are mentioned as singers. He was one of the SEVEN DEACONS of the Church in Judæa (Acts vi. 5, viii. 29). After Stephen was stoned he went to Samaria, where he baptized the magician Simon. From there he was sent by Peter to Gaza, and on the way (at Ain Karem?) he baptized the Ethiopian eunuch (Acts viii. 26–40). His tour extended from Azotus to Cæsarea, where he settled, and was visited by Paul, Agabus, and others (xxi. 8, 9). His death is not recorded.

Philip'pi In Macedonia, 9 miles from the sea, on the banks of the deep, rapid stream Gangites (now Angista). Paul says: "On the Sabbath we went out of the city by the river-side, where prayer was wont to be made" (Acts xvi. 13). The ancient walls can be traced along the course of the river; and there are remains of a gate leading to a bridge across the stream. Philippi was a Roman military colony, originally named Krenides (springs), or Datum; and the Jews were probably not permitted to worship inside of the walls.

Philis'tia (emigrant). PALESTINE (Ps. xl. 8). A region extending from Joppa, 40 miles south, to Gerar, being 10 miles wide at the north and 20 at the south, and generally called SHEFELAH in the Scriptures. The prophets describe the people as the Philistines from Caphtor (Amos ix. 7), the remnant of the maritime district (Jer. xlvii. 4); and Moses as the Caphtorim that came out of Caphtor (Deut. ii. 23) and drove out the Avim. This would require us to read Gen. x. 14, "and Caphtorim, whence came Philistim." (See CAPHTOR.) The most reasonable supposition seems to be that Philistia was settled by emigrants from Egypt, dating from the time of Amenoph, B. C. 1970, to the Judges in Israel, B. C. 1200.

Their religion was similar to that of Phœnicia — nature-worship. Their name for God was Elohim; but they had other special divinities, such as Dagon Derketo, Baal Zebub, and Ashtoreth, whose images were carried with them on their campaigns besides charms which they wore on their persons (2 Macc. xii. 40). Josephus speaks of a council of 500 rulers at Gaza (Ant. xiii. 13, 3). Dagon was a union of human (the head) and fish-like forms. Oracles, priests, sorcerers, altars, temples, etc., were scattered all over the land.

BAAL OF PHILISTIA.

Phil'istines (Heb. PELESHETH, wandering). See PHILISTIA.

Philos'ophy. There was no Hebrew system of philosophy. The divine law furnished the rule about which no speculation was needed. Facts built upon a species of divine philosophy, which led from God to man. The Greek philosophy led the mind from man up towards God. The philosophy of the Hebrews was developed in their national life; their books recording acts and not thoughts. The two books, Job and Ecclesiastes, have many philosophical thoughts. See HISTORY OF THE BOOKS.

The Pharisees were Stoics in their philosophy (see PHARISEES.) The Sadducees advocated human freedom in its purest and widest sense (see SADDUCEES). The Essenes taught a system of mystic asceticism (see ESSENES), which, with the other two sects, completed the cycle of doctrine.

LIONS.

Much interesting detail on these points may be found in the fourth book of Maccabees (see HIST.).

Phœnic'ia. Phœnice (phoinix — palm-tree). Phoinos, purple, another derivation of the name. Phœnix, the son of Agenor, and brother of Cadmus, is also honored as the source. This was the Greek name, while the native name was KENAAN, as may be seen on a coin of Laodicea, of the time of Antiochus Epiphanes; and from them — the strongest race — the country was called by the Hebrews the Land of Canaan. The country extended from the Ladder of Tyre, or rather the Ras el Abayad (White Cape), to the Nahr el Auly, above Sidon, 28 miles; with a width at Sidon of 2 miles, and at Tyre of 5; and was called by Josephus the great plain of Sidon (Ant. v. 3, 1). Sidon and Tyre were 20 miles apart. (See SIDON and TYRE.) Sarepta was a colony of Sidon, 8 miles south; and Tyre was either a colony of Sidon, or received the honor of a change of the chief rule to it, after the war with the Philistines, because it was a stronger place than Sidon. Perhaps at this time the island was fortified. There were also colonies in Cyprus, the Grecian Isles, Libya, and in Spain. Phœnicia was extended, in later times, north to the island of Aradus, and Antaradus, the boundary being the river Eleutherus, making a coast of 120 miles. Beirut is now the chief, and almost the only port of this region. Gebal was anciently famous for its ship-builders, sailors (Ez. xxvii. 9), and workers in stone. Tripolis (now Tarabulus) was colonized in three distinct districts a few rods apart, each walled in, and named after the cities from whence the emigrants came — Tyre, Sidon, and Aradus. Aradus (Arvad, Gen. x. 18) was on a small island colonized from Sidon. Massive ruins are still standing there. Carthage, in Africa, was its most famous colony. For rivers, etc., see LEBANON.

The language was Semitic (that is, from Shem), to which family belong the Arabic, Aramaic, and the Hebrew, which are as nearly allied as are English and German. No other language was so widely spread, because of their mariners and colonists. The Greeks gave the honor of the invention of letters to the Phœnicians, having first received 16 letters from Cadmus (eastern or olden). The letters are supposed to have been originally rude pictures, in outline, of natural objects, as — Aleph, an ox's head; Beth, a house; Gimel, a camel (the hump-back); Daleth, the tent-door; Lamed, an ox-goad; Aiin, an eye; Caph, the back of the head; Reish, the head; and Tau, a cross. The Egyptian phonetic characters were made on the same principle. The names of the Greek letters which end in a, are Aramaic in form.

The religion was a nature-worship, recognizing male and female powers; whose symbols were the sun, moon, and planets (7), which has been said to have been the most complete and beautiful form of idolatry ever devised.

Twice were a large number of the priests of Baal destroyed by a reformer in Israel; by Elijah, who killed 450 on Mt. Carmel, and by Jehu, who gathered all the Baal worshipers in Israel, and in true Oriental style gave each one a garment for the grand occasion, and then killed every one, and burned the images and destroyed the temple of Baal (2 K. x. 18–28).

The country has always had a great many tribes, each holding to its peculiar religion, and they now live together, but separate, without friendship or mutual trust, suspecting and hating every other faith but their own; and this want of common union is the great obstacle to their progress.

Phry'gia (parched). Asia Minor. Inland, S. of Bithynia and Galatia, W. of Cappadocia and Lycaonia, N. of Lycia and Pisidia, and E. of Caria, Lydia, and Mysia. The empire once included nearly all Asia Minor. The surface is level, with few ridges, and very productive of corn, fruit, wine, cattle, sheep, and horses. Laodicea, Hierapolis, and Colossæ (and perhaps Antioch) were the chief cities, mentioned in the New Testament.

Pi-bĕsh'eth (Egyptian bahest). Bubastis is the Greek form. On the Pelusiac branch of the Nile. Called also Bubastite, and named from the goddess whom the Greeks identified with Artemis (Coptic Pascht). The city was built on an artificial elevation, raised by criminals (chiefly), from the mud taken from the canals leading from this place to Suez. Pascht was the goddess of fire, and had a grand temple in her honor, to which multitudes flocked yearly on pilgrimage. Herodotus describes the city very minutely (ii. 5–9). The only remains are a few stones of the finest red granite, and heaps of broken pottery, mud-banks, etc. When Ezekiel prophesied its destruction it was in its period of greatest prosperity (xxx. 17).

Pi-hahi'roth (mouth of the caverns, or, if Egyptian, where sedge grows). Near Suez, a camping-place during the Exodus (xiv. 2, 9). There is a place there now called Ghuweibet el boos (the bed of reeds).

Pi'late, Pon'tius. (L. Pilatus, probably from pilum, armed with a javelin. Pontius — probably of Gens Pontia, a plebeian clan of Samnite origin.) The sixth Roman procurator of Judæa, the successor of Valerius Gratus, under Tiberius Cæsar (Luke iii. 1). Tacitus writes, "The author of that name (Christian) or sect was Christ, who was capitally punished in the reign of Tiberius by Pontius Pilate." The early fathers, Justin Martyr, Eusebius, Tertullian, and others, say that Pilate sent to Rome an official report of the trial of Christ. Pilate oppressed the Jews, and violated the Roman law which respected the Jewish religion; of this there is the especial evidence of Josephus (Ant. xviii. 3, 1). He disregarded the law in having brought into Jerusalem effigies upon the ensigns, and by an attempt to force their introduction. Also in appropriating sacred money or treasure for the construction of an aqueduct (Luke xiii. 1). During the feasts the Roman governors resided in Jerusalem to preserve order. Thus at the feast of the Passover, Pilate was in Jerusalem in his official residence, Herod's palace. It was to the gates of this palace that the Jews brought Christ in the early morning, they not entering the house of a Gentile at the period of Passover (John xviii. 28). Pilate therefore came out to hear the indictment. (See JESUS.) Pilate assumed his office about A. D. 25. After ten years an appeal from the Samaritans (whom he had oppressed) to Vitellus, the President of Syria, caused him to be sent to Rome, to answer the charges brought against him. Tiberius died ere he reached Rome. It is generally held that he committed suicide from mortification.

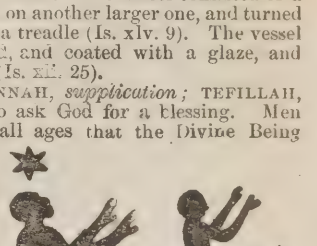
Pis'gah (to divide — i. e., isolated peak). Mountain in Moab (Deut. iii. 17, xxxiv. 1; Josh. xii. 3, xiii. 20). Although minutely described in the Scriptures, yet it has been difficult to locate. The present explanation of the matter is, that Abarim was the name of the range; Nebo one of the peaks; and Pisgah the top of Nebo. The passage would then read, "Moses went up to Mount Nebo, to the top of the hill." (See NEBO.) The name Ras el Feshka (the same as Pisgah) must have been transferred across the Dead Sea, as well as the name of the Jebel Mousa, S.E. of Bethany.

Pisid'ia. In Asia Minor, S. of Phrygia, E. of Lydia, W. of Cilicia, and N. of Pamphylia. It is mountainous, but has many fertile plains and valleys. The scenery is wild and grand (some cliffs rising 1000 ft. over a foaming torrent); heightened by forests of oak, pine, and other trees, orchards of fruit-trees, and vineyards. Its people, in the time that Paul traveled through it, were war-like highlanders, and probably exposed the Apostle to the "perils of robbers" that he mentions. Antioch was in Pisidia, though on the border of Phrygia.

Plagues, (The,) of Egypt. The so-called plagues of Egypt form the chief part of the miraculous side of the great deliverance of the Israelites from Egyptian bondage. These plagues will teach essentially the same lessons that the deliverance itself teaches. Indeed, the meaning of the deliverance from Egypt will be best learned from considering these miracles, which show it not to have been a mere symbolical act — shadowing or foreshadowing by this temporal deliverance from worldly bondage a spiritual redemption from spiritual oppression — but to have been itself a conflict with the powers of evil, deep and various, and a victory over them, and so a real redemption from the oppression of spiritual wickedness. The Jewish people were not only oppressed with sore bondage in bricks and mortar, but their spirits were led captive under Egyptian idolatries; and the sight and circumstances of this deliverance shook them clear of these enslaving influences, though not completely. The so-called plagues are ten in number: 1. The turning of the waters of the Nile into blood (Ex. vii. 15). 2. Bringing up frogs from the river (Ex. viii. 1). 3. The gnats or mosquitoes (Ex. viii. 16). 4. Of flies (Ex. viii. 20). 5. The murrain of beasts (Ex. ix. 6). 6. The boils upon men and beasts (Ex. ix. 8). 7. Hail, etc. (Ex. ix. 13). 8. The locusts (Ex. x.). 9. The darkness (Ex. x. 21). 10. The destruction of the first-born of man and beast (Ex. xi.). The number ten is significant, ending, as it does, with the terrible blow struck direct from heaven — the full outpouring on Egypt of the divine wrath. See EXODUS, in HISTORY OF THE BOOKS.

POTTER AT HIS WHEEL.

Ple'iades (Gr. pleo, to sail). A cluster of seven stars in the constellation Taurus. The sun enters Taurus about the middle of April; its appearance was a sign of Spring.



Plow. The plow in the picture "Cows yoked to the plow" shows the style of wooden instrument now in use in Palestine. (See AGRICULTURE.) It is the custom to plow with a camel, or an ass, or with an ox and an ass, or a cow and some of these animals.

Pome'granate. (Heb. RIMMON.) A bush with dark green foliage and crimson flowers. The fruit is red when ripe, and very juicy. The rind is used in the manufacture of leather. It is a native of Asia. The pillars in Solomon's Temple were adorned with carved figures of this fruit (1 K. vii. 18, 20). A fragment of the fruit, with its pearly seeds imbedded in ruby liquid, is very beautiful. "Thy cheeks are like a piece of pomegranate," is the allusion of the poet to the fine transparent tint (Ca. iv. 3).

Poor. The poor received special favors from the law (Deut. xi. 7). 1. The right of GLEANING (Lev. xix. 9, 10). 2. Their portion from the produce of the land in the SABBATICAL YEAR (Ex. xxiii. 11). 3. Possession of land in the JUBILEE year (ver. 25, 30). 4. USURY and pledges (35, 37). 5. Permanent bondage forbidden (Deut. xv. 12, 15). 6. Portions of tithes (Deut. xiv. 28). 7. Their entertainments at feasts (xvi. 11, 14). 8. Payments of WAGES (Lev. xix. 13).

Pot'tery. Was one of the most common and ancient of all manufactures. The clay, when wet, was trodden by the feet to form a paste, then placed on the wheel, and shaped by the hands. The wheel consisted of a wooden disc, placed on another larger one, and turned by the hand, or by a treadle (Is. xlv. 9). The vessel was then smoothed, and coated with a glaze, and burnt in a furnace (Is. xli. 25).

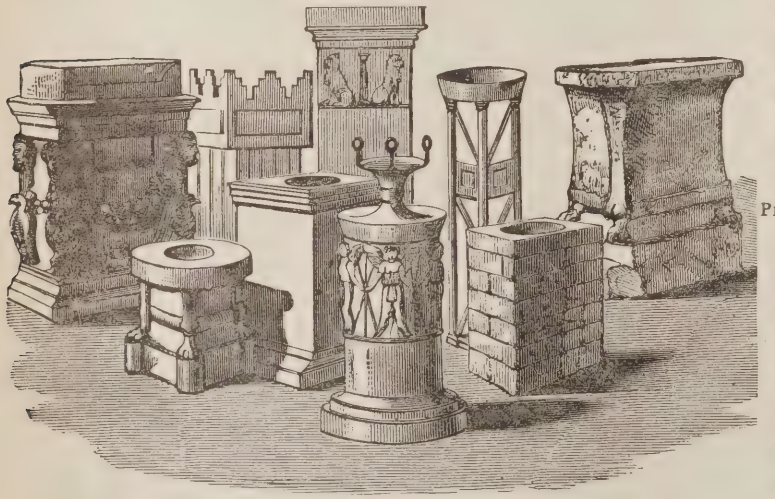
Prayer (Heb. TEHINNAH, supplication; TEFILLAH, to bow down). To ask God for a blessing. Men have believed in all ages that the Divine Being hears prayer (Deuteronomy iv. 29; 1 Chr. xxviii. 9, etc.), and answers it graciously (Ps. cxlv. 18, 19; 2 Chr. vii. 1) and willingly. Prayer is also called "seeking the Lord" (1 Chr. xvi. 10), entreating the face of the Lord (see FACE), pouring out the heart or soul before Him or before His face (Ps. lxii. 8; 1 Sam. i. 15), crying (1 K. vii. 28) or calling unto God, and a beseeching of God (Ps. lv. 16; Ex. xxxii. 11).

ADORATION. (ANCIENT.)

In the N. T. the approach of the soul unto God, with desire and request for help, is very distinctly stated in many passages (Matt. vi. 6, vii. 7; Luke x. 2; John xiv. 13; Eph. vi. 18; Phil. iv. 6; Col. iv. 2, 3, etc.). Nowhere in the Bible is there any word of explanation of the reason for prayer; the fact is dealt with as a fact, as plain as day and night.

The use of forms, in some cases, seems intended to secure the praise of men rather than of God (Matt. vi. 5). When the form is the most extensive and showy, the true spirit is in danger of being lost.

The Lord's Prayer (Matt. vi. 9–13; Luke xi. 2–4) is the model for all Christian prayer.



ADORATION. MODERN POSTURES IN PRAYER.

In the Christian Church, Jesus the Christ takes the place of the temple and the altar and the priests and prophets in the old dispensation. He is the intercessor for His people, asking of God the Father blessings for His sake. The Christian form of prayer includes the Hebrew idea of intercession, pleading for benefits; and also adds the higher spiritual desires based on the idea of the brotherhood of all men (Matt. v. 44, ix. 38; 1 Tim. ii. 2, 8; 1 Col. iv. 13; Phil. iv. 6; James v. 14).

Prayer is the free utterance of the soul's wants to God the Father, asking benefits in the name of our Saviour, and interceding for the good of others also. Faith is quickened by prayer; and it may be said that prayer is an indication of the spiritual condition of the soul — it being to the soul what breath is to the body.

Pre'cious Stones. Alluded to very often in the Scriptures, and were known, used, and valued from the earliest times. Engraved gems worn in rings (Cant. v. 14), and used for private seals (Neh. x.), are mentioned in Genesis, and all through the Bible. The twelve stones of the high-priest's breast-plate were engraved with the name of one of the 12 tribes (Ex. xxviii. 17–21), and the whole, when in their proper position on the breast of the high-priest, were called Urim and Thummim (light and perfection).

ANCIENT ALTARS, GREEK, ROMAN, AND EGYPTIAN.

The figurative uses of precious stones are very many, and highly poetical and important for instruction, and signify value, beauty, durability, excellence. The names of those most valued were: Adamant, the diamond; Agate; Amethyst; Beryl, a yellow Emerald; Carbuncle; Chalcedony; Chrysolite; Chrysoprasus; Chrysoprase is the leek-green agate; Emerald; Jacinth; Onyx; Ruby; Sapphire; Sardius; Sardine; Sardonyx; Topaz.

Pres'bytery (from Gr., meaning old, elder). A body of elders in the Christian Church (1 Tim. iv.). Also a body consisting of pastors, ruling elders, laymen, commissioned to represent the churches belonging to the presbytery. This work is subject to the revision of the synod.

Priest (Heb. KOHEN, to foretell? or a mediator, a messenger), (Job xxxiii. 23). The word priest means one who presides over things relating to God, or, as Paul says, "Every high-priest taken from among men, is constituted on the behalf of men, with respect to their concerns with God, that he may present both gifts and sacrifices for sins" (Heb. v. 1). Adam is the first recorded priest; Noah was the first after the deluge. It is probable that the patriarchs were priests, as in Job i. 5. The prophet differed from the priest in receiving supernatural communications of knowledge, of the past, present, and future. In the patriarchal system, the first-born male was the priest of the family, and succeeded his father. The Mosaic system substituted the tribe of Levi, instead of the first-born (Ex. xxviii.). The Hebrews were promised that, if they would keep the law of Moses, they should be "a peculiar treasure," "a kingdom of priests," "a holy nation" (Ex. xix. 5, 6). [For the dress of the priest, see DRESS.] The age at which they were permitted to serve was not definitely fixed, as in the case of the Levites, but was, probably, at maturity — from 20 yrs. old. The support of the high-priest was, the tithe of 1-10th of the tithes assigned to the Levites (Num. xviii. 28; Neh. x. 38). The candidate for orders must prove his descent from Aaron; be free from bodily defects (Lev. xxi. 16–23); must not mourn outwardly; must marry only a young woman.

Procon'sul (Gr. anthupatos, to be deputy). A division of conquered provinces not requiring military rule, was governed by the Roman Senate by proconsuls, civil officers, and their districts were called proconsular. The term was usually one year. A coin of Ephesus gives the title ANTHUPATOS (Acts xix. 38). They did not have the power of life and death.

PTOLEMY I. SOTER (TYRE).

Proc'urator. Is the Latin name of the Roman ruler, translated GOVERNOR in the N. T. (See PILATE.) Gr. ēgemon. They were similar in power to the proconsul, and were selected from among those who had been consuls or prætors, or senators. Their term of office depended on the will of the emperor. They wore a military dress and sword, and were attended by six lictors. They had the power of life and death. The head-quarters in Judæa were at Cæsarea, but held judicial wherever they were, as Pilate at Jerusalem. The high-priest could be removed at will by him.

Pros'elyte (Gr. proselyti; Heb. GERIM). This word is often used in the Septuagint as the rendering of the Hebrew GER, a sojourner, translated "a stranger" (Ex. xii. 48, xx. 10, xxii. 21, etc.). The word, from meaning "one who comes to," means, also, one "who comes over" from one faith to another. The law was liberal to strangers (GERIM); it ordained that they should be treated with forbearance and kindness (Ex. xxii. 21, xxiii. 9; Lev. xix. 33, 34). "The stranger that dwelleth with you shall be unto you as one born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself, for ye were strangers," etc. The stranger or sojourner was ordered to be welcomed to the Passover Feast upon his observance of certain regulations (Ex. xii. 43, 45). The word in the sense of convert appears in the history and the writings of the prophets in Is. lvi. 3–8, "the sons of the stranger that join themselves to the Lord."

Ptol'emee. 1. Son of Dorymenes (1 Macc. iii. 38). He was active in the expedition which Lysias organized (1 Macc. iii. 38). He had great influence with Antiochus (Epiphanes.) — 2. Son of Agesarchus, governor of Cyprus (2 Macc. viii. 8). — 3. Son of Abubus, who married Simon's daughter. He was governor of the district of Jericho. He murdered Simon and two of his sons (1 Macc. xvi. 11). — 4. Father of LYSIMACHUS I, the Greek translator of ESTHER (Esth. xi. 1). — 5. PTOLEMY VI, PHILOMETOR (1 Macc. i. 18). — 6. Son of DOSITHEUS (Esth. xi. 1). PTOLEMY.

PTOLEMY ARSINOE. PTOLEMY BERENICE.
PTOLEMY II. PHILADELPHUS.

Ptol'emy (the war-like). The Greek title of the ruler of Egypt, as Pharaoh was the Egyptian. The line was founded by Alexander the Great, B. C. 323, by making PTOLEMY I SOTER, ruler (323–285). There were fifteen of the race, who were rulers in Egypt and Syria, the last of whom was deposed by the Roman power, B. C. 81.

The most noted among them for their connection with Palestine were those in whose reigns the rival temple at Leontopolis was built (Is. xix. 18), and managed in almost exact imitation to the original at Jerusalem, having been founded by Onias, the son of Onias III (see ONIAS) the rightful successor to the high-priest's office, but who was deprived of his right through political intrigues, and therefore fled to Egypt with a great number of Jews.

PTOLEMY III. ENERGETES.

The history of the eight different Ptolemies who ruled in Egypt fills up a large part of the space between the books — between Malachi and Matthew, and therefore has a positive value to the student of history. The details are to be found in the Maccabees, and Josephus. In the prophesy of Daniel there is a very complete outline of even the military campaigns, marriages of the kings of Syria and the Ptolemies of Egypt, and their influence on the Jews, which can be filled up with the actual names so as to read like an account written by an historian. The king of the North is Antiochus, the king of the South is Ptolemy; the young maiden is Cleopatra, the fenced city is Sidon, etc. Alexandria was built and flourished in this age (see ALEXANDRIA, and APOCRYPHA in the HISTORY OF THE BOOKS).

PTOLEMY V. ENERGETES.

Pub'lican (Lat. publicanus; Gr. telones). Collectors of the Roman revenue. The publicans of the N. T. were regarded as traitors and classed with sinners (Matt. ix. 11), harlots (xxi. 31, 32), and with the heathen (xviii. 17). No money received from them was permitted to go into the alms-box. They were not allowed to sit in judgment or give testimony. Some of them were the earliest disciples of John the Baptist and of Christ (Luke xviii. 13).

Pul (king). An Assyrian king, the first mentioned in Scripture. He made an expedition against MENAHEM, king of Israel. But we learn from the Assyrian monuments that Jehu had already paid tribute to Shalmanezer II, as recorded on the black obelisk.

Menahem reigned ten years, so that Pul's expedition could not be earlier than B. C. 751, or later than B. C. 745.

Pulse (Heb. ZEROHIM, ZERONIM, "to scatter, to sow"). A general name of peas, beans, and such kinds of garden-sauce (Dan. i. 12, 16).

Pun'ishments. Were twofold, capital and secondary. 1. Stoning (Ex. xvii. 4). 2. Hanging (Num. xxv. 4). 3. Burning (Gen. xxxviii. 24). 4. By the sword (Ex. xix. 13). 5. Strangling (John xviii. 31). 6. Drowning (Matt. xviii. 6). 7. Sawing asunder (2 Sam. xii. 31). 8. Pounding in a mortar or beating to death (Prov. xxvii. 22). 9. Precipitation (2 Macc. vi. 10). OF SECONDARY. — 1. Retaliation (Ex. xxi. 24-25). 2. Compensation in money, or goods, or service (Ex. xxi. 18-36). 3. Stripes (Deut. xxv. 3). 4. Scourging (Judg. viii. 16).

PTOLEMY IV. PHILOPATOR (TYRE).

A false accuser suffered what he proposed to inflict wrongfully on another (Deut. xix. 19). Imprisonment was practiced for convenience rather than punishment (Lev. xxiv. 12). Debtors were shut up until they paid (Matt. xviii. 30); stocks were used (xiii. 27). See ANATHEMA.

There is no direct reference to rewards or punishments in the future life in the Old Testament. See HADES.

PTOLEMY VI. PHILOMETOR.

Pute'oli. 8 miles N.W. of Naples, on the Shore; once called the Bay of Cumæ (see Virgil), and also Puteolanus. It was a famous watering-place, on account of its many warm springs Ships landed cargoes of corn, and also passengers from the Levant, at this, the best harbor near Rome. The harbor was protected by a mole, the ruins of which are still to be seen. Scipio sailed from this port to Spain; Cicero had a villa in the vicinity, and Hadrian was buried near. Now called Puzzuoli.

HOUSE TOP AND BATTLEMENT.

Py'thon. A serpent slain by Apollo (Acts xvi. 16). DIVINATION. In the Greek and Roman mythology, Python was a huge serpent (darkness, or ignorance), which was born in the mud of Deucalion's Deluge, and killed near Delphi by Apollo (the sun or intelligence).

Q

Quails (Heb. SELAV). The quail is a bird of passage, about the size of a turtle-dove, and resembling the American partridge. They are plentiful near the shores of the Dead Sea, the Jordan, and in the deserts of Arabia. Its flight is very low, especially when fatigued, and it keeps close to the ground. They migrate in vast flocks, and at night, when they settle, they are so exhausted they may be captured by the hand (Ex. xvi. 13).

Queen (Heb. MALCAH, wife), (Esth. i. 9). SHEGAL, consort (Neh. ii. 6), GEBIRAH, powerful (1 K. xv. 13). Queen is applied to the woman who exercises the highest authority; and this in the East, is not the wife but the mother of the master. The case of Esther is an exception.

PUTEOLI. PUZZUOLI.

R

Ra'amah (trembling). Fourth son of Cush (Gen. x. 7). Settled on the Persian Gulf (probably where we find Sheba, on the island Bahreyn), and renowned in Ezekiel's time as trading with Tyre (Ez. xxvii. 22) in spices, precious stones, and gold.

Rab'bah (greatness). Several places of this name. 1. (Deut. iii. 11.) A very strong place east of Jordan; almost the only city of the Ammonites. This may have been the city of the Zuzims, in Ham (Gen. xiv. 5). The sarcophagus of the giant Og was here (Deut. iii. 11). The extensive ruins of Rabbah, now called Amman, are found on both sides of a perennial stream, the banks and bed also being paved through the city, about 19 miles southeast of Es Salt, and 22 miles from the Jordan, in a long valley, a branch of the Wady Zerka. The theatre is very large and well preserved. Roman and Christian buildings are also found. Some of the columns are five feet in diameter. Ezekiel's prophesy is literally fulfilled, and the place has become a stable for camels and a couching-place for flocks (xxv. 5). David took the city by his general, Joab, when Uriah the Hittite was killed (2 Sam. xi.). It was named Philadelphia by Ptolemy Philadelphus, B. C. 250. Coins of this city are extant, bearing the figure of Astarte. The Christian Church is still in excellent preservation. — 2. The city of AR was also called Rabbath Moab. — 3. A city of Judah (Josh. xv. 60). Lost. 4. In Josh. xi. 8, Zidon is called Zidon Rabbah, translated great Zidon.

Rab'bi (my master). A title of respect which the Jews gave to their teachers and physicians, and especially to our Lord (Matt. xxiii. 7, 8). EDUCATION. SCRIBES.

Ra'chel (a ewe). The youngest daughter of LABAN, wife of JACOB, mother of JOSEPH and BENJAMIN. The history of Rachel may be found in Gen. xxix., xxxiii., xxxv. See JACOB.

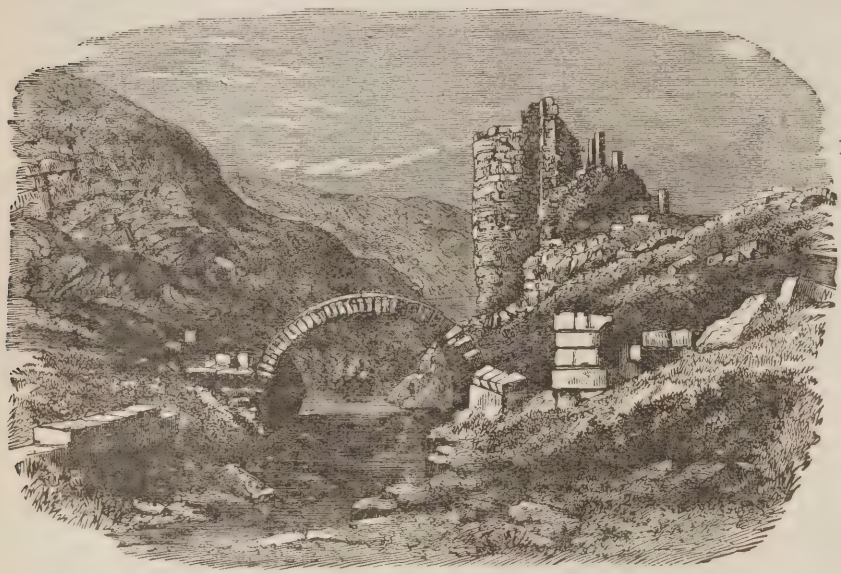
The so-called tomb of Rachel is about half a mile from Bethlehem, near the Jerusalem road.

Ra'ma (Matt. ii. 18). RAMAH (Jer. xxxi. 15). A city in Mt. Ephraim, or Benjamin. Matthew refers to the ancient massacre, and also at the same time to that of the innocents of Bethlehem. The name Ramah forms a part of several names, and means hight. 1. In Benjamin (Josh. xviii. 25). Five miles N. of Jerusalem, near Geba. The palm-tree of Deborah (Judg. iv. 5) was near it, in a valley toward Bethel. It is now a poor village in the midst of columns, hewn stones, and other ruins of antiquity. Cirama (1 Esd. v. 20). — 2. In Mt. Ephraim (1 Sam. i. 1). The home of Elkanah, Samuel's father; the birth-place of Samuel, his home and official residence, the station of his altar, and where he was buried (xv. 1). Supposed by some to be the same as the first, in Benj. — 3. (Josh. xix. 29.) Boundary of Asher, 1 mile N.E. of Ras el Ain, two and a half ms. S.E. of Tyre. There is another Rameh 10 miles S.E. of Tyre. — 4. In Naphtali (ib. v. 39), one of the fortified cities, 7 miles S.E. of Safed on the way to Acre, on a lofty hill commanding one of the finest views in Palestine. — 5. RAMOTH GILEAD (2 K. viii. 29, 2 Chr. xxii. 6). — 6. Ramleh (Neh. xi. 33), near Joppa.

Ra'math Lehi (Judg. xv. 17). Where Samson slew 1000 men with a jawbone, and named the place Wielding of the Jawbone.

Ra'math Mizpeh (high place of the watch-tower). (Josh. xiii. 26.) Boundary of Gad. Where Jacob and Laban set up a monument of stones. Lost. Dr. Eli Smith found many names of places on the east of Jordan, which, when more carefully examined and their sites explored, may result in settling many points of topography in that region now wholly uncertain. The Palestine Exploration has made several discoveries, and added much to our knowledge of this region, and are still continuing their work, though encountering many obstacles.

Ram'eses, Raam'ses (Gen. xlvii. 11). The land of Goshen. A city in the same land, enlarged and fortified by the Jews (Ex. i. 11, xii. 37). There were (and now are) other places of this name in Egypt. Abu Kesheyd, a modern village, has an antique monolith, on which is carved a group, Rameses II, between Tum and Ra.



Ra'moth in Gilead (Deut. iv. 43; Josh. xx. 8). Now Es Salt. The site is on a high and picturesque hill, almost surrounded by deep ravines, and encompassed by mountains. Jebel Osha, the highest peak of Gilead, is only 2 ms. N. Vineyards and olive-groves beautify and enrich the place; the ruins are not extensive, being a square castle with towers, and a moat, on the hight, and a great number of tombs and grottos in the ravines.

Rebek'ah. REBECCA (ensnarer). Daughter of BETHUEL (Gen. xxii. 23). Sister of LABAN, married to ISAAC. There is a beautiful and touching incident of "Rebekah at the well." This bright little picture, with its conclusion, comprises all the circumstances of a perfect marriage. The sanction of parents, the favor of God, the domestic habits of the wife, her beauty, kindness, modest consent, and her successful hold on her husband's love (even in the same tent with her mother-in-law).

Red Sea (Num. xxi. 14). Called the sea, in Ex. xiv. 2, 9, 16, etc. The Gulf of Suez in the Exodus, and also the Gulf of Akabah later in the wandering. Called the sea of suph in Ex. x. 19, that is, the sea of reeds, or flags. A seaweed resembling wool (in whiteness) is thrown up in great quantities on the shores of the Red Sea (Diodorus iii. 19). The same word was used to name the weeds, or reeds, in which Moses was laid when an infant (Ex. ii. 3). It is thought the papyrus was meant. The Abyssinians now use papyrus boats.

It is supposed that "the tongue of the Egyptian Sea," the head of the Suez Gulf, has dried up, as predicted by Isaiah (xi. 15, xix. 5), for a distance of 50 ms. The ancient head would have been at Aboo Kesheyd, which has been identified with the ancient Hero. Necho's canal, which was wide enough for two triremes to row abreast (Herodotus ii. 158), once led from the gulf to the Nile, but it is now filled with sand. The Suez Canal, just opened, leads to the Mediterranean. The sea is nearly 1400 ms. long by 100 to 200 ms. in its widest part. The deepest water is 6324 feet, in lat. 22° 30′. It is filled with coral and other rocks and rocky islands for 40 or 50 ms. on each side, leaving a narrow and dangerous channel, which is narrowest opposite El Medeeneh. The Suez Gulf is 130 ms. long and 18 wide. The Akabah Gulf is 100 ms. long by 15 wide. This is a continuation of Arabah, and is bordered on both sides by steep and high mountains — Sinai on the west, and the spurs of Mt. Seir, Edom, on the east, from 3000 to 6000 feet high, the highest being to the south. The island of Graia, fortified by the crusaders, lies near the west shore, not far from the north end. The ruins of walls, castles, a church, etc., mostly of the Middle Ages, cover the whole rocky area. The straits at the south end of the sea are called Bab el Mandeb (Gate of Tears), from the many shipwrecks which have happened after passing them, either way.

HAND-MILL.

Refi'ner (Heb. ZOREF. MEZAREF). Refining being the separation of the pure metal from the dross, by means of fire, suggested an apt subject for illustration, as in Is. i. 25; Zech. xiii. 9; Mal. iii. 2, 3. A full, figurative allusion to the refiner's process is in Jer. vi. 29, 30. See METALS.

Refuge, Cities of. 6 out of the 48 Levitical cities were set apart as a refuge for any one who should accidentally kill another, to stay there until the death of the high-priest (Num. xxxv. 6, 13, 15; Josh. xx. 2, 7, 9). There were 3 on each side of Jordan. On the E. side were Bezer, Ramoth in Gilead, and Golan, and on the W. side were Kedesh in Galilee, Shechem, and Hebron. The right of asylum of many cities, in ancient classic nations, and of sanctuary in Christian countries (the privilege of many churches in the Middle Ages especially), are parallel, and show the wisdom of the law-makers, in providing a means of abating the evils of the system of blood-revenge, which are peculiarly Oriental, and very wasteful of human life. Moses abolished the custom of allowing money to be paid as a compensation for a human life, as was the case in Athens and many eastern countries, and is now among the Arabs. The cities are each described under their respective names.

Rehobo'am (he enlarges the people). The son of Solomon, by the Ammonite princess Naamah (1 K. xiv. 21, 31), whom he succeeded. By neglecting his father's counselors he hastened the division of the tribes which had been restrained by the government of Solomon.

Reho'both (room). A well dug by Isaac (Gen. xxvi. 22). The wells Sitnah, Ezek and Rehoboth were west or southwest of Beersheba. Wady Ruhaibeh is 20 miles S.W. of Beersheba, and is claimed as the place by Dr. Bonar (Desert of Sinai, 316). — 2. Rehoboth by the River (Gen. xxxvi. 37). On the Euphrates, just below the Khabur, stands Rahabah, in the midst of extensive ancient ruins. — 3. THE CITY. One of the four built by Nimrod. As the name means in our tongue, "to be wide," or "spacious," or "streets," the passage in Gen. x. 11, 12, may describe one city, Nineveh, which was spacious, and had several quarters, as Resen, Calah, altogether forming "a great city."

Re'kem (Heb. flower-garden). Ain Karem, near Jerusalem, on the west side.

Rephi'dim (rests, or stays), (Ex. xvii. 1, 8; xix. 2). Station of the Exodus, between Egypt and Sinai. The people murmured for water, and Moses smote the rock in Horeb, "before the people;" and therefore if Horeb and Sinai be located at Jebel Sufsafeh and its vicinity, then Rephidim would be in Wady es Sheikh. WANDERING.

Re'sen. The ruins called Nimrud, at Mosul, on the Euphrates, are understood to represent the ancient Calah, and those on the opposite side of the river are the remains of Nineveh; and there are remains between the two, at Selamiyeh, which answer to the locality of Resen.

Resurrec'tion. Gr. anastasis, uprising; exanastasis, a rising up out of (Phil. iii. 11; egersis, waking up; "resurrection" in John xi. 25; and several other words, or derivatives, are rendered resurrection.

The idea is the rising again of the body from death, or its return to life in two senses: 1, of those who have been brought back to this life after death, as Lazarus, the widow's son of Nain, etc.; and 2, of all true Christians, who will be raised in the future world.

This is one of the vital points in the Christian's creed. If there is no resurrection, then there is no hope beyond this life. The Old Testament history prefigures the doctrine, in its records of several instances of restoration to life after death, as by Elijah (1 K. xvii. 21–24), and Elisha (2 K. iv. 20, 32–36). The vision of the dry bones may be accepted as touching on the general belief, though not a case of practical proof; the translations of Enoch and Elijah cannot argue resurrection, because death did not take place, and they are simply evidence of a continued existence after this life (Gen. v. 22; 2 K. ii.).

"Life and immortality" are "brought to light by the gospel." The New Testament idea is that it is (1) to be universal (John v. 28, 29; 2 Cor. v. 10; Rev. xx. 13), (2) and that souls will be recognizable; but whether the identity will be from physical or spiritual sources we are not instructed, unless Paul means that it will be spiritual in his argument to the Romans (vi., viii.) and to the Corinthians (1 Cor. xv. 44), where we may possibly see evidence of a belief in the rising of the identical shapes of our bodies of flesh, but changed into a spiritual substance. (3) The belief in a future life for the saints only and a second death for the impenitent is held by many, who find in the life and works of Jesus, and in Paul and John's teaching much to confirm this view. (4) It is the work of Jesus that has secured the resurrection and life of all who believe on him, and his voice will call them from the tomb, who prayed, "Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, may be with me where I am." (5) The time of the resurrection is not determined. There may be two objects or ends to be answered: one being the actual life, which is believed to have been already given to several, whose names are mentioned in the Bible; and the other the great day of judgment. SECOND ADVENT.

Reu'ben (REU, behold, and BEN, a son). Eldest son of Jacob (Gen. xxix. 32), son of Leah. The tribe of Reuben was located, at their own request, on the E. side of Jordan, and against the wishes of Moses (Num. xxxii. 19).

Rhodes. An island 120 miles long, by 36 wide, opposite the S.W. extremity of Asia Minor, celebrated from remote antiquity for commerce, navigation, literature, and the arts; and during the Middle Ages as the residence of the Knights of St. John. Its maritime code was adopted by the Romans. The soil is fertile and the climate delightful. There are two cities: Rhodes (built B. C. 482), which was celebrated by its having erected over the entrance to its harbor a brass statue of Apollo, 105 feet high (built by Chares of Lindus, B. C. 290, and thrown down by an earthquake, B. C. 224); and Lindus, and a number of villages. Population 30,000. Paul visited the island on his way to Jerusalem (Acts xxi. 1).

ASSYRIAN CHARIOT OF STATE.

Rib'lah (fertility). In the land of Hamath (2 K. xxiii. 33), on the east side of Ain (Num. xxxiv. 11). Both places are located in the Orontes valley, 35 ms.

N.E. of Baalbek; Riblah lying on the banks of a mountain stream, in the midst of a vast and fertile plain. Mentioned as Diblath in Ez. vi. 14. At Riblah, Pharaoh Necho deposed king Jehoahaz (2 Chr. xxxvi.), and Nebuchadnezzar put out the eyes of Zedekiah after killing his sons (2 K. xxv. 7).

Rid'dle (Heb. HIDAH, intricate). Artifice Dan. viii. 23); a proverb (Prov. i. 6); an oracle (Num. xii. 8); a PARABLE (Ez. xvii. 2); in general, any wise or intricate sentence (Hab. ii. 6). The queen of Sheba came to ask riddles of SOLOMON (1 K. x. 1). The ancients were fond of riddles. They were generally proposed in verse. The only mention of a riddle in the N. T. is in Rev. xiii. 16–18.

Right'eousness (Heb. ZEDEK, ZEDAKAH; Gr. dikaiōma). Holiness, justice, rectitude; an attribute of God only (Job xxxvi. 3; Is. li. 5–8; John xvii. 25). The righteousness of Christ includes His spotless holiness and His perfect obedience to the law while on earth, and His suffering its penalty in our stead. "For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost" (Rom. xiv. 17).

Ring (TABBA'ATH, GALIL; Gr. daktulios). The ring, besides being an ornament, was used as a signet, or sign-manual, when its setting was engraved with some device with or without the name of the owner which was recognized as his personal emblem (Neh. x. 1). Such rings or seals were used by all persons in authority, and when stamped upon the parchment, or on a piece of wax or clay attached, stood instead of the name of the person agreeing to the compact. See SEAL.

River. Seven distinct Hebrew words are translated by "river" in our version. By river we mean a large stream of water, flowing summer and winter, and we have names for smaller streams; as, stream, creek, brook, torrent, rill, rivulet, etc. There are such differences in the original Hebrew, which were overlooked in the translation, and it may be interesting to notice them: 1. AUBAL, YUBAL (Jer. xviii. 8; Dan. viii. 2, 3, 6), tumult, fullness. The word used for the deluge is from the same root, and is HAMMABUL (only in Genesis, and Ps. xxix. 10). — 2. NAHAR (Gen. ii. 10; Ex. vii. 19, etc.), to flow. This means a river, as we use the word. With the definite article HAN-NAHAR (the river), the Euphrates is meant (Gen. xxxi. 21; 2 Sam. x. 16, etc.).—Incorrectly rendered "flood" in Josh. xxiv. 2, where the Euphrates is meant; and in Job xiv. 11; Ps. lxvi. 6, where the Red Sea, or the Jordan, is referred to. The Arab name of river is nahr; now used for all perennial streams. — 3. Nakhal (to receive), as, a water-course; therefore, a torrent-bed, common in Palestine, having water only in winter. This is translated "valley" in Gen. xxvi. 17; Num. xxi. 12; "brook," Deut. ii. 13; 2 K. xxiii. 6-12; "river" in PUBLIC INN. CARAVANSERAI.

Amos vi. 14; "streams" in Ps. lxxviii. 20; and in all these cases valley is the true meaning. The modern term is WADY for such valleys as are dry in summer. — 4. PELEG (to flow, or division): "River," in Ps. i. 3; Is. xxx. 25; Job xx. 17; "stream," in Ps. xlvi. 4; "divisions," in Judg. v. 15, 16. The word means artificial streams for irrigation. — 5. APHIK (force or hold, as the bank of a river): "River" in Cant. v. 12; Ez. vi. 3, xxxi. 12; and "streams" in Ps. cxxvi. 4; in which last passage it refers to the dry water-courses of the Negeb, or South. In 2 Sam. xxii. 16 it is translated "channels," and also in Ps. xviii. 15. — 6. YEOR (the Nile), a word adopted into the Hebrew from the Egyptian language. This is the word used for the Nile in Genesis and Exodus, and is mistranslated "flood" in Amos viii. 8, ix. 5. RIVER OF EGYPT. Two terms were used in the original — differing, as will be seen — both of which are translated "river of Egypt." 1. NAHAR MIZRAIM (Gen. xv. 18), meaning The Nile (probably before the name YEOR was known to the Hebrews). — 2. NAKHAL MIZRAIM (Num. xxxiv. 5), meaning the dry water-course of El Arish. The Nile is also called SHIHOR (Josh. xiii. 3, etc.). The importance of these corrections is felt, when it is seen that we are able to prove by them that the original Hebrew text was true in every one of its references to the peculiar features of the countries referred to, even in minute particulars.

HIGH-PRIEST, ARK, ALTAR, AND HOLY VESSELS IN THE TABERNACLE ON MOUNT ZION.

Roe. Roebuck (Heb. ZEBI, masc., ZEBIYAH, fem.). The Oriental antelope or gazelle. It is about two and a half feet in hight, of a reddish-brown color, with white feet and belly, has long naked ears, and a short erect tail. The horns are black, about twelve inches long, and bent like a lyre. It inhabits Barbary, Egypt, Arabia, and Syria, and is about half the size of the fallow-deer. It goes in large flocks; it is easily tamed though very timid; its flesh is considered excellent food (Deut. xii. 15, 22).

Roman Empire. Rome is first mentioned in 1 Macc. i. 10, in connection with Antiochus Epiphanes, who had been a hostage there, and was a "wicked root." Pompey made Syria a Roman province B. C. 65, and took Jerusalem two years later (Ant. xiv. 2, 3, 4; Wars i. 6, 7). Herod was made the first king under Roman rule by Antony, B. C. 40, and was confirmed by Augustus, B. C. 30. The tribute paid to Cæsar (Julius) was a fourth part of their agricultural produce in addition to the tithes (Ant. xiv. 10, 6). After A. D. 6, Judæa was made a province of Syria at the request of the Jews, who were worn out by the cruelties of the Herods, with the capital at Cæsarea; Coponius was the first procurator, and Pilate was the fifth. Jesus was crucified during Pilate's reign (A. D. 25 to 35).

The Roman empire was but a narrow strip along the shores of the Mediterranean until Pompey added Asia Minor, Syria, and (Antony) Egypt; Cæsar conquered Gaul; the generals of Augustus Spain, and from the Alps to the Danube. Its population in the time of Christ was 85 millions. Gibbon says it was 120 millions in the time of Claudius, who appointed Felix procurator (A. D. 52–60). Festus succeeded him and heard Paul (Acts xxv., etc.). Vespasian was sent into Judæa in A. D. 67, with a large army. Nero died in 68, and Vespasian was elected emperor by the legions in Judæa. Titus was sent to conduct the war in Judæa by his father A. D. 70, when he took Jerusalem after a siege of four months. Julius Cæsar allowed the Jews to live after their own customs, even in Rome; which privileges were confirmed by Augustus, who also respected their Sabbath (Ant. xiv. 10, 11, 19), and exempted them from military service; but Tiberius and Claudius banished them from Rome, as Suetonius says, because they were continually raising disturbances under the impulse of Chrestus — i. e. Christ.

ROME. The city of Rome was founded B. C. 753, on 7 hills, 15 ms. from the mouth of the Tiber Rev. xvii. 9). The modern city lies to the N.W. of the ancient site, on what was the Campus Martius (Field of Mars), a plain north of the seven hills. It is only mentioned in Maccabees, Acts, Epistle to the Romans, and 2d Timothy. The Jews first settled in Rome after Pompey's conquests, when the Jewish king Aristobulus and his son were led in triumph. At the time of Paul's visit (after Augustus had "found the city of brick and left it of marble") the population was one million two hundred thousand (Gibbon) — one-half being slaves, and a large part of the freemen dependent on the rich, and living like paupers on public gratuities. Rome became the greatest repository of architecture, pictures, and sculptures that the world ever saw. The luxury, profligacy, and crime of this age is beyond the descriptive power of letters. It is believed that Paul lived here "two whole years," in his own hired house, bound by a chain to a soldier, according to the then custom of keeping certain prisoners (Acts xii. 6, xxviii. 16, 20, 30). Five of Paul's epistles were written at Rome, one of them just before his death, as is believed by beheading.

Rose. 1. Heb. CHABAZZELETH (Cant. ii. 1). I am the rose of Sharon. 2. Gr. rhodon (Wis. ii. 8). Roses are greatly prized in the East, for the rose-water, which is in much request. Several varieties are still found in Palestine. The "rose of Sharon" is sacredly associated with the heavenly bridegroom (Cant. ii. 1).

The Rose of Sharon is thought by some to have been the Cistus, Rock-rose, of which there are several varieties in Palestine, and is now chiefly found on the hills, and especially on Mount Carmel, where it almost covers whole districts, tinting entire hillsides, as seen from a distance, in April.

Others, as Tristram (Nat. Hist. 476), think it was the Sweet-scented Narcissus, a native of Palestine, growing on Sharon, and nearly all over the country. It is very fragrant, and an especial favorite of the people, who, men and women, carry them for their perfume and fine color, vast numbers being sold in the bazaars.

Dr. Thomson suggested the Mallow, marsh-mallows, which grows into a stout bush, and bears thousands of beautiful flowers. Others again suggest the asphodel or the lily.

Rosh. In Ez. xxxviii. 2, 3, xxxix. 1, this name is translated "chief," and should read "Magog, the prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal." The Russ, or Russians, are also mentioned in the Koran. The country of the children of RASSES (Jud. ii. 23) was ravaged by Holofernes. Meshech is said to be the original Muscovy, and Rosh, the original Russia.

Rye (KUSSEMETH), (Ex. ix. 32). Rye is not an Egyptian or Syrian grain, but rather a northern plant. It is closely allied to wheat, which it much resembles. The sheath is coarser and rougher, and the beard long. It is of less value, and the flour is generally mixed with that of wheat.

S

Sabactha'ni (hast thou forsaken me?). A part of our Saviour s exclamation on the cross (Matt. xxvii. 46); the whole is taken from Ps. xx. 1, where it is used prophetically.

VIA DOLOROSA.

Sab'bath (Heb. SHABBATH, the [day of] rest). The name given to the seventh day of the week under the old covenant. Division of time into weeks was the custom from the earliest recorded ages, among the rudest as well as the most cultivated people. (CHRONOLOGY.) It is the only ordinance besides marriage which dates from the Creation (Gen. ii. 3), and it is one of the subjects of the Decalogue (Ex. xxxiv. 21). In Leviticus the whole law is repeated (xxiii. 2, 3), and one of the finest of the Psalms was written in honor of the day (Ps. xcii.). The prophets also honor the Sabbath as a holy day (Is. lvi. 1, 2; Ez. xx. 12, xliv. 24, xlvi. 3).

The special rites and services appointed for the day show that it was to be spent in thoughts and exercises on the character and ways of God. The services of the sanctuary were peculiar to the day (Num. xxviii. 9; Lev. xxiv. 3-9); and the laws of Moses were read (Acts xv. 21), "teaching Jacob God's judgments and Israel His law" (Deut. xxxiii. 10).

Josephus alludes to the origin, design, and observance of the day in his discourse against Apion (ii. 18).

Jesus instructed his disciples by His example as well as words, to keep the law of the Sabbath, and to works of kindness and mercy, and exercise of piety (Matt. xii. 1-13; Mark iii. 1-5; Luke iv. 61, vi. 9), and to keep the day in its true spirit, as a day of personal privilege and benevolent usefulness, for "the Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath."

In Colossians ii. 16, Paul argues from the fact of the Sabbath having been superseded by the Lord's day.

Sabbath Day's Journey. The distance between the tents and the ark in the camp, which was 2000 cubits. The common cubit of 18 inches would be 3000 feet, and the sacred cubit of 19.05 inches would be 4762 feet. The English mile is 5280 feet.

Sack'cloth (Heb. SAK; Gr. sakkos). A coarse stuff, of a dark color, often made of goats'-hair (Is. iii. 24; xv. 3), and the coarse, black hair of the camel. In great calamities — in penitence, in trouble — the Jews were sack-cloth about their bodies (Gen. xxxvii. 34). The robe resembled a sack, and was confined by a girdle of the same material (2 Sam. iii. 31). In times of joy those who were clad in sackcloth took it off, and put on their usual clothing (Is. xxxii. 11). See DRESS.

Sac'rifice (Heb. MINCHAH, to give; KORBAN, to approach; ZEBACH, to slaughter animals; OLAH, whole burnt-offering; SHELEM, peace-offering; CHATTATH, sin-offering; ASHAM, trespass-offering; Gr. thusia (Matt. ix. 13); doron, gift (Matt. ii. 11); eidolothuton, idol-sacrifice (Acts xv. 29); prosphora, offering (Acts xxi. 26). The first recorded sacrifices were those of Cain and Abel (Minchah). Of Noah, after the flood (Gen. viii. 20); a burnt-offering (olah). The sacrifice of Isaac (Gen. xxii. 1-13), the only instance of human sacrifice, having been commanded by God as a test of faith, but not actually offered. In the burnt-offerings of Job (Job i. 5, xlii. 8), the offering was accompanied by repentance and prayer. The sacrifices of the Mosaic period commenced with the offering of the Passover (Ex. xxiv.). The law prescribed five kinds of sacrifices: the burnt-offering, the meat-offering (unbloody), the peace-offering (bloody), the sin-offering, and the trespass-offering. In the consecration of Aaron and his sons (Lev. viii.), there was first a sin-offering, as an approach to God; next, a burnt-offering, typical of dedication to His service, and the meat-offering of thanksgiving; and further, a peace-offering for the congregation, which was accepted by the miraculous descent of fire upon the altar. This was ever afterwards the order of the sacrifices. The sacrifices regularly offered in the Temple were of burnt-offerings: first, the daily burnt-offerings (Ex. xxix. 38-42); second, the double burnt-offerings on the Sabbath (Num. xxviii. 9, 10); third, the burnt-offerings at the great feasts (Num. xxviii. 11, xxix. 39).

THE MULE OF SYRIA.

Sad'ducees (named from ZADOK, the high-priest). A religious sect of the Jews at the time of Christ, who refused to accept that the oral law was the revelation of God to the Israelites, and believed exclusively in the written law. They joined with the Pharisees in asking for a sign from heaven (Matt. xvi. 1, 4, 6), but opposed their doctrines otherwise. The Sadducees never exercised the influence that the Pharisees did, and were more tolerant. They rejected the belief in a resurrection (Matt. xxii. 23), nor did they believe in future rewards and punishments. The high-priest at the time of Christ was of this sect, and the doctrine of the resurrection preached by Christ rendered the Sadducees especially bitter against him (Acts iv. 1, v. 17), but he did not censure the Sadducees as much as the Pharisees.

Sal'cah (Deut. iii. 10; Josh. xiii. 11). A city on the extreme east limit of Bashan and Gad (1 Chr. v. 11). There was a district of the same name (Josh. xii. 5), belonging to Og. Now called Sulkhad, at the south end of Jebel Hauran. The great Euphrates desert begins near this city and extends to the Persian Gulf. About three miles in circuit. In it is a castle on a lofty (volcanic) hill, 400 feet high. An inscription on a gate is dated A. D. 246, and one on a tombstone, A. D. 196.

Sa'lem. SHALEM (peace). Jerome said Salem was 8 Roman miles from Scythopolis (Bethshean), and in his day contained the ruins of the palace of Melchizidek. Some have identified it with Jerusalem. The plain of Salem has the mountains Ebal and Gerizim, with Shechem, on its west end, and the hills on which Salem stands on its east end. In Psalm lxxvi. 2, Salem means Jerusalem.

Sa'lim (John iii. 23). Near Ænon. 6 miles south of Bethshean and 2 miles west of Jordan is a site of ruins on the Tell Ridghah, with a Mohammedan tomb, called Shekh Salim. The brook in Wady Chusneh runs close by, and a copious fountain gushes out near the tomb, while rivulets wind about in all directions. "Here is much water."

Salt, City of (Josh. xv. 62). In the wilderness, near Engedi and the Dead Sea. It may be the site is found in the modern Nahr Maleh, which is near the Wady Amreh, which is believed to be Gomorrah. The Valley of Salt. Two memorable victories occurred here: that of David over the Edomites (2 Sam. viii. 13; Ps. lx.); and that of Amaziah over the same people (2 K. xiv. 7). The site is lost. It has been located by some in the plain at the south end of the Dead Sea.

ANCIENT TEMPLE INTERIOR AT BAALBEK.

Salva'tion (Heb. YESHAH, YESHA; Gr. soteria). Deliverance from temporal evils or earthly destruction (Ex. xiv. 13). GOD is figuratively called "salvation" (Ps. xxvii. 1). JESUS CHRIST has provided the salvation of the Gospel, and is pre-eminently "the SAVIOUR" (Matt. [illegible]).

Sama'ria (watch mountain). Six miles N.W. of Shechem, on a hill which is surrounded by a broad basin-shaped valley. Here OMRI built the capital of the kingdom of Israel, on a hill which he bought (B. C. 925) of SHEMAR for two talents of silver (1 K. xvi. 24). The site is singularly beautiful, and is always admired by every visitor. Ahab built a temple to Baal, with images; and that part of the city was called "the city of the house of Baal" (1 K. xvi. 22), which was destroyed by Jehu (2 K. x. 25).

The Syrians besieged it in 901 B. C. (1 K. xx. 1), and in 892 B. C. (ib. vi. 24, vii. 20), and in both cases without success.

Shalmanezer, king of Assyria, took it after a siege of 3 years, B. C. 721 (2 K. xviii. 9, 10), and carried the people away to Assyria. Esarhaddon repeopled the country from Assyria, and these citizens were called Samaritans. Josephus describes it as a very strong city in the time of John Hyrcanus, who took it (B. C. 109) after a year's siege (Ant. xiii. 10, 2). After this time the Jews inhabited the city, until the age of Alexander Jannæus, and until Pompey restored it to the descendants of the original inhabitants (probably the Syro-Macedonians).

COIN OF RHODES.

Herod the Great rebuilt it with some splendor, and called it SEBASTE (Augustus), after his patron, the Emperor Augustus. The wall is 20 stadia in circuit. A magnificent temple was dedicated to Cæsar. 6000 veteran soldiers were colonized here, and a large district given them for their support (Ant. xv. 8, 5; B. J. i. 20, 3, etc.)

The remains of the ancient city are mostly colonnades of Herod's time, or older. There is a group of 16 in a recess near the bottom of the hill, another of 16 near the top, and a long line of columns running around the hill, on one side, on a broad terrace, of which 100 are now standing, and a great many others fallen. The whole hill is covered with rubbish, the remains of a large and well-built city.

The city is not mentioned in the New Testament, and it was commanded, "Into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not."

Samaria, The District of. Was so called before the city was named (1 K. xiii. 32), and included all the tribes who accepted Jeroboam as king, on both sides of the Jordan, and the royal residence was Shechem (1 K. xiii. 25). The name Samaritan became contracted, as the kingdom was divided from time to time. The first limitation was probably the losing of Simeon and Dan. The second, when Pul, king of Assyria (B. C. 771), carried away the Reubenites and Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh (1 Chr. v. 26); the third, when Galilee and Gilead were taken by the Assyrians (2 K. xv. 29); and the fourth, when just before the last king of Israel, Hoshea, was deposed, Asher, Issachar, and Zebulon, and also Ephraim and Manasseh, sent men up to the Passover at Jerusalem (2 Chr. xx. 1–26); in Hezekiah's reign. Thus, the kingdom which once extended from the sea to the desert of Syria, and from Bethel to Dan in the north, was divided, until only the city of Samaria, with a few villages, remained to the name, and even these were wiped out by Shalmanezer (2 K. xvii. 5–26), who placed other people there instead of the Jews (v. 24), B. C. 721.

These new-comers were idolaters, and brought their idols with them (2 K. xvii. 29), and although instructed by Jewish priests, never became pure worshipers of Israel's God. When Judah and Benjamin returned from the Captivity and began to build the Temple, the Samaritans asked permission to assist; and on being refused, they petitioned the king of Assyria and had the work stopped (Ezr. iv.). From this time the "adversaries of Judah and Benjamin" became open enemies, and the feud grew year by year more bitter. In the year B. C. 409, Manasseh, a priest who was expelled from Jerusalem for an unlawful marriage, obtained permission from the Persian king to build a temple on Mt. Gerizim, and made a copy of the law, which was the 5 books of Moses only (called the Pentateuch), and they claimed for this copy the highest antiquity, even above any copy in possession of the Jews.

The Samaritans claimed from Alexander an exemption from taxes on the Sabbatical year, on the plea that they were Jews; but on examination their claim was found to be false. The woman of Samaria also claimed to be a descendant of Jacob, when talking with Jesus (John vi. 12).

The boundaries, according to Josephus, in the time of Christ were from Jenin to Acrabatta. (See MAP.) The soil productions, etc., are described under EPHRAIM and ISSACHAR.

FALLOW DEER. (1 Ki. iv. 22, 23.)

Sam'son (Heb. SHIMSHON, strong). Son of MANOAH, in the tribe of DAN (Josh. xv. 33). The account of his birth, life, and exploits, is given in Judg. xiii., xvi. He was the strongest man, and celebrated for his fearless and wonderful acts, for his moral infirmities, and for his tragical end. His sins brought him in great distress and misery (Heb. xi. 32).

Sanbal'lat. A Moabite of HORONAIM, but a resident of Samaria (Neh. ii. 10, 19), and a great enemy of the Jews. He was an officer in the service of Artaxerxes (Neh. iv. 2). See NEHEMIAH in the HISTORY OF THE BOOKS. His daughter married Manasseh, the high priest, Eliashib's grandson, son of Joiada (Tobiah, a companion of his, had "allied" himself to Eliashib's family in the same manner — Neh. xiii. 4), on account of a settled policy of Sanballat, Tobiah, and Geshem, who concerted together for the injury of the Jews. Nehemiah expelled Manasseh for marrying a Gentile wife. Sanballat attempted to entice Nehemiah from Jerusalem to some village near Ono (vi.), but the scheme failed, for the Tirshatha suspected mischief. Nothing further is related of Sanballat in the Scripture, and Josephus continues the history in rather a fabulous manner.

Sanctifica'tion. SANCTIFY (KADASH, to sanctify), (Gen. ii. 3); (Gr. hagiazo), (Matt. xxii. 17, 19). To be holy. In the O. T. it denotes the consecration of a person to God (Ex. xxxi. 13). To make holy, or to set apart for God (Gen. ii. 3; Ex. xix. 23). The tabernacle, altar, priests, etc., were solemnly set apart and sanctified for divine service (Lev. viii. 10–12). A day was set apart for fasting and prayer (Joel i. 14), and the Sabbath was so regarded (Deut. v. 12). In the N. T. the doctrine is the making truly and perfectly holy what was before defiled and sinful, and is a progressive work of divine grace upon the soul justified by the love of Christ. After a gradual cleansing from sin the sinner is presented "unspotted before the throne of God," which is the work of the Holy Spirit (John xiv. 26, xvii. 17). The ultimate sanctification of every believer in Christ is a covenant of mercy, purchased on the cross.

Sar'dis. A city on a spur of the mountain range Tmolus, about 2 ms. from the river Hermus, the ancient residence of the kings of Lydia. Its original name, in the time of Omphale, was HYDE. It was naturally, from its convenient position and the fertile region surrounding it, a commercial mart of importance. Chestnuts were first made an article of commerce here, and called Nuts of Sardis. Pliny says the art of dyeing wool was invented here, and Phrygia furnished the material from its vast flocks. The carpets of Sardis were very celebrated. The Spartans sent to Sardis for gold to cover the face of Apollo at Amyclæ. The sands of the Pactolus, a brook from Tmolus running near Sardis, furnished the gold. Sardis was a slave mart in very early times, and here traders first became stationary, as distinguished from traveling merchants. It was taken by Antiochus the Great, B. C. 214, and afterward became subject to Pergamus.

THE HOOP'OE. "SOLOMON'S BIRD."

Saul (Heb. SHAUL, asked for). 1. Saul of Rehoboth by the river; one of the early kings of Edom (Gen. xxxvi. 37, 38); called SHAUL in 1 Chr. i. 48. — 2. Saul, the son of Kish, of the tribe of Benjamin; he was the first king of Israel; anointed by Samuel privately (1 Sam. ix., x.). Afterwards Saul was elected in a solemn assembly at Mizpah by the determination of the miraculous lot. Saul was remarkably tall, and of a courageous disposition (1 Sam. ix. 2, x. 23). His immediate act upon his election was to head an army and oppose the invasion of the Ammonites. He found them, led by their king Nahash, at Bezek, and totally routed them (1 Sam. xi. 11). After this triumph, Saul was publicly anointed at Gilgal by Samuel (1 Sam. xii.). From this period Saul's reign was marked by a series of transgressions; he assumed upon the priestly office and disregarded God's injunction by ordering the offering up of sacrifices (1 Sam. xiii. 9) during his contest with the Philistines. He rebelled against Jehovah in regard to the destruction of the Amalekites (1 Sam. xiv. 48). Saul behaved with the utmost cruelty to David — twice attempting his life (1 Sam. xviii. 10, 11, xix. 10). He committed a great atrocity in the murder of Ahimelech, the priest (1 Sam. xxii.), and of eighty-five other priests of the house of Eli, as well as the inhabitants of Nob. He forced David into opposition, who twice mercifully spared his life (1 Sam. xxiv. 3–7, xxvi.).

Saul committed a further offense in consulting the witch of Endor (1 Sam. xxviii. 7), although he had previously expelled all practicers of magical arts (xxviii. 3). At this interview he was warned that he and his sons would die the following day. On that day he met the Philistines in Gilboa, on the plain of Esdraëlon, and after seeing the utter rout of his army and the death of his three sons (Jonathan of the number), he killed himself upon the battlefield. The bodies of Saul and his sons were exposed by the enemy upon the wall of Bethshan, but were secretly removed by the men of Jabesh-Gilead, who, in the remembrance of their former obligations to Saul (1 Sam. xi.), gave the bodies honorable burial. Their bones were afterwards removed by David to Zelah, and buried in the sepulchre of Kish. Saul was anointed B. C. 1791.

Saw (Heb. MASSOR). The saws on the monuments are single-handed, the teeth slant toward the handle, opposite to ours, and they were generally of bronze. The handle was fastened to the blade by leather strips. A two-handed saw was found at Nimrud (1 K. vii. 9; 2 Sam. xii. 31).

SAMARIA — MEDITERRANEAN SEA IN THE DISTANCE.

School (Gr. schole). A place where disciples meet and learn from their teacher (Acts xix. 9). The Arab school is often primitive — being a room without floor, where the boys sit on mats, on the bare ground, and the apparatus consists of a board a foot square, and a piece of chalk for each boy and the teacher. All read in concert, and spell by naming each letter as we do; as noon (n), fe (f), ta (t), nafata (naptha). Those who are to go into the church or any public service, receive a careful training in all necessary arts and sciences. The foremost men are acquainted with the literature of their own and foreign people, both ancient and modern.

Sci'ence (L. scientia, knowledge; Heb. MADDA; Gr. gnosis). In Dan. i. 4, and 1 Tim. vi. 20, the original means knowledge and not science.

In Wickliffe's Bible, in Luke i. 77, there is the sentence "science of health," instead of "knowledge of salvation," in the present edition. In Col. ii. 3, is "wisdom and science" for "wisdom and knowledge," as now written, and in 1 Tim. vi. 20, for science in the old edition has "kunyinge" (cunning).

Scor'pion (Heb. AKRAB; Gr. skorpios). One of the largest and most malignant of all the insect tribes. It resembles the lobster. Those found in S. Europe seldom exceed 2 ins. in length, but, in tropical climates, they are 10 or 12. They live upon other insects, and kill and devour their own species also. When it is placed in danger, and sees no way of escape, it will sting itself to death. Their sting is very poisonous; it occasions great pain and inflammation, with alternate chills and burning. The scorpion of Judæa when curled up resembles an egg; hence the comparison in Luke xi. 11, 12; Rev. ix. 3–10.

Sea. This word is used in several ways: 1. Ocean (Gen. i. 10). — 2. The Mediterranean Sea (Deut. xi. 24). — 3. Any inland lake or sea (Ez. xlvii. 8). — Any great water-course, as the Nile or Euphrates (Is. xix. 5).

Salt Sea, The. The most ancient name for the Dead Sea (Gen. xiv. 3; Num. xxxiv. 3; Deut. iii. 17; Josh. iii. 16). It is called the Sea of the Arabah (plain), in Deut. iii. 17, and the East Sea by Joel (ii. 20), Ezekiel (xlvii. 18), and by Zechariah (xiv. 8). In 2 Esd. v. 7) it is called the Sodomitish Sea. Josephus calls it Lake Asphaltitis. The name Dead Sea was given by the Greeks (Pausanias, v. 7, and Galen, iv. 9); and by the Latins (Justin, xxxiv. 3). The Arabic name is Bahr Lut (Sea of Lot). The Dead Sea is the 3d of the lakes in the course of the Jordan, lying deepest in the valley at its S. end. It is 46 ms. long from N. to S., and 10 ms. wide, and its surface is 1,317 feet below the ocean-level (Lynch). The depression was first noticed, in our day, in 1837. The great heat of the region carries off the water by evaporation. The Jordan flows into the N. end. 12 ms. by the path) down the E. shore there enters the Zurka Main (the ancient Callirrhoe — the En Eglaim), and, 8 ms. further down the shore, the Mojib (Arnon); and in the lower bay of the lake, there are 10 or 12 streams, large and small: the largest being the Wady el Jeib, which drains ⅗ds of the Arabah. On the W. side, the first large stream is the Kedron (Wady el Nar), 5 to 6 ms. from the N. end of the lake; 8 ms. further S. is Wady Khureitum; and beyond, at intervals of 3 or 4 ms., there are a great number of smaller streams all around the sea, with or without names. There is no visible outlet. The sea is divided into 2 parts by the peninsula of Lisan (tongue, Heb. LASHEN), which is about 9 ms. long, from N.E. to S.W., 4 to 6 ms. wide, and joined to the E. shore by a neck 5 ms. wide. The channel of the sea is 3 to 5 ms. wide opposite the Lisan, and is said to be fordable at the time of the lowest water, in October. The water of the main basin is 1,300 ft. deep in the deepest part, opposite Ain Terabeh. The S. bay (Josh. xv. 2) is very shallow, varying from 12 to 3 ft. Careful observations have found that 20 million cubic ft. of water are poured daily into the sea, while its evaporating capacity is 24 million in the hottest months, and less than 20 in the rainy season. (See Humboldt.) It is believed that the level rises 10 to 15 ft. during the winter rains — falling again during the summer.

The mountains are close to the shore on both the east and west sides, and are quite uniform in hight throughout the whole length, the eastern range being much the higher, and more broken by ravines. The general color is brown or reddish-brown on the east (being sandstone, red and yellow, with porphyry), and gray, with whitish tints, on the west side (being limestone over sandstone). The only vegetation is found near the springs, and in the wadies, where palms, tamarisks, mimosa, osiers, oleanders, and a variety of trees and shrubs, besides grain and flowers, form a grateful relief to the general desolation. A plateau divides the mountains on the east side, half-way up, extending from the head of the sea south as far as the Zurka Main, which is visible, near sunset, from Jerusalem. The western side is divided into several strata, which are quite distinct; and there are three parallel beaches, one above the other — the highest, 50 feet above the water, extending from Wady Zuweirah north to Ain Jidy, nearly 20 miles. Above Ain Jidy there is but one beach (covered with angular bits of flint, not rounded gravel), which skirts the mountains, being widest at the mouths of the largest brooks, as at the Kidron (Wady Nar) and Ain Terabeh, where it is more than half a mile wide. Many of the headlands come down steep into the water, cutting the beach in two, and therefore cannot be passed, except by climbing. There is a line of driftwood bordering the beach, and marking the high-water line, all around the sea, brought down by the Jordan and other streams, gray and bleached, and some of it having the appearance of great antiquity. On the west shore of the south bay is the Salt Mountain of Sodom, called by the Arabs Khasm Usdum. (See GEOLOGY.) There is an island in the sea, west of the Jordan, lying 300 feet from the shore at low water, circular, and 400 feet in diameter. Stones and driftwood entirely cover the island. Some suppose the square stones found here are remains of ancient structures, because there are no similar stones on the shore. The plains at the north and south ends of the sea are flat, barren, stony, gently sloping up from the water, crusted with salt, soft and slimy to the foot, and destitute of vegetation, except a few reeds cluster round a spring. The eastern side of the south bay is an exception, where the vegetation, fed by copious streams of sweet water, is abundant, and with great variety of trees, plants, flowers, and grasses.

The water of the sea is the heaviest known in all the world, being 12¼ lbs. to the gallon, distilled water weighing 9¾ lbs. This weight is due to the mineral salts held in solution. Eggs float with one-third exposed above the surface. The color is like the ocean, a greenish blue. The Jordan may be traced for several miles by its muddy color, as it flows into the clear water of the sea.

The analysis of the water of the Dead Sea by many scientific men, gives generally the same result, with but little variation, which is, that there are salts of magnesia, soda, lime, potash, manganese, ammonia, aluminium, and iron; and of these there are chlorides, sulphates, and bromides. The quantity averages from 13 to 26 parts in 100, according to the season of the year and the part of the sea from which the sample was taken.

Except the absence of vegetation, the appearance of the sea is that of savage and beautiful wildness. The presence of many kinds of birds and wild fowl enlivens the scene. All along the shores, wherever a brook flows in, there the cane-brakes, trees, and shrubs harbor partridges, snipe, ducks, doves, hawks, larks, quails, besides many kinds not yet named, or not identified, in great flocks. Frogs are also to be seen in the marshes (not the salt marshes), and hares in the thickets.

There has been no change in the size of the sea within the historic period; except the filling up of the south bay by silt from the rivers, and the destruction of the cities of the plain is believed to have been independent of the position or character of the sea, or the bed in which it lies. See SODOM, and GEOLOGY.

"THE NORTH BAY OF THE SALT SEA, AT THE SOUTH END OF JORDAN." — Josh. xviii. 19.

Seal (Heb. HOTHAM; Gr. sphragis). The seal takes the place of our signature in the East. A name or device, well known as belonging to a certain person, was engraved on a seal of a ring, or on a small cylinder, and this was stamped on the papyrus, or parchment, with ink, or was pressed on a piece of clay, or wax, which was attached to the document. Many seals and cylinders of this kind have been found among the ancient ruins in Assyria and Egypt. Seals were used by the ancient kings in signing or witnessing their treaties or decrees, and there is a piece of clay bearing the impression of both the Assyrian and Egyptian kings' seals in the British Museum, deposited there by Layard, who found it in Assyria, and who thinks it the compact of Sabacho and of Sennacherib.

SEAL OF EGYPTIAN AND ASSYRIAN KINGS.

MARRIAGE-RING.

Doors of tombs, or houses, or treasuries, or any place that was to be guarded from intrusion, were closed, and a piece of clay stuck over the fastening, and this was impressed with the seal of the keeper or owner, so that the least meddling with the clay would break it (Job xxxviii. 14). The modern Orientals carry a seal hung by a string or chain to the neck, or on the finger-ring.

Specimens of engraved seals and gems are found in great numbers in the museums of antiquities, some of which are most valuable as confirmations of history. One in Alnwick Museum bears the name of Osirtasen I, 3000 B. C. See the ring of Thothmes, and of Suphis, pages 32, 38, and the Gnostic amulet, or magical seal of Abraxas, p. 11.

SAMARIA FROM THE RAVINE.

Seir (rugged). MOUNT (Gen. xiv. 6), and LAND OF (Gen. xxxii. 3, xxxvi. 30). The mountain and district on the east side of the Arabah, from Akabah to the Dead Sea (Deut. ii. 1, 8). Seir, the Horite, inhabited the land (ib. 20). Called GEBALA (mountain) by Josephus; and the northern section, from Petra, is still called JEBAIL by the Arabs. Its north border was probably Mt. Halâk (naked), a range of white cliffs which run across the Arabah 8 ms. south of the Dead Sea (Josh. xi. 17). Esau drove out the Horites who dwelt in rock-hewn dwellings (Deut. ii. 12), probably such as are seen now in Petra, and changed its name to EDOM. Ezekiel prophesied the desolation of Mt. Seir, which seems to have been fulfilled in the present condition of the country (Ez. xxxv.). — 2. SEIR (Josh. xv. 10). In Judah, between Kirjath Jearim and Beth Shemesh. The village of SARIS, on the ridge between Wady Aly and W. Ghurab, is probably near the ancient site, which is rugged enough to bear the name.

Seleu'cia. The seaport of Antioch in Syria. On the sea, near the mouth of the river Orontes. Paul (and Barnabas) sailed from here on his first journey (Acts xiii. 4), and probably landed there on his return (xiv. 26). Named after the first Seleucus, who built the fort and made the harbor, and was buried here B. C. 175. It was a free city in Paul's time Pliny, v. 18). The remains of the ancient works are still sound, and in use, especially the two piers of the harbor called Paul and Barnabas.

Seleu'cus IV, Philop'ator (loving his country). King of ASIA (2 Macc. iii. 3), son and successor of ANTIOCHUS THE GREAT. After his father's death he ascended the throne. He was murdered after a reign of twelve years, B. C. 175, by HELIODORUS (Dan. xi. 20). His son gained the crown in B. C. 162 (1 Macc. vii. 1; 2 Macc. xiv. 1).

Sennach'erib (Heb. ZIN-AKKI-IRIB, the moon increases, brothers). King of Assyria. He ascended the throne B. C. 702, and in the fourteenth year of Hezekiah attacked the fenced cities of Judah, and took them (2 K. xviii. 13–16) after having successfully made various war expeditions. He attacked Babylon B. C. 699, and then made a second invasion into Palestine. Hezekiah had sought the protection of Egypt, upon which Sennacherib marched into Egypt, and sent proposals to Hezekiah (2 K. ix. 7). Hezekiah not submitting, caused the king of Assyria to send him a threatening written message. Whilst Sennacherib was awaiting the result, his camp received a divine visitation, by which, in one night, one hundred and eighty-five thousand of his men were destroyed (2 K. xviii. 12), on which the king fled to his capital. He reigned for twenty-two years. He appears to have been the first king who fixed the seat of government permanently at Nineveh, which he adorned. Of his closing life we read in 2 K. xix. 37; Is. xxxvii. 38.

Se'phar (Gen. x. 30). A mount in the East. Now called ZAFAR, an ancient seaport town in Yemen, in the province of Hadramaut (Huzarmaveth), Arabia, between Oman and Mirbat, on the shore of the Indian Ocean, at the foot of a lofty mountain. Frankincense is only found on the mountain of Zafar. It was the capital of the Himyerite kings. There was a Christian church at Zafar in A. D. 343.

Sepharva'im (2 K. xix. 13; Is. xxxvii. 13; 2 K. xvii. 24). A city of Assyria, from which people were brought to repeople Samaria. Now SIPPARA, on the Euphrates, above Babylon (Ptol. v. 18). A tradition affirms that Noah buried near this city the records of the antediluvian world. It was a great seat of learning. The sun was the chief object of worship, and they burnt their children in the fire to Adrameleeh and Anameleeh, the male and female powers of the sun (2 K. xvii. 31), which pagan worship they carried with them to Samaria.

THE FOUR-HORNED SHEEP OF SYRIA.

Seph'ela. Greek form of the Hebrew HAS SHEFELAH, the ancient name for the plains between the hills of Samaria and Judæa and the Mediterranean Sea. Its northern part is called SHARON (Deut. i. 7; Josh. ix. 1, and in many other passages). Between Ekron and Gaza there were 47 cities besides their villages. It is one of the most productive districts of Palestine, and yearly produces fine crops of grain and fruit. It was anciently the grain-producing district, and was the subject of constant contention between the Israelites and Philistines.

Sep'tuagint (L. septuaginta, the seventy). The most ancient Greek version of the O. T. See HISTORY OF THE BOOKS. So named from the sacred idea attached to the number 70.

Ser'pent (Heb. NAHASH, any serpent, but especially the cobra). The serpent is alluded to in many passages in the Bible, and nearly always for its typical qualities, or habits, as intensifying similar things in the human family. Satan is called "The Old Serpent" (Rev. xii. 9; 2 Cor. xi. 1.) See ADDER, ZAHAL, TANNIN, SARAF; Gr. herpeton, ophis.

BRAZEN SERPENT SET UP BY MOSES.

Serpent Charming. From the earliest times in the East certain persons have exercised a remarkable power over poisonous snakes, and this is noticed in James iii. 7. The horned cerastes and the hooded snakes are the kinds usually handled. They do not always take out the poison-fangs. The secret of the power seems to be the simple courage and confidence of the men. They use shrill flutes and drums, which seem to attract the attention of the serpents.

Seven Churches of Asia, and Patmos, The. ASIA MINOR holds the next place to Palestine in the Christian heart, being so full of precious associations, which lend a charm to its scenery, and consecrate its venerable ruins. History, both sacred and classic, has given enduring fame to every harbor, valley, mountain, river, or brook, every city and hamlet, and peopled them with the mythological shades of the heathen gods, or the more real forms of celebrated men, from Pagan Troy to Christian Antioch.

It is the land of Homer, one of the earliest and greatest of poets; of Herodotus, the father of classic history; of Paul, the great Apostle, and chief among the founders of the Christian Church; and a host of brilliant men and women whose names are familiar in history and poetry.

Empires have been lost and won on its fields and in its harbors, by Greeks, Romans, Persians, Christians, and Moslems. During two hundred years, the Crusaders marched in countless thousands over its rugged mountains and rapid streams, inspired with the love of arms, the thirst for glory, enthusiasm for the cross, and fired by hatred of the Moslem. For six hundred years the followers of Mohammed have held the land in a humiliating bondage, aggravated by fanatical hate, intensified by persecution of the Christian people, the desecration and ruin of their churches, and the mutilation or destruction of the monumental art of its past glorious days.

In EPHESUS, desolated Christians deplore the extinction of the first candlestick of the Revelation. The desolation is entire. The temple of Diana, or the church of Mary, will equally elude the search of the curious traveler. The populousness of SMYRNA, on a new site, is derived from Franks, Armenians, and Turks. The God of Mohammed, without a rival or a son, is invoked in the mosques of PERGAMUS and THYATIRA; SARDIS is reduced to a miserable village. PHILADELPHIA alone has been saved, by prophesy or courage. Among the Greek colonies and churches of Asia, Philadelphia only is still erect, a column in a scene of ruins; a pleasing example that the paths of honor and safety may sometimes be the same. The circus and stately theatres of LAODICEA are now peopled with wolves and foxes, and its costly marbles and beautiful sculptures quarried for lime and building materials.

Asia Minor is the natural centre of the Turkish Empire, and is a land of ruins. Its shores are indented with many good harbors, but — except one or two — without trade, shipping, and many even without a fishing-boat. Cities and villages have given place to deserts; and the richest plains are left uncultivated. The fine monuments of all ages are rapidly crumbling beneath the hammers and saws of the Moslem.

GATE OF NABLOUS.

It was the custom of the Romans to send exiles to the most barren and desolate islands; and it is said by Irenæus (and Eusebius, who follows him) that John beheld the visions of the Apocalypse about the close of the reign of the Emperor Domitian. Tertullian relates that John was thrown into a cask of oil (boiling) at Rome; but was saved from injury by a miracle, and then sent to Patmos. It may be as well to note, that this mode of punishment is not recorded by any other writer as having ever been used at Rome; and that the story is probably a tradition only, without foundation.

Following the New Testament hints (for they give no direct account), we find John at Ephesus, where some persecution, or tumult (such as occurred in Paul's case), caused his flight or exile, and drove him to Patmos. While there, his greatest solicitude was for the Seven Churches in Asia, for whose warning and correction he wrote the Revelation. See PATMOS.

Sev'enty, The. 1. The seventy disciples of Jesus sent out (Luke x. 17). — 2. Is also used to denote the Septuagint.

Shech'em (ridge). SICHEM (Gen. xxxiii. 18). It is on the water-shed of the ridge dividing the waters of the Jordan and the Mediterranean Sea, between Ebal and Gerizim (Judg. ix. 7). Called Sychar in John iv. 5, in the story of the meeting of Jesus and the woman of Samaria. Now Nablus (Neapolis, so named by Vespasian — Jos., B. J., vi. 8, 1). Also known as Mabortha (Pliny v. 13). The situation is a favored one, and excites the admiration of all travelers, Dr. Clarke saying, that "there is nothing finer in all Palestine." The valley is sheltered by a high mountain on each side, and only about 1500 ft. wide, and elevated 1800 ft. above the sea. Water flows from the city E. and W. to the Jordan and to the Mediterranean Sea. The valley is full of gardens, orchards of all kinds of fruits, watered by fountains, and enlivened by the songs of birds.

Shech'inah (habitation). Properly applied to visible manifestations of God's presence. Thus, Num. v. 3, in the midst whereof I dwell is rendered by the Targum "among whom my shekinah is dwelling." Difference of opinion exists as to whether there were any continuous visible manifestations of God's presence in the Holy of Holies over the cappereth or mercy-seat. Jewish authorities hold there was, and that this shekinah did not return to the second temple. Many Christian writers deny its continuous visibility even in the first.

Sheep. Heb. AYIL, a ram (Gen. xv. 9); KAR, a lamb; KEBES, a he-lamb (xxx. 40); fem. KIBSAH, ewe-lamb (Gen. xxi. 28); ZŌN, ZŌNA, ZŌNAH, a flock of small cattle (Gen. iv. 4); RAHEL, RACHEL, fem. "ewe" (Gen. xxxi. 38); SEH, one of a flock, i. e., sheep or goat (Gen. xxii. 7); TALEH, a lamb, young and tender.

Of the Syrian sheep there are two varieties: the Bedaween, which have long and thick tails, but differ in no other respect from the larger kinds of sheep among us. The others have very large and broad tails, with a small end which turns back upon itself; they are a substance between fat and marrow, which is not eaten separately, but mixed with the lean meat in many of their dishes, and also used instead of butter. A common sheep of this sort, without the head, feet, skin, and entrails, weighs from 60 to 80 pounds, of which the tail itself is usually 10 or 15, and when fattened, twice or thrice that weight. These sheep are often fed by hand, as the fat of the tail is valuable for table use as butter. Vast flocks of sheep are driven into Syria from the high-lands of the Hauran and north Syria, and find a ready market. The four-horned variety is not esteemed the best, as the wool is not so fine or long as that of others. The Aoudad is a species which lives among the highest rocks and is a very active animal. It is about three feet high at the shoulder, and the horns are two feet long, and very useful for making implements.

Shem. Eldest son of Noah (Gen. v. 32), settled between Japheth and Ham, the country from the Mediterranean Sea to the Indian Ocean, and from Lydia to the Red Sea, including Syria (Aram), Chaldea (Arphaxad), Assyria (Asshur), Persia (Elam), and Arabia (Joktan). A special blessing was promised to Shem (Gen. ix. 27).

Shemit'ic. The Shemitic languages (see Gen. x. 21) are also called Aryan, and Syro-Arabic. The extent of this family of languages may be indicated by the boundaries — the highlands of Armenia on the north, the Tigris and its mountain ranges on the east, the Red Sea, Levant, and Asia Minor on the west — the south is limited by the ocean. The uniform climate of this vast region has tended to keep the people to their unvarying customs from age to age, whether in the cities, or in the country, or on the trackless waste.

The Old Testament has traces of the changes in the languages of Palestine and Assyria, especially in the fragments of ancient poems, which contain many Aramaic words not used anywhere else in the Scriptures. The natural tendency of the Aryans has been, in all cases, to keep their language and customs free from any mixture from their neighbors; adopting very few words and very few habits from other people. Their language, religion, and manners were all unsocial, despotic, conservative; and what treasures they borrowed from the nations around them were not assimilated, but kept entire as when first found.

The Phœnician was so closely allied to the Hebrew as to be used in common: and was more widely distributed (by sailors and merchants) than any other ancient speech.

The successor to Aramaic is Syriac, dating from the 2d century, A. D., in which there is a wealth of foreign works, especially Greek. The Aramaic, after a career of eleven centuries as the sacred language of the Israelites, has, according to a law which works the same in all cases, passed away.

Eastern Aramaic is the language of the Targums and of the Pharisees; while the Western branch is the language of the New Testament of the Christians of the first century. As the sacred dialect disappeared from the popular mind, the works of the scholars rose in importance, in such works as the Targums. The Talmud was the growth of the ages dating from the Captivity to A. D. 426, but there are few additions to our knowledge of the languages used in the work.

Of the Palmyrene dialect the only remains are the inscriptions dating from A. D. 49 to A. D. 250, which contain words borrowed from the Arabic, Greek, and Latin.

The sacred dialect became classic, and confined to books, after the fall of Jerusalem, the chief seat of its schools being at Edessa until A. D. 440, when it was removed to Nisibis. Since the 8th century it has declined in interest, and was but partly restored to favor by the facilities afforded by the discovery of printing. Chaldaic paraphrases of the Scriptures have thrown much light on manners and customs, and on certain difficult passages of the O. T., especially those claimed by Christians to be prophesies of the Messiah, which are proved beyond a question, by the paraphrases, to have been so regarded by the Jews in all ages, before the appearance of Jesus the Christ.

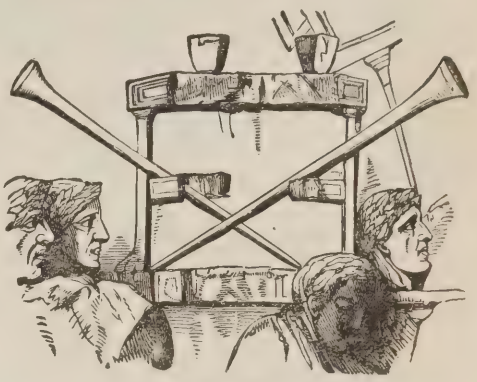
The Arabic language shows by internal evidence its great antiquity, and its local habitation from the beginning in Arabia. Palgrave says that in Central Arabia, where very little or no foreign influence has ever been felt, that the Arabic is spoken now in the same purity as when Mohammed wrote the Koran, 1200 years ago. It is said in a legend that the language was formed by the union of several dialects, of which the Koreish was the leading one, and in which the Koran was written.

The Arabic is especially rich in words and in grammatical forms, and in greater number and variety than any other language. There are a hundred names for the lion, a thousand for God, and similar numbers for other familiar things.

Its chief value to the Bible student is the vast mass of words that it furnishes in illustration of Hebrew words, by which many obscure passages have been explained. By its help in the names of modern villages, the sites of many ancient cities have been identified. See CAPERNAUM.



RUINS—BEULAH—HAURAN

Shep'herd (Heb. ROEH, shepherd, pastor). (Gen. xlix. 4; Jer. ii. 8.) The wandering character of life, and the dependence upon flocks, rendered the care of sheep among the most important duties of life, from the earliest time in the East. (See SHEEP.) "Abel was a keeper of sheep" (Gen. iv. 2). The employment of a shepherd was not only followed by the chiefs (Gen. xxx. 29), but by their sons and daughters as well (Gen. xxix. 6; Ex. ii. 19). Extensive flocks fed in the wilderness of Judah (1 Sam. xxv. 2); at Bethlehem (1 Sam. xvi. 11; Luke ii. 8); at Gedor (1 Chr. iv.). As the people became more settled, agriculture became more general, and the care of sheep less important. Figurative allusion is continually made, both in the O. and N. T.: Christ applying the expression to himself, and frequently using the term figuratively (Ps. xxiii.; Is. xl. 11, xlix. 9, 10; Jer. xxiii. 3, 4; John x. 12, 14, 16; 1 Pet. v. 4; Luke ii. 8). It is the habit of the shepherd, in the East, to walk before his flock, leading by his voice (John x. 4); the dog following in the rear of it (1 Chr. xxx. 1). In leading to and from the pasturage, the mothers are led by the shepherd (Gen. xxxiii. 13), who also carries the tender lambs (Is. xi. 11). Tents and towers were erected for the shepherd as points of observation; such was the tower of Eden (Gen. xxxv. 21). Shepherds used the sling (1 Sam. xvii. 40) both for defense and amusement; they also played upon a flute. Such towers are still found in nearly every little district in Palestine. The shepherd follows the same customs of care, and watching of the flock, today, as in ancient times — in pleasant weather sleeping near them, in the field, under some rude hut (see page 51), or under a tent; leading them to drink, and helping the young lambs, or lame sheep, by carrying or lifting them out of dangerous places by his crook. The custom of giving names to the members of the flock is still in use; the flock recognizing the shepherd's voice and answering to their names. The shepherd is also exposed to danger of his life, in the protection of his flock against robbers and wild beasts. Many shepherds make a heavy cloak of sheep-skin, with the wool on; and others use the coarse goats'-hair, or camels'-hair cloth.

Shi'loh (rest), (1 Sam. i. 24, iii. 21; Judg. xxi. 19). In Ephraim, north of Bethel, east of the road to Shechem, south of Lebonah. Now called Seilun. This was one of the earliest and most sacred of the Jews' sanctuaries. The ark was kept there (in a tent or tabernacle only), from the last days of Joshua (xviii. 1) to the time of Samuel (1 Sam. iv. 3). Here Joshua completed the division of the land among the tribes (xviii. 10), xix. 51). The Benjamites seized the "daughters of Shiloh," and preserved a tribe from extinction (Judg. xxi. 19), at an annual "feast of the Lord." Eli resided here as judge of Israel, and died of grief at the news that the ark of God was taken (1 Sam. iv. 11, 18). The story of Hannah, Samuel's mother, is an interesting incident, as illustrating the character and life of the Hebrews (1 Sam. i., etc.). Ahijah the prophet lived here when Jeroboam sent his wife to him to inquire what should become of their sick son (1 K. xiv.).

Shi'nar, The Land of (country of the two rivers), (Gen. xi. 2). Ancient name of Chaldæa and Babylonia. It is the Jewish name, and is not found in the native inscriptions. Abraham brought the name with him to Canaan.

Ship (Heb. ONIYAH, SEFINAH; Gr. ploion). The fullest description of ships is in the narrative of Paul's voyage to Rome (Acts xxvii. xxviii.). Paul sailed first on an Adramyttian vessel from Cæsarea to Myra — a coasting-ship of moderate size (Acts xxvii. 1–6), then in a large Alexandrian corn-ship, in which he was wrecked on the coast of Malta (Acts xxvii. 6, xxviii. 1), and finally in a large Alexandrian corn-ship, from Malta, by Syracuse, to Puteoli (xxviii. 11–13). The ship in which Paul was wrecked held 276 persons (Acts xxvii. 37), and was laden with wheat. From this it is estimated that such ships were between 500 and 1000 tons burden. Ships are often mentioned in the Old Testament, and figuratively in Job ix. 23; Ps. xlviii. 79, civ. 26, cvii. 23. Solomon built a fleet at EZION-GEBER (1 K. ix. 26). The fleet of Jehoshaphat, built in the same place, was destroyed (1 K. xxii. 48, 49; 2 Chr. xx. 36, 37). War-ships are first alluded to in Dan. xi. 40.

SHOW-BREAD.

Shi'shak. A king of Egypt. The reign of Shishak offers the first determined synchronisms of Egyptian and Hebrew history. Sheshenk I., on his accession to the throne, must have found the state weakened by internal strifes and deprived of much of its foreign influence. In the time of the later kings of the Rameses family, two, if not three, sovereigns had a real or titular authority; but before the accession of Sheshenk it is probable that their lines had been united; certainly toward the close of the twenty-first dynasty a Pharaoh was powerful enough to lead an expedition into Palestine and capture Gezer (1 Kings ix. 16). Sheshenk took as the title of his standard "He who attains royalty by uniting the two regions [of Egypt]." (De Rougé Etude, &c., p. 204; Lepsius, Königsbuch, xliv. 567 A, a). He himself probably married the heiress of the Rameses family, while his son and successor, Usarken, appears to have taken to wife the daughter, and perhaps heiress, of the Tanite twenty-first dynasty. Probably it was not until late in his reign that he was able to carry on the foreign wars of the earlier king who captured Gezer. It is observable that we trace a change of dynasty in the policy that induced Sheshenk, at the beginning of his reign, to receive the fugitive Jeroboam (1 Kings xi. 40). Although it was a constant practice for the kings of Egypt to show hospitality to fugitives of importance, Jeroboam would scarcely have been included in their class. Probably it is expressly related that he fled to Shishak because he was well received as an enemy of Solomon. The king of Egypt does not seem to have commenced hostilities during the powerful reign of Solomon. It was not until the division of the tribes, that, probably at the instigation of Jeroboam, he attacked Rehoboam. Shishak did not pillage Jerusalem, but exacted all the treasures of his city from Rehoboam, and apparently made him tributary. The narrative in Kings mentions only the invasion and exaction (1 Kings xiv. 25, 26). Shishak has left a record of this expedition, sculptured on the walls of the great temple of El-Karnak. It is a list of the countries, cities, and tribes, conquered by or ruled by him, or tributary (to him). In this list Champollion recognizes a name which he translated incorrectly "the kingdom of Judah," and was thus led to trace the names of certain cities of Palestine. Shishak's name is written SHESHONK, and he is said to have been an Ethiopian. He is shown as presenting to the gods at Thebes the prisoners taken by him in war, each name of a king, or city, or nation) being in an oval shield. See page 58. Shishak is generally supposed to be the Sesostris of profane history.

Shit'tah-Tree. SHIT'TIM. The Acacia-tree, of which there are three or four species in the East. Used in the construction of the tabernacle, ark, table of show-bread, altars, etc. (Ex. xxv., xxvi., xxxvi., xxxvii., xxxviii). "I will plant in the wilderness the cedar, the shittah-tree, and the myrtle, and the oil-tree (Is. xli. 19). It was probably the only available wood in the wilderness This tree yields the gum-arabic of commerce, from incisions cut deeply in the bark. Probably the burning-bush of Moses (Ex. iii. 2), called SENEH, was the shittah (or acacia) tree. The last camping-ground of Israel was on the plains of Shittim. The Arabs use the gum for food. The bark is very astringent, and used in tanning leather. The wood is very hard, close-grained, of a fine brown color, excellent for cabinet-work. It grows in dry places, where no other tree can live. It is not the Acacia of this country, which is a kind of Locust. Tristram mentions trees on the Dead Sea shore at Engedi and other places, which are four feet in diameter.

Shit'tim (acacia trees), (Num. xxxiii. 49). Abel Has Shittim (meadow of the acacias). In the Arboth Moab, by Jordan. Jericho (Num. xxii. 1, xxvi. 3). Under the cool shade of the acacia groves the Israelites were led into the worship of Baal Peor by the Midianites, which sin Moses, by command, avenged (xxxi. 1 . Joshua sent spies to Jericho from here (ii. 1).

Shew-Bread (Heb. LEHEM, PANIM, bread of the faces, of the presence of Jehovah), (Ex. xxv. 30). On the north side in the holy place of the Tabernacle was the table of acacia wood, 3 feet 6 ins. long, 1 foot 9 ins. wide, and 2 feet 4 ins. high; overlaid with gold; a rim and crown of gold encircling the top, and another the bottom (Ex. xxv. 23–30). A figure of the table (removed by Titus from the Temple of Herod) is carved on the arch of Titus at Rome. Golden rings were attached to the corners of the table, through which poles could be passed for carrying it (as in the case of the ark). Upon it on every Sabbath were placed, in two piles, twelve freshly-baked unleavened loaves of fine flour (typical of the twelve tribes), as an offering (Lev. xxiv. 7). See SACRIFICE. A golden pot filled with incense was placed on the top of each pile, and remained until the next Sabbath, when the incense was burned, the loaves were eaten by the priests in the Sanctuary, and twelve fresh ones laid for an offering (Lev. xxiv. 6, 7; 1 Chr. xxiii. 29). David, in extreme hunger, ate of the shew-bread (1 Sam. xxi. 4–6; Matt. xii. 4). See cut, p. 92.

SIDON FROM THE NORTH.

Shu'nem (two resting-places), (Josh. xix. 18). Issachar. Where the Philistines encamped before the battle of Gilboa (1 Sam. xxviii. 4). Here dwelt the good Shunammite, who welcomed Elisha the prophet, who oft passed by, and fitted up a little chamber for him (2 K. iv. 8), and was rewarded (ver. 36). This pleasant village was the native place of Abishag, David's attendant (1 K. i. 3), and possibly the heroine of Solomon's Song. The modern village is on the S.W. flank of Little Hermon, Jebel Duhy, 3 miles from Jezreel, N., in full view of Mt. Carmel, and in the midst of the finest grain-fields in the land.

Shur (a wall), (Gen. xvi. 7). Hagar sat by a fountain in the way to Shur, when the angel sent her back with a promise of a blessing. Abraham dwelt between Kadesh and Shur, in Gerar (xx. 1). Ishmael's descendants dwelt from Havilah unto Shur that is before Egypt (xxv. 18). Called also Etham (Ex. xv. 22; Num. xxxiii. 8).

Shu'shan (lily). Shushan the palace (Esth. i. 2). One of the most important towns in the whole East. Capital of ELAM, SUSIS, or SUSIANA. Inscriptions, dated B. C. 660, record the capture of the city by Asshur-bani-pal, giving also its plan. Daniel saw his vision of the ram and he-goat at Shushan the palace (Dan. viii. 2). Cyrus made it a Persian city, and its metropolis (Æschylus and Herodotus, although the building of the palace is credited to Darius. Alexander found there $60,000,000, and all the regalia of the great king. After this, Susa was neglected for Babylon. Now called Sus, a vast ruin between the Eulæus and Shapur.

Si'don (fishing). ZIDON (Phœnician Tsidon), (Gen. x. 15, 19). Great Zidon (Josh. xi. 8). Sidon (Matt. xi. 21; Mark iii. 8; Luke vi. 17). On the coast of the Mediterranean Sea, in the narrow Phœnician plain (2 miles), under the range of Lebanon, to which it once gave its own name (Jos. Ant. v. 3, 1). The city is built on the northern slope of a promontory that juts out into the sea, pointing S.W.; and the citadel is on the height behind it. Zidon was the first-born of Canaan, and probably the city is an older one than Tyre, and the Phœnicians are (often) called Sidonians (never Tyrians) in Josh. xiii. 6; Judg. xviii. 7, etc. Skilled workmen were their special pride, not traders (1 K. v. 6).

It is the most northern city visited by Jesus, and is about 50 miles from Nazareth. Now called Saide. The whole neighborhood is one great garden, filled with every kind of fruit-bearing trees, nourished by streams from Lebanon. Its chief exports are silk, cotton, and nutgalls. A mission-station of Americans are working among 5000 people.

There are many ancient sepulchres in the rocks at the base of the mountain east of Sidon, and sepulchral caves in the plain. In one of these caves, in 1855, was discovered one of the most beautiful and interesting Phœnician monuments in existence. It is a sarcophagus of black syenite, with a lid carved in human form, bandaged like a mummy, the face being bare. There is an inscription in Phœnician on the lid, and another on the head. The king of the Sidonians is mentioned in them, and it is said that his mother was a priestess of Ashtoreth. It is supposed to belong to the 11th century B. C. It is now in the Louvre, Paris. See p. 37.

Silk (Heb. MESHI), (Ez. xvi. 10, 13). Silk in the time of the Ptolemies was sold for its weight in gold. It sometimes came in skeins, and was woven into a thin light gauze. It is not known how early or extensively the Jews used it (Rev. xviii. 12; Gen. xli. 42).

Silo'ah (dart). SILOAM (sent), (Heb. SILOACH), (Neh. iii. 15). Arabic, Silwan. One of the few undisputed localities around Jerusalem. The water was "sweet and abundant" in Josephus' day (B. J. v. 4, 1). It is in the Tyropœon valley, 200 feet from the Kidron. There are no less than 40 natural springs within a circle of 10 miles around Jerusalem. The water flows out of a small artificial basin, under the cliff, into a reservoir 53 ft. long by 18 ft. wide and 19 ft. deep. It has been lately proved, by exploring, that the water flows from the Virgin's fountain to Siloam; and there is a remarkable ebb and flow, which varies in frequency with the season and supply of water (John ix. 7). The village of Siloam (Silwan) is not mentioned in Scripture, and is probably modern. It is poorly built, and occupies the site of Solomon's idol-shrines (1 K. xi. 7; 2 K. xxiii. 13). See p. 76.

SILOAM, LOOKING TOWARD THE CITY WALL.

Slave (Heb. EBED; Gr. somata). Servitude, under the Mosaic law, was more that of bondman than slave. In the patriarchal period the servitude was of two kinds: slaves or servants born in the house, and those who were purchased or taken in war (Gen. xvii. 13). Those born in the house often enjoyed the utmost confidence and privilege. This was illustrated in the case of Abraham commissioning his servant to select a wife for Isaac. Servitude under the law was much restricted (Ex. xxi. 16; Deut. xxiv.). Debt, or poverty, were causes for servitude (Lev. xxv. 39, 40); also, it was the penalty for theft (Ex. xxii. 1–14), the servitude ceasing when an equivalent of labor had been paid. All Hebrew bondmen were released in the year of Jubilee (Lev. xxv. 47–54). Foreign slaves were not so treated. They could become the property of the Hebrews, as captives of war (Deut. xx. 14), or by purchase from the dealers (Lev. xxv. 44). The slave-trade is mentioned as being carried on with Tyre by Javan (Greeks), Tubal, and Meshech (Ez. xxvii. 13). Joseph was the first person recorded as having been sold into slavery (Gen. xxxvii. 27, 28). Slaves were employed upon menial work (Lev. xxv. 39) in the household, and in attendance upon the master. It was a duty of female slaves to grind corn (Ex. xi. 5; Job xxxi. 10; Is. xlvii. 2).

Smyr'na (Rev. ii. 8–11). Designed by Alexander the Great, and built by his successors Antigonus and Lysimachus, near the site of the ancient city of the same name (which had been destroyed by the Lydians 400 years before). It stood at the head of a gulf of the Ægean Sea, by the mouth of the river Meles, having a range of mountains on three sides of it. Tiberius granted the city permission to erect a temple in honor of the Roman emperor and senate. John (Rev. ii. 9) probably referred to the pagan rites in his letter to the church in Smyrna. See SEVEN CHURCHES.

Sod'om (vineyard or burning). One of the most ancient cities of Canaan, in the Jordan valley, the chief of the five cities (Gen. x. 19). The plain was once like a garden, and was chosen by Lot, when Abram chose Canaan (ib. xiii. 10). As the two patriarchs were standing on a height between Bethel and Ai, they could see Jericho and the Jordan plain (called ciccar in the Hebrew, a term peculiar to this district alone); while they could not see the south end of the Dead Sea. But opposed to this is the event of Abraham looking toward the plain, and seeing the smoke go up as from a furnace (xix. 28). And that from no height near Hebron can the Jordan plain near Jericho be seen, while the south end of the Dead Sea and the Lisan are distinctly visible. There is a salt mountain called Usdum (Sodom) on the S.W. shore of the Dead Sea, which may have inherited and preserved the name of the ancient city, but the site of that city is lost.

Sol'dier. See ARMOR. Soldiers are first mentioned in 2 Chr. xxv. 13; and in Ezra viii. 22, and Isaiah xv. 4, and many times in the N. T. Paul alludes to fighting as a soldier (1 Cor. ix. 26), as also James (iv. 2), as well as nearly every writer in the Scriptures. The Christian's life is the life of a soldier, constantly in the armor of faith, fighting against evil.

Sol'omon. In Hebrew, Shelomoh (the peaceful). The youngest son of David and Bathsheba (1 Chr. iii. 5). He was educated under the care of Nathan, the prophet, in all that the priests, Levites, and prophets had to teach, and was named by him Jedidiah (loved of Jah), (2 Sam. xii. 25). He was only looked upon as the heir of the throne after Absalom's revolt and death; and only after Adonijah endeavored to seize the throne, was Solomon anointed by Nathan, and solemnly acknowledged as king, at the age of 19 or 20, 1015 B. C. (1 K. i. 5.) David died soon after. From that time his history is nearly that of the nation.

Solomon's fame was established by the building of the great temple at Jerusalem (1 K. vi.); but besides that he built his own palace, the queen's palace, the house of the forest of Lebanon, a grand porch, and the porch of judgment (law court). He had increased the walls of the city, and fortified Millo and other strongholds in different parts of the land (2 Chr. xxxii. 5, viii.).

It is in accordance with Eastern royalty that Solomon sometimes acted as a judge in cases of oppression, as in the case of the two children; and it may be that his porch of judgment contained his stated council and judicial chamber.

Son of God. A peculiar appellation of Christ, expressing His eternal relationship to the Father (Ps. ii. 7). Christ always claimed to be the only-begotten son of the Father (Matt. iv. 3, viii. 29, xxvii. 54); and the Jews rightly understood him as thus making himself equal with God (John v. 18, x. 30–33).

Son of Man. A title of Christ, assumed by himself in his humiliation (John i. 51). It is applied to him more than eighty times in the N. T. See HISTORY OF THE BOOKS.

Soul. 1. Heb. NEDIBAH (Job xxx. 15), elevated and happy state. — 2. NEFESH, more than 500 times (Gen. ii. 7, xii. 5, 13). The meanings are: a, breath (Job xli. 13); b, vital spirit, soul (Gen. xxxv. 18); c, life (Ex. iv. 19); d, ghost (Job xi. 20); e, pleasure (Ps. cv. 22). — 3. NESHAMAH, breath; also blast (2 Sam. ii. 16; Job iv. 9); "spirit," "inspiration." — 4. Gr. psuche (Matt. x. 28), the vital breath, life; properly, the soul.

The ancients supposed the soul, or rather the animating principle of life, to reside in the breath. Hence the Hebrew and Greek words, where they refer to man, are translated "soul," and rendered "life" or "breath" (Gen. ii. 7). The immortality of the soul is a fundamental doctrine of revealed religion. The ancient patriarch lived and died persuaded of this truth, and it was in the hope of another life that they received the promises (Gen. l. 33; Num. xxiii. 10). To save the souls of men, Christ gave himself freely to death.

Spain. The ancient name of both Spain and Portugal, and a Roman province in Paul's time, containing many Jews. It is not certain that Paul carried out his intention of visiting Spain (Rom. xx. 24, 28), since neither he nor any other writer of his time has left any evidence of such a visit.

SPARROWS.

Spar'row (Heb. ZIPPOR; Gr. strouthion). (Ps. lxxxiv. 3; Matt. x. 29, 31.) A small bird, with quill- and tail-feathers brown; its body gray and black; resembling the small chirping-bird: it is bold and familiar in its habits. These birds are still numerous, troublesome, and cheap, in Jerusalem (Luke xii. 6).

Spar'ta. A celebrated city of ancient Greece, and the capital of Laconia. It was long the rival of ATHENS. Situated in a valley, on the Eurotas, 20 ms. from the sea. The remarkable correspondence related in 2 Macc. v. 9, probably had no foundation in history.

Spike'nard (Heb. NERD; Gr. nardos). A highly perfumed ointment, prepared from a plant in India growing in short spikes. Prized by the ancients, and was a favorite perfume at their baths and banquets. It was very costly (John xii. 3).

Spin'ning. Is mentioned in Ex. xxxv. 25, 26; Matt. vi. 28; Luke xii. 27. The distaff round which the flax or wool for spinning was wound, and spindle on which the yarn or thread was wound in spinning. The spindle was held in one hand, while the other was employed in drawing out the thread.

Spirit, The Holy (Heb. NESHAMAH; Lat. Spiritus). The Third person of the Trinity. The Spirit of God. The character and influence of the Holy Spirit are chiefly shown in the N. T. That which was but imperfectly understood in patriarchal times became full of meaning to Christians. It is called the Holy Spirit of Jehovah in Ps. liii. 10, 11; the Good Spirit, Jehovah, in Ps. cxliii. 10. In the work of the creation the Holy Spirit is mentioned (Gen. i. 2). As the bestower and sustainer of life (Gen. ii. 7; Job xxvii. 3). From the epoch of Samuel, the work of the Spirit is manifest (1 Sam. x. 10, xvi. 14; 2 K. ii. 9; Neh. ix. 30; Is. xi. 27). In the N. T., both preceding and after the birth of Christ, the agency of the Holy Spirit was especially prominent in its manifestations. The presence of the Holy Spirit is constantly associated with the birth and life of Christ and the work of His disciples. The holy conception was of the Spirit (Matt. i. 18). The Holy Spirit openly appeared at Christ's baptism by John, and afterwards led Him into the wilderness (Luke iv. 1). In Christ's charge to the apostles are the words, "For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you" (Matt. x. 20; also in John xiv. 16; Acts i. 8). It was probably to correct the prevailing ignorance upon this subject that Christ condemned the blasphemers of the Holy Ghost (Matt. xii. 31). From the date of the Ascension commenced what is termed the "Dispensation of the Spirit" (Eph. iv. 8; John vii. 39). Christ ordained that Christians should be baptized in the name of the Holy Ghost (Matt. xxviii. 19). The rite of "laying on of hands" in its relation to the Holy Spirit is referred to in Acts vi. 6, etc.

Ste'phen (Syr. Chelil, a crown). The first Christian martyr; chief of the first seven deacons of the early Church of Jerusalem. He denounced the narrowness of Jewish worship (Acts vi. 13, 14). His continual attacks upon the Jewish ritual and worship caused his being charged with blasphemy before the Sanhedrin. In this tribunal the Pharisees were in the majority. In his defense he gave a critically just and true summary of the Jewish Church: denouncing the local worship, and bringing out clearly the spiritual element in its history; and he showed that in the previous Jewish history the presence of God was not limited to the Temple at Jerusalem; and that there was among the Jews, from the earliest, a spirit of intolerance. He addressed them with calmness (Acts vi. 15), but his words were received with anger. He was sentenced to be stoned to death, and the sentence was at once executed, Saul of Tarsus (Paul) consenting and assisting (Acts vii. 58, viii. 1). He died with the greatest firmness (Acts vii. 60).

The gate now called St. Stephen at Jerusalem is on the east side of the city. In the time of the Crusades it was on the north side, at what is now called Damascus Gate, near the probable site of the crucifixion on the hillock over the so-called cave of Jeremiah, near which it is also probable that Stephen was stoned.

Stocks (Heb. MAHPEKETH). In which the body was placed in a bent position. SAD, when the feet alone were confined. They consisted of two beams, the upper one movable, with grooves between them large enough to receive the ankles of the prisoner. They were often erected in market-places, that the insults of the people might be added to the pain of confinement (Job xiii. 27; Jer. xx. 2).

Sto'ics. A set of fatalistic heathen philosophers, so named from the Greek word stoa, "posch," or portico, because Zeno, its founder, held his school in a porch of the city, more than three centuries before Christ (Acts xvii. 18). See EPICURUS.

Stork (Heb. HASIDAH, kindness or mercy). It has the beak and legs long and red; it feeds on field-mice, lizards, snakes, frogs, and insects. Its plumage is white, with the tips of its wings and some small part of its head and thighs black.

Suc'coth (booths). (Gen. xxxiii. 17). Where Jacob built booths (of reeds, long grass, branches of trees, etc.), and thus gave the place a name. Sakut is a ruin 10 miles S. of Beisan, on the W. bank of the Jordan, where there is a copious spring in a fertile plain. But this is on the wrong side of the Jordan, for it belonged to Gad (Josh. xiii. 27). The name may have been transferred across the river. Succoth was mentioned as being near the clay ground where the metal work for Solomon's Temple was cast. — 2. A station of the Wandering (Ex. xii. 37). Site lost.

Swal'low (Heb. DEROR and AGUR, "swallow," "crane"). The well-known bird of passage, common in our country, Europe, and the East (xxxviii. 14).

Swan. The translation of the Heb. TINSHEMETH in Lev. xi. 18 and Deut. xiv. 16. Some think it the purple hen or water-fowl.

Swine (Heb. HAZIR; Gr. choiros, hus). A well-known animal forbidden as food to the Hebrews, who held its flesh in such detestation that they would not pronounce its name (Lev. xi. 7; Deut. xiv. 8; Is. lxv. 4, lxvi. 3, 17; Matt. viii. 32; Luke v. 14, 16; 2 Pet. ii. 22; Matt. xvii. 6.)

Syc'amine Tree (Gr. Sukaminos). A species of the mulberry-tree (morus). Both black and white mulberry-trees are common in Syria and Palestine, and are largely cultivated for supplying food for the silk-worm (Luke xvii. 6).

Syc'amore (Heb. SHIKMAH, Gr. Sukaminos), (Luke xvii. 6). A tree of Egypt and Palestine, the fruit of which resembles the fig (1 K. x. 27). It grows to the size of a walnut-tree, has wide-spreading branches, and affords a delightful shade, and is planted by the waysides. Its leaves are heart-shaped, downy on the under side, and fragrant. The fruit grows from the trunk itself on little sprigs, and in clusters like the grape. To make the fruit eatable, three or four days before gathering it is punctured with a sharp instrument (Amos vii. 14). The wood is very durable, Egyptian mummy-coffins made of it being still perfectly sound. These trees were held in great value (1 Chr. xxvii. 28), and it was one of GOAT OF SINAI.

Egypt's calamities that her sycamores were destroyed (Ps. lxxviii. 47). The sycamores of America and of England are very different from those of the Scriptures.

Sy'char (falsehood), (John iv. 5). A city of Samaria. (See SHECHEM.) Named so from the false worship on Mt. Gerizim (John iv. 22; Hab. ii. 18).

Sye'ne. Properly Sereneh (Ez. xxix. 10, xxx. 6). From Migdol to Syene was a term for the whole extent of Egypt. Migdol was the last town in Egypt toward the E., and Syene was the last toward the S., and is now known by its ancient name. Its Egyptian name was SUN, which meant "to open," that is, the opening into Egypt from the south.

Syr'acuse. On the E. coast of Sicily. A wealthy and populous place, when visited by Paul (Acts xxviii. 12). Taken by the Romans 200 years B. C.

Syr'ia (from TSUR, Tyre); ARAM (high) in the Hebrew. Aram was the fifth son of Shem (Gen. x. 22). Called Aram in Num. xxiii. 7. The country he settled is called Aram or Syria, and extended from the Mediterranean Sea to the Tigris, and from Canaan to Mt. Taurus, and had 6 names for its different sections, for which see ARAM. The country is divided into long, narrow sections, from N. to S. 1. Plains next to the sea, extending from the Ladder of Tyre to the Taurus, including the plains of Phœnicia, of Seleucia, and of the Issus. — 2. The range of mountains called in the N. Amanus, and Bargylus, and in the S. Lebanon. — 3. The valley between Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon, Cœle, or Hollow Syria. — 4. The mountain range rising N. of Aleppo, and ending at Mt. Hermon. — 5. The Syrian desert, extending to the Euphrates. The principal rivers are the Orontes (El Asy, the rebellious), and the Litany. The source of the Orontes is a little N. of Baalbek, where, within a few miles, a stream from both Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon unite to form the stream, flowing N. E.; it passes through a lake, 6 ms. long by 2 wide, near Emesa (HUMS); a little below Hamath it receives a branch; being turned west by the Amanus, it receives the Kara Su (Black river), flows by Antioch, and empties into the sea; having a course of 200 miles. The Litany rises from a small lake, 6 ms. S.W. of Baalbek, and runs S. until it is turned W. by the hills of Galilee, when it reaches the sea 5 ms. N. of Tyre, having run about 80 miles. There are many other small streams, as the Eleutherus, Lycus, Adonis, the rivers of Damascus (Abana and Pharpar), which are lost in marshy lakes, the Koweik, near Aleppo, terminating in a marsh, and the Sajur, a branch of the Euphrates. The lakes are: The Lake of Antioch; the Salt Lake, near Aleppo; Kades, on the Orontes; and the Bahr el Meri, near Damascus. The cities are: Antioch, Damascus (150,000); Apameia, Aleppo (70,000); Beirut (50,000); Hamath (30,000), (Num. xiii. 21); Hums (20,000); Tripoli (13,000); Seleucia, Tadmor (Palmyra), and many others, mentioned in their places. Syria was settled by Canaanites and Aramæans, descendants of Ham. Damascus and Zobah were the chief cities in David's time. Assyria made it a province, and Alexander conquered it (B. C. 323); and after him the Seleucid family governed it, one of them building Antioch, which was their only capital until B. C. 114. The Romans, under Pompey, captured it, B. C. 65. The Mohammedans succeeded the Romans A. D. 634, when, for 100 years after, they made Damascus their capital.

Ta'anach (sandy soil), (Josh. xii. 21). An ancient city of Canaan, built on the end of a ridge which runs northward from the hills of Manasseh into the plains of Esdraëlon, at the base of which is the modern village of the same name (Ar. Ta'annuk). It was the headquarters of the army of Deborah and Barak, and Sisera's host was encamped between it and Megiddo (Judg. v. 19).

Ta'anath-Shi'loh (approach to Shiloh), (Josh. xvi. 6). Supposed to be Shiloh; Taanath being the Canaanite and Shiloh the Hebrew name of the same city.

Tab'itha (a gazelle). Also called DORCAS, the name of a pious and charitable woman at Joppa, whom Peter raised from the dead (Acts ix. 36–42).

Ta'ble (Heb. LUAH, a table or tablet). Used especially of the tablets or slabs of stone on which were the TEN COMMANDMENTS (Ex. xxiv. 12). Also of other tablets for WRITING (Is. xxx. 8). Heb. MESAB (Cant. i. 12), "at this table." Heb. SHULHAN, a table spread with food (Ex. xxv. 23 ff.); Gr. kline, a bed (Mark vii. 4); also, a couch for resting or reclining at MEALS (Matt. ix. 2, 6). See cuts on pages 11, 63.

Tabor, Mt. (hight). (Josh. xix. 22.) On the border of Issachar and Zebulon. It is of limestone, 1,800 ft. high, rounded in form, and is studded with forests of oaks, pistachios, terebinths, mock-oranges, and other trees and bushes. Wolves, boars, lynxes, and other wild animals, besides reptiles, are found. It is now called Jebel et Tur, and is one of the most favorable points for beautiful and extensive views. See view on page 68.

Tabor, The Plain of. (Heb. ELON, properly The Oak of Tabor.) Only mentioned once (1 Sam. x. 3). This plain, or oak of Tabor, was evidently somewhere between Rachel's tomb and Bethel, probably not far from Jerusalem. But its locality cannot be ascertained.

Tad'mor. PALMYRA. City of palms (1 K. ix. 18). Built by Solomon on the route from Palestine to the Euphrates, about midway between Damascus and the river; the whole distance being about 240 miles. The ruins are chiefly of Corinthian colonnades and temples, and, seen from a distance, are peculiarly imposing, and seem to surpass all others in their apparent vastness and general effect. None of Solomon's buildings have been identified, and the ruins are ascribed to works of the date of the 2d or 3d century of our era. (See Wood's Palmyra.)

Tal'mud. Is the work which embodies the canonical and civil law of the Jews. It contains those rules, precepts, and interpretations by which the Jewish people profess to be guided, in addition to the O. T., and includes not merely religion, but philosophy, medicine, jurisprudence, history, and the various branches of practical duty. The Jews have been accustomed to divide their law into written and unwritten: the written contained in the Pentateuch, the unwritten handed down orally, until it was found necessary to write it. Some Jews have assigned the same antiquity to both, alleging that Moses received them on the mount.

The Jews have always set a high value on the Talmud, even placing it above the Mosaic law, saying: "The Bible is like water, the Talmud like wine, and the six orders like aromatic wine." The Saviour alluded to this extravagant estimate of the commentary above the text of the law when he said: "Making the word of God of none effect through your tradition" (Mark vii. 13). This work has formed the public opinion among the Jews for many ages, and still has a great influence. As a work it is full of learning, subtilty, and wisdom, marred with the peculiar defect of treating the most minute and trivial things with the same gravity and seriousness as the most important. It is also colored with many curious superstitions. Fables are recorded as well as facts, irreverent trifles as well as the most devout aspirations.

Tar'sus. Chief town of CILICIA; the birthplace of Paul the Apostle (Acts ix. 11, xxi. 39). It was an important city in the time of the Greek kings. Alexander conquered it; and it was under the rule of Antioch, and also that of the Ptolemies. Cæsar changed its name to Juliopolis. Augustus made it a free city. It was a celebrated seat of learning in the time of the early Roman emperors, and was compared by Strabo to Athens and Alexandria, and considered superior to them (xiv. 673). Among its famous citizens were Athendorus, the tutor of Augustus, and Nestor, the tutor of Tiberius. Anthony and Cleopatra met on the banks of the river Cydnus, which, divides the Tarsus in two.

Tav'erns. Three Taverns. A station on the Apoian road between Puteoli and Rome, where Paul met brethren when on his way from Jerusalem. The modern Cisterna is probably near the site of the ancient place, which was about 30 miles from Rome.

Teko'a (strikers), (2 Chr. xi. 6). E. of Hebron; built by Ashur, son of Hezron (2 Chr. ii. 24). Residence of the wise woman who made peace between David and Absalom (2 Sam. xiv.). Ira, the Tekoite, was one of David's 30 "mighty men" (Ib. xxiii. 26). Rehoboam fortified it (2 Chr. xi. 6). Its people helped Nehemiah rebuild the walls of Jerusalem after the return from Babylon (Neh. iii. 5, 27). The prophet Amos was born here (Amos i., vii. 14). The modern name is Tekua, and it is a small village of Arab houses, on an elevated hill.

SHOW-BREAD.

Tell Hum has recently been proved to be the site of the ancient CAPERNAUM. The original building of the synagogue, as appears by an inspection of the ruins, was 74 feet 9 inches long by 56 feet 9 inches wide; longer between north and south, with entrances at the south end. Many finely cut capitals were found in the interior, buried in the rubbish; and also several of the pedestals in their proper places. Epiphanius says there was a Christian church there A. D. 600, some of the ruins of which are found near the synagogue. The plan of the synagogue was always peculiar, and different from that adopted by the Christians, or Pagans, or Mohammedans, so that there is no difficulty in determining the nature of certain ruins. This building may have been the one built by the centurion (Luke vii. 45), and that in which Jesus delivered the discourse recorded in John vi. One of the stones has a pot of manna sculptured on it.

Temple. The Tabernacle was the sacred tent where man met God in close communion, and was built after a model given to Moses by Jehovah. It was used in the Exodus, on the journey to Canaan, and in the Promised Land until Solomon built the Temple on Zion, after which it is mentioned no more. The Temple is minutely described in Kings, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, and the three accounts must be read together, for inside measures are given in one and outside in the other; both being necessary for a complete description.

The form cannot be determined. Many plans and elevations have been designed to meet the requirements of text, the last of which seems to answer all of the points. (See Solomon's Temple, T. O. Paine; Die Stiftshütte, Dr. Neumann.)

The original holy place, the centre of worship among the tribes of Israel was the tabernacle, a large tent, made of cloth, ropes, boards, and poles, with such metal as was necessary for strength and ornament. It was set up and consecrated first at Sinai, in the first year of the Exodus, after an idea which was given to Moses by Jehovah (Ex. xxv.). Joshua was the first keeper. Two skilful workmen (with assistants), built, furnished, and decorated the structure (xxxv. 30 —), when the divine acceptance of it was made known by the presence of a cloud resting above it, and an effulgence of light within (xl.). The tabernacle was called the dwelling (Heb. MISHKAN, place of God); the tent (OHEL); tabernacle of the congregation (O MOED); house of the Lord (O HA EDUTH); the holy place, or sanctuary (MIKDASH KODESH), and the temple (HEKAL) of the Lord. It was 45 feet long, 15 wide, and 15 high. The interior was divided into two rooms, the first 30 feet long, 15 wide, the holy place; the second 15 feet square and high (a cube), the holy of holies, into which the high-priest only was permitted to enter, who passed the vail that divided it from the holy place.

Tent (OHEL, Is. xxxiii. 20; Ps. xv. 1). The tent was always the best and most convenient dwelling-place among a wandering pastoral people (Gen. iv. 20). Even after the settlement in Canaan the people outside of the cities lived in tents (Judg. vii. 8; Heb. xi. 9). The tent is still in use by millions of people in Arabia and other eastern countries. The materials are slim poles, cords of wool or palm-fibres, or hemp, pins or nails, and cloth of coarse black hair from the camel or the goat. Canvas of linen is sometimes used, and for display a wealthy ruler often pitches a magnificent tent of silk, decorated with embroidery, gilding, and the most showy Oriental designs of form and color. The common house-tent is divided into two parts: one for men and another for women. The larger ones have several divisions. Those with a double top are very comfortable, even in the hot season, and are often a better protection against the rain than the stone houses, whose roof of earth is very likely to leak.

Tē'rah (station). Father of Abraham, and son of Nahor (Gen. xi. 24, 32). He dwelt in Ur, and was an idolater (Josh. xxiv. 2), and died at the age of 205, at Haran (Gen. xi. 31, 32).

Ter'aphim. This word is rendered "images," "idolatry," or the like. Now understood to represent small images used as household gods. As specimens of these images see the cut of forms of ancient gods. A is that of Jupiter; all the others are Egyptian. In the cut of Dagon the form of the god is shown as seated, and of very large size. There were small copies of the same image made for use in the house.

Tertul'lus. A Roman orator, whom the Jews employed to bring forward their accusation against Paul (Acts xxiv. 1–2).

Tet'rarch. Governor of the fourth part of a country. 1. HEROD ANTIPAS (Matt. xiv. 11), who is distinguished as "Herod the tetrarch;" also the title of king is assigned to him (Matt. xiv. 9). — 2. HEROD PHILIP II is called tetrarch of ITUREA (Luke iii. 1); LYSANIAS (iii. 1), tetrarch of ABYLENE. This title was probably applied to petty tributary princes also.

Thad'deus (Heb. TADDAY, courageous). JUDE, JUDAS. Also called Lebbeus and Thaddeus (Matt. x.). One of the twelve. He is only mentioned among those who could not see the spiritual kingdom of Jesus (John xiv. 22). Of his life, labors, and death we know nothing. Tradition says he preached at Edessa, and died a martyr there (Mark iii. 8).

Thēbes. A chief city of ancient Egypt, the capital and residence of the kings during the age of its highest splendor. There were three names, Tam, Pamen (abode of Amon), and Thebes, No-Ammon (portion of Ammon), is the name in the Scriptures (Jer. xlvi. 25; Nah. iii. 8; Ez. xxx. 14).

TENT.

of undoubted antiquity. Two of the mosks were ancient heathen temples. The walls stand on a Greek original foundation of great massiveness, and date from the Middle Ages. This was for several centuries known as "the Orthodox City," and it is mentioned many times in the controversial writings of the early ages. The coins of this city are quite numerous and bear portraits of its rulers with emblems and inscriptions, besides its name.

Thrā'cia (2 Macc. 12, 25). On the ancient maps Thrace included all the country north of Macedonia and the Black Sea. It was afterwards limited to the district east of Macedonia, bordering on the Black Sea.

Throne (Heb. KISSE; Gr. thronos). Any elevated seat occupied by a person in authority, as high-priest (1 Sam. i. 9); judge (Ps. cxxii. 5); or a military chief (Jer. i. 15).

Thyati'ra. Built on the river Ly'cus, by Selēu'cus Nicā'tor, as one of the many colonies founded by the Macedonians in Asia Minor, after the conquest of Persia. The more ancient towns on the same site had been named Pelopia, Semir'amis, and Euhip'pa, whose memory is preserved in inscriptions on coins and monuments.

Tibe'rias. A city on the W. shore of the Sea of Galilee (John vi. 23). Some have supposed that it was built on the ruins (or near) of an ancient city, Rakkath, or Chinneroth (see Land and Book). Josephus says that it was built over an ancient cemetery, and was therefore an unclean city, according to the ceremonial law of the Jews. It is supposed that Jesus avoided the city on that account, and it is scarcely mentioned in the Gospels. It was the capital of Galilee up to the time of Herod Agrippa II.

The emperor Tiberius, after whom the city and the lake are named, was the successor of Augustus Cæsar, and the second emperor of Rome (A. D. 14).

TIBERIAS, THE CITY AND THE LAKE.

Thessaloni'ca. On that part of the shore of Macedonia called the Thermaic Gulf, and originally called Therma. It was greatly enlarged by Cassander, the son of Antipater, who named the improved city after his wife Thessalonica, who was a sister of Alexander the Great. This was the capital of that part of the Roman Empire, and was noted as the place of exile of the orator Cicero, from whence he wrote some of his letters, when it was the most populous in all the region, in the first and second centuries. Paul selected this as the centre of his operations in Macedonia, because it was on the great Roman road connecting it with the whole country north of the Ægean Sea, and its advantages also as a seaport, thus ranking it with Ephesus and Corinth in importance.

The present population is 70,000, about 10,000 of whom are Jews.

There are some remains of the ancient city, among which is an arch, which is now called by the Turks the Vardar Gate, standing across a street in the west end of the city, probably on the ancient Via Egnatia. This bears an inscription which confirms the Scripture text in Acts xvii. 5. At the other end of the city there is an arch of Constantine, and in the castle there are the remains of a triumphal arch of Marcus Aurelius. There are also columns, architraves, etc.,

Tig'lath-pile'ser (lord of the Tigris). King of Assyria; was invited by Ahaz, king of Judah, to assist him against the kings of Assyria and Israel (1 K. xvi. 7–10).

Ti'gris (arrow). River of Mesopotamia. Called Hiddekel in Hebrew. Like the Euphrates, it has two sources: the principal one is near the high mountain-lake Golenjik, which lies in the great bend of the Euphrates, in lat. 38° 10′, long. 39° 20′, and only 2 or 3 ms. from that river.

TOMB-DOOR IN RUINS.

Tim'nah (divide). 1. In the north of Judah (Josh. xv. 10), near Bethshemesh. It may be identical with Timnatha of Samson, a city of Dan (xix. 43). The modern village is called Tibneh, 2 ms. W. of Ain Shems (Bethshemesh), on the site of the ancient city. — 2. In the mountain district of Judah (xv. 57), south of Hebron.

Tim'othy. Is first mentioned in Acts xvi. 1, where he is described as the son of a Greek, by a Jewish mother. The father's name is unknown; his mother's was Eunice, and his grandmother's Lois (2 Tim. i. 5).

Tir'hakah (exalted). King of ETHIOPIA, or Cush, and of Egypt, and the opponent of SENNACHERIB (2 K. xix. 9). He was a powerful monarch, ruling both Upper and Lower Egypt, and extending his conquests far into Asia.

Tir'zah. City of Canaan (Josh. xii. 24). After the separation of Israel and Judah it was the residence of Jeroboam (1 K. xiv. 17), and of his successors, Baasha, Elah, and Zimri. The royal sepulchres (xvi. 6) of the first four kings of Israel were here.

Tithe (Heb. MA'ASER; Gr. dekate, a tenth). The proportion of a man's income devoted to sacred purposes (Gen. xiv. 20, xxviii. 22) prescribed by the Mosaic Law (Num. xxxi. 31). A twofold tithe was required of each citizen. The first consisted of one-tenth of the produce of his fields, trees, and herds, to be given to God (Lev. xxvii. 30–32). The Levites paid a tenth part of what they received to the priests (Num. xviii. 26–28). The second tithe required of each landholder one-tenth of the nine parts of his produce remaining after the first tithe, to be used at the Temple in entertaining the Levites (Deut. xii. 17–19, 22–29). Every third year a special provision was made for the poor, either out of this second tithe or in addition to it (Deut. xiv. 28, 29). The system of Tithes was renewed both before and after the Captivity (2 Chr. xxxi. 5, 6, 12); but they were not always regularly paid, and then the Divine blessing was withheld (Mal. iii. 8–12).

Ti'tus (Gr. Titus). A Christian teacher of Greek origin (Gal. ii. iii.), the companion of Paul, who converted him (Tit. i. 4; 2 Cor. viii. 23). He was one of those sent upon a mission to Jerusalem from the Church of Antioch (Acts v. 2; Gal. ii. 1). He was thence sent to Corinth, where he labored successfully (2 Cor. viii. 6; xii. 18).

Tomb. The arrangement of the tombs was generally as shown in the plan, and the door was according to the style and wealth of the owner. The door engraved was, when new, very showy and elegant, and probably had a front to match the handsome pediment above, which is so beautifully ornamented with scrolls and flowers. But nearly every ancient tomb in Palestine has been broken into fragments, more or less, and only their ruins remain for our inspection. Inside the tomb there were large rooms, marked A, B, C, from which small chambers called loculi (places) were cut for the deposit of the bodies. No coffins were needed, for the solid rock was a covering, on three sides, and the front was walled up with stones and cement. The door was closed with a round stone, like a millstone, (without the hole in the centre,) and also with a door on hinges.

PLAN OF A TOMB.

In the Sepulchre of the kings of Jerusalem (city of David — that is, City of the King), there were eleven kings of Judah buried, but there is now no trace of this sepulchre. Future explorations may reveal these hidden places.

No tombs at present known can be traced to a date before the Roman occupation of the country.

Tow'er (MIGDAL). Towers were used for defense and for watching vineyards, fields, and the frontiers of the country (Judg. ix. 17, 47–50). The traveler meets with these small watch-towers now all over Palestine. The tower was a symbol of strength and protection, and therefore it is used as a figure of God (Ps. lxi. 3), and of kings and other men in power (Is. ii. 15, xxv. 25).

Town. 1. BATH, daughter; used for village, or suburb near a large city. 2. HAV'VOTH, villages, meaning dwelling-places (Josh. xiii. 30). 3. HAZER, court or village (Gen. xxv. 16). 4. IR, city (Deut. iii. 5). 5. KIR, wall (Josh. ii. 15). 6. PER'AZOTH, open country, or unwalled camp. 7. Greek, come, a hamlet. 8. Komop'olis, a large village without walls (Mark i. 38).

Trachoni'tis (heap of stones), (Luke iii. 1). The region was called, also, ARGOB, GESHUR, and now EL-LEJAH, and is S. of Damascus, consisting of a plain and the W. slope of Jebel Hauran. On the N. border of this region are extensive ruins of Mismiyeh, where there are inscriptions and sculptures, once adorning what was a beautiful temple. The place was called Phocus. On the slope of the mountain Alsadamum there are the ruins of the cities Saccæa, Kenath, and others not mentioned in the Scriptures.

Josephus gives a very exact and interesting account of these places, in which he describes the houses as made of stone, thick, solid and strong walls, and also many caves were used as dwellings. Cisterns and granaries were cut in the solid rock.

Captain Richard F. Burton (of the pilgrimage to Mecca fame) visited this district last year, and gave a very minute account of its ruins of cities, roads, caves, etc., fully confirming the Scripture notices.

Transfigura'tion (Matt. xvii. 1, 9). The scene is now located by common consent among scholars on Mount Hermon. The apostles Peter, James, and John, were the only witnesses (1 Pet. i. 26; John i. 14).

Tro'as. The ancient city of Troy, according to the Iliad of Homer, was near the foot of Mount Ida, near the shore, in Asia Minor, and was called at one time Alexander Troas. The island of Tenedos was opposite, and only a few miles distant. The whole region south of the Hellespont was called the Troad. The city was a colony of both Rome and Macedonia. It is now called Eski Stambul (Old Constantinople), because Constantine at one time thought of building the capital of his empire at this place. Paul visited Troas three times: first, A. D. 52, when he received the call to come over to Macedonia (Acts xvi. 8–11); and next in A. D. 57, when he met with much success in his preaching; and the last in A. D. 58, when the incident of the falling of Eutychus out of the window, and his recovery by Paul's intercession, occurred (Acts xx. 5–14; 2 Tim. iv. 13).

Trogyl'lium. A point of land opposite the island of Samos, at the boundary between Coria and Ionia (Act xx. 15).

Tu'bal (to prepare). Son of Japheth, who with his brothers Javan and Meshech, traded in slaves and vessels of brass (Gen. x. 2; 1 Chr. i. 5).

Tubal-Cain (Persian tu'pal, iron; Arabic kain, worker). Worker in metals. A son of Lamech (Gen. iv. 22).

Turtle-Dove (TOR). The migratory habits of the dove are alluded to in Canticles, iii. 11, 12; Jeremiah, viii. 7. It was allowed as a sin-offering by the poor (Lev. i. 14, v. 7; Matt. xxi. 22). Abraham offered a turtle-dove and a pigeon before the law was given. (Gen. xv. 9).

Twelve Tribes. The emblems of the tribes were the standards around which the people gathered during the march in the wilderness. There is no account of their use during the wars of conquest in Canaan, but it is probable that they were used at least until the time of king David.

THE ALLOTMENT OF THE TWELVE TRIBES. — The land was promised to Abraham as a dwelling-place for his descendants, who were to be as countless as the stars of the heavens, or as the sand on the sea-shore; which promise was repeated to Moses, who brought them out of Egypt to the border of the country at Kadesh, by the shortest route from Sinai, but on account of the murmurings there, led them for 38 years in the wilderness. They were finally brought over the Jordan by Joshua, who, after giving Caleb his "mountain" Hebron, divided the land by lot among the nine tribes and a half; two tribes and a half having been located by Moses east of Jordan (Josh. xiv–xxi.).

The lots were drawn at Shiloh, where the Tabernacle had been set up, and where it remained over four hundred years. See SHILOH.

The tribes are named here in the order in which the sons of Jacob stood in his family.

The description of the cities and surroundings forms the great body of this work, and therefore only a few words are here given to each tribe, referring to the maps, and the articles under each separate head, for particulars.

THE ENCAMPMENT AROUND THE TABERNACLE.

The tribe of Reuben was the least distinguished in every way — in men of character, in famous deeds, or in the territory in which they lived. There were four families at the migration into Egypt, and 46,500 men over 20 years old at the Exode, and at the last numbering before the death of Moses, 43,730. Three of this tribe joined Korah in the rebellion against Moses at Sinai, and "perished from among the congregation" (Num. xvi. 33). The station of the tribe on the march was south of the Tabernacle, with Simeon and Gad. The tribe chose to stay on the east side of Jordan, on the mishor or highland pasture of Moab, a section which had never been included in the promise to Abraham (Num. xxxii. 7, 17). This distant position separated them from their brethren on the other side of Jordan, and gradually alienated them from the national religion, as Deborah bewailed in her song (Judg. v. 15, 16). The Syrians overran their country under Hazael B. C. 884 — (2 Ki. x. 32), and the whole tribe was carried into Syria captive by Tiglath-Pileser (1 Chr. v. 6, 26).

There is near Joppa a river Rubin (Reuben), and on its banks there is held a yearly festival in memory of the patriarch who is said to have been buried there. See REUBEN, on p. 82.

The tribe of Simeon numbered six families (the head of one of which, Shaul, was a son of a Canaanite woman) when Jacob went down into Egypt (Gen. xlvi.), and at the Exode 59,300 men over 20, but only 22,000 at the last census by Moses.

In the wilderness Simeon was on the south side of the Tabernacle. The only great name of the tribe on record is that of the widow Judith, the heroine of the apocryphal Book of Judith, where she appears as an ideal type of piety, beauty, courage, and chastity. There were 18 cities, with their surroundings, given to Simeon out of the portion allotted to Judah, including the famous well of Beersheba, and one of which (Ziklag) became the private property of David, as a present from Achish the Philistine. A part of the tribe (500 men) took possession of a district in Mount Seir, where they were still living after the return from the captivity (1 Chr. iv. 42, 43).

For Levi, see page 60.

Judah numbered three families at the migration to Egypt, all of whom were descendants of Canaanite women, and 74,600 at Sinai; and had increased to 76,500 at the passage over Jordan. The great Caleb was of this tribe, who was one of the spies; and he and Joshua were the only two of the spies who spoke well of Canaan, and the only ones of all the people who left Egypt that were permitted to enter it.

This was the first tribe located west of the Jordan, and its boundaries are more minutely traced than of any other, and included nearly one-third of the whole land. Philistia was not conquered until David's time, and was after that an uncertain possession: the wilderness along the Dead Sea was not favorable to a large population. Simeon and Dan had a part: altogether leaving Judah in actual occupation of only the hill-country with the western slopes (the Shefelah), and the pasture-land of the south Negeb). Its stronghold was the district from Jerusalem to Yuttah, which was secured from invasion by steep, narrow defiles on every side, easily defended, while its cities were nearly all on hill-tops. The royal line was descended from Pharez, twin son of the widow of Er, Reuben's son, and David was the first who was named king. When the ten tribes revolted, Judah was left alone, and its history became that of the kingdom of Judah, over which David's successors from Rehoboam to Zedekiah reigned. (See ISRAEL.)

The most important neighbors of Judah were Edom and Egypt, besides the kingdom of Israel. The great internal cause of the decay and the ruin of Judah, was the contest between the kings and the priests for the controlling power, which increased the bitterness of factions, and lessened the bravery of the people for resistance against their enemies (Ez. xxii.); and when in Hilkiah the priest the crown was actually subjected, society had become corrupt, the enemies of Judah, Egypt, and Babylon threatened, and the few faithful and good men left resigned themselves to the bitter lot which the sins of the nations had earned, and went weeping into captivity.

Only one son of Dan is mentioned at the migration into Egypt, Hushim (a family?), or Shuham; at the Exode the number of the tribe was 62,700 men over 20, and at the final numbering in Moab they had increased to 64,400. The seventeen cities, in its allotment (including Ekron, one of the five chief cities of Philistia), were seated along the sides and base of the hill-country of Judah and Benjamin. Josephus says their land extended to Dor under Carmel. It was the last tribe located, and had the smallest portion. A long time after the allotment the tribe found its territory too small, and sent a part northward, who located at Laish (Judg. xviii.), taking Micah's priest and his images (idolatrous?) with them. Samson was the most noted man of the tribe, and was a judge of Israel.

Dan is omitted from the genealogies of the Chronicles, and by John in the Revelation, where all the other tribes appear.

INTERIOR OF A TOMB, JERUSALEM.

Four families of the sons of Naphtali went down into Egypt with their father, and had increased at the Exode to 53,400 men over 20, and numbered on the Plains of Moab 45,400. The lot of the tribe was drawn the last but one, and included a greater variety of climate, soil, productions, and scenery than any other. Some of its wooded hights are 3,000 or 4,000 feet high, the loftiest west of the Jordan. The broad table-lands and elevated plains are well watered and rich in vegetation. The plains on the shore of the Sea of Galilee were of unrivaled fertility, and called the garden of Palestine, and an earthly paradise (Josephus, B. J. iii. 3, 2; 10, 8; Robinson, ii. 402).

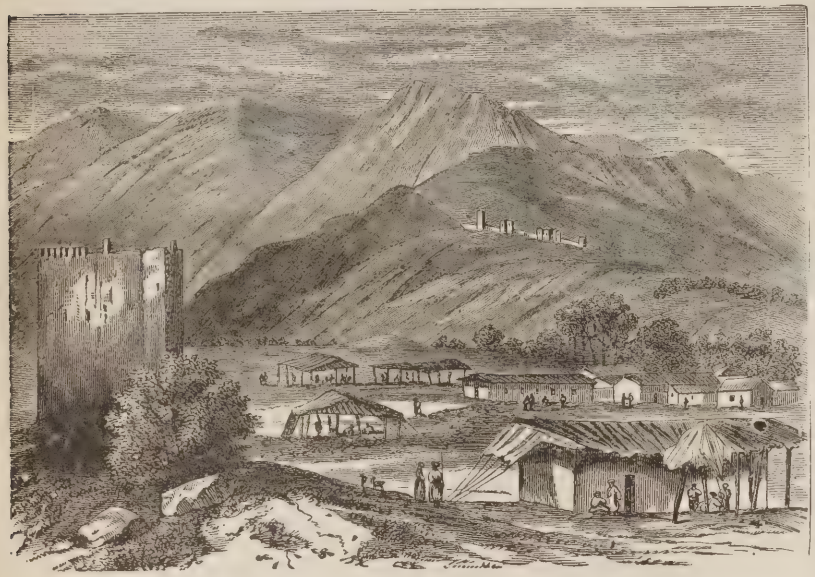
The Syrian and Assyrian touched this tribe first in their incursions, when they came by the way of Cœle-



NECROPOLIS.

Syria (2 Ki. v. 29). After the captivity this section became the most populous in the whole country; and in the time of Christ there were many large cities, of which only two now remain, Safed and Tiberias, and these are partly in ruins.

Gad numbered seven families at the migration into Egypt, 45,650 fighting-men at the Exode, and at the Plains of Moab only 40,500. Their territory lay between the lots of Reuben and Manasseh, east of Jordan, and was one of the most beautiful districts in Syria. (See GAD, AMMON, MOAB and GILEAD.) They probably extended their limits very widely on the victory over the Hagarites (1 Chr. v. 19). Several of its cities were noted in the nation's history — as Mahanaim, Peniel, Ramoth Mizpeh, Galeed, Succoth, and Rabbath Ammon.

Among its great and good men we find the names of Jephthah the Gileadite, a judge of Israel; Elijah the Tishbite, of the inhabitants of Gilead, one of the grandest characters known to history, or poetry even. He owed some of his qualities to the habits and customs of his native district — his wonderful strength; great endurance of fatigue, hunger, and thirst; his wandering mode of life, and his dislike to the restraints of society. His dress was similar to that of the modern Arab in Gilead. Also, Barzillai of Mahanaim, and Machir of Lodebar. (See LODEBAR.) The tribe was carried into captivity by Tiglath-Pileser, and Jeremiah says that the Ammonites occupied its cities xlix. 1—).

Asher had four sons and a daughter, and two grandsons, heads of families, when Jacob went down into Egypt; at the Exode the number was 41,500, which was increased before the crossing of Jordan to 53,400. The district given to the tribe was limited just south of Sidon Tyre was not then founded), and it was never able to either drive out or keep out the Sidonians from their portion. In David's time the tribe had become of so little account that it is not mentioned among the chief rulers of the land (1 Chr. xxvii. 16–22), although some of its people came up to Jerusalem to Hezekiah's Passover (2 Chr. xxx. 11). There are many very interesting ruins in this district, which have been but slightly noticed. Om el Awamid (mother of columns) is one which is a relic of a great city, whose site was on the high table-land east of the Ladder of Tyre. The many columns lying scattered about indicate the magnificence of the buildings when in their perfection. No clue can be got to the name of the place. The whole region is dotted over with ruins of cities without names or history. (See ASHER.)

Issachar (written Isascar in the Hebrew) went into Egypt with four families of his sons, and came out at the Exode with 54,400 men of war, and numbered at Peor, after the pestilence, 64,300. Josephus says the portion of the tribe was the Plain of Esdraëlon (Jezreel). Some of the names of its cities and localities recall incidents and events which are among the most interesting in the history of Israel; such as Nain, Shunem, Endor, Gilboa, Jezreel and Megiddo, Tabor and the Hill Moreh. Two hundred of its chiefs went to Hebron to assist at the crowning of David as king. Tola, one of the Judges of Israel, was of this tribe, and lived at Shamir, where afterward Omri (the descendant of Omri of Issachar?) built Samaria, and founded the house of Ahab. Baasha, of this tribe also, was the third king of Israel, and an idolater; who was succeeded by his son Elah. The tribe sent its people to Hezekiah's Passover. Five years after that they were carried away captive.

Zebulon had three sons who were heads of families at the migration into Egypt, and numbered 57,400 at Sinai, and 60,500 males of full age on the Plains of Moab. The territory of the tribe was one of the richest and most beautiful districts west of the Jordan. Although Joshua distinctly defines the boundaries, yet so many sites of its cities have been lost that it is very difficult to follow the outlines. The plain of Buttauf, the table-lands west of the Sea of Galilee, the finely wooded hills and valleys around Tabor, Hattin, Sefurieh, Nazareth, and as far as the plain of Acre, with a small strip of Esdraelon, were among its treasures. It was to have extended from sea to sea (between the Sea of Galilee and the Mediterranean). The four northern tribes, Asher, Naphtali, Zebulon, and Issachar (perhaps including Dan as fifth), formed a kind of state by themselves, among whom Zebulon won the highest position for warlike deeds, the most brilliant action on record being the victory of Barak and Deborah over Jabin and Sisera, so beautifully sung by Deborah (Judg. v.). After the captivity it became a part of the nation of the Jews, and is not mentioned as a separate tribe. Nazareth and Cana were in its borders, and were made famous for all time by the presence of the "great light" prophesied by Isaiah (ix. 1, 2).

Joseph went down into Egypt as a slave, sold to Ishmaelites, by whom he was sold again to Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh. (See JOSEPH.) His sons were Ephraim and Manasseh (reversed by Joseph in his blessing, for Manasseh was the first-born), who were given the portion of their father. At the Exode their number was 72,700 men, which increased to 85,200 men at the last census. (See EPHRAIM.)

Ephraim was represented among the spies by Joshua (Oshea), the son of Nun, who was especially honored by Moses with the title of "The help of Jehovah" (Jehoshua). The lot of the sons of Joseph came out second to Judah, and they were located in the centre of the land, but they did not give way to the enervating influences of wealth and plenty as soon as the northern tribes, especially Asher. The history of Ephraim was merged in that of the kingdom of Israel.

The tribe of Ephraim had the fairest portion in all the land; it once was the chief sanctuary and the chief original settlement of the nation; was the especial care of the Lord (Hos. xi. 3, 4); but it distrusted its fellow-tribes, and in its separate life as the kingdom of Israel it fell into tumult, dissension, and ungodliness, which was only closed by the captivity (ib. ver. 8–12).

Manasseh. There is no reason given for depriving Manasseh of his birthright, as there was in the case of his grand-uncle Esau. On leaving Egypt at the Exode this was the least of the twelve tribes, numbering at Sinai only 32,200, but at the census, just before the crossing of the Jordan, they had increased to 52,700 men over 20 years old, at which time Manasseh is honored with a first mention before Ephraim. The division of the tribe is one of the singular facts in the history of the Israelites, and seems to be at variance with the national feeling and laws. Some of this tribe were warriors, and made extensive conquests: as Machir, who took Gilead and Bashan; Jair, who took 60 cities in Argob; and Nobah, who captured Kenath and its vicinity, a tract of country the most difficult in the whole land, being full of fortified cities, and in the possession of Og and Sihon. (See HAURAN, BASHAN, HESHBON, ARGOB, KENATH, NOBAH, etc.)

The lot of the half-tribe west of the Jordan was small, lying along the north border of Ephraim, but since the boundary is so slightly recorded, it is very difficult to follow it. The line is drawn from the river Kanah (supposing that river to have been just south of Cæsarea), to a place on the Jordan "before Shechem" (Josh. xvii. 7, 9, 11; Jos. Ant. v. i. 22). (See DOR, TAANACH, and MEGIDDO.) There is no account of this tribe separate from Ephraim, and it is likely that the two neighbors were spoken of as one people (2 Chr. xxxi. 1; xxxiv. 6, 9).

Benjamin had ten sons and grandsons at the migration into Egypt; at the Exode the tribe numbered 35,400 of full age, and just before the passage of the Jordan it had increased to 45,600. The boundaries of their lot is quite carefully described, and contained 26 large and many small cities. The tribe was nearly destroyed on account of its refusal to punish an offender who had violated the rights of hospitality (Judg. xix., xx.), 600 men only escaping to the rock Rimmon. (See RIMMON and SHILOH.) They were afterward supplied with wives from Jabesh Gilead and at Shiloh.

The first deliverer of Israel in the time of the Judges was Ehud of this tribe, who killed Eglon, the fat king of Moab, and ruled the nation for a long term.

The first king of Israel was Saul, a Benjamite; and also that other Saul, Paul the Apostle, was of this tribe.

The great lottery for the distribution of the land of Canaan was held at Shiloh (see SHILOH), and for four centuries it was the centre of the government of the nation. The ark of the covenant had been kept at Gilgal, near Jericho, while the conquest was going on, but when the whole land was subjected (as far as to general occupation), the prophesy was fulfilled which said, "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor the ruler's staff from between his feet, till he shall go to Shiloh," that is, till the tribes assemble at Shiloh to divide by lot the conquered land.

It was one of the earliest and most sacred of the sanctuaries, and only gave way to Moriah at Jerusalem, where a temple was built, whereas a tent or tabernacle only had been used at Shiloh.

The ruins at the site are not large or interesting.

ANCIENT CHARIOT. PHILIP AND THE EUNUCH. (See PHILIP.)

There is a ruined mosk, a chapel, and fort of the Middle Ages, also in ruins, and a few remains of Greek and Roman art. The fountain near is large, flows abundantly, and has sweet water.

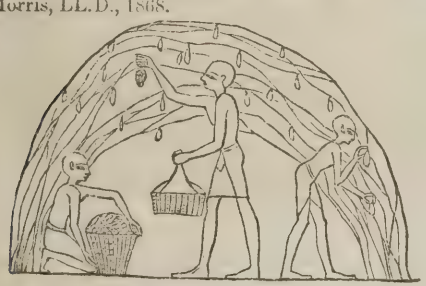
Tyre (rock; Ar. sur; Heb. ZOR). Built both on the land and on an island. The island was connected with the mainland by a causeway in Alexander's siege of the city. The people were called Sidonians (Judg. xviii. 7), in both Tyre and Sidon, which were only 20 miles apart. The Jews never obtained possession of the cities on the coast of Phœnicia (Judg. i. 31), but both people lived in them, nearly always in peace and harmony. The builder of the Temple, Hiram (Abif — father), was of Tyre, but of Jewish descent.

EMBLEMS OF THE TWELVE TRIBES.

The friendship between the people of Phœnicia and the Jews seems never to have been disturbed by war, and the kings of the two nations were at least once united by marriage, as in the instance of king Ahab, who married the daughter of king Ethbaal of Sidon.



The prophet Joel says the Phœnicians sold Jewish children into slavery to the Greeks (Joel iii. 6–8).

Carthage was founded as a colony from Tyre 143 years after the building of Solomon's Temple.

Its religion was the same as that of the Philistines and other pagan nations, and its gods and worship differed only in name from those of Greece, Assyria, and Egypt. Hercules was worshiped under the name of Melkarth, and the temple in his honor on the island was said by Arrian (ii. 16) to have been the most ancient in the world.

The dye called Tyrian purple was a source of great wealth, and was found in a shell-fish, on the coast near the city, each fish affording only one drop of the precious color.

The population of the city in the time of Christ was equal to that of Jerusalem (probably about 100,000). Cassius, bishop of Tyre, was at the council of Cæsarea. William of Tyre was bishop in the time of the Crusades (A. D. 1124), and his account of the city adds much to our knowledge of its wealth, resources, and customs. He mentions glass and sugar as among its articles of manufacture. Specimens of ancient glass are often found, among the ruins, and in the tombs, and one of the most curious and valuable recently discovered was a bottle of gray glass, holding about three pints, in a tomb near Tyre, by Robert Morris, LL.D., 1868.

PICKING GRAPES. EGYPTIAN MONUMENTS.

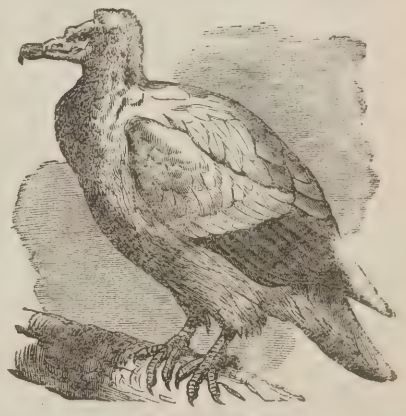
One of the stones in the great sea wall of Tyre is still lying in its original position, where it was placed more than 3000 years ago, and is 17 ft. long by 6½ high, and 9 thick, with beveled edges, like all the peculiar Phœnician work of those early ages.

Tyre has been used as a marble-quarry for ages, and its best materials carried away to other cities.

U

Ula'i. River near Shushan, Persia, called by the Greeks Eulæus (Dan. viii. 2, 16). The river has changed from its ancient course to a new channel, or rather, it now has two branches by which its waters flow into the Tigris. The Persian kings drank the water of this river only, whether at home or abroad, having it carried with them when on a journey.

Unicorn (Heb. REEM.). Some wild beast, perhaps the Bison, or the Urus, an extinct species of Buffalo. It is alluded to as a powerful and violent animal (Deut. xxxiii. 17; Ps. xxii. 19; Job xxxix. 9).



Ur. The land of Haran, Ur of the Chaldees (Gen. xi. 28), from which Terah and Abraham went into Canaan. There are 4 localities offered by the commentators as the one alluded to in the text. 1. Now called Oorfah, and anciently by the Greeks Edessa, where there is a mosque and a pond named in honor of Abraham. Sacred fish are kept in the pond of the kind that were used in the ancient mysteries. 2. Warka, the ancient Orchon of the Greeks, and Huruk of the Assyrians. 3. Ur below Nineveh, near the Tigris. 4. On Mugheir (mother of Bitumeh), 6 miles west of the Euphrates, opposite the junction of the Shat-el-Hie, south of Babylon. The ruins there are extensive and bear inscriptions. The Camarina of the ancients, where for several centuries the Assyrian kings were buried. The latest and best authorities incline to Mugheir as the site of Ur of the Chaldees, although others hold that the first-named might have been settled by a colony of Chaldeans, and named accordingly, and besides, is much nearer Palestine.

Urim and Thum'mim (fire-lights and perfections). The first stone in the breast-plate of the high-priest was a blood-red ODHEM (Heb. ADHOM, red), as in Isaiah lxiii. 2, and the word for red light is UR (URIM plural). The twelve precious stones, each one bearing the engraved name of one of the twelve tribes of Israel, were put into their places in the breast-plate while it was on the breast of the high-priest, during the solemn ceremonies attending a sacrifice (Lev. viii. 8).

U'sury (Heb. NESEK). Interest. Pay for money borrowed. No Jew could lawfully take interest from a brother Jew, but he was permitted to do so from any other people (Neh. v. 10, 11).

Uz. The land in which Job lived (Job i. 1), and evidently settled by a son of Aram, grandson of Shem (Gen. x. 23). Supposed to have been east or southeast of Palestine (Job i. 15, 17), in the vicinity of the Sabæans and the Chaldæans, and of Edom (Lam. iv. 21). The description of the people corresponds to that of the nomad tribes of Arabia Deserta.

Palgrave gives an account of the district of Hasseem, in North Arabia, which may be the same as the Uz of the ancient Hebrews. The H is a guttural letter, and in both Arabic and Hebrew often changes into K, which is only a little deeper or harder guttural; so Uz might be now written Kuz or Kaz (the eem being a termination). There are several other names in the Book of Job that are to be found in this part of Arabia, as Teman, Dumah; and probably a better acquaintance with the country and people will greatly assist our interpretation of that ancient and most excellent poem. The religion of that district, as described in the Book of Job, was pure and high-toned, containing a knowledge of the true God.

EGYPTIAN VULTURE.

Uzzi'ah. Made king of Judah (2 K. xv. 13) at the age of 16 (B. C. 808 to 756), and he reigned 52 years, in an active, wise, and pious manner. He reconquered Edom as far as Elath, fortified it, and made it a port of entry for foreign commerce (2 K. xiv. 22; 2 Chr. xxvi. 1, etc.). He was guided by the counsels of the prophet Zechariah (2 Chr. xxvi. 5). His end was very tragical. While trying to approach the altar for the purpose of burning incense on it, which was the special duty and privilege of the priest, he was smitten with leprosy, from which time he was compelled to live apart, outside of the city. The prophet Amos (i. 1), and Zechariah (xiv. 5), mention an earthquake that happened in his region, which was very notable for its effects. A full account of his reign was written by Isaiah, but the only references to it are found in the first six books of the prophesy: the rest having been lost.

TEMPLE OF MINERVA.

Uzzi'el (might of El). 1. A Levite, 4th son of Kohath, ancestor of the Uzzielites, and uncle to Aaron (Ex. vi. 18, 22; Lev. x. 4; Num. iii. 19; 1 Chr. vi. 2). — 2. A Simeonite captain, son of Ishi, who engaged in the expedition against the Amalekites of Seir in Hezekiah's time. — 3. A Levite, of the sons of Jeduthun, active in purifying the temple in the reign of Hezekiah (2 Chr. xxix. 14, 19). — 4. Son of Harkaiah, a priest, in Nehemiah's time, who assisted in repairing the wall (Neh. iii. 8). He was a goldsmith, and probably had charge of the repairs of the sacred vessels.

V

Vale, Valley. Five Hebrew words are translated valley, each conveying a separate meaning.—1. BIKAH (to cleave), generally a broad, open valley, enclosed by mountains or otherwise. The plain of Shinar is thus named (Gen. xi. 2). Palestine a "land of hills and valleys" (Deut. xi. 11).—2. GAI and GE (to flow together). A narrow valley or ravine. "Doves of the valleys" alluding to the rocks bordering the glens in Palestine being the resort of the doves (Ez. vii. 16). The word GE often is used in combination with other words.—3. NAKHAL (to receive) signifies a torrent—bed, or a valley dry in summer, but with a river or torrent flowing in winter. This word corresponds to the modern Arabic term for valley—wady. Used also to signify a brook. "My brethren have dealt deceitfully as a brook, as the stream of brooks they pass away" (Job vi. 15–17). Also used for valley and for stream, as in 1 Kings xvii. 3, 4.—4. ERNEH (to be deep), a low tract of land, surrounded by hills on high ground; as the wide "valley of Jezreel," lying between Gilboa and Moreh (Judg. vi. 35). Except in Josh. xix. 27, where the Hebrew word itself is used as Bath-EMEK, this word is translated valley or vale.—5. SHEFELAH (a low plain). With the exception, in Josh. xi. 16, where "the valley of the same" is used without the article denoting it a proper name, the word Shefelah means the plain of Philistia.

Vash'ti (a beauty). The queen of Persia, who was divorced by king Ahazuerus for refusing to appear unveiled before the company of revelers at a royal feast (Esther i).

Vespa'sian (Roman, Ti'tus Fla'vius Vespasia'nus), Emperor of Rome, A. D. 69 to 79 (born 9 A. D., died 79). He subjected the rebellious Jews in all Judea in A. D. 66 (his son Ti'tus destroyed Jerusalem). Vespasian achieved conquests in Africa, Asia, Britain; patronized the arts and sciences, and reformed the army and courts of justice. He began the building of the Colosseum, which afterwards was the scene of the martyrdom of many Christians. He struck coins in memory of his conquests in Judea, one of which is engraved here, and the reverse of another in the article MONEY.

COIN OF VESPASIAN.

Vineyard. The vine, its fruit, the grape, and wine and vinegar produced from it, are frequently mentioned in the Scripture, as is natural from its being a native of the East (supposed to have originated in Margiana, S. of the Caspian Sea). It is mentioned in the earliest histories of all people, and has always been highly valued. Moses, Homer, and Herodotus wrote about it; and before their day, the Egyptians pictured it, and methods of preparing its products for use, on their monuments. Various preparations from the vine are in use, such as, the juice of the unripe grape, for acid; the unripe grapes, dried and powdered, forming a pleasant acid; grapes, both fresh and dried, as raisins; the juice of grapes fresh pressed is valued as a pleasant beverage, called must; this juice is also boiled down into DIBS (molasses), used at the table; wine, alcohol, and vinegar are made by fermentation; cream-tartar is made from the lees; a fragrant oil is pressed from the seeds; the ashes from the twigs and stalk yield carbonate of potash. A fruitful vine is often used as an emblem of the Hebrew nation, and a period of security, repose, peace, and prosperity is figured by every one sitting under his own vine and fig-tree; and the drinking of wine was also used as a symbol of the highest spiritual blessings (Is. lv. 1, 2). In great contrast to this is the desolation of the house of Israel, figured by the neglected, trodden-down, wasted vineyard, by Isaiah (v. 1–7); and by the vine brought out of Egypt, by Asaph (Ps. lxxx. 8–16). The first notice of wine in the Scriptures is when Noah planted a vineyard (Gen. ix. 20, 21), and suffered (himself and his posterity) from excess in its use. The next is in the story of Lot (xix.). When Isaac blessed Jacob, he prayed the Lord to give him, among other things, plenty of corn and wine (xxvii. 28). Pharaoh's chief butler made must for his king (xl. 11). Moses mentions wine (frequently in his laws, and) as a drink-offering (Num. xv. 5, 7, 10; see, also, Judg. ix. 13); but it was forbidden to the priests during their service in the tabernacle (Lev. x. 9); and it is thought that Nadab and Abihu transgressed because of an excess in its use. During a vow the Nazarite was not to drink wine or vinegar, to eat grapes, or touch any product of the vine: (as carbonate of potash enters into some kinds of bread, he may have been restricted to unleavened bread (Num. vi. 3, 4). The people drank wine at their sacred festivals (Deut. xiv. 22–26). The Rechabites abstained from wine (and from living in houses) in obedience to the command of their ancestor. Wine was used in the ceremony of the Passover. There was a custom of giving medicated wine or vinegar to criminals who were condemned to death, to stupefy them, and thus lessen the pains of execution (Prov. xxi. 6, 7; Amos ii. 8), as in the case of the crucifixion, when the soldiers gave Jesus vinegar mixed with some drug, evidently with kind intentions (Matt. xxvii. 34; Mark xv. 23). Mixed wine is frequently mentioned. It was mixed with water, perhaps only to weaken it for common use, or it may be for deception (Is. v. 22), and with milk (Cant. v. 1), and with spices to increase its strength and flavor (Ps. lxxv. 8; Is. v. 22). The wine of Lebanon was peculiarly fine (Hosea xiv. 7), and had a grateful odor, and the Tyrians imported a famous quality from Helbon (Ezr. xxvii. 8). Wine (and other liquids) are kept in skins (bottles made of goat-skins, or from the skins of other animals, especially of the ox for the largest, sewed and pitched, and stored, not generally in their houses, but in a wine-store, where it was fermented. Jesus sanctioned the use of wine, and made a supply at a marriage-feast (John ii.), and is charged with being a wine-bibber by his enemies, in contrast to John the Baptist, who abstained from both bread and wine (Luke vii. 33, 34). Paul advises Timothy to use a little wine for its expected relief from his "often infirmities" (1 Tim. iv. 23). The warnings against excess in its use as a beverage are frequent and severe in both the O. T. and the N. T. (Prov. xx. 1, xxiii. 29–35, xxxi. 4, 5; 1 Cor. vi. 10; Gal. v. 21). The wine-press was generally in the vineyard (Is. v. 2; Matt. xxi. 33), outside of the cities (Zech. xiv. 10; Rev. xiv. 20), where, in the vintage, they had a merry time treading the grapes (Judg. ix. 27; Is. xvi. 10; Jer. xxv. 30, xlviii. 33; Neh. xiii. 15; Is. lxiii. 2; Joel ii. 24), which custom furnished strong figures to the prophets of the judgments of the Lord upon Israel (Lam. i. 15; Joel iii. 13), and of his mercies and blessings also (Prov. iii. 10). The vineyards are generally planted on hill-sides, which are often terraced to the summit, far from the village, without hedge or fence, requiring constant watching. The strongest young men are set apart for this duty, and take their stand on the hill-tops or on towers; which custom Isaiah makes the subject of one of his finest figures of the prosperity of Zion (lii. 7, 8). The watchmen are stationed near each other (within sight and hearing of each other's voices), and have certain calls to use in case of danger, or in "publishing" peace and safety, now as in the olden time (Land and Book, ii. 412).

Virgin (Heb. BATHULIA, ALMAH; Lat. virgo, young woman), (Is. viii. 3, 4; Matt. i. 23; Prov. xxx. 19). The chastity of a young unmarried woman was carefully protected by strict laws, and it was a capital offence to break them, unless the girl consented. To this day in the East it is a rare thing to find an erring girl. Early marriage is perhaps the chief safeguard.

The virgin is used as a type or emblem of the Jewish nation, the bride of the Lord, and of the Christian Church the bride of the Saviour Jesus Christ.

Vis'ion. A supernatural presentation of certain scenery or circumstances to the mind of a person either while awake or asleep (Is. vi.; Ez. i.; Dan. viii.; Acts xxvi. 13). See DREAM.

Vow (Heb. NEDER, vow of devotion; Heb. ESAR, vow of abstinence; and HEREM, vow of destruction). Vows, in general, are mentioned in Job xxii. 27, etc. (Gr. anath'ema, devoted). The earliest vow mentioned is Jacob's (Gen. xxviii. 18–22, xxxi. 13). The law regulated the practice of vows. They were entirely voluntary, but once made, were held to be obligatory, and any who evaded them were regarded as wanting in religious duty. (See Job xxii. 27; Prov. vii. 14; Ps. xxii. 25; l. 14; lvi. 12; lxvi. 13; cxvi. 14; Is. xix. 21; Neh. i. 15.)

Evasions which withheld a part of the devoted thing were not allowed. There was a law restraining one from devoting all his possessions at once.

The practice of shaving the head at the end of a votive period was not limited to the Nazarite vow (Acts xviii. 18; xxi. 24).

Wall. Many walls of cities and large buildings are founded on the solid rock, as has been lately verified by digging down to the foundation of the temple wall, and the inspection of many parts of the wall of the city of Jerusalem. A certain style in finishing the face of the stones, in which there was a panel raised in the centre, or a band sunk lower than the centre, all round the edge, is now called the "beveled," or "Phœnician" style, and is a constant feature in all the most ancient buildings and walls of cities, not only in Jerusalem, but in all the other ancient cities in Syria.

Some of the stones in these old structures are so large as to excite the wonder of every beholder. The largest are those in the wall of the platform of the temple of the sun at Baalbek, which are 62 feet long. One still lies in the quarry where it was ready for moving, which is 69 feet long by 17 wide and 14 thick. Some walls were made of rough stone, or bricks, and a "facing" put on the outside of fine stone. In Assyria the interior of the wall was often made of brick and the outside faced with stone or porcelain. In Egypt several of the pyramids were built of bricks and faced with stone.

The terrace-walls on the side of hills supported the soil against the deluges of rain, and are found now in nearly every part of Judea, where there is any care given to the cultivation of the soil.

SOLOMON'S CISTERNS, UNDER THE TEMPLE AREA.

Washing the Hands and Feet. As no knives or forks were used at the table, washing of the hands before and after meals was necessary (Matt. xv. 2). Because of the dust and heat of the Eastern climate, washing the feet on entering a house was an act of respect to the company, and of refreshment to the traveler (Gen. xviii. 4). When the feet were washed by the master of the house, it was an especial mark of respect and honor to the guest.

Wa'ter (Heb. MAYIM; Gr. hudor). To the ancient Hebrews water was of inestimable value (Ex. xv. 22). It is an emblem of the spiritual blessings of SALVATION, which God bestows upon his people (Is. lv. 1). See JERUSALEM.

The water-carrier is a familiar object in all Oriental cities. He carries the water in a skin, serving it with a brass cup to persons in the street, for a very small price; or in large earthen jars on a donkey for domestic use. There are many such water-carriers at Jerusalem, who carry a supply from the well En Rogel up to the city in the dry season. Thousands of skins or jars full being required each day.

Weav'ing. The ancient monuments of Egypt picture women and men busy at the loom, weaving all kinds of cloth used in dress, and in the decoration of houses. The earliest notices of the art in Genesis are of Joseph in Egypt (Gen. xli. 42), although the Hebrews must have practiced it before going there. The women wove cloth for domestic use, and sometimes for sale also (Prov. xxxi. 13). The hand-loom is very simple, and can be hung up to any tent-pole, and the work set going in a few minutes. The stationary looms are heavier and more complicated, some being stretched on four posts, and fitted to produce most elegant patterns almost equal to embroidery by hand. The remains of cloth found wrapped around mummies, and preserved in other ways, show a skill in ornamentation almost equal to our modern fabrics. Figures appear on both sides in a variety of colors, woven into the cloth, in beautiful patterns, like flowers, fruit, and scroll-work. Gold and silver threads were woven in for decoration (Ps. xlv. 13). In some specimens of cloth hangings from Babylon there were groups of men and animals, like our modern Gobelin tapestry, which is "a wonderful production, the privilege of kings." Women and children weave the smallest articles, such as sashes, at leisure times, amusing each other with stories, and recitations of poetic legends.

The tent-cloth is made of the coarse long hair of the camel, and of the goat (Ex. xxvi. 7; Matt. iii. 4). Paul was probably a weaver of tent-cloth, and not of sail-cloth.

The seamless coat (or cloak, abba, see DRESS) spoken of by John (xix. 23), was woven in a hand-loom, and was the common dress of the priests.

The use of the loom, its various parts, and the work of forming cloth, are all made serviceable as emblems and figures to teach ideas of human life and experience (Job vii. 6, etc. See Concordance).

Well. A well (BEER) is a cistern (BOR) with a fountain in it; it supplies itself, while a cistern, and a pool only hold such water as is poured into them from other sources. The original Hebrew never confuses the two, and the constant accuracy of statement, as applied to thousands of places, all over the country, indicate a thorough knowledge of the facts, and a care in giving them.

The value of any land in the East depends very much on the supply of water, from wells, rivers, or rain, the wells often being private property, and jealously guarded (Num. xv. 17; Prov. v. 15), as a mark of wealth and independence.

Some wells are vast excavations, with several rooms and floors, and have steps of stone, down which persons and animals may descend. The water is often elevated from a deep well by machinery, turned by an animal who works in an underground room, halfway down the well.

VIEW OF BEERSHEBA, AND ITS ENVIRONS.

The most common way of raising the water is by a jar, or skin bottle. Each person brings a rope (John iv. 11), or depends on the favor of another. There are wells in or near towns which are fitted with wheels or the sweep. The sweep on a large scale is called in Egypt the shadoof.

The most primitive machine is a large wheel on which a number of earthen jars are tied, which dip in the well, and as the wheel turns, spill out the water into a trough.

Troughs of stone or cement are found at every well for the use of animals. A stone sarcophagus is quite often used as a trough in Palestine.

Weights and Measures. The notices of weights and measures in the Bible are few and incomplete, and we have to supply the wanting information from other sources; chiefly from the systems of ancient nations, following the chain from Rome up through Greece, Egypt, and Phœnicia, to Babylon, the origin. The system was nearly uniform everywhere, but varied from one age to another. Layard found at Nineveh the weights used by the Babylonians, which were in the form of lions and of ducks, with rings for handles, of different sizes, in a certain system, the lightest weighing about 4 oz., the heaviest about 40 lbs.

MEASURES OF LENGTH.

The names are derived from members of the human body:—the CUBIT, the length of the forearm from the elbow point to the third finger-tip, was the unit, a name and custom derived from Egypt, and recorded on the monuments. There is no record of the unit in the Bible, Josephus, nor in any ancient Hebrew building.

3 Palms = 1 Span.
2 Spans = 1 Cubit.
6 Cubits = 1 Reed.

Land was measured by the cubit and reed, but never computed by square-measure, for they had no unit such as our acre.

MEASURES OF DISTANCE.

The ordinary day's journey for one person was 30 ms.; for a company, 10. The Sabbath-day's journey was measured by the distance fixed between the tents and the ark in the wilderness, which was 2,000 cubits (Smith's Dict.; Kitto). The common cubit of 18 in. would give 3,000 ft. The sacred cubit of 19.05 in. would give 4,762 feet. It was also the limit outside of the Levitical cities. The moderns reckon by hours' travel, which vary from 4 to 2½ ms., as the length of the hour varies with the length of the day in summer and winter.

Wid'ow. Under the Mosaic dispensation no legal provision was made for the maintenance of widows. They were left dependent partly on the affection of relations, and partly on the triennial third tithe (Deut. xiv. 29; xxvi. 12), in leasing (Deut. xxiv. 19–21), and in religious feasts (Deut. xvi. 11, 14). A certain portion of the spoil taken in war was their due (2 Macc. viii. 28, 30). No one could take a widow's clothing in pledge (Deut. xxiv. 17), nor even other necessaries (Job xxiv. 3). With regard to the re-marriage of widows, the only restriction imposed by the Mosaic law had reference to the contingency of one being left childless, in which case the brother of the deceased husband had a right to marry the widow (Deut. xxv. 5, 6; Matt. xxii. 23–30). In the apostolic Church the widows were sustained at the public expense (Acts vi. 1–6). Paul gives careful directions on this point (1 Tim. v. 3–16). The essential things were that she be a widow indeed, without relatives or property, and of a good moral character. It is possible that these widows, described by Paul so minutely, were selected for office in the church.

Willows (Heb. ARABIM; Arabic gharob, and sufsaf). The willow was among those trees whose branches were to be used in making booths at the Feast of Tabernacles (Lev. xxiii. 40). It was also an emblem of sorrow and mourning, as in the captivity at Babylon, where the musical instruments, the emblems and instruments for expressing joy were hung on the willows, as a sign of the deep distress of the people, captive in a foreign land. The willow twigs were formed into baskets, mats, and boats, such as are now in use generally in the East.

Wind. The wind is mentioned very often in the Scripture. Those winds which prevail in different seasons, are: the west, and southwest, from the sea (Luke xii. 54); north (Job xxxvii. 9); which is a sure forerunner of fair weather (Prov. xxv. 23); the east wind, which often dries up the soil and blasts the fruits (Gen. xl. 6; Ezek. xvii. 10), and blows with great violence (Ps. xlviii. 7; Jonah iv. 8); and is also called the glow-wind in Ps. xi. 6. This comes from the hot and dusty desert of Syria, or southeast from the desert of Arabia, only in the summer. The Arabs call the east wind Simoom, and the Egyptians Camsin. When it blows over a caravan in the desert the result is often fatal both to man and beast. When there is a local whirlwind the danger is increased, especially when vast clouds of sand are lifted and carried over the country many miles, sometimes burying a caravan with thousands of men and animals, and whole groves of palms. The sirocco is a hot wind, almost motionless, or rather a heat-storm, which burns up or withers vegetation, brooks, and even animals.

Window (CHALLON). An opening in a wall closed with lattice-work, as shown in the engraving. See also cut on p. 49. In Eccl. xii. 3, a term (ARUBBAH) is used to describe the lacework of the lattice. In Cant. ii. 9, the tracery of the window is also noticed (CHARAKKIM). In Judg. v. 28, and Prov. vii. 6, the word used (ESHNAB) means coolness felt from the air passing through the lattice. The window of the upper chamber is often made to project beyond the wall, for the purpose of catching the passing breeze, and also of more extended view. Through such a one the spies escaped from Jericho (Josh. ii. 15), and Paul from Damascus (2 Cor. xi. 33).

WINDOW PROJECTING OVER THE STREET.

In many houses of the cities of Egypt and Asia Minor the windows are built out over the street, as shown in the small upright cut. These windows are often imitated in Holland and France, and in a few instances in this country, in the oldest buildings. So narrow are the streets in Cairo that persons can shake hands across from the upper windows, pearing in public unless closely veiled, not seeing the men who visit their husbands and brothers, nor even taking their meals with the men of their own family. They were chiefly engaged in domestic duties (Prov. xxxi.). The poor gleaned the remnants of the harvest

The Hebrew alphabet has 22 letters. The arrangement of the letters is after the order as given in Psalm cxix. The meaning of each name as far as known is: 1. ALEPH, an ox; 2. BETH, a house; the Ethiopic is like a round-top tent; 3. GIMEL, a camel, which are purposely built out so far to shade the way from the fierce summer heat. The wood-carver's skill is displayed to the best advantage in these lattices, which are sometimes, in the houses of the wealthy, decorated with beautifully designed flowers and set patterns.

(Gen. xxix. 9, xxiv. 15–20). Oriental women are never regarded or treated as equals by the men. See p. 30.

There are several examples of bright and beautiful women in the Scriptures, whose names have become the types and emblems of all that is good and pure and lovely. Such are Ruth, Esther, Mary, Martha, Dorcas. Rachel was honored by her husband with a monument, and tradition points out a small domed stone building near Bethlehem as standing on the site of the one built by Jacob (Gen. xxix.–xxxv.)

Writing (Heb. KATHAB, to write; SEFER, a book; SOFER, a writer). The Phœnician is the most ancient alphabet that is known to us. The Egyptian writing may have been more ancient, but that was not alphabetic, being both ideographic and phonetic. Pliny (vii. 56) says the Syrians (Phœnicians) invented writing, but gives the Assyrians credit for great antiquity in the use of the art. The discovery of the Moabite Stone (see p. 59) proves the origin of the Greek letters to have been Phœnician; and it is probable that the Hebrews used the alphabet in common with the Phœnicians, as may be inferred from their names; as Aleph, ox; Gimel, camel.

WOMEN DRAWING WATER AT A WELL.

The form of five of the Hebrew letters was changed when the letters were final (at the end of the word), a system which was useful when sentences were written without spaces between the words; for instance, IWASGLADWHENTHEYSAIDUNTOMELETUSGO UPTOTHEHOUSEOFTHELORD (Ps. cxxii. 1). This writing without division into words is a more close following of speech, which is a continuous flow of sound the mind separating the words, or ideas. The Moabite Stone (page 59), is an instance from antiquity The spaces there show where the stone has been broken or defaced, and letters lost.

PUBLIC WATER-CARRIER.

Abbreviations were common both in books and on coins, and also in inscriptions on the monuments, as ISR for ISRAEL, YAH for JEHOVAH.

Numbers were indicated by letters and figures. Figures are found on the Phœnician coins and monuments in Palmyra and Egypt. The Greeks also used letters in writing numbers. Differences in certain statements of numbers can be explained in this way: the scribe, or copyist, mistaking a C for a G, C being 700, and G being 7000.

The signs used by the Babylonian writers differed from those of Tiberias, and were nearly all above the letters. The present system is uniform everywhere, and dates from about A. D. 1050.

Accents were also marked, for the purpose of noting the tone-syllable (directing the reader in the synagogue), and the chief words in the sentence. There were peculiar styles of recitation for each class of books, the law, prophets, and poets, which are still in use. The metrical chants have been lost. See MUSIC.

The materials which have come down to us from antiquity, are stone, bricks, papyrus, vellum, parchment. Embossed leather is still preserved, bearing the names and date of the Pharaohs 3300 years ago. Papyrus is alluded to in 3 Macc. iv. 20, and 2 John 12 (Gr. xartes, chartes); and in Josephus (Ant. iii. 11, 6, xii. 2, 10; and parchment in 2 Tim. iv. 13 (Gr. membranai). Skins of clean animals only could be used for the Scriptures; as KELEF (skin of the hairy side), for the tophillim, phylacteries; diksostos (Heb. DIKS), for the mezuzoth; and gĕvil (of undivided skin, dressed). The ink (DEYO, Gr. melan, black) was of lampblack wet with gall-juice, sometimes diluted with vitriol. The inkstand KESETH HASSOFER), was carried in a case (KALMARIN), with pens, knife, etc, by a strap over the shoulder, or fastened at the girdle.

The rolls were written in columns (DELATHOTH), one, two, or three, according to the width of the roll), with a margin above of 3 fingers, below of 4, and between the columns of an inch. The columns are about 2 fingers wide in the Herculaneum rolls; and others there are 3 in. 4 fingers.

The case in which the rolls were kept was called KEREK or KARKA.

Tablets of wood covered with wax were used for ordinary writing not intended for keeping a long time. On these the letters were impressed with a stylus (Job xix. 24), sometimes of iron (Ps. xlv. 2). For engraving on stone the pointcalled CHERET (Ex. xxxii. 4; Is. viii. 1), and ZIPPOREN (Jer. xvii. 1), were used.

A reed pen (3 John 13; 3 Macc. iv. 20) was used on parchment and papyrus.

The oldest monument in alphabetical writing is the Moabite Stone (page 59), which is dated as early as B. C. 900, if it does not belong to David's time (B. C. 1025). The ancient Phœnician monuments, dating later than the Moabite Stone, are counted by hundreds.

No vowel-points are found on the coins, in the Palmyrene inscriptions, or on the Phœnician monuments. It is probable that the vowel points were first written by Ezra. The Arabic is the first in point of time to show the use of vowel-points, dating before A. D. 650. The present Arabic system of writing is supposed to date from about A. D. 930.

Moses the Punctator, assisted by his son Judah the Corrector, used the points (to assist his pupils in reading), for the first time that is recorded, about A. D. 775.

Xan'thicus. One of the Macedonian months (Heb. NISAN). MONTH.

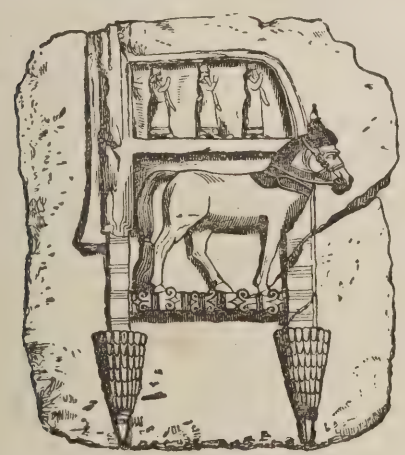
Yarn (Heb. MIKVEH, MIKVE). An error in 2 Chr. i. 16. The king's merchants from Coa took the horses from Coa at a price.

Yoke (Heb. MOT "bar"), (Nahum i. 13; MOTAH, "bands" (Ez. xxx. 18); Heb. ZEMED, a pair of oxen, so termed as being yoked together (1 Sam. xi. 7). A symbol of subjection and servitude (1 K. 12, 4). See AGRICULTURE.

The yoke was used as a sign of subjection, especially exemplified by the custom of the Romans, who required conquered armies to pass under it in token of submission. The water-carriers and shepherds use a yoke in carrying jars of water or milk, and it is therefore a badge of servitude. To bear the yoke is to be subject to hard labor. The Hebrew prophets and teachers held constantly before the eyes of the people the important fact that the yoke of the Lord was light — as contrasting true religion with false.

The yoke, as used by the farmers in Palestine, is often a very primitive implement. A straight stick with a rope at each end to tie to the horns of the animals, or it may be a crooked tree-root with green withes twisted into place about the horns of the ox or cow. The horse and ass are yoked about the neck, as also the camel. The most curious team is a camel and a cow yoked to the same plow. Plowing is done in the rainy and cold season, and is a real hardship to both men and animals, and especially so to a cow yoked with a quick-stepping ass; and it was this custom which Moses denounced as a cruelty.

ACRE (ACCHO PTOLEMAIS) FROM THE NORTH.



Z

Zaan'aim, The Plain of, or probably the Oak of. A sacred tree by Heber's tent, when Sisera took refuge in it (Judg. iv. 11). Near Kedesh Naphtali. Lost.

Zac'chēus (Heb. ZAKKAI). 1. An officer of Judas Maccabeus (2 Macc. x. 19). — 2. A tax-gatherer at Jericho, who climbed into a sycamore-tree to see Jesus as he passed (Luke xix. i. 10). Being "chief among the publicans," he may have had charge of the revenue of the district. Jesus, knowing his private character, chose him for his host, and announced himself as his intended guest. The term "sinner" was applied to him by the Jews because he held office under the Romans. His real nature appears in his penitence and faith, and Jesus pointed out his reward as a child of Abraham (Gal. iii. 7). There is a "house of Zaccheus" at Jericho which looks like the remains of a fort of the tenth century or later. The Rabbinic writings mention a celebrated Zaccheus who lived at Jericho about the time of Christ's visit, whose son, Rabbi Johanan ben Zakkai, was also famous for learning and piety.

GROUP OF IDOLS FROM EGYPT AND GREECE.

ASSYRIAN KING'S THRONE.

Zad'ok (righteous). Son of AHITUB 2, and father of Ahimaaz, high-priest of the Jews (1 Chr. xxix. 3, xii. 28). Others of this name are mentioned in 2 K. xv. 33; 1 Chr. vi. 12; Ezr. vii. 2; Neh. iii. 4, xii. 13. Zadok was called the father of all faithful priests after his time (Ez. xl. 46, etc.).

Zar'etan. ZARTHAN (Josh. iii. 16). Supposed to be Kurn Surtabeh, N. of Jericho, in the Ghor.

Zeb'ulun (dwelling). 10th son of JACOB; 6th son of LEAH (Gen. xxx. 20, xxxv. 23). His tribe was respected for numbers (Num. i. 30, xxvi. 26). His posterity is often mentioned with Issachar, his nearest brother (Deut. xxxiii. 18). See TWELVE TRIBES.

Zechari'ah (whom Jah remembers). The 11th in order of the 12 minor prophets.

Ze'red, The Brook of (brook of willows), (Deut. ii. 14). Now called Wady el Ahsy, and running into the S. E. corner of the Dead Sea. Here the wanderings of the Israelites ended; or it may be they continued to the time of the death of Moses.

Zer'eda (cooling), (1 K. xi. 26). In Ephraim. The native city of Jeroboam, the first king of the kingdom of Israel, formed by the ten tribes that revolted. It was fortified for Solomon. The site has not been found, but is supposed by some to be the same as Tirzah; and by others, Zeredatha.

Zered'atha (2 Chr. iv. 17). Called Zarthan (1 K. vii. 46). The vessels for Solomon's temple were cast in the clay-ground between Succoth and this place, in the plain of Jordan. The finest clay is found on the banks of the Jordan, near Succoth, and is carried away for use in casting brass.

Zin (coldness), The Wilderness of. A district between the Arabah and the Desert of Paran, or Tyh mountains, and consisting of three terraces, sloping toward the Dead Sea, by the Wady Fikreh. KADESH was in this. Josephus speaks of a hill called Sin, where Miriam was buried. This hill may be what is now Moderah, isolated, conical, and standing a little S. of Wady Fikreh.

Zi'or. Judah (Josh. xv. 54), 6 ms. N.E. of Hebron. Now Sair.

Ziph (mouthful). 1. Judah, in the Negeb (Josh. xv. 24). Lost. — 2. Judah, between Carmel and Juttah (Josh. xv. 55); about 3 ms. S. of Hebron. Some of David's greatest perils and most successful escapes belong to this district (1 Sam. xxiii. 14, 15, 24, xxvi. 2). Also called the Wilderness of Ziph. Rehoboam fortified Ziph (2 Chr. xi. 8).

Zip'porah. Daughter of JETHRO, wife of MOSES, and mother of GERSHOM 1 and ELIEZER 2 (Ex. ii. 21, iv. 25, xviii. 2).

Ziz, The Pass of (2 Chr. xx. 16). Pass of Ain Jidy.

Zo'an (departure). Tanis, Egypt, on the E. bank of the Tanitic branch of the Nile. It was an important post on the E. of the country, and chief town of a large district of pasture-lands. Called by the Egyptians HA-AWAR, and fortified by SALATIS, the first shepherd king, who stationed here 240,000 men as a protection against the Assyrians. Hebron was built 7 years before Zoan (Num. xiii. 22). There was a great temple here, dedicated to SET (Baal), embellished by Rameses II. The Pharaohs dwelt here, both in the time of Joseph and of the Exodus (Ps. lxxxviii. 12, 43). Mentioned by Isaiah, xix. 13, xxx. 4, 14. The ruins of the temple area show its size, 1250 by 1500 ft., and its remains prove its ancient grandeur. There were 10 or 12 obelisks, all now fallen; the stone for which was originally brought from Syene. The inscriptions and figures are of the age of the shepherd kings.

Zo'ar (little), (Gen. xiv. 2, 8). One of the oldest cities of Canaan. First called BELA. When the cities of the plain were destroyed, Zoar was spared as a refuge for Lot (ib. xix. 22, 30). Zoar was seen by Moses from the top of Pisgah (Deut. xxxiv. 3). Following Josephus (Ant. i. 11, § 4), the Crusaders, and later travelers, Zoar was on the LISAN, a promontory on the E. side of the Dead Sea, and now seen in extensive ruins in the lower end of Wady Kerak. Palms once flourished here so abundantly as to give it the name of City of Palms William of Tyre, xxii. 30). Some have supposed Zoar to have been much nearer Jericho, and on the E. of Jordan, in the Wady Seir, near Nimrin.

COIN OF TARSUS.

Zo'phim (watchers), (Num. xxiii. 14). A cultivated field near the top of Pisgah, from which Baalam had his second view of Israel's camp. Perhaps the ruins of Main, at the foot of Jebul Attarus, surrounded as they are by a fertile plain, mark the site of Zophim.

This hight is "over against Jericho," as the text requires, and there is quite a level field, which is sometimes cultivated almost to the very summit. The view from the top overlooks Judea, and must be higher than Hebron, and therefore about 4,500 feet. The slope down to the Dead Sea is rapid, the distance being 6 miles, and the water-level 5,800 feet; but the eastern slope is very gradual for several miles, and bordered by low hills on which there are ruins, such as Heshbon and Main. In the winter, just before harvest, the prospect is almost an unbroken field of growing grain and grass, the boast of the Arab as the matchless Belka and even in its present condition able to support flocks equal to those mentioned as belonging to the king of Moab in 2 Kings iii. 4. Trees and houses only are absent, but the black tents of the Anezo Arabs are numerous. Hermon and Lebanon are visible to the north, and Sinai and Mt. Hor to the south.

EGYPTIAN IDOLATRY. When the children of Israel came out of the land of Egypt, it was to be expected that they would take with them many of the religious ideas with which they had been imbued, during their long sojourn in the land. We know that before their deliverance, they had lost the knowledge of the true God, and that Moses was commissioned, by the voice from the burning bush, to declare His name unto them. Exodus iii. 13, 14. And even after they had witnessed the wonderful portents by which the Egyptians were dismayed, and the chosen people delivered from bondage, their hearts still hankered after strange gods, as well as for the flesh-pots of Egypt. They had been made a "peculiar people," to preserve the knowledge of Jehovah among the nations of the earth, and many were the woes denounced against them, if they should turn from the living God to serve the idols of the nations among whom they might chance to be placed. Deut. viii. 19, 20. Every nation of antiquity, except the Jews, was idolatrous, bowing down to images graven by art and man's device. All the powers and forces of nature, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air, and even the creeping things of the earth, had homage paid to them. But the Egyptians, for the number, variety and strange character of their gods, as well as for the influence they have been supposed to exert on other nations, are worthy the attention of all lovers of Scripture, as well as those who are fond of antiquarian research.

OSIRIS, the god of the sacred river, Nile, is considered by many writers to have been the chief of the idol tribes, and to have personified moral good. Upon his head was the crown of Upper Egypt, where the river took its source, and the serpent which he carried symbolized his immortality. There was a legend concerning him, to the effect that, while on earth engaged in teaching mankind, he was slain, cut to pieces, and embalmed; but that he rose from the dead, and became the judge of all who died, bestowing upon the righteous his name and form.

ISIS, the wife of Osiris, was called the goddess of maternity; and the rites with which she was worshipped were of the most immoral and debasing character.

APIS, or the Sacred Bull, was worshipped more especially at Memphis, and with very peculiar rites. Great care was exercised in selecting the animal. Its colour must be black, with a white spot on the right side, in the shape of a crescent, and a triangular white spot on the forehead. Before it had grown so old as to be useless, it was led with great solemnity to the Nile, and there drowned; afterwards, its body having been embalmed was buried with elaborate ceremonies, while the whole land went into mourning, till another sacred beast could be found. ATHOR was the same as the Venus Aphrodite of the Greeks and Romans, and possibly Ashtoreth of the Jews. NEITH was the goddess of wisdom, and wore the crown of lower Egypt. PTAH, in the form of a child, was also another of deities of Memphis, but for what distinguished, is unknown. BUBASTIS, to whom the cat was sacred, was the goddess of fire, and the ceremonials of her worship were very elaborate. Some scholars have thought her to have been identical with the Diana of the Greeks. The IBIS, or crane, the crocodile, the SCARABÆUS, or beetle, the frog, locust, etc., were set apart as sacred. The temples of the Egyptians were most massive and magnificent, built wholly of stone, even the roofs. The one at Ipsamboul was hewn out of the solid rock of a sandstone mountain, and contained courts lined with colums of sphinxes, profusely ornamented, and lavishly colored; one can imagine the effect which the grandeur of the architecture of Egypt must have had upon the untutored minds of the simple shepherds, Jacob and his children, when they went to dwell, at the invitation of the king, in the land of the Pharaohs.

THE INHABITANTS OF THE WORLD CLASSIFIED.

In Europe, America, Australia and many of the Polynesian Islands, Christianity is the prevailing creed of every state. In Africa the only independent Christian states are Abyssinia and Liberia, while Christianity prevails in several European colonies. The largest empire of Asia—Russia—is also a Christian country. India, the third country in point of extent, is under the rule of a Christian government, and so is a large portion of Farther India.

The Mohammedan countries in Asia are Turkey, Persia, Afghanistan and the Khanates of Central Asia; in Africa, Morocco, the dependencies of Turkey (Egypt, Tunis, Tripoli) and a number of interior states.

Buddhism prevails in India, Farther India, in many parts of China and in Japan. The governments of Burmah and Siam are Buddhist; that of China adheres to the religion of Confucius; the prevalent religion of Japan is Sintooism.

Judaism is represented through the world by the best authorities as follows: the number of Jews in Germany, 500,000; Austria, 1,500,000; Great Britain, 75,000; France, 100,000; European Russia, 2,700,000; Italy, 25,000; Switzerland, 5,000; Belgium, 2,000; Netherlands, 70,000; Luxemburg, 2,000; Denmark, 5,000; Sweden, 1,000; Greece, 1,000; European Turkey, 75,000; Portugal, 5,000; Syria and Asiatic Turkey, 60,000; Morocco and North Africa, 825,000; Eastern Asia, 750,000; America, 750,000.

We divide the Christian Churches into three groups, viz.:

The Roman Catholic Church.—This church is apparently one organization, and the recognition of the Pope as the head of the entire Church is an article of faith. There is one religious organization in Holland (the Jansenists), who, while they claim to belong to the Roman Catholic Church, are not recognized by the Pope. Besides, in the Roman Catholic countries of Europe there are many millions whose connection with the Roman Catholic Church is only nominal, of which the attitude of Italy, Austria, France, Belgium, Spain, Portugal and other states is a conclusive proof.

The Eastern or Oriental Churches.—This group embraces the following denominations: the Greek Church, the Armenian Church, the Nestorians, the Jacobites, the Copts, and the Abyssinians. They all recognize the first Council of Nice and have bishops, for whom they claim an apostolic succession.

The Protestant Churches.—All the churches not belonging to one of the two preceding groups are comprised under the collective name of Protestants.

The population of the globe is estimated at 1,380,000,000, and is subdivided into five races, viz.:

Caucasian	380,000,000
Malay	219,000,000
Mongolian	580,000,000
Ethiopian	200,000,000
American Indians	1,000,000
	1,380,000,000

The general subdivision of religions of the world is distributed very nearly in the following proportions:

Christians	405,000,000
Jews	7,500,000
Mohammedans	160,000,000
Buddhists	350,000,000
Pagans	200,000,000
Other Asiatic Religions	257,500,000
	1,380,000,000

ABYSSINIAN CHURCH.—The gospel was introduced into Abyssinia about the middle of the fourth century. One Frumentius, traveling from Egypt into Abyssinia, was favorably received by the king, whom he baptized, together with certain of the nobility. Subsequently returning to Egypt, he was consecrated bishop by Athanasius, and returned soon after to the scene of his former labors. For about one thousand years the Abyssinian Church disappears from the sight of the European world. It was near the close of the fifteenth century that it appeared before the Christian world once more. Rome, ever ready for new conquests, was seized with the desire of subjecting this ancient Church to her authority. The Jesuits, after making several fruitless attempts to reconcile the Abyssinian Church to the See of Rome, were recalled. But subsequently other attempts were made, and the Abyssinian Church submitted to the pope of Rome. But this submission was not of long continuance. A love for the ancient faith again revived in the hearts of the people, the usurped power of Rome was overthrown, and the Abyssinian became once more an independent Church, governed by its own patriarch. For many years Abyssinia was a scene of much intrigue, cruel wars and slaughter, in which the Christians suffered intensely. In common with other Eastern churches, this Church believes that the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Father only. It believes in infant baptism and what is called an annual ablution. It is the only Christian Church which practices circumcision. It denies the doctrine of transubstantiation, yet believes in the real presence of Christ in the sacrament. Though cold and formal in many respects, the religion of the Abyssinian Church is not without its life-giving power.

ADAMITES.—The Adamites were a small and obscure sect of the Gnostics. They first appeared in the second century. Their aim was to imitate Adam's state of innocence. In the fifteenth century they appeared in Germany, under the name of Beghards. One tenet of this sect was, that bashfulness and modesty evince a mind not wholly purified, and that those only are perfect and in union with God who can associate with persons of a different sex, like Adam before the fall. They were supposed to be chaste in their morals, but were regarded with suspicion. This sect became extinct about the close of the fifteenth century.

AERIANS.—The Aerians were the followers of Aerius, a native of Pontus. He was a presbyter of the Church and a monk, who flourished in the fourth century. His peculiar opinions gathered around him a band of followers, whom he formed into a sect. He maintained that "by divine appointment there was no difference between bishops and presbyters." This opinion was readily embraced by those who were opposed to what they termed the arrogance of the bishops of that age. Aerius disapproved of prayers for the dead, stated fasts and the celebration of Easter. The aim of Aerius seems to have been a desire to bring religion back to its primitive simplicity.

ALBIGENSES.—The Albigenses were a sect who separated from the Church of Rome in the twelfth century. The term, says one, is used in a broader and in a more limited sense. In "the former sense it applies to all heretics who resided at that time in Languedoc. In the more limited sense it applies to those who in Italy were called Cathari and Bulgari." The writers of the Romish Church condemned them as heretics; of their orthodoxy, however, there can be no doubt. In the year 1200 they had become quite numerous in Toulouse and in many towns of Languedoc. They were the subjects of Raymond, sixth count of Toulouse, who, having embraced their opinions, received them under his protection. Innocent III. was then the pope of Rome. Hearing of the rapid progress of this sect, and fearing its future influence, he resolved to exterminate them. He first excommunicated them, calling on the clergy to refuse them the sacraments of the Church while living and the rites of burial when dead. All persons were forbidden intercourse with them. A legate was sent from Rome to demand of Raymond their destruction. This was stoutly refused. Moreover, the legate was slain. Innocent III. then called on the faithful everywhere to aid in the destruction of these enemies of the Church. About the year 1209 a large army was collected and equipped under the command of Simon, earl of Montfort. Terrified by the appearance of this formidable host, Raymond yielded to the demands of the pope. A nephew of Raymond prosecuted the war, but was at last forced so submit. On the death of Innocent, his successor, Honorius III., determined to complete the unfinished work of his predecessor. He prevailed on Louis VIII., king of France, to march at the head of a great army, but dying soon after, Louis IX. (called St. Louis) prosecuted the work of his father. In this terrible and bloody war, which continued for several years, and which scarcely has a parallel in history, thousands of innocent ones were cruelly slain. Says one: The Church of the Albigenses had been drowned in blood. This earnest people denied the intercession of the saints, the doctrine of purgatory and other errors of Rome. The charge raised against them by their enemies was that they denied the sacraments. Thus afflicted by bloody wars and persecution, the Church of the Albigenses gradually wasted away.

ANABAPTISTS.—In the year 1537 a convention of Protestants was held at Smalcald, when Luther drew up what are called the Articles of Smalcald. About this time one or two events occurred which impeded the cause of the Reformation. Certain persons called "Anabaptists came to Münster, a city of Westphalia, and declared that they were divinely commissioned to set up a holy empire on the ruins of all human institutions." Great excitement followed this declaration. These fanatical persons constituted one John Bockholdt their leader. The city was captured in 1535, and Bockholdt and his associates were executed, and severe laws were enacted against the sect. The history of this peculiar people is somewhat obscure. The most famous of them were those who caused what is called "the rustic war" in Germany. The more respectable of them, terrified by the fate of their associates, joined themselves with those who were called Mennonites. They believed in baptism by immersion. They denied the equity of all civil law, and maintained that all distinctions of birth and rank should be abolished, and that there should be an equality in property and wealth.

ARIANS.—This sect of Christians consisted of the followers of Arius, a presbyter of Alexandria. On a certain occasion, Alexander, bishop of Alexandria, at a meeting of his clergy, expressed freely his opinions on the doctrine of the three Persons of the Godhead, maintaining that the Son of God is the same in dignity and essence with the Father. Arius dissented from this view, and declared that the Son is totally and really distinct from the Father; or, in other words, he denied the divinity of the Saviour, affirming that he was inferior to the Father both in nature and dignity. The opinions of Arius spread very rapidly, and created no little disturbance in the Church. Alexander called a council at Alexandria, and cast him out of the Church. Shortly after, Constantine the emperor called that famous council of the whole Church which assembled at Nice in the year 325. Before this council Arius was condemned and exiled, and his followers compelled to assent to a creed set forth by the council. Constantine was subsequently induced to recall Arius from his exile, and he moreover commanded the bishop of Alexandria to receive him again into the bosom of the Church. On the evening before the day appointed for his restoration Arius suddenly expired. The doctrines of Arius met with some favor afterward, but between the years 383 and 395 Theodosius deprived the Arians of all their churches, established severe laws against them, and defended the decisions of the Nicene Council against Arius and his followers. Afterward Arianism became a sect outside the Church.

ARMENIANS.—The gospel was introduced into Armenia at a very early period. It is supposed, however, that the Armenian Church was not firmly established until some time after the commencement of the fourth century. In this century, Gregory, called the Illuminator, first succeeded in persuading some individuals, and afterward the king and his nobles, to embrace the Christian religion. He was afterward consecrated the first bishop of Armenia, and labored with considerable success among the people. The Armenian Church, falling away from its original purity, was excluded from the communion of the Church about the year 457. This Church holds that in the person of Christ the human nature and the divine are one. They maintain that the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Father only. In general, the doctrine of this Church is similar to that of the Greek Church.

BAPTISTS.—At the head of the front line of the Baptists in this country stands the name of Roger Williams. He was born in Wales in the year 1598. He was educated at the University of Oxford, and was originally a member of the Church of England. Becoming a Puritan, he emigrated to this country in the year 1630, and settled at Salem, Massachusetts. In the year 1636 he went to what is now called the State of Rhode Island, and settled there. He was in sentiment at this time a Baptist, though not immersed until after he had taken up his residence in Rhode Island. The first Baptist church established in this country was in Providence, Rhode Island. Roger Williams was one of the original members of this church. It is still one of the living churches of the State. Other churches were somewhat later formed in the different colonies by those who settled in Massachusetts, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and New York. This denomination of Christians, by the blessing of God, went on increasing rapidly and enlarging its borders as the population of the country increased. At the present day we find it the most numerous of all the religious denominations of this country, the Methodist alone excepted. The government of the Baptist Church is congregational, each society being in reality a distinct church. The Baptist Church has what are called associations, but they are volantary, and formed simply for the well-being of the Church as a whole. They have numerous colleges, as well as theological seminaries; of the former, the University at Providence is the most prominent; of the latter, that of Newton, Massachusetts, and Crozer, Pennsylvania, are richly endowed and institutions of influence. This Church is celebrated for its genuine, fervent missionary spirit. Among its missionaries who have from time to time gone forth are to be found the illustrious names of the Rev. Adoniram Judson and Luther Rice. In doctrine the Baptist Church is nearly identical with the evangelical churches in general. It accepts the Bible as the authentic and inspired word of God. It believes in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity—three Persons and one God; that man was originally created in holiness after the image of God; that man fell through disobedience, involving the whole race in sin. This Church accepts the great doctrine of the atonement—that Christ died for men; that man is not justified by works of righteousness which he hath done, but by faith in Christ; that the Holy Spirit is the great instrument of the soul's regeneration. One great point of difference between the Baptists and other evangelical Christians is that which pertains to baptism: they regard immersion as the true mode of baptism. They are Calvinistic in sentiment, and hold to what is called close communion.

BAPTISTS (FREE-WILL).—This is a distinct order of Baptists, and was organized in the year 1780. It is Arminian in sentiment. At the head of this body stands the name of the Rev. Benjamin Randall, whose birthplace was Dover, New Hampshire. The first church of this branch of the Baptist Church was established at Durham, New Hampshire. They believe in open communion and baptism by immersion, rejecting the doctrine of unconditional election and final perseverance, according to Calvin's theory. Their church government is congregational.

BAPTISTS (CAMPBELLITE) or DISCIPLES.—The father of this Christian sect was the Rev. Alexander Campbell, who was the son of the Rev. Thomas Campbell, originally of the Presbyterian Church in the north of Ireland, and who came to this country about the beginning of this century. Of all the branches of the Baptist Church in this country, this stands numerically second. Their views on the great doctrine of the Holy Trinity have been questioned at times, but of their orthodoxy there is no doubt. They adhere closely to the doctrine of baptism by immersion, being at variance somewhat with the great body of the Baptists as to the design of baptism. The Lord's Supper is administered among them every Sunday, their communion is open, and their church government is congregational. They believe that regeneration is a consequence of baptism, or follows it.

BEREANS.—This is a small body of Christians founded by the Rev. Wm. Barclay about the year 1773. They are dissenters from the Scotch Presbyterian Church. They hold that all knowledge of God, of his character and his attributes, is to be derived only from the Bible. The sin against the Holy Ghost, or what is called the unpardonable sin, consists in unbelief, or the constant rejection of the truth as it is in Jesus. They believe in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity, and accept the doctrine of election. In common with most evangelical churches, they believe in infant baptism.

CHRISTIANS.—A body of believers, professedly rejecting human creeds, and united on the Holy Scriptures as their standard of faith and duty. They claim no man as their founder, and desire that the Church shall be named, from its divine head—Christian. Seeking for the union of all Christians, they tolerate great latitude of opinion, and have for their only test of fellowship, vital Christian piety. They appeared at the beginning of this century, springing simultaneously from the Baptists in New England, the Methodists in Virginia, and the Presbyterians in Kentucky.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.—It is quite probable that the gospel was preached in Britain by the apostle St. Paul. Eusebius, when speaking of the labors of the apostles in distant countries, adds that some passed over the ocean into those islands called the British Islands. Tertullian, in A. D. 190, says there are places in Britain inaccessible to Roman arms, which were subdued to Christ. From these and other authorities it is evident that the gospel was preached in Britain at a very early day, and that the Church was fully organized there at an early period. It is a fact of history not to be disputed that the British bishops were present at the Council of Arles, 314; at Nice in 325; and at Sardica, 347. These facts prove the early establishment of the British Church, now the Church of England. For five centuries she maintained her independence of the Church of Rome, down to the Saxon invasion. In the year 596, Rome sent over Augustine with a band of missionaries to Britain, and there he found the old British Church regularly organized and established. Hence, it is evident that the Church of England does not derive her origin from the Church of Rome, but was established five centuries before Rome sent her missionaries there. During the invasion of the barbarians she suffered severely, and even in the Dark Ages, when the power of the pope was generally recognized in Christendom, there were manly spirits in the Church of England who did not hesitate to speak out boldly against the usurpations of Rome, regardless of consequences. But at last, in common with the whole Church of God, she was forced to submit to the authority of Rome, and thus she continued down to the Reformation of the sixteenth century. It was then that she threw off the yoke Rome had imposed upon her, and asserted her independence once more. The work achieved by the Reformers of the Church of England was one of reformation. They did not create a new Church, but reformed and purified a Church which had become corrupt. Thus does the Church of England stand to-day before the world, an ancient branch of the Church of Christ established in the early days of Christianity. The ministry of the Church of England is of a threefold character, consisting of bishops, priests and deacons, together with two archbishops, who are the head of the English hierarchy, called the archbishop of Canterbury and the archbishop of York. Her form of worship is liturgical, and is found in what is called the Book of Common Prayer, and the administration of the sacraments and other rites and ceremonies of the Church. The doctrines of the Church of England are to be found in the Book of Homilies, her Creeds and the Thirty-nine Articles. A primitive custom still preserved in this Church is that of confirmation, or the laying on of hands. On the controversies of Calvin and Arminius this Church is divided. Both parties always have been, and are still to be, found in the Church.

CONGREGATIONALISTS (ORTHODOX).—In a village in the north of England there was established about the year 1600 an independent church. This organized body of believers ultimately proved to be the origin of Congregationalism in this country. Having fled from the land of persecution, we find this infant church, with its pastor, John Robinson, subsequently settled in Holland. In 1620 these same persons, forming themselves into a colony, emigrated to New England, landing at Plymouth in December of the same year. This little colony consisted of about one hundred souls. Other colonies followed soon after, settling in different parts of Massachusetts. The church founded at Plymouth became the mother church of the Congregationalists, and from time to time sent forth its bands of believers, who formed other churches in different parts. Congregationalism continued to enlarge its borders as the population of the country increased. In 1638 Harvard University was founded at Cambridge. In general, the Congregationalists of New England are Calvinistic in sentiment, as we learn from their Platform or Church Discipline, drawn up in 1648 by the elders assembled at Cambridge. As to the theology of the Congregationalists, it is orthodox and evangelical. Each congregation is a separate and distinct church of itself. The Orthodox Congregationalists to-day comprise much of the wealth, intelligence and influence of New England. Many of the principal colleges and theological seminaries of New England are under its influence.

GREEK CHURCH.—For eight centuries the Greek and Latin or Roman churches were united in one great body. It was in the ninth century that a difficulty arose which resulted in a final separation of the two churches. The disturbing causes which culminated at last in a separation were many. The first, no doubt, was the elevation of the bishop of Constantinople in dignity and influence next to the bishop of Rome. This grew out of that act of Constantine which transferred the seat of empire to Byzantium. When Constantinople became the capital of the empire, the bishops of that city naturally aspired after and claimed equal rank with the bishops of Rome, and the emperors favored the idea. Hence, at the Council of Constantinople, held in the year 381, the bishop of that city was elevated in rank next to the bishop of Rome. This was for a long time a subject of much dissension in the Church. Another subject of dissension was that concerning the procession of the Holy Ghost. This, together with the claims set up for precedence by the two bishops of Rome and Constantinople, contributed in a great degree to divide the two churches. In doctrine the Greek Church differs but little from the Church of Rome. Besides the Holy Scriptures, it receives tradition as the rule of faith. Among the doctrines accepted as the faith of the Greek Church are the following—viz.: It admits the seven sacraments of Rome; baptism is performed by the immersion of the infant three times; the Lord's Supper is administered to the laity in both kinds, and even to infants; the first six general councils of the Church the Greek Church accepts as such. It rejects the doctrine of purgatory. Transubstantiation is accepted by this Church. It maintains that the Holy Spirit proceedeth from the Father only. The doctrines of the Greek Church are more or less to be found in her creeds and in her liturgies and confessions. The patriarch of Constantinople is head of the Greek Church proper.

LUTHERANS, THE.—The founder of the Lutheran Church was Martin Luther, a Reformer of the sixteenth century. He was born in Saxony A. D. 1483, and ordained in 1507. It was during a visit to Rome that Luther's eyes were opened to behold the decay of piety in the Church. Leo X. occupied the papal throne at this time—an infidel at heart, but a man of culture and scholarship. Even the clergy laughed at religion in private. Such a state of things Luther could not endure; his manly spirit was aroused. But that which particularly excited his indignation was the selling of indulgences by Tetzel. Luther boldly attacked Tetzel, denying that the pope could pardon sin or that indulgences were of any avail. On the 15th of June, 1520, Leo issued a bull condemning the heresies of Luther and commanding his books to be destroyed. On the 8th of May, 1521, he was condemned as a heretic, and severe punishments were to be inflicted on all who should espouse his cause. From this time Luther stepped forth bent on the reformation of the Church. It was at the Diet of Augsburg in 1555 that liberty was given to all Protestants who should embrace the Augsburg Confession to join that Church which conscience dictated, and that they should be no longer subject to the dominion of the Roman pontiff. Thus was the Lutheran Church established. The faith of this Church is embraced in the Augsburg Confession and the Articles of Smalcald. The first settlement of the Lutherans of America was made in New York, and composed of emigrants from Holland. But the first Lutheran churches established in this country were those planted on the banks of the Delaware by the Swedes about the year 1636. These eventually united with the Episcopal Church. It was about the year 1710 that German Lutherans began to emigrate to the shores of America in large numbers, though many had previously left the old country from time to time. Settlements were made in New York, Pennsylvania and in the South. It was in the year 1820 that the General Synod of the Lutheran Church was formed. This brought the various scattered congregations together and united them into one body, and was a source of general prosperity to the Church. From that period it has gone on prospering, until it has now become a large and flourishing Church. The Bible is the rule of faith and practice in this Church. Its theology is evangelical, holding as it does to the great doctrine of the Trinity, the divinity of Christ, the depravity of the race, the atonement, and justification by faith.

German Bibles, published in Philadelphia, are used in the German churches in this country, the translation of which was made by that eminent theologian and Biblical scholar, Dr. Martin Luther.

MENNONITES.—The descendents of the ancient Waldenses, so called from Menno Simon, one of the reformers of the sixteenth century. He was born in Holland in 1496, and died 1561. They believe in the Trinity, the divinity of Christ, the depravity of the human race, the atonement, and that faith, repentance and a pious, godfearing life are necessary conditions of salvation. They baptize believers (adults) only. Baptism by all orthodox Mennonites is performed by pouring or sprinkling, and not by immersion. They are utterly averse to oaths, war and capital punishment, which they regard as inconsistent with the spirit of Christianity. They observe the ordinance of feet-washing, teach nonconformity to the world, plainness in speech and apparel, charity, and that Christians should "marry only in the Lord." Their first settlement in America was made in Germantown, Pennsylvania, in 1683. During 1873, 74, 75, on account of religious intoleration, about 8000 emigated from Russia to America. The entire membership of the Church is estimated at about eighty thousand (80,000), with from 500 to 600 ministers and as many churches. They have large settlements in Pennsylvania, New York, Maryland, Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Nebraska, Kansas, and most of the Western States and Canada.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—The father of Methodism was John Wesley. He was born in England in the year 1703, and was educated at the University of Oxford. He was a presbyter of the Church of England, and always considered himself a member of that Church. The first preacher of Methodism in this country was one Philip Embury, who emigrated to this country with a band of emigrants from Ireland in the year 1760. After holding meetings for some time in private houses, they concluded to erect a church. The first Methodist church was erected in the city of New York and dedicated to Almighty God in the year 1768. Other preachers of like sentiments with Wesley embarked for this country at different times, and engaged earnestly in the work of preaching the gospel. The first Methodist Conference held in America was at Philadelphia on the 14th of July, 1773. From this date the Methodist Church, with the blessing of God and the earnest preaching of the Word, made rapid strides, adding daily to its numbers until at the present time it may justly be reckoned as the most numerous of all denominations of Christians in this country. Dr. Chalmers has somewhere said, "Methodism is religion in earnest." Wesley had always impressed on the minds of his followers both in England and America loyalty to the Church of England. But realizing the great fact that Methodism must eventually become an independent Church, Wesley ordained the Rev. Thomas Coke, a presbyter of the Church of England, as general superintendent of the Methodist congregations in this country. Dr. Coke came to this country in the year 1784. It was at an assembly of the Methodist clergy convened at Baltimore that an independent Church was formed. Under the name and title of the Methodist Episcopal Church, articles of religion were adopted and a church government was framed. The Methodist Episcopal Church has two conferences, the Annual and the General Conference, which latter body meets once in four years. This church has what are called class-meetings and love-feasts. Its ministry consists of bishops, presbyters, deacons and local preachers. This Church has of late years displayed in the cause of education much interest. It has numerous universities, colleges, academies and theological institutes. In its twenty-five articles of religion are to be found the index of the Methodist faith.

The Methodist Book Concern in the city of New York is an influential auxiliary in the Church, and from which emanate their religious publications of many thousands of volumes.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH (SOUTH.) The Methodist Church made rapid progress in the Southern States from its first introduction. On all questions of reform the Methodist Episcopal Church as a whole has always taken, and does still, a great interest. When the question of American slavery came up, and its moral aspects engaged the minds of men, the hearts of the people North and South waxed warm on the subject, and the result was a separation of the northern and southern divisions of the Church. This event in reality took place in the year 1844. It was, however, in May, 1845, that a formal dissolution of the union of the Church was effected. Thus was formed and established what is now known as the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The doctrine and government of this branch of the Church are identical with those of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Its universities and colleges are now in a prosperous condition.

The publishing house of the Methodist Episcopal Church South is located at Nashville, Tenn. It has a large and well-organized book establishment, from which their publications are distributed throughout the Southern States.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH (AFRICAN).—This Church is composed of colored people. It separated from the main body of Methodists in the year 1787. In doctrine it is evangelical, having its bishops, elders and deacons. There are two other branches of the Methodist Church, called respectively the Wesleyan Methodist Church and the Zion African M. E. Church.

EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.—This Church originated in Pennsylvania, A. D. 1800, through the labors of Jacob Albright. Its confession of faith and polity resemble closely those of the M. E. Church. Its episcopacy and presiding eldership are quadrennially elective officers. Largely of a missionary character it has pushed its operations into Canada, Germany, Switzerland and Japan.

METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH.—This is a branch of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The great question which caused its separation from the main body of the Church was a desire on the part of some to restrain the power and authority of the bishops of the Church, and the introduction of laymen as delegates in the councils of the Church. Accordingly in the year 1830 several societies separated from the Church, and, adopting a constitution and book of discipline, they assumed the name of the Methodist Protestant Church. It is in doctrine identical with the other branches of the Church. It has its annual and general conference, the latter holding its session once in four years. This Church has neither bishops nor presiding elders.

MOHAMMEDANISM.—In the seventh century the Christians suffered less than in the preceding centuries, though at times they were persecuted. A new and powerful enemy, however, different from any they had previously encountered, appeared about the year 612 in Arabia in the person of Mohammed. This distinguished individual was born about the year 569 at Mecca, a city of Arabia. His family were poor, but respectable. Mohammed was an illiterate man, but eloquent. At the commencement of his remarkable career he declared to the world that he was commissioned by God to destroy the polytheism of his day and country, and to purify the religion of the Jews and that of the Christians. The Koran, which is ascribed to him, professes to be a divine composition handed down by God and imparted to his prophet. It was at Mecca that Mohammed conceived and embraced the idea of converting his countrymen and bringing them to a knowledge of divine truth. Hence, retiring from the world, he secluded himself in a cave, and there occupied his time in meditation and prayer. It was there that he convinced himself that he was God's prophet, and sent by God to reform the world. At first he made a few converts, chiefly from among his friends and relatives, and then followed a series of reverses; but he still persevered, and his converts multiplied. It was about the year 622 that he asserted his claim to temporal as well as spiritual power among men, and declared himself to be a civil ruler as well as prophet. It was at this time that he assumed the sword, and determined by it to build up his kingdom and force men to embrace his doctrines. Thus by force, as well as by persuasion, he in a few years reduced Arabia to subjection, so rapidly did his cause progress. Mohammed died at Medina in the year 632. The followers of Mohammed all believe in the absolute necessity of a pilgrimage to the tomb of the prophet; it is viewed as a religious duty. They regard the Koran in the same light that all Christians do the Bible. They believe in one God, who is the Creator and Ruler of the universe, whom all must worship and serve. They believe that Mohammed was a prophet of God, sent by him, and that the Koran contains the divine laws of God. They believe in a day of judgment, when sentence shall be passed on all men according to the life led in this world. They believe in the final destruction of all things and in a general resurrection. They believe in a paradise of the blessed, where all the true followers of God and his prophet shall dwell hereafter in the presence of God, and a hell where the wicked must dwell, an abode for the impious. The duty of fasting is considered as indispensable.

MORAVIANS.—It was near the middle of the ninth century, says a celebrated writer on ecclesiastical history, that two Greek monks, Methodius and Cyril, were sent from Constantinople by the empress Theodora to teach the Moesians, Bulgarians, and subsequently the Bohemians and Moravians, and induce them, if possible, to embrace Christianity. A knowledge of Christianity had previously been imparted to these nations through the influence of Charlemagne, but the light of truth was soon extinguished among them. These missionaries, being Greeks, taught these nations the opinions, worship and rites of the Greeks. In the sixteenth century the Bohemian Brethren, as they were called, or the Moravians, hearing of Luther and his work, sought friendly intercourse with the Reformer. In the year 1547 a large number of this people were driven from their country. A number of years afterward the Bohemians and Swiss became consolidated into one community, assuming the name of the Church of the United Brethren and adopting the doctrines of the Reformed, but adhering to the rules and regulations of the Bohemians.

When the war broke out in Bohemia in 1612 they fled in different directions. A colony went to Upper Lusatia, where they received the protection of Nicolas Lewis, Count Zinzendorf. This man, we are told, became their bishop subsequently. The ministry of this Church consists of three orders, bishops, presbyters and deacons. In doctrine it is identical with the great evangelical churches of this country. It keeps the great festivals of Easter and Christmas. This small but earnest body of believers has always been celebrated for its missionary spirit. It has several celebrated institutions of learning—at Bethlehem and Nazareth, Pennsylvania, and at Salem, North Carolina. The Moravians first emigrated to this country about the year 1750.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—This Church is the daughter of the Church of England. The members of the Church of England who came over with the early colonists to this country were by no means numerous. The greater part of those who came were among those colonists who settled in the Southern States. The establishment of the Church of England in this country was through the instrumentality of that society called the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. The churches thus established and supported were placed under the care of the bishop of London. When in process of time the American colonies severed their connection with the mother-country, the Episcopal churches found therein also severed their connection with the mother Church of England. At the conclusion of the war of the Revolution, when America asserted her independence, the Episcopal churches were in a weak and feeble condition. The first effort made for the organization of the several congregations into one united Church was at an assemblage of clergymen convened at Brunswick, New Jersey, May 8, 1784. This meeting adjourned to October in the same year. The first general convention of this Church met at Philadelphia on the 27th day of September, 1785. At this convention alterations were made in the Prayer Book, and a constitution was proposed, but it was not until the convention which met in Philadelphia in 1789 that the Episcopal Church was finally established. At this convention the Prayer Book was again altered in some respects, and adapted for the use of the Protestant Episcopal Church, together with a constitution. When the Episcopal Church in this country was fully organized and established it had but 3 bishops and about 180 clergymen. It has now 54 bishops and nearly 3000 ministers. Its communicants at the present time number more than 200,000. The growth of this Church has been very rapid, especially during the last twenty years. Like the Church of England, it has three orders of the ministry, bishops, priests or presbyters, and deacons. Its form of worship is liturgical, and is found in the Book of Common Prayer. Its doctrines are to be found in the Book of Homilies, the Creeds, and the Thirty-nine Articles. On the peculiar tenets of Calvin and Arminius this Church is divided, the advocates of both parties being found within her borders. The Episcopal Church is truly a missionary Church, having her missionary fields, with their bishops, in China, Africa, and Japan. In doctrine this Church is evangelical, and consequently in harmony with the great evangelical churches of this country. It comprises much of the intelligence, wealth, enterprise and influence of the land.

NESTORIANS.—This sect of Christians derives its name from Nestorius, bishop of Constantinople, who lived in the fifth century. The councils of the Church held previous to the fifth century had by their decrees declared that Christ was truly God as well as man, but as to the mode and effects of this mysterious union of God with man in Christ there had been no discussion. The learned men of that age had expressed themselves differently, it is true. The cause of the Nestorian controversy arose from a sermon preached by Anastasius. This man took exception to the use of the term Theotokos, or Mother of God, which the Alexandrians applied to the Virgin Mary, and in his sermon he preached against it. A controversy ensued. Nestorius upheld Anastasius. Cyril, bishop of Alexandria, called a council and denounced him. As a reconciliation between the two bishops seemed now impossible, the emperor Theodosius II. assembled a council at Ephesus in the year 431, and before that council Nestorius was condemned and sent into exile. On the banishment of Nestorius his followers dispersed, diffusing his doctrines through the East, and to this distant day they exist a numerous body in Persia and adjacent countries. They live principally in Koordistan, a mountainous region which separates Persia from the Turkish empire; many dwell also in the plains of Ooroomiah. The Nestorian Church is episcopal in its organization, having its bishops, priests and deacons. It has also a patriarch, who resides in the mountains of Koordistan. They abhor image-worship, and deny auricular confession and the doctrine of purgatory. Mr. Perkins has for many years labored very successfully among this ancient sect of Christians as a missionary sent out by the American Board of Foreign Missions. They hold that no doctrine is essential to salvation which is not found in the Bible. For the Scriptures they have the greatest reverence. They have been styled the Protestants of the East. Religion, it is true, is in a very low condition; the piety of this sect has decayed. But nevertheless, here in its mountain home is to be found, under the name of Nestorians, an ancient branch of the early Church, claiming for its founder the apostle St. Thomas.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES.—This Church is the offspring of the Church of Scotland. It was in the city of Philadelphia, about the year 1703, that the first Presbyterian church was organized. In the following year the Philadelphia Presbytery was formed. A synod was established in the year 1716. From this period down to the year 1741 prosperity attended the Church. In the year 1741 the synod was unhappily rent asunder by the dissenting elements then existing in the Church. A few years subsequent to this time union and harmony was restored to the Church once more. In the year 1789 the first general assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States met. It was convened in the city of Philadelphia. It was at this meeting of the general assembly that we detect a decided growth and prosperity in the history of the Church. From this epoch down to the year 1834 the Church grew very rapidly. In the year 1834 it numbered 22 synods, over 100 presbyteries, nearly 2000 ordained ministers, and more than 200,000 communicants. It was in the midst of this rapid growth and prosperity that a division occurred in the Church in the year 1837, which culminated in the complete separation of the Church into the two divisions known afterward by the names of the Old School and New School respectively. But, though the Church was divided and each school acted on an independent basis, still prosperity marked the future history of each, and moreover from time to time a desire for reunion revealed itself. Several attempts were made, and terms of compromise were proposed. At last, in the year 1869 the long-desired reunion was effected, and the Old and New Schools became once more consolidated into one body under the name and title of The Presbyterian Church in the United States. The government of this Church is vested in what is called the session, which is the primary court of the Church, and consists of the pastor and ruling elders, the pastor presiding as the moderator. The presbytery is composed of all the ministers and one ruling elder from each church embraced within a given district. The synod consists of several presbyteries united. The general assembly is the highest court in the Presbyterian Church, and consists of an equal number of pastors and elders from the presbyteries. The doctrines of the Presbyterian Church in general are Calvinistic, and are embraced in what is called the Westminster Confession of Faith and in the Larger and Shorter Catechisms. The Presbyterian Church is to-day one of the largest and most prosperous of all the religious denominations of this country.

PRESBYTERIANS (CUMBERLAND).—The origin of this Church is a little remarkable. At the beginning of the present century certain parts of the State of Kentucky were visited with an outpouring of the Holy Spirit, resulting in the conversion of many souls. The exigencies of the season seemed to demand in the estimation of some an increase in the ranks of the ministry to meet the wants of the people. Accordingly, in the year 1803 the Cumberland Presbytery ordained to the ministry certain persons who had not gone through with the regular prescribed course of study demanded of those who aspired to the ministerial office. The synod, subsequently learning this fact, demanded of the presbytery that those persons who had been ordained as above mentioned should prepare themselves for an examination in those studies prescribed according to the rules of the Church. This demand was refused, and in 1810 the Cumberland Presbytery was formed, which resulted in the establishment of the present Cumberland Presbyterian Church. The subsequent prosperity of this Church was very rapid. In 1813 a synod was established. In 1828 it was determined that a general assembly should be formed. The first meeting of the general assembly of this Church was convened at Princeton, Ky., in the year 1829. The doctrines of this Church vary somewhat from the Westminster Confession, rejecting the doctrine of election. In government this Church is identical with the Presbyterian Church in general. In the year 1847, agreeably to the statements of the general assembly, the Church had been favored with an unusual degree of prosperity. In the year 1871, according to report, there were connected with this Church 100 presbyteries, about 1100 ministers, besides many licentiates. The number of communicants, according to estimate, was 80,000.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (UNITED).—This Church is at present composed of the two churches known formerly by the name of the Associate and the Associate Reformed Church respectively. It had been the earnest desire of the members of these two churches for many years that a union should be effected, not only for the happiness and convenience of the members in their individual capacity, but also for the well-being of the churches themselves as a whole. There was in reality but little difference between them, and that difference pertained not to doctrine, but to minor matters. Several attempts at union were made from time to time, but all proved unavailing. A general basis, however, was at last agreed upon and presented to the synods and presbyteries, and the result was a union of the two churches. This event took place at the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, on the 26th of May, 1858. The union of these churches was the source of much rejoicing among the people. This Church in doctrine and church government is identical with the other branches of that great body of believers comprehended under the term Presbyterianism. The progress of this Church has, since the union, been a happy one. The members of this Church are celebrated for their earnest piety and zeal in the Master's cause.

PROGRESSIVE FRIENDS.—These are seceders from the Society of Friends, or Quakers, as they are called. They profess to identify themselves with all the great progressive movements of the age, aiming at the amelioration of the ills of life in general. In doctrine they are identical with the Hicksites in many points, rejecting the doctrine of the Trinity and the vicarious atonement. Ostensibly, the Progressive Friends have no creed to which the members are bound to subscribe. They hold what is called their yearly meeting in May, at which time all matters pertaining to the well-being of the society are considered.

QUAKERS, or FRIENDS.—It was in England, about the year 1648, that the sect bearing this name first appeared. The founder, George Fox, a person of melancholic temperament, was born in Leicestershire. He was retiring in his habits of life, and given much to reflection and meditation. It is said that while taking a pensive walk on a certain occasion, and reflecting on the worldliness of the age and the absence of spiritual religion among men, he felt himself called to assume the duties and office of a preacher. Consequently, abandoning his former pursuits, he gave himself to the work of elevating as well as promoting the happiness of his fellow-men. In his work and labor of love he met with considerable opposition at first, being arrested on several occasions and once cast into prison. Subsequently, his cause gained a few supporters, who went out in all directions preaching and adding to the number of the sect. Among those who embraced the principles of this sect was one distinguished by wealth and social position—William Penn, who afterward founded a colony in Pennsylvania. This man gave character and influence to the Society of Friends. By the earnest labors of Fox and his co-workers the sect increased in numbers, spreading all over England and the Continent. The colony founded by William Penn in this country in its early days consisted mostly of Friends. The Society of Friends believes in one God, the Creator of all things. It accepts the Bible as God's inspired word. It believes in the divinity of Christ and the doctrine of the Holy Trinity, and accepts the Holy Spirit as the Comforter. Baptism by water is rejected, the only true baptism being that of the Spirit. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper is rejected as unnecessary Christ is received as the Saviour and Redeemer of the world, and salvation is through faith in him. The Friends have what are called quarterly and yearly meetings, before which business is transacted. In dress the Friends are plain, and in manners modest and unassuming. They never resist an injury, hence war to them is an unnecessary evil. It was in the year 1827 that a division occurred among the Society of Friends. The ground of difference was doctrinal. There are now two societies, each retaining the name of Friends.

The seceders from the main body are commonly called Hicksites, from the name of Elias Hicks, their leader. They deny the doctrine of the Trinity, and consequently the divinity of Christ. They also deny the doctrine of a vicarious atonement and imputed righteousness.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.—This Church professes to derive her origin from St. Peter. She regards the apostle St. Peter as her founder. She maintains that our Lord delegated to this apostle an authority which constituted him the head of the college of the apostles, and that this primacy thus delegated is inherited by all the bishops of Rome. The first settlement of Roman Catholics in the United States appears to have taken place in Maryland about the year 1632 or 1633. The large and rapid growth of this Church since its organization in this country is chiefly owing to the vast tide of immigration which has constantly flowed from the Old World to our shores. At the head of this Church stands the pope of Rome. All power centres in him as the successor of St. Peter. Rome maintains that the Church of Christ consists of those believers, and those only, who recognize the pope as the head of the Church, and who submit to his authority. All other Christians, in her opinion, by whatever name they may be called, do not belong to the one universal Church of Christ. Episcopacy, according to the opinion of Rome, is essential to the very being and existence of the Church of Christ. Its order of ministry consists of bishops, priests and deacons. Besides the Bible, it holds to tradition. The government of this Church centres at Rome, and is vested in the pope and the college of cardinals. Its societies and religious orders are numerous. Numerically, this Church exceeds all other churches in Christendom.

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.—This sect of Christians appeared in England for the first time about the year 1650. In the year 1665 they appeared in this country. They hold to the doctrine of baptism by immersion. In doctrine they are regarded as evangelical, and in church government they are congregational, each society being an independent church. The one peculiarity of this sect of Christians is the observance of the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath. The seventh day being of divine appointment, they hold that it is still in force. Hence they observe it as the day set apart by Almighty God for holy worship, and to be observed as such by his believing people. As a sect they are not very numerous.

SECOND ADVENTISTS (called MILLERITES).—The founder of this sect of Christians was William Miller, who asserted that the end of the world would take place in the year 1843. His convictions were based upon the prophecies of the Old Testament. The sentiments of Mr. Miller produced great excitement throughout this country, and multitudes of people espoused his opinions. Those who are still regarded as his followers believe that the end of the world is near at hand, though they do not pretend to locate the time.

SHAKERS.—This remarkable people appeared first in England. A few members of the society came to this country about the year 1780, and settled near Lebanon Springs, New York. A prominent person who joined them in the year 1757 was Ann Lee, who was styled "the elect lady," or the mother of all the saints. The members of this society live a life of celibacy, the men and women dwelling in separate houses. They are said to be very hospitable to strangers, temperate in their habits, peaceable in their lives, as well as honest and industrious. In their mode of dress they are plain, and in their manners humble and unostentatious. Their worship consists in dancing, mingled with the clapping of the hands and singing. Occasionally, when the Spirit moves them, they speak. Their meals are taken at one common table. The candidate who applies for admission among them must first honorably discharge all his obligations to the outward world and yield up all his former relations and friends; he then becomes a member of the Shaker community. When the soul at death leaves the body it continues to dwell invisibly among the members of the community on earth. The Shakers number several thousand members, scattered through the several States. They have what is called a chief elder and an elderess.

SOCINIANS.—This sect derives its name from Loelius Socinus, who lived in the sixteenth century. He was a lawyer, a man of learning and talent, and celebrated for his moral and upright life. He traveled over many countries that he might obtain a knowledge of the truth. He is said to have been a member of the Swiss Church, accepting the Helvetic Confession. Many who embraced the doctrines of Socinus went to Poland, that they might enjoy a greater freedom in their religious opinions. There the Socinian sect was first established. From Poland the doctrines of Socinus were carried over to Transylvania, and being sustained by persons of influence there, the followers of this sect subsequently began to diffuse their principles through Europe. The Socinians hold that the truths of the Bible must be explained according to the dictates of reason. The Socinians reject the divinity of Christ, and believe the Holy Spirit to be only an energy or power of God, denying the personality of the Spirit.

SWEDENBORGIANS.—This denomination of Christians derives its name from Emanuel Swedenborg. Emanuel Swedenborg was born in Stockholm in 1688, and was the son of Jesper Swedberg, bishop of Skaroa, in Sweden, a man distinguished for piety and learning. Emanuel changed his name from Swedberg to Swedenborg. The first society of Swedenborgians was organized in London in the year 1787. The works of Swedenborg were introduced into this country in the year 1784. A church was first organized in Baltimore in 1798. The doctrines of this Church are the following: First, Swedenborg believed in the unity of God—that the Lord Jesus Christ was God manifested in the flesh, that the work of the redemption might be effected. His views of the Trinity are peculiar. While he denied that there are three Persons in one Divine Being, he at the same time admitted that there are three essential principles in one Divine Being, all meeting in the person of the Lord Jesus Christ. His Trinity seems to be a trinity of principles rather than of persons. He believed that salvation is the result of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, followed by a life of obedience. As to the resurrection, Swedenborg taught that the body in which men shall rise will not be a material but a spiritual body.

THE RUSSIAN GREEK CHURCH.—This is a branch of the Greek Church. It is a settled fact that Christianity was introduced into Russia near the end of the tenth century. Says a celebrated writer in 961: "Wlodimir, duke of Russia and Muscovy, married Anna, the sister of the Greek emperor Basil, junior, and she did not cease to importune and exhort her husband till he in the year 987 submitted to baptism, assuming the name Basil. The Russians, influenced by the example of their duke, embraced the faith." From this time Christianity obtained a permanent establishment in Russia. It was through Russia's connection with Greece that Christianity was introduced into the former country. Hence the patriarch of Constantinople enjoyed for some time a spiritual supremacy over the Russian Church. It was at the fall of Constantinople in the middle of the fifteenth century that the Church of Russia began to assert her independence, and it was in the year 1509 that the czar of Russia prevailed on Jeremiah, patriarch of Constantinople, to consecrate Job, archbishop of Rostow, the first patriarch of Moscow and metropolitan of all Russia. From this event we may date the independence of the Church of Russia. This Church is now really governed by the czar. The doctrines of the Russian Church are identical with the Greek Church. The Russians have a regard for relics, images and pictures, the invocation of the saints and the crucifix. The Russians pay great respect and attention to Lent. The ceremonies and customs of the Russian branch of the Greek Church are very numerous. Baptism in this Church is performed by the immersion of the infant three times.

THE COPTIC CHURCH.—This is a branch of the Greek Church. The head of this Church is styled the patriarch of Alexandria, and resides at Cairo. The patriarch has under him and subordinate to his authority several bishops. The number of Christians connected with this Church has been variously estimated, some reckoning 50,000, and others more than twice that number. The ecclesiastics of this Church are said to be from the lowest classes of society. This Church recognizes seven sacraments, and, following the example of the Greek Church, they keep four Lents and have several liturgies. The Coptic Church has suffered much from Mohammedan oppression. The clergy and people are in a very wretched condition, and consequently Christianity is in a decayed state. Of all the known branches of the Christian Church the Coptic Church is the poorest, the most degraded and ignorant. Should an infant die without receiving the rite of baptism, they believe it would be blind in the future world. It is said that they circumcise their children, although it is not certain that they do. They maintain that the bread and wine in the Lord's Supper are changed into the body and blood of Christ. Prayer for the dead is a common practice among them. In prayer they call on the Virgin Mary.

THE CHRISTIANS OF ST. THOMAS.—This is a branch of the Greek Church. It is maintained by some that the apostle St. Thomas preached the gospel to the inhabitants of India, and it is affirmed that these Christians are the offspring of the inhabitants of that country, or of those who were converted through the preaching of that apostle to the Christian faith. Their doctrines, says one, are embraced in a very few articles. They are said to acknowledge the patriarch of Antioch. They keep the festival of Easter. At the church-doors a vessel containing holy water is placed, and the Christians as they pass into the church make the sign of the cross with this water.

THE GEORGIAN AND MINGRELIAN CHURCHES are both branches of the Greek Church. Georgia and Mingrelia are countries located in Asia. The situation of the inhabitants of these two countries is very lamentable, their extreme poverty and ignorance rendering them wretched and miserable. They profess a common faith, and are in reality a branch of the Greek Church. Each of these nations has its own pontiff, who acknowledges tribute to the patriarch of Constantinople. The condition of their bishops and priests, so far as culture, refinement and temperance are concerned, is no better than that of the people in general, many of them reciting mass from memory. The doctrine of celibacy among the priesthood is practically ignored. An infant, so soon as it is born into the world, is brought to the priest, who makes on his brow the sign of the cross, and a few days afterward anoints it with the holy oil; two years subsequent to that time the child is baptized.

THE REFORMED CHURCH IN AMERICA.—This Church is the offspring of the Church of Holland. It was first established in New York, that State being originally settled by the members of this Church about the year 1612. For many years this denomination of Christians experienced many trials and difficulties, which proved a great impediment in the way of its prosperity. The first church building was erected in New York City, the first minister was the Rev. Everardus Bogardus. The condition of this Church in the year 1870 was as follows: Churches, 464; ministers, 493; communicants, 61,444; families, about 40,000. This Church accepts the Bible only as the rule of faith. Its Confession of Faith is that of the Council of Dort and the Heidelberg Catechism. It is strictly Presbyterian in government. Man's helplessness, his conversion by grace alone, and the perseverance of the saints are tenets held strictly by this Church. The consistory is the first court of this Church, consisting of ministers, elders and deacons. Then there is the classis, also the particular synod, and finally the general synod. This Church has a college and theological seminary situated at New Brunswick, New Jersey.

THE REFORMED CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES OF NORTH AMERICA.—This denomination of Christians first appeared in this country about the year 1720. Quite a large body of emigrants, coming over in the year 1727, accompanied by the Rev. George Michael Weiss, settled in Montgomery county, Pennsylvania. Here they built a church and formed a consistory. Several other settlements were made from time to time in different States. It severed its connection with the mother Church in 1792. From 1825 on to the present time the progress of this Church has been steady and constant. There are now connected with this Church one general synod and four particular synods. These are composed of 32 classis. Connected with this Church are 547 ministers, 1214 congregations and 121,314 communicants. In government this Church is strictly Presbyterian. Its faith is embraced in the Heidelberg Catechism. This Church is quite strong in the West. Much earnestness and zeal for the conversion of souls is manifested by this people.

THE MORMONS (LATTER-DAY SAINTS).—The founder of this very remarkable sect was Joseph Smith, Jr., who was born in Sharon, Windsor county, Vermont, in the year 1805. His parents were among those who walked in the humblest paths of life. The Smith family possessed a name and reputation by no means enviable. Joseph Smith when a boy became apparently interested in religion, and professed to have met with a change of heart, but he soon fell away. Previous to the establishment of this sect, Smith professed to be favored from time to time with miraculous visions. On one of these occasions he declared that an angel appeared to him and directed him to dig in a certain place and at a particular time, assuring him that he should find a metallic book containing mystical characters. Singular and incredible as it would appear to one unacquainted with the history of this strange people, Smith succeeded in establishing a creed and forming a sect. The first congregation of Mormons was established at Kirtland, Ohio. From this place they were expelled, and we next find them in Missouri. A similar experience awaited them in that State, and in the year 1840 we find them settled in Nauvoo, Illinois. There they built a city and temple, and gathered together a numerous company of believers. While dwelling at Nauvoo the Mormons were assailed by the enraged multitude. Smith with others was killed while in jail, for several of them had been arrested and imprisoned. The increase of this sect may be attributed in a measure to persecution. It was while the Mormon sect was settled at Kirtland, Ohio, that Brigham Young united with them. He soon became very prominent among them. At their expulsion from Nauvoo, Young at once became their real leader, and under his guidance and direction they traversed the plains of the far West, and formed a settlement in what is now called the Territory of Utah. Here they built a city, and here they continue to dwell under the name and title of the Latter-Day Saints. The creed of this sect is subject to change according as new revelations are made to the Church. The officers of the Church consist of the presidency of three, the apostles, the seventies, the elders and high priest, the Aaronic priesthood, including bishop, priest, preacher and deacon.

"THE HISTORY OF THE JEWS," says one, "properly commences with the call of Abraham. All anterior to this in the Mosaic records is the history of mankind." As a people they are the most remarkable of all the nations of the earth. They are the descendants of Abraham, who was the son of Terah. We read that "the Lord had said unto Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee; and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee and make thy name great, and thou shalt be a blessing. So Abram departed as the Lord had spoken unto him, and he came into the land of Canaan." Again, we read that the Lord appeared unto Abram and made a covenant with him, saying, "I am the Almighty God; walk before me and be thou perfect; and God talked with him, saying, As for me, behold my covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be a father of many nations. Neither shall thy name any more be called Abram; but thy name shall be Abraham, for a father of many nations have I made thee." Abraham died at a good old age, leaving behind him several sons, one of whom, Isaac by name, was the child of promise. Isaac had two sons, Jacob and Esau. From Jacob, whose name was subsequently changed to Israel, the Israelites descended. Jacob had twelve sons, and from these the twelve tribes of the nation received their names. Joseph, one of the younger sons of Jacob, was by a mysterious providence sold into Egypt, and by the same providence rose to great distinction afterward. The meeting of Joseph with his brethren after years of separation was remarkable. A famine had visited the land of Egypt and extended to Canaan. Pressed by the famine, the sons of Jacob on several occasions went down into Egypt to buy corn. Joseph knew his brethren, though they knew not Joseph. It was on one of these occasions that Joseph made himself known to his brethren. This event resulted in the removal of the patriarch Jacob and his family into Egypt, and in the assignment to them of the land of Goshen. After the death of Joseph and Pharaoh the history of Israel becomes a strangely checkered one. As a people they grew rapidly, and were cruelly oppressed by their masters. It was in the midst of this oppression that they cried unto God, and God remembered his promise made unto Abraham, and heard their cry. He appointed Moses to be their leader, and at the end of 430 years, under Moses, their divinely-constituted guide, the hosts of Israel went out of the land of Egypt into the wilderness, and commenced their memorable journey to the Promised Land. The journey of Israel through the wilderness is a strange history and distinguished by a variety of providences. It is a scene of revolt, of dissatisfaction and of murmurings against the Most High, followed by many and severe visitations from God. At last, when forty long years had passed away, this wonderful people reached the Promised Land, the land promised by God to Abraham, the father of the faithful. There they settle and dwell under a form of government and laws diverse from all other governments known on the earth. Their history is still a checkered one. Their conflicts with the nations of the earth are severe and uncertain at times. But they rise to the rank of a great and powerful nation. They are subsequently overwhelmed and scattered, but afterward they rise again to a period of splendor, and are again overwhelmed and scattered over the whole face of the earth. The first king of Israel was Saul, who was succeeded by David, the sweet psalmist of Israel as he is called, under whose reign the nation rose to great splendor and power. David was succeeded by his son Solomon, the wise man. The reign of this king was peaceable, and distinguished for the building of the temple and its dedication to the worship of Almighty God. But in the reign of Rehoboam the nation was divided, ten tribes following Jeroboam, while the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin remained under Rehoboam. The kingdom of Israel was for many years governed by ungodly rulers, till at last under the reign of Hoshea it was overturned, and thus passed away the kingdom of Israel or the ten tribes. What has become of the ten tribes is still a mystery locked up in the bosom of Jehovah. The kingdom of Judah continued till under the reign of Zedekiah, its last king, Jerusalem was destroyed, the temple overthrown, and the people were carried captive to Babylon, where they remained for seventy years. They were afterward permitted by Cyrus to return to their native land and rebuild the temple; the walls were again rebuilt by Nehemiah. In the reign of Herod the Great, the sceptre being departed from Judah, Jesus Christ was born. Under Titus the temple was overthrown and the Holy City destroyed. From this period the Jews as a nation cease to exist. In the year 1694 the Jews first appeared in the United States. They settled at Newport, Rhode Island. In the year 1729 they made a second settlement in New York. Several other settlements were made at different times in the Southern States. They are now scattered all over the country to the number of several hundred thousand. Though a dispersed people, they still retain many of their ancient customs. Intermarrying with no other people, they preserve their race intact. The seventh day is still observed as a day of rest, sacred and holy, and devoted to the worship of Jehovah. The rite of circumcision, instituted in the days of the patriarch Abraham, is still observed, and takes place on the eighth day after birth. Their celebrated feasts are the feast of Tabernacles, the feast of Purim, the feast of the Passover and the feast of Pentecost. Thus this remarkable people still exist a living monument of the truth of God's word—scattered, it is true, over the whole earth, but preserving, nevertheless, their distinctive characteristics as a race. In their blindness they are still looking for the coming Messiah. They are celebrated for their benevolence and kindness toward their needy and destitute brethren. Among the criminals of our day very few Jews are to be detected. Wherever the Jews are to be found, there may be seen their institutions of charity and benevolence.

THE GNOSTICS.—When our Saviour appeared on the earth there were existing two systems of philosophy, called respectively the Grecian and the Oriental. The latter system pretended to teach "the way to the knowledge of the true God." It was a fruitful source of much harm and evil to the Christian Church, for among the followers of this philosophy are to be found the originators of those sects which for three hundred years disturbed the unity of the Church of Christ. Their great aim was to make the simple truths of the gospel accord with the principles of Oriental philosophy. It is true, these various sects agreed in many points. There were many facts on which all were united, such as the eternity of God, his goodness and his infinite wisdom, and the like. Prominent among these numerous sects were the Gnostics. They appeared in the first century, according to the opinion of some, while others maintain that they arose in the reign of Adrian. They were in expectation, moreover, of an ambassador from God, who, when he came, would impart to mortals the knowledge of the true God. The miracles of our Lord and his apostles attracted the attention of these men, and they at once concluded that our Lord was that long-expected Ambassador from God. Yet they denied his divinity, and as to his humanity, they rejected it, because they believed that everything material was from its very nature only evil. As Christ had no material body, according to their theory he could not suffer; hence they denied the doctrine that Christ suffered for man's sake. With regard to the Old Testament, they would not receive it as the inspired word of God. As these philosophers endeavored to accommodate the simple doctrines of the Christian religion to the tenets of their philosophy, it is easy to conceive that much harm must necessarily result from such a measure.

THE IRVINGITES.—These are the followers of the Rev. Edward Irving. Mr. Irving was born in the year 1792, and was educated at the University of Edinburgh. The Irvingites style themselves the Catholic Apostolic Church. The scene of Mr. Irving's ministerial labors was Glasgow. There he labored for a few years as assistant minister to the Rev. Dr. Chalmers. From Glasgow he was called to take charge of a church in the city of London. It was in the year 1822 that he commenced his labors in that great city. As a preacher he suddenly rose to great distinction in London, and by his burning eloquence he soon gathered around him a large and flourishing congregation of attentive hearers. He was somewhat enthusiastic in his temperament. Shortly after his residence in London his views of Christ were considerably modified from what they had been, for he declared that Christ "took upon him fallen and sinful flesh, with like appetites and desires as are found in us." This, in connection with other opinions promulgated by him from time to time, led to his arraignment and trial before the presbytery of Annan. This occurred in the year 1833. His trial resulted in his condemnation and deposition from the ministry of the Scottish Church. Notwithstanding the course pursued by the presbytery, a portion of his congregation still clung to him. His deposition from the ministry of the Scottish Church was followed by the establishment of the Irvingite Church. Not long after this Mr. Irving died, but his Church survived him and grew quite rapidly, for in the year 1835 we find that there were already in the city of London several congregations which professed to be followers of the Rev. Edward Irving. The sect continued to spread, and congregations were formed in different places. Numerous churches are now to be found in England, Ireland, Scotland, Germany and France. The doctrines of this Church are embraced in what are called the Apostles' Creed, the Nicene Creed and the Athanasian Creed. The ministry of the Irvingite Church, or the Catholic Apostolic Church as it is called, consists of apostles, prophets, evangelists and pastors. In England it embraces many who are found among the most cultivated, refined and wealthy of English society. It is a principle of this Church that each member should dedicate to religious purposes one-tenth of his or her income.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.—These Christians have often been associated with, or taken for, the Moravians; but they are not, for their origin is of modern date. They first appeared about the year 1760 or a little later. They are scattered all over this country, and are quite numerous as a body. In church government they resemble the Methodists.

UNITARIANS.—It was in the year 1815 that this sect of Christians assumed an independent organization. Its existence grew out of a controversy which took place in Boston about that time. The germ of Unitarian theology may be traced to the Pilgrim Fathers. The seeds of Unitarianism that were sown in New England soon germinated. The soil being congenial, the tree grew rapidly, spreading its branches everywhere throughout the New England States. As a sect it allows great latitude of opinion, so that at the present time the name by no means indicates the status of one's religious belief. At present there are at least three schools of theology, varying very much in their peculiar tenets of belief. The right of private judgment in all things, originally adopted by this sect, has been carried to the extreme, and has consequently led to unwholesome results. The principal doctrines of this sect are the following, viz.: It believes in the unity of God, who is infinite in his attributes, and is the only object worthy of man's worship and adoration. Accepting the words of the Saviour according to their literal interpretation, "My Father is greater than I," they regard Christ as a creature of God. Their views of the Saviour as to his nature and dignity are varied, some believing him to be a mere man whose example we are to follow, while others regard him as something more than man, declaring him to be the highest of created existences. The Unitarians deny the personality of the Holy Ghost, and consequently his office as a comforter. He is regarded simply as an influence going forth from God. The great doctrine of the vicarious atonement of Christ is rejected. This sect is confined principally to the New England States. As a denomination, it embraces much of the culture, enterprise, wealth and influence of New England. It numbers upward of three hundred societies, scattered over the country, but chiefly to be found in the Northern States.

UNIVERSALISTS.—This sect dates the commencement of its history from a sermon preached by John Murray on September 30, 1770, in New Jersey. The first society was organized at Gloucester, Mass., January 1, 1779. The faith of this body is embraced in what is called the Winchester Confession, set forth by the general convention in 1803. Originally it was maintained that all punishments inflicted on sinful men were confined to this life, but it is now admitted that the consequences of sin unrepented will follow man into the future world, and that man will only be saved from those consequences by a future compliance with the terms of salvation. They have some learned and able speakers, and are a large and influential body in the Eastern States, having a college and seminaries in Massachusetts.

WALDENSES.—This sect of Christians first appeared, according to the most reliable writers, near the middle of the twelfth century. The founder of this sect was Peter Waldus. Says a celebrated writer of ecclesiastical history: "Of all sects that arose in this century none was more famous or obtained a higher reputation for probity and innocence, even with its enemies, and none could count more disciples, than that which was called from its founder the Waldensians. Peter Waldus was a man of unblemished character, and celebrated for his humble, earnest piety. Obtaining a translation of the four Gospels, he immediately devoted himself to the study of this portion of God's word. It was by a diligent study of the word of God that his eyes were opened to a realization of the departure of the Church from the true faith as taught by the Saviour and his apostles, and the decay of piety in the hearts of the people. He resolved, therefore, to assume the office and duties of a preacher, and gathering around him a few devout souls of like sentiment with himself, this little band of God-fearing people went forth to preach the gospel. The people of that age, struck with the earnest piety and devotion of these men, readily embraced their cause, and societies soon sprang up in different places. They were opposed by the bishops of the Church, but their opposition availed nothing. In a short time, comparatively speaking, the sect spread all over Europe. Converts were added daily to the Waldensian Church. No force which Rome could bring against this earnest and devout people could intimidate their zeal or extinguish the flame of piety which burned so ardently in their souls. For three centuries was this noble people cruelly persecuted by the merciless arm of Rome, but they clung tenaciously to the faith once delivered to the saints, and fearlessly bore the standard of the cross. The great aim of Peter and his associates was not the propagation of a new faith, but the reformation of the Church and the inculcation of true piety among the people. They denied the supremacy of the Roman pontiff, and asserted that the power of forgiving sins belonged to God only. They ignored the right of granting indulgences, and denied that prayers for the dead were of any avail. The Waldensian Church has its three orders of the ministry, bishops, presbyters and deacons. The spread of this Church was marvellous. Though proscribed by the Roman pontiffs from age to age, though hunted down by the bloodthirsty inquisitors, yet amidst all their persecutions they preserved their existence." We find the Waldensian Church in the year 1375 in the valleys of Piedmont. From the year 1655 to 1696 they were cruelly persecuted and nearly exterminated by the Roman pontiff. At this distant day, even, they have several congregations in Italy and other parts.

WINEBRENNERIANS.—The founder of this sect was the Rev. John Winebrenner, who was originally a minister of the German Reformed Church, and settled in the city of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. This Church was first established in 1830. They style themselves the Church of God. They believe in the doctrine of the Trinity—three Persons in one Godhead—and the great doctrine of the atonement. They administer baptism by immersion. In sentiment they are Arminian. One peculiar custom among them is the washing of the saints' feet. This sect is not numerous, being found chiefly in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana.

WYCKLIFFITES.—The followers of John Wycliffe, who was born in 1324 and died in 1384, in England. This was a numerous sect in this early stage of the Christian Church. Wyckliffe translated almost the entire Bible into the English language. His zeal and learning were instrumental in preparing the minds of the people for the great reformation.

SCIENCE AND REVELATION;

OR,

THE TRIUMPH OF THE BIBLE OVER CRITICISM.

EVERY book should be judged by what it purports to be. It would be unfair to expect from it what it does not propose to give. According to this rule, a man has no right to look for instruction in natural things in the Bible, which claims to be a spiritual revelation. But, at the same time, as it professes to be an inspired document, and therefore to contain nothing but truth, it is just, we admit, to expect that any reference which it makes to natural things will be one which may be tested by all scientific discoveries, and which will prove to be thoroughly consistent with them. Now, what have been the results of the scientific tests which have been applied to the Bible? Simply this, that in all cases philosophy has proved herself the handmaid of the revelation which divulges secrets far beyond her gaze.

It is so in geology; for, to say nothing of the fact that this science is yet in its infancy, the alleged difficulty in reconciling its discoveries with the Mosaic Cosmogony is met (if it need be) by the fact that the first two verses of Genesis need not be regarded as connected with those that follow, and that whilst these two verses describe the first creation of matter, so far as anything to the contrary is stated, a million of ages may have elapsed between the first creation and God's formation of our globe. Nor is this a new theory of interpretation framed for an unexpected emergency, but one that was maintained by the immortal Chalmers and others long before any difficulty on the subject was supposed to exist.

It is so in astronomy; for though in darker days it was felt necessary by ecclesiastics to set themselves against the investigations of the heavenly bodies, yet neither then nor since has anything been developed in this direction that conflicts with the testimony of Him who sits enthroned "far above all heavens," who "calleth the stars by their names," and by the word of whose power "the worlds were made."

It is so in geography; for travelers who have visited the East, instead of finding anything in those countries at variance with the usages and customs and localities which the Bible describes, have declared that they found it, especially the New Testament, the best guide to Palestine, and that by its statements they were furnished with better directions than they derived from any other source. "As our knowledge of nature and her laws has increased," says Lieutenant Maury, in his late work on the "Physical Geography of the Sea," "so has our knowledge of many passages of the Bible been improved. The Bible called the earth 'the round world,' yet for ages it was the most damnable heresy for Christian men to say the world is round; and, finally, sailors circumnavigated the globe, and proved the Bible to be right, and saved Christian men of science from the stake. And as for the general system of atmospherical circulation which I have been so long endeavoring to describe, the Bible tells it all in a single sentence: 'The wind goeth toward the South and turneth about into the North, it whirleth about continually, and the wind returneth again to his circuits.'" Eccles. i. 6.

Equally marked is the triumph of the Bible in relation to various readings. English infidels of the last century raised a premature pæan over the discovery and publication of so many various readings. They imagined that the popular mind would be rudely and thoroughly shaken, that Christianity would be placed in imminent peril of extinction, and that the Church would be dispersed and ashamed at the sight of the tattered shreds of its Magna Charta. But the result has blasted all their hopes, and the oracles of God are found to be preserved in immaculate integrity. The storm which shakes the oak only loosens the earth around its roots, and its violence enables the tree to strike its fibres deeper into the soil.

The same thing is true in relation to antiquarian research. All its labors are but cumulative proofs of the divinity of the Bible, as ancient cities are disinterred and ancient coins discovered. The great blow that the infidel philosophers of Europe predicted would be given to revealed religion by disclosures from Chinese literature, proved to be nothing when a Christian missionary mastered that language, and produced a lexicon containing all its words. Equally fruitless was the hope that the mysterious zodiac in Egypt would throw the world's age far beyond the date of the Mosaic chronology. Reference might also be made to the statement of Sir H. Rawlinson in a lecture delivered by him under the auspices of the Directors of the Scriptural Museum, London, that "the cuneiform inscriptions, the key to deciphering which has only been discovered within the last twenty years, have brought to light a great variety of Assyrian and Babylonian historic records, running contemporaneously with Scripture narrative, and affording innumerable points of contact; and wherever such contact occurs, there is always found to be a coincidence between the two, showing incontestably the genuineness and authenticity of Scripture."

Thus is it true that the Bible has surmounted every trial. There gathers around it a dense "cloud of witnesses," from the ruins of Nineveh and the valley of the Nile; from the slabs and bas-reliefs of Sennacherib and the tombs and monuments of Pharaoh; from the rolls of Chaldee paraphrasts and Syrian versionists; from the cells and libraries of monastic scribes and the dry and dusty labors of scholars and antiquarians. The skepticism of history has been silenced by the vivid reproductions of the ancient and eastern world.

And so will it continue to be. The friends of revelation have nothing to fear from any discoveries that can be made in the heavens above, or the earth beneath, or the waters under the earth. Geology may dive and delve into our globe's deepest recesses, and astronomy may move along her star-paved way until we are dizzied at the story of her ascents; but they can bring back no report which will shake the pillars of the "sure word of prophecy." "Let science perfect yet more her telescopes, and make taller her observatories, and deeper her mines, and more searching her crucibles; let even a new Cuvier and another Newton arise, to carry far higher, and to sink far deeper than it has ever yet been, the line of human research; and yet will not all this, even though the new masters of physical lore should blaspheme where the older teachers may have adored, bring God into contradiction with himself, or subvert the truth which he has given, or eclipse the light which shineth in this dark place." Still will it be true, however boldly it may be alleged that Jehovah's works conflict with his word, that the higher deductions of reason harmonize with moral truth; and soon in the blended radiance of science and the wonderful testimonies of the Lord, shall nothing be left for their mutual friends to deplore but the long want of that wise, confiding patience, and that candid forbearance, which would have hastened their union and added to their lustre.

The following interesting letter on the subject of Science and Revelation is from the pen of Lieutenant M. F. Maury, of the United States Navy, acknowledged on all sides as one of the most eminent scientific men living:

"Observatory, Washington, January 22, 1855.

"My Dear Sir: Your letter revived very pleasant remembrances. . . . . Your questions are themes. It would require volumes to contain the answers to them. You ask about the 'Harmony of Science and Revelation,' and wish to know if I find 'distinct traces in the Old Testament of scientific knowledge,' and 'in the Bible any knowledge of the winds and ocean currents.' Yes; knowledge the most correct and valuable.

"'Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades?'

"It is a curious fact that the revelations of science have led astronomers of our own day to the discovery that the sun is not the dead centre of motion around which comets sweep and planets whirl; but that it, with its splendid retinue of worlds and satellites, is revolving through the realms of space, at the rate of millions of miles in a year, and in obedience to some influence situated precisely in the direction of the star Alcyon, one of the Pleiades. We do not know how far off in the immensities of space that centre of revolving cycles and epicycles may be; nor have our oldest observers or nicest instruments been able to tell us how far off in the skies that beautiful cluster of stars is hung, whose influences man can never bind. In this question alone, and the answer to it, are involved both the recognition and exposition of the whole theory of gravitation.

"Science taught that the world was round; but potentates pronounced the belief heretical, notwithstanding the Psalmist, while apostrophizing the works of creation in one of his sublime moods of inspiration, when prophets spake as they were moved, had called the world the 'round world,' and bade it to rejoice.

"You recollect when Galileo was in prison, a pump-maker came to him with his difficulties because his pump would not lift water higher than thirty-two feet. The old philosopher thought it was because the atmosphere would not press the water up any higher; but the hand of persecution was upon him, and he was afraid to say the air had weight. Now, had he looked to the science of the Bible, he would have discovered that the 'perfect' man of Uz, moved by revelation, had proclaimed the fact thousands of years before. 'He maketh the weight for the wind.' Job is very learned, and his speeches abound in scientific lore. The persecutors of the old astronomer would have been wiser, and far more just, had they paid more attention to this wonderful book, for there they would have learned that 'He stretcheth out the North over the empty place, and hangeth the earth upon nothing.'

"Here is another proof that Job was familiar with the laws of gravitation, for he knew how the world was held in its place; and as for the 'empty place' in the sky, Sir John Herschel has been sounding the heavens with his powerful telescope, and gauging the stars, and where do you think he finds the most barren part—the empty place—of the sky? In the North, precisely where Job told Bildad, the Shuhite, the empty place was stretched out. It is there where comets most delight to roam, and hide themselves in emptiness.

"I pass by the history of creation as it is written on the tablet of the rock and in the Book of Revelation, because the question has been discussed so much and so often that you are no doubt familiar with the whole subject. In both, the order of creation is the same: first the plants to afford sustenance, and then the animals, the chief point of apparent difference being as to the duration of the period between the 'evening and morning.' 'A thousand years are as one day;' and the Mosaic account affords evidences itself that the term day, as there used, is not that which comprehends our twenty-four hours. It was a day that had its evening and morning before the sun was made.

"I will, however, before proceeding further, ask pardon for mentioning a rule of conduct which I have adopted, in order to make progress with these physical researches which have occupied so much of my time and many of my thoughts, and that rule is never to forget who is the Author of the great volume which nature spreads out before us, and always to remember that the same Being is also the author of the book which Revelation holds up to us; and though the two works are entirely different, their records are equally true; and when they bear upon the same point, as now and then they do, it is as impossible that they should contradict each other as it is that either should contradict itself. If the two cannot be reconciled, the fault is ours, and is because, in our blindness and weakness, we have not been able to interpret aright either the one or the other, or both.

"Solomon, in a single verse, describes the circulation of the atmosphere as actual observation is now showing it to be. That it has its laws, and is as obedient to order as the heavenly host in their movements, we infer from the fact announced by him, and which contains the essence of volumes by other men, 'All the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full: unto the place from whence the rivers come, thither they return again.'

"To investigate the laws which govern the winds and rule the sea is one of the most profitable and beautiful occupations that a man, an improving, progressive man, can have. Decked with stars as the sky is, the field of astronomy affords no subjects of contemplation more ennobling, more sublime or more profitable than those which we may find in the air and the sea.

"When we regard them from certain points of view, they present the appearance of wayward things, obedient to no law, but fickle in their movements, and subject only to chance.

"Yet when we go as truth-loving, knowledge-seeking explorers, and knock at their secret chambers, and devoutly ask what are the laws which govern them, we are taught, in terms the most impressive, that when the morning stars sang together, the waves also lifted up their voice, and the winds, too, joined in the almighty anthem. And as discovery advances, we find the marks of order in the sea and in the air, that is in tune with the music of the spheres, and the conviction is forced upon us that the laws of all are nothing else but perfect harmony."

TESTIMONY FOR THE BIBLE.

A SOCIETY of gentlemen in England, most of whom had enjoyed a liberal education, and were persons of polished manners, but who had unhappily imbibed infidel principles, used to assemble at each other's houses for the purpose of ridiculing the Scriptures and hardening one another in their unbelief. At last they unanimously formed a resolution solemnly to burn the Bible, so that they might no more be troubled with a book which was so hostile to their principles and disquieting to their consciences. The day fixed for the purpose at length arrived. A large fire was prepared, a Bible was laid on the table, and a flowing bowl ready to drink its dirge. For the execution of their plans they fixed upon a young gentleman of high birth, brilliant vivacity and elegance of manners. He undertook the task. After a few enlivening glasses, amidst the applause of his jovial compeers, he approached the table, took up the Bible, and was walking leisurely forward to push it into the fire, when, happening to give it a look, all at once he was seized with a trembling, paleness overspread his countenance, and he seemed convulsed. He returned to the table, and laying down the Bible said, with a strong asseveration, "We will not burn that book till we get a better." Soon after this, the same gay, lively young gentleman died, and on his death-bed was led to true repentance, deriving unshaken hopes of forgiveness and of future blessedness from that book he was once going to burn. He found it, indeed, the best book, not only for a living but a dying hour.

Colonel Allen, a celebrated infidel of this country, was one day summoned from his library to the chamber of a sick daughter, whom her pious mother had instructed in the principles of Christianity, and who, by an unexpected turn in her disease, was about to breathe her last. As soon as he appeared at her bed-side, she said to him, "Father, I am about to die. Shall I believe in the principles which you have recommended, or shall I believe in what my mother has taught me?" He became extremely agitated, his lip quivered, his whole frame shook, and, after waiting a few moments, he replied, "Believe what your mother has taught you."

Lord Byron, in a letter to Mrs. Sheppard, said, "Indisputably, the firm believers in the Gospel have a great advantage over all others, for this simple reason: if it be true, they will have their reward hereafter, and if there be no hereafter, they can be but with the infidel in his eternal sleep, having had the assistance of an exalted hope through life, without subsequent disappointment, since (at the worst, for them) 'out of nothing, nothing can arise,' not even sorrow." The following lines, also, are said to have been found in his Bible:

"Within this awful volume lies
The mystery of mysteries;
Oh, happiest they of human race
To whom our God has given grace
To hear, to read, to fear, to pray,
To lift the latch and force the way!
But better had they ne'er been born
Who read to doubt, or read to scorn."

In Las Casas' journal this record is made concerning Bonaparte: "The emperor had ended the conversation on the subject of religion by desiring my son to bring him the New Testament, and taking it from the beginning he read as far as the conclusion of the speech of Jesus on the mountain. He expressed the highest admiration for the purity, the sublimity, the beauty of the morality it contains, and we all expressed the same feeling."

Lord Bolingbroke declared that "the Gospel is, in all cases, one continued lesson of the strictest morality, of justice, of benevolence, and of universal charity."

The testimony of Rousseau was as follows: "This Divine Book, the only one which is indispensable to the Christian, need only to be read with reflection to inspire love for its author, and the most ardent desire to obey its precepts. Never did virtue speak so sweet a language; never was the most profound wisdom expressed with so much energy and simplicity. No one can arise from its perusal without feeling himself better than he was before." He also said, speaking of the Bible and of the character of Christ, "Is it possible that a book at once so simple and sublime should be merely the work of man? Is it possible that the sacred personage whose history it contains should himself be a mere man? Do we find that he assumed the tone of an enthusiast or ambitious sectary? What sweetness, what purity in his manners! What an affecting gracefulness in his delivery! What sublimity in his maxims! What profound wisdom in his discourses! What presence of mind, what sublimity, what truth in his replies! How great the command over his passions! Where is the man, where is the philosopher, who could so live and so die, without weakness and without ostentation? When Plato described his imaginary good man, loaded with all the shame of guilt, yet meriting the highest, rewards of virtue, he described exactly the character of Jesus Christ; the resemblance was so striking that all the Fathers perceived it." Yet this was the strange and unhappy man who, through the wickedness and pride of his heart, declared, "I cannot believe the Gospel."

"I believe that the Word of God, whereby his will is revealed, continued in revelation and tradition with Moses, and that the Scriptures were from Moses' time to the time of the apostles and evangelists, in whose ages, after the coming of the Holy Ghost, the book of Scripture was shut and closed, so as not to receive any new addition, and that the church hath no power after the Scriptures to teach and command anything contrary to the written Word."—Bacon.

"God having to this end ordained his Gospel to be the revelation of his power and wisdom in Christ Jesus. And this is one depth of his wisdom, that he could so plainly reveal so great a measure of it to the gross, distorted apprehension of decayed mankind. Let others, therefore, dread and shun the Scriptures for their darkness; I shall wish I may deserve to be reckoned among those who admire and dwell upon them for their clearness."—John Milton.

"I do declare to the whole world that we believe the Scriptures to contain a declaration of the mind and will of God in and to those ages in which they were written, being given forth by the Holy Ghost, moving in the hearts of holy men of God; that they ought also to be read, believed and fulfilled in our day, being useful for reproof and instruction, that the man of God may be perfect.

"They are a declaration and testimony of heavenly things, but not the heavenly things themselves; and as such, we carry an high respect unto them. We accept them as the words of God himself; and by the assistance of his Spirit, they are read with great instruction and comfort."—William Penn.

It is related of a deist who had publicly labored to disprove Christianity, and to bring the Scriptures into contempt as a forgery, that he was afterward found instructing his child from the New Testament. When taxed with the flagrant inconsistency, his only reply was, that it was necessary to teach the child morality, and that nowhere was there to be found such morality as in the Bible. In referring to this case, a distinguished divine has uttered the following just and truthful sentiments: "We thank the deist for the confession. However we may scorn a man who could be guilty of so foul a dishonesty, seeking to sweep from the earth a volume to which, all the while, himself recurred for the principles of education, we thank him for his testimony that the morality of Scripture is a morality nowhere else to be found, so that, if there were no Bible, there would be comparatively no source of instruction in duties and virtues whose neglect and decline would dislocate the happiness of human society."

"The deist was right. Deny or try to disprove the Divine origin of Scripture, nevertheless you must keep the volume as a kind of text-book of morality, if, indeed, you would not wish the banishment from our homes of all that is lovely and sacred, and the breaking up, through the lawlessness of ungoverned passions, of the quiet and the beauty which are yet round our families."

Sir William Jones's opinion of the Bible was written on the last leaf of one belonging to him, in these strong terms: "I have regularly and attentively read these Holy Scriptures, and am of opinion that this volume, independently of its Divine origin, contains more sublimity and beauty, more pure morality, more important history and finer strains of poetry and eloquence than can be collected from all other books, in whatever age or language they may have been composed."

The Hon. Robert Boyle is another instance. His whole life and fortune were spent in illustrating the beauties of the two grand volumes of Creation and Revelation. He has said everything in favor of the Bible that language admits of. He called it "that matchless book," and has written a whole volume to illustrate its beauties.

The celebrated John Locke has said: "The morality of the Gospel doth so far excel that of all other books that, to give a man full knowledge of true morality, I would send him to no other book than the New Testament." Being asked, a little before his dissolution, "What was the shortest and surest way for a young man to attain true knowledge of the Christian religion in the full and just extent of it?" he made this memorable reply: "Let him study the Holy Scriptures, especially the New Testament. Therein are contained the words of eternal life. It has God for its author, salvation for its end, and truth, without any mixture of error, for its matter." During the last years of his life, Mr. Locke applied himself especially to the study of the Holy Scriptures.

Addison says, "After perusing the book of Psalms, let a judge of the beauties of poetry read a literal translation of Horace or Pindar, and he will find in these two last such an absurdity and confusion of style, with such a comparative poverty of imagination, as will make him sensible of the vast superiority of Scripture style."

The learned Salmasius, when on his death-bed, uttered this language: "Oh, I have lost a world of time! If one year more were to be added to my life, it should be spent in reading David's Psalms and Paul's Epistles."

A comparison of the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah with the account given in the four Evangelists of the sufferings of Christ became the instrument of converting the witty but wicked Lord Rochester. He told Bishop Burnet that as he heard this prophecy read, and compared it with the record of our Saviour's passion, he felt an inward force upon him which did so enlighten his mind and convince him that he could resist it no longer, for the words had an authority which did shoot like rays or beams in his mind, so that he was not only convinced by the reasoning he had about it, which satisfied his understanding, but by a power which did so effectually constrain him that he ever afterward believed as firmly in his Saviour as if he had seen him in the clouds.

Amidst the great variety of books which Sir Isaac Newton had constantly before him, that which he studied with the greatest application was the Bible.

The famous Selden, one of the most eminent philosophers and learned men of his time, toward the end of his days declared to Archbishop Usher, "that notwithstanding he had been so laborious in inquiries and curious in his collections, and had possessed himself of a treasure of books and manuscripts upon all subjects, yet he could rest his soul on none save the Scriptures. The passage which gave him the most satisfaction was that contained in Titus ii. 11–14: "The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly, in this present world, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works."

"Come, sit near me, let me lean on you," said Wilberforce to a friend a few minutes before his death. Afterward, putting his arms around that friend, he said, "God bless you, my dear friend!" He became agitated somewhat, and then ceased speaking. Presently, however, he said, "I must leave you, my friend. We shall walk no further through this world together, but I hope we shall meet in heaven. Let us talk of heaven. Do not weep for me, dear F——, do not weep, for I am very happy; but think of me, and let the thought make you press forward. I never knew happiness till I found Christ as a Saviour. Read the Bible! Let no religious book take its place. Through all my perplexities and distresses I never read any other book, and I never knew the want of any other. It has been my hourly study, and all my knowledge of the doctrines, and all my acquaintance with the experience and realities of religion, have been derived from the Bible only. I think religious people do not read the Bible enough. Books about religion may be useful enough, but they will not do instead of the simple truth of the Bible."

Sir Walter Scott, in his final sickness, said to Lockhart, his son-in-law, "Bring me a book." "What book?" said Lockhart. "Can you ask?" said the expiring genius. "There is but one—the Bible." "I chose the fourteenth chapter of St. John's gospel," says Mr. Lockhart. "He listened with mild devotion, and said, when I had done, 'Well, this is a great comfort. I have followed you distinctly, and I feel as if I were to be myself again.' But this hope was not realized. During his days of decline he was sometimes heard murmuring over snatches from Isaiah and the book of Job, and occasionally a Psalm in the old Scottish version."

In a letter of the celebrated Dr. Chalmers to an American friend, acknowledging the receipt of a highly-valued relic of Edwards, he alludes to the declaration of a countryman of ours on his death-bed. Being inquired of respecting his frame and feelings, he replied, "There is mercy with God in Christ Jesus our Lord." That person was Fisher Ames. Mr. Ames lamented the disuse of the Bible in the schools, and thus wrote on the subject: "Should not the Bible regain the place it once held as a school book? Its morals are pure, its examples captivating and noble. The reverence for the Sacred Book that is thus early impressed lasts long. If not impressed in infancy, it probably never takes firm hold of the mind. One consideration more is important. In no book is there so good English, so pure and so elegant, and by teaching all the same book they will speak alike, and the Bible will justly remain the standard of language as well as of faith."

To a writer in the "Christian Palladium," who in 1847 made a visit to the Hon. John Quincy Adams, that distinguished and venerable statesman said, "My practice, since I was thirty years of age, has been to read in the Bible the first thing I do every morning. This practice I have followed, with but few interruptions, for fifty years."

Similar testimony in the same direction was borne by him in a letter to his son, in 1811, in which he says: "I have for many years made it a practice to read through the Bible once every year. My custom is to read four or five chapters every morning, immediately after rising from my bed. It employs about an hour of my time, and seems to me the most suitable manner of beginning the day. In what light soever we regard the Bible, whether with reference to revelation, to history or to morality, it is an invaluable and inexhaustible mine of knowledge and virtue."

SCRIPTURE DIFFICULTIES.

LIKE all other ancient writings, the Holy Scriptures present many difficulties. Some of these are not easy of solution, while others may be satisfactorily explained. The existence of difficulties in such a book was to be expected, and therefore cannot be wondered at. It is a matter of astonishment, indeed, that there are not more found in it. This must be evident to any one on reflecting that "the books of Scripture were written by different persons, in almost every variety of circumstance; that they refer to people whose customs and habits were totally dissimilar to our own; that they narrate histories of which we possess no other authentic documents which might reflect light on some obscurity of expression or vagueness of description; that they were written in other languages than those in which we now possess them; and that, in addition to the mutability of language, there are the difficulties of translation out of one tongue into another."

The proper spirit in which to deal with these difficulties is, to remove them as far as practicable, and to cleave and submit to the truth, even when every cloud cannot be cleared away from it. We should imitate the example of the apostles, who, when some of the disciples were offended by what they called a "hard saying," so as to forsake Christ, silenced every objection with this: "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life, and we are sure that Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Whenever and wherever we see an error assaulting or overlying a truth, let us destroy the error and emancipate the truth; but when we see a truth seemingly in conflict with another truth, let us try to reconcile them, and show them thus reconciled to all.

DIFFICULT TEXTS EXPLAINED.

GENESIS i. 1. "In the beginning," etc. It is not said whether this "beginning" was the commencement of time, or far back of the creation of man, and long before the present geological period.

GENESIS i. 5. "And God called the light day," etc. Though the sun was not made until the fourth day, it is not true that there could be no day without the sun, as some have affirmed. By recent discoveries (or rather the recent revival of old ones) we are taught to believe that light does not consist in certain particles coming to us in a direct ray from the sun, or any other luminous body, but is a subtle fluid diffused through all space, and capable of being acted on in a thousand various ways. It is not said that the sun, as a body, was created on the fourth day, but only that it was then appointed for a special purpose.

GENESIS i. 26. "Let us make man in our own image," etc.—that is, naturally, in spirituality and immortality; morally, in "righteousness and true holiness," and politically, as having dominion over all the earth.

GENESIS ii. 3. "He had rested from all his works," etc. This refers to God's cessation from creating and making; and John v. 7 refers to the ceaseless workings of Providence.

GENESIS ii. 5. "And there was not a man to till the ground." This verse is not contradictory to chap. i. 27, where the creation of Adam had been already affirmed. The inspired historian first gives a general account of the whole creation, in six days, and then, carrying on his history, describes particularly the formation of Adam and Eve.

GENESIS iv. 6. "Cain went out from the presence of the Lord"—that is, went out from the place of worship and of Divine manifestation.

GENESIS iv. 7. "If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted?" etc. Sacrifices were of two sorts, eucharistical and expiatory; the former consisting of the fruits of the earth, the latter of a living animal, the life of which God would accept instead of that of the offender. Abel brought a sacrifice of atonement, acknowledging himself a sinner. Cain brought a sacrifice of thanksgiving, expecting to be accepted without repentance. God thus expostulates with Cain: "If thou wert so righteous as to need no atoning sacrifice, thou shouldst be accepted; as thou art not, sin will lie in the way till thou hast removed it by an atoning sacrifice of sin-offering."

GENESIS iv. 17. "And Cain knew his wife," etc. It is asserted that Adam "begat sons and daughters" (Gen. v. 4), meaning, doubtless, sons and daughters not named in any catalogue of his children. Nor did Cain sin by marrying his sister, as there was a necessity for such marriages at the time, and the law forbidding them had not been given.

GENESIS iv. 26. "Then began men to call upon the name of the Lord." Men had begun to do so before. Dr. Boothroyd and others translate the passage, "Then began men to be called by the name of Jehovah."

GENESIS vi. 3. "My spirit shall not always strive with man." Not always plead with man on account of his errors, for he is flesh, yet his day shall be one hundred and twenty years.—DR. BOOTHROYD.

GENESIS vi. 6. "And it repented the Lord that he had made man," etc. God accommodates his language to our conceptions, that we may more easily apprehend his character and perfections. Here, the cause is put for the effect, by a well-known figure of speech, and the change of His mind signifies merely a change of dispensation. The repentance was only apparent.

GENESIS ix. 25. "And Noah said, Cursed be Canaan, a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren." Infidels cavil at this curse, because it falls on the descendants of the offender, Ham, the son of Noah. It may be replied, that the curse fell upon the offender in his own proper person. The vices of the Canaanites could not but be their plague, whatever had been the character of Ham. The wretched slavery of that people was not inflicted in consequence of their father's crime, but their slavery was foretold as a punishment on their ancestor. Had he been a good and righteous man, he might have been spared the foresight of so much misery.

GENESIS xxii. 2. "Take now thy son, thine only son," etc. God had no design to accept such a sacrifice; nothing more was intended than to make trial of the faith of the patriarch, and furnish a noble example of obedience to succeeding generations. But if Isaac had been slain, would any injustice have been done? Not surely to Isaac, whose life was forfeited by sin, like that of all other men, and might be taken from him in this way as well as by disease. It would have been painful to his father to be the agent, but the right of the Supreme Governor to prescribe any service to his subjects is indisputable, and in obeying him they can do no wrong.

GENESIS xii. 13. "Say, I pray thee, thou art my sister," etc. Abram, in this instance, evidently did wrong, but neither God nor the historian is responsible for the prevarication. It is merely recorded as a historical fact, without any approval or attempt at palliation. The same thing is true of the faults and sins which are recorded of Moses, David, Jonah, Elijah, Peter, etc. The registering of these things is proof of the stern fidelity of the sacred writers.

GENESIS xxxvi. 2–3, as compared with chap. xxvi. 34. In the East different names were often applied to one person. Esau had three wives, and each of them is spoken of under two names, making six names for them all.

GENESIS xlvi. 8–27. For the genealogical list of Jacob's family, here given, as consistent with itself, and reconcilable with Stephen's statement in Acts vii. 14, see a subsequent chapter.

EXODUS iv. 21. "I will harden Pharaoh's heart." Properly, I will permit Pharaoh's heart to be hardened. God did not actually interfere to strengthen and confirm the obstinacy of Pharaoh, but, moved by that obstinacy, He withdrew from him gradually all the restraints of His grace, and as these restraints were removed, the heart of the king was more and more hardened.

EXODUS vii. 11. "Then Pharaoh also called the wise men and the sorcerers," etc. It is not true, as has been alleged, that the magicians performed miracles as well as Moses. In every instance in which they attempted to compete with him they fell infinitely below him, and at last gave up the attempt, confessing that "the finger of God" was with him.

EXODUS xi. 2. "Speak now in the ears of the people, and let every man borrow of his neighbor," etc. There is no evidence that the Israelites designed to deceive the Egyptians; everything in the narrative goes to show that the people expected to return, and were perfectly honest in thus dealing with their neighbors. The word borrowed is rendered ask in Psalm ii. 8.

EXODUS xx. 5. "Visiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the children," etc. Apart from the teaching of the Bible, it is a fact which observation attests, that, in diseased constitutions, dishonored names, and broken fortunes, the physical consequences of the sins of parents are entailed upon their posterity.

EXODUS xxv. 8. "Let them make me a sanctuary, that I may dwell among them."

ACTS vii. 48. "The Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands." The former text describes the majesty of God, the latter his grace. The one is his absolute dwelling, "light inaccessible, and full of glory;" the other is his special and gracious presence: "wheresoever two or three are met together in my name, there am I in the midst."

NUMBERS xxii. 22. "And God's anger was kindled because he went." It is true that God told Balaam to go (v. 20), but as he was first positively forbidden to go, and, instead of obeying, yielded to temptation (v. 17), and persuaded Balak's messenger to remain all night (v. 19), and thus sinned, God gave him up to his own wicked heart, and that his punishment might be wrought upon him said, in answer to his solicitations, "Go."

NUMBERS xxv. 9. "And those that died in the plague were twenty and four thousand." Paul, in 1 Cor. x. 8, speaks of twenty-three thousand; but he refers only to those who "fell in one day," while the text includes all that died on that occasion, even those who were destroyed by the judges.

DEUTERONOMY x. 6. "There" (at Mosera) "Aaron died, and there he was buried." It is said, in Numbers, that Aaron died at Mount Hor. Mosera was the name of the district in which Hor is situated. Besides, the word there (scham) may be here used to designate the time of Aaron's death, and be translated then, or at that time, as it is in several other passages.

DEUTERONOMY xxxiv. "Death of Moses." There is reason to believe that this passage originally formed an introduction to the Book of Joshua, and became separated from it by the division of the books into chapters and verses, or at some earlier period.

JOSHUA x. 13. "And the sun stood still, and the moon stayed, until the people had avenged themselves upon their enemies." The miracle here recorded was known to those of old who had no means of access to the Divine writings. We find the event mythologically related, and there is not one system of belief of which astronomical observations have formed a part in which this "long day" has not been noticed.

In the original, the phrase, "Sun, stand thou still," is, "Sun, be thou dumb (withhold thy influence) while over Gibeon, and thou, moon, over the valley of Ajalon." There are two reasons why Joshua called upon the "sun" to stand still, instead of giving the scientific command according to our ideas—"Earth, stand thou still." 1. The command was not addressed to the sun only, but to the sun and moon jointly. "Sun, stand thou still," or "withhold thine influence," would have the effect of restraining the operation both of earth and moon, and keeping them in their relative positions. 2. The command, as given, would be more intelligible to those to whom the words were addressed. As the Amorites were pre-eminently adorers of the heavenly bodies, it would tend to show them how great was the power of the true God against those very beings whom they worshiped, if Joshua uttered his command, as he did, to the objects of their idolatry. So, likewise, the suspension of a general planetary law would plainly affect the moon as well as the sun, and thus would it appear as though Joshua had been well acquainted with this fact.

The phrase, "Sun, stand thou still," does not necessarily mean that its influence was suddenly withdrawn. All we are told is, that the sun "hasted not to go down for a whole day." The sun slackened its apparent motion, or we may say the earth slackened, at the Divine command, its actual motion, and thus, though there would be an apparent cessation of the motion of the sun, it would be but gradually stayed, and stayed only for such a period as, in the exercise of His wisdom, God thought fit to permit. But we must observe that the term "Be thou dumb," or "withhold thine influence," is one which is peculiarly applicable. It is a form of expression to be found not only in the Hebrew language but in other idioms; and we have an instance of this in one of the most sublime poets (Dante), who, whether he copied from the Divine writings, or whether it struck his own mind, speaks of the sun as being silent, when referring to those places where the light of the sun is not seen. If, then, we understand that the earth did stay its motion in obedience to the command, "Sun, stand thou still," or "withdraw thine influence," that that motion was gradually slackened for the period during which the miracle lasted, and that then it continued at the rate at which it had gone on before, we shall see an easy mode of understanding how the miracle was performed, and we shall see the entire applicability, both spiritually and philosophically, of the words which were spoken.

JUDGES xi. 30, 31. Jephthah's vow. Infidels have made this narrative a ground of railing against the Bible, and Scripture expositors have been greatly embarrassed with it. Some of the latter maintain that the fair victim of what they regard as a rash vow was actually put to death; others contend that she was only devoted to a life of pious celibacy. Both parties, however, have shown that there is here no room for infidel scoffs, since, if such an execution was perpetrated, it was done in flagrant violation of the Divine precepts (Lev. xviii. 21; ch. xx. 2–5; Deut. xii. 29, 30, 31), and only proved that this judge of Israel was extremely ignorant of the Mosaic law; and if he only devoted her to the service of the tabernacle, he still displayed a want of knowledge of the Levitical code, in supposing that he "could not go back" from his vow, there being an express provision that such vows might be commuted. (Lev. xxvii. 1–8.)

That there was no real sacrifice in the case, the following considerations have been adduced to show. How such a sacrifice could be lawful cannot be discerned, as the high priest himself could not offer what he pleased for sacrifice, if it were not of that kind which God had appointed. If Jephthah was stained with the blood of his only child, it is not conceivable that his name would have been enrolled in the New Testament among the illustrious examples of faith and piety. Jephthah in his negotiations with the king of the Ammonites showed himself a man of justice and humanity, soundness of mind, strength of understanding and of argumentation, and accurate acquaintance with the laws and records of his nation. The last words of his vow in the Hebrew will fairly admit of this rendering—"Shall surely be consecrated to the Lord, or I will offer it a burnt-offering." In making his vow, may he not be supposed to have imagined that, on his return, he might meet his flock of sheep or herd of goats, and that in this case his purpose was to offer a hecatomb of these animals as a grateful oblation to God, but that meeting his own daughter, and instantly remembering that the performance of his vow in causing her to spend her days in God's service, and exempt from the duties of a wife and mother, would dash his hope of posterity, this thought occasioned the mental disturbance expressed by rending his clothes? Can it be imagined that the daughter, if she knew she was to be laid upon a flaming altar, would have coolly asked for two months merely to bewail her virginity? If Jephthah could allow her two months, why not twenty years? If, when she returned to her father at the set time, and he sacrificed her, would the historian have gravely added, "And she knew no man"? Does not this clause show that the vow had its fulfillment in her continuing to the end of her days in celibacy? Would the virgins of Israel have gone to Jephthah's daughter to "comfort her four days in a year," if she had been numbered with the dead?

1 SAMUEL xxviii. 7–25. Saul and the witch of Endor. Henry thinks that the fallen angels might attend upon the call of a sorceress, and therefore takes it for granted that an evil demon, raised by the arts of witchcraft, assumed the shape of Samuel, and, personating the prophet, answered the inquiries of Saul. The profound silence of Scripture with respect to the manner of operation in effecting this should teach us "not to covet to know these depths of Satan, or the solution of such mysteries of iniquity." Some commentators consider the apparition of Samuel to Saul as a real miracle, produced not by the arts of sorcery but by the finger of God. Modern expositors have supposed that as God overruled Balaam when seeking for enchantments, and compelled him to utter a true prophecy, and as he sent a messenger of death to Ahaziah at the time when that prince was sending to inquire of Baal-zebub, the god of Ekron, so at the instant when Saul was appealing to a witch, the true Samuel was made to appear for his greater terror and punishment, by confirming the immediate execution of the sentence before passed upon him.

2 KINGS xx. 11. The sun-dial of Ahaz. This miracle appears, at least in one point, to be even greater than that of Joshua, for whereas Joshua only commanded the sun to stand still while the armies of the Lord fought against their adversaries, it would seem in this case as though the work of creation had been, so to speak, undone, as though the earth had been turned back upon her axis, in order to testify the Lord's favor toward one of his servants, so that the miracle appears to be greater in itself, and more wonderful in proportion to the less amount of cause for its exhibition. "As the miracle," says one, "specifies a particular sun-dial, and claims no other object than the satisfaction of Hezekiah's mind by giving him 'a sign,' it may be held more in accordance with the importance of the case that the miracle should have been wrought upon the sun-dial, and not upon the sun.' Be this as it may (though we do not admit the view), it is not necessary, for the understanding of the text, to suppose that either the sun or the earth changed its course ten degrees, or even one degree. The intervention of a light mass of vapor between the dial and the sun would have refracted his beams sufficiently to bring back the shadow of the style ten degrees, measuring perhaps ten minutes, or even less.

PSALMS cxl. 10; cxxix. 6; cxliii. 12; lviii.; lix. Instances of what are called IMPRECATIONS in Scripture. Some of these expressions might be rendered, with equal correctness, predictions of what shall be. If we take the severest sense, we must remember that David wrote them, not as a private man venting his personal feelings, but as a judge pronouncing what God had authorized. Their crimes justly deserved these penalties, and the psalmist, as the mouthpiece of God, faithfully pronounced them.

PSALM cx. 3. "From the womb of the morning thou hast the dew of thy youth." Thy progeny shall be numerous and beautiful as the dew-drops of the morning.

PSALM cxliv. 8. "A right hand of falsehood." The right hand was held up when taking an oath; this means they were given to false swearing.

PROVERBS xxvi. 4, 5. "Answer not a fool. . . . Answer a fool." Contend with a fool, yet reprove a fool.

ECCLESIASTES i. 9. "There is no new thing under the sun." No new expedient found to make men happy.

ECCLESIASTES vii. 16. "Be not righteous overmuch." Understood, satirically, to mean, if you would pass current with the world, a little religion will go a great way, and please them better than much.

ECCLESIASTES vii. 17. "Be not overmuch wicked." Satirically, because you will not be tolerated in society if you exceed certain excesses ISAIAH xxii. "I will lay upon his shoulder the key of the house of David." A large key, carried on the shoulder, was an ensign of authority.

ISAIAH xliv. 20. "Is there not a lie in my right hand?" Have I not an idol (a lie) near me at all times?

ISAIAH xlv. 7. "I form the light and create darkness, I make peace and create evil: I the Lord do all these things." The Lord sends wars, pestilence, calamities and other evils, as punishments for national sins; it is in this, and not the sense of an originator of evil, that he is said to create evil.

ISAIAH lxiii. 17. "O Lord, why hast thou made us to err from thy ways, and hardened our hearts from thy fear?" "Why dost thou suffer us to err from thy ways, to harden our hearts from fear of thee?"

JEREMIAH xx. 7. "O Lord, thou hast deceived me, and I was deceived." The passage alludes to the encouragement God gave the prophet to take office, and critics have rendered it, "Thou didst persuade me, and I was persuaded."

EZEKIEL xiv. 9. "I, the Lord, have deceived that prophet." I, Jehovah, have permitted that prophet to be deceived.

HOSEA i. 2. "Take unto thee a wife of whoredoms." Eminent critics consider this as spoken in parabolic terms, to show the Jews the abomination of their idolatries.

MATTHEW iii. 4. "Locusts and wild honey." A species of the grasshopper or locust, very common in the East, is still used there as an article of food, being dried, ground and made up into bread.

MATTHEW iv. 8. "All the kingdoms of the world." All the surrounding kingdoms, many of which could be seen from certain elevated spots in and about Judea.

MATTHEW x. 34. "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I come not to send peace, but a sword." This is not a contradiction of those passages that announce the Saviour as the Prince of Peace. The gospel may be the occasion of war, but in itself it is the cause of peace. Its holiness coming into collision with man's sins, its denunciations of iniquity falling on those that love it, its rebuke of the most plausible hypocrisy, and its recognition of the least heartfelt desire "to do justly and love mercy," its enshrining the least seed of truth, and its indifference to the largest husk of ceremony, are calculated as soon as introduced into a fallen world to rouse the resistance of wicked men. But such resistance is not the fruit of Christianity, but of corrupt human nature, hating and seeking to repel the approach of truth.

MATTHEW xii. 31. "The blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men." From the connection, it is generally inferred that the sin against the Holy Ghost was the ascribing the miracles of Christ to Satanic agency, which could only have been occasioned by a wilful and malignant opposition to Christ. When the same is manifested in opposing the revelation of the Holy Spirit against the clearest and strongest convictions of conscience, the result is the same. But as unpardonable sin hardens the heart, where there is a spirit of deep contrition for sin against God, this sin cannot have been committed, though there may have been near approaches to it. "It shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world nor that which is to come," is not to be understood of sin ever being forgiven in the next world, but is a strong expression for, it shall never be forgiven. There has been a greater variety of opinions in regard to the sin against the Holy Ghost than any other question within the range of theological discussion. Epiphanius believed it to be "vilifying the Holy Ghost;" Hillary, "the denial of God in Christ;" Cyril, "an unmeet expression of the Spirit;" Augustin, "final impenitence;" Ambrose, "the blasphemy of infidelity;" Lyra, "sinning maliciously against the truth;" Beza, "universal apostasy from God, by which the majesty of God is maliciously opposed;" Musculus, Bucer, Calvin, Piscator, "opposition to the Word of God, while convinced of its Divine authority;" Chrysostom, "blasphemy in the face of miracles."

MATTHEW xvi. 18. "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church." Certainly not upon the feeble Peter who denied his Master. Peter's name signified rock, and the words seem to mean, Thy name is rock, but upon another rock, upon myself, the sure foundation-stone, I will build my Church.

MATTHEW xvi. 19. "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. Keys signify authority, Isa. ix. 5; xxii. 22; Rev. iii. 7. The binding and loosing, as Lightfoot proves from Jewish writings, refers to instructions, doctrines, and not to persons, and the passage signifies the inspiration of the apostles to confirm or reject doctrines and customs as the Spirit should teach them.

MATTHEW xiii. 12. "Whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath." One special gift of God to his people is an earnest of others; so that he who has faith and grace shall receive further communications of knowledge, wisdom, holiness, and every blessing of salvation, till he has a great abundance, whereas he who has not faith and grace shall at last be deprived of all his other attainments and advantages in which he trusted and gloried.

He who hath considerable religious knowledge, and takes that care to improve it which men are observed to do with their wealth, will find it increase; while he who has but little, and manages it as the poor are often observed to do, will find it come to nothing. The little he had learned will slip out of his memory, he will be deprived of it, and in that sense it will be taken from him. God never intended that men should attain heavenly knowledge, any more than earthly, without labor, pains and attention.

MARK vi. 5. "He could there do no mighty work." Not that he had not power, for he did cure a few sick; but the unbelief of the people prevented them from applying to him. See Matt. xiii. 58.

LUKE xiv. 26. "If any man come to me, and hate not his father and mother," etc. The word "hate" is used in Scripture comparatively with love. Thus, it is stated in Gen. xxix. 31, "When the Lord saw that Leah was hated;" but this is explained in the preceding verse (v. 30), "he loved Rachel more than Leah;" "hated," in verse 31, is the "less loved" in verse 30. So, "if any man hate not his father," etc., must mean, "If any man love his father above me, serve, or sacrifice, or suffer for an earthly relationship more than for me."

LUKE xvi. 9. "Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness," etc. Mammon was the heathen god of plenty. Mammon here means money: make friendship by a benevolent use of this, especially among the household of faith.

LUKE xviii. 25. "For it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye," etc. This proverbial expression will appear less strange if we consider that doors in the East, at least those of the enclosures about their houses, were very low, so made as some defence against the sudden incursions of the mounted Arabs of the desert. Through these their camels were made to enter, kneeling, with considerable difficulty. So that, to force a camel through a doorway as small as the eye of a needle came to be thought of.

JOHN i. 21. "Art thou Elias? And he saith, I am not. Art thou that prophet? And he answered, No." John the Baptist was not literally the person of Elias, and it was proper for him to say he was not, in order to correct the false notions of the Jews on that subject. Had he answered in the affirmative, he would have confirmed them in a gross falsehood. Yet John the Baptist was that Elias of whom the prophet Malachi spoke (chap. iv. 5); that is, as Luke expresses it, "He came in the spirit and power of Elias" (chap. i. 17); and so was, as it were, another Elias.

JOHN v. 40. "Ye will not come to me that ye may have life;" also, Ezek. xviii. 31, "Why will ye die?" If it be asked, Why does not the Almighty do what he thus seems so much to desire? the answer is, God will not treat men as dead machines, or as irrational and irresponsible creatures. He will not drive men to heaven by force. He draws with cords of love, and with the bands of a man. He stands at the door of the human heart and knocks for admission. He will conciliate where he might coerce and command.

JOHN xix. 14. "And it was the preparation of the passover, and about the sixth hour; and he saith unto the Jews, Behold your king!" Mark says Christ was crucified about the third hour. The word sixth, in the text, is thought by many eminent critics to be a mistake of some copyist, as a few old MSS. read third instead. Calvin, Grotius, and some others, think the two Evangelists adopted different modes of reckoning time, in one of which the day was divided into twelve hours, beginning at sunrise, and in the other of which it was divided into four parts, of three hours each, which would make the sixth and third coincide. Some think John followed a Romish custom of reckoning the hours from midnight.

JOHN xix. 34. "But one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came there out blood and water." It appears that the spear went through the pericardium and pierced the heart, and that the water proceeded from the former, and the blood from the latter.

JOHN xx. 29. "Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed;" also LUKE x. 23, "Blessed are the eyes which see the things which ye see." The former of these passages pronounces a blessing upon those who saw the fulfilment of what others have believed; the latter upon those who should believe the gospel on the ground of their testimony, without having witnessed the facts with their own eyes. There is no contradiction in these blessings, for there is a wide difference between requiring sight as the ground of faith, which Thomas did, and obtaining it as a completion of faith, which those who saw the coming and kingdom of the Messiah did. The one was a species of unbelief, the other was faith terminating in vision.

ACTS vii. 14. "Then sent Joseph and called his father Jacob to him, and all his kindred, threescore and fifteen souls." For explanation of this verse see subsequent chapter.

ACTS xxii. 9. "And they that were with me saw indeed the light, and were afraid, but they heard not the voice of him that spake to me." ACTS ix. 7. "And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man." The statement in these two passages contains a variety, but no contrariety; the former observing that the men "heard a voice," the latter, that "they heard not the voice of him that spoke" to Saul. They heard a sound which terrified them, but did not understand the meaning, which Saul did. The one says that they "saw the light," the other that they "saw no man." In all this there is no inconsistency.

ROMANS v. 9. "Justified by Christ;" v. 1. "Justified by faith." JAMES ii. 24. "By works a man is justified." The contradiction here is only apparent, not real.

We are justified by Christ, meritoriously; by faith, instrumentally; by works, declaratively. Christ's righteousness is the ground of our justification; faith is the medium or means by which that righteousness becomes ours, and a holy life is the visible evidence of our acceptance with God and title to happiness.

ROMANS vi. 17. "But God be thanked, ye were servants of sin." The original is often elliptical, and in such cases the deficiency should be supplied: "Though ye were the servants of sin," etc.

ROMANS viii. 19. "For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God:" generally understood to mean that the whole visible creation waits anxiously for the time when the sons of God shall be manifested, and the earth and its creatures be restored to the primitive state of their creation.

ROMANS ix. 3. "For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh." It would be absurd to suppose that the apostle wished himself eternally cursed; but the language seems to intimate his willingness to die what was deemed an accursed death, such as Paul's Lord endured, so that he could be the means of saving his countrymen. Compare Gal. iii. 13.

ROMANS ix. 18. "Whom he will he hardeneth." He sufferoth to be hardened.

ROMANS ix. 22. "What if God, willing to show his wrath," etc. He may show his wrath in punishing the guilty without any impeachment of his justice. "Vessels of wrath fitted for destruction." Not fitted by God, but by themselves, by their own sins. "Vessels of mercy:" made meet for heaven by Divine grace.

1 CORINTHIANS x. 33. "I please all men in all things." GALATIANS i. 10. "If I yet please men, I should not be the servant of Christ." The former is that sweet inoffensiveness of spirit which teaches us to lay aside all self-will and self-importance; that charity which "seeketh not her own," and "is not easily provoked." The latter spirit referred to is that sordid compliance with the corruptions of human nature of which flatterers and deceivers have always availed themselves, not for the glory of God or the good of men, but for the promotion of their own selfish designs.

1 CORINTHIANS xi. 27. "Guilty of the body and blood of the Lord." Liable to the punishment due to those who "dishonor the symbols of the Lord's body and blood."

1 CORINTHIANS xv. 29. "Baptized for the dead" means here, in the room of, filling up the places of the dead who have fallen by martyrdom, or otherwise died in the faith of the same Lord.

2 CORINTHIANS xii. 16. "Nevertheless, being crafty, I caught you with guile." The apostle clearly uses the language or charge of an accuser. He does not confess the truth of the charge of craftiness, but concedes it so far only as to turn the point against his accuser.

HEBREWS vi. 46. "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened," etc. Nothing is impossible with God; but God works by means, and the persons here alluded to are confirmed apostates, who, having abandoned for ever all the means of grace, have cut themselves off from all the hopes of glory.

HEBREWS vii. 3. "Without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life." Melchisedec is here taken as a type of Christ, from certain peculiarities respecting him. He was "without recorded father, without recorded mother, without priestly pedigree," either by father or mother's side; nor have we any account of the beginning of his days, or of the end of his life and ministry.

HEBREWS xi. 33; xi. 39. "Who, through faith, obtained promises." "And these a received not the promise." The "promises" referred to are those which were fulfilled during the Old Testament dispensation. The "promise" mentioned was that of the coming of the Messiah, in the faith of which the fathers lived and died, but saw not its accomplishment.

HEBREWS xii. 17. "For he found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears." No place for repentance in his father's mind. Such as wilfully renounce Christianity will find no place for repentance in God, who has connected apostasy with ruin, though no true penitent ever sought mercy in vain.

JAMES ii. 10. "He that offendeth in one point is guilty of all." The Divine law in no respect and in no instance tolerates sin. The man who violates it in one particular shows that there is in him the spirit of disobedience. The angels sinned only once. It was by one offence that Adam incurred the penalty of death.

1 PETER iii. 19, 20. "He went and preached unto the spirits in prison." Not in prison in Noah's days, but shut up for their unbelief in the prison of darkness, when the apostle wrote about them.

1 JOHN v. 16. "There is a sin unto death: I do not say that he shall pray for it." The sin of malicious unbelief, showing itself by speaking evil of the miraculous works of the Spirit, as the Jews did, apostatizing from the truth, and final impenitence.

JUDE 9. "Yet Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil, he disputed about the body of Moses." There are several conjectures respecting this passage, but that which seems most likely is, that Satan would fain have prevented the interment of the body of Moses, that its exposure might lead the Israelites to pay divine honors to it, from their strong propensity to idolatry.

REVELATION ii. 17. "To him that overcometh will I give a white stone," etc. It was a custom among the ancients to give their votes by white or black stones: with these they condemned the guilty, with these they acquitted the innocent. In allusion to this ancient custom, our Lord promises to give the spiritual conqueror the white stone of absolution or approbation; and inseparably connected with it a new name of dignity and honor, even that of a child of God and heir of glory, which is known only to himself, or the inhabitants of that world to which he shall be admitted and who have already received it.

SELAH.

THE translators of the Bible have left the Hebrew word Selah, which occurs so often in the Psalms, as they found it; and, of course, the English reader often asks his minister or some learned friend what it means. And they have often been obliged to confess ignorance, because it is a matter in regard to which the most learned have by no means been of one mind. The Targums and most of the Jewish commentators give to the word the meaning of eternally, for ever. Rabbi Kimchi regards it as a sign to elevate the voice. The authors of the Septuagint translation appear to have regarded it as a musical or rhythmical note. Herder regards it as indicating a change of tone. Matheson thinks it, as a musical note, equivalent, perhaps, to the word repeat. According to Luther and others, it means silence. Gesenius explains it to mean—"Let the instruments play and the singers stop." Wocher regards it as equivalent to sursum corda—up, my soul! Sommer, after examining all the seventy-four passages in which the word occurs, recognizes in every case "an actual appeal or summons to Jehovah. They are calls for aid and prayers to be heard, expressed either with entire directness, or if not in the imperative, 'Hear, Jehovah!' or, 'Awake, Jehovah!' and the like, still earnest addresses to God that he would remember and hear," etc. The word itself he regards as indicating a blast of trumpets by the priests. Selah, itself, he thinks an abridged expression used for Higgaion Selah—Higgaion indicating the sound of the stringed instruments, and Selah a vigorous blast of trumpets.

SUMMARY

BIBLICAL ANTIQUITIES

DESCRIBING THE

MANNERS AND CUSTOMS OF THE ISRAELITES

RELIGION, DOMESTIC LIFE, DISTRIBUTION OF TIME, PURSUITS AND OCCUPATION, TABERNACLE IN THE WILDERNESS, &c., &c.

By Rev. Dr. SAMUEL COX.

Entered, according to Act of Congress, in the year 1875, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.

SECTION I.—RELIGION.

In considering the nature of the Jews economy as a whole, the marked peculiarity of their religion has of course been especially noticed; but in order to have a more clear perception of that peculiarity, it seems requisite to enter into somewhat further detail, and to specify their more remarkable institutions. The principles of their religion have already been adverted to, and are in fact so completely interwoven with every topic of that great subject, which may either now, or will hereafter, come under discussion, that no formal enumeration seems to be demanded. They had but one divinely appointed place of public assembly, called the tabernacle, and afterwards the temple, in which all the solemnities of their worship were conducted, and on the one altar of which the appointed sacrifices were presented to the Great Supreme. While this unity was symbolical of that of the object of their adorations, the magnificence with which it was adorned shadowed forth the glory of his perfections as the "king eternal, immortal, invisible."

The temple itself, with the sacrifices of different kinds which belonged to the Mosaic ritual, will presently come under review, remarking only here that the quality of the victims, and the manner of offering them, with all the circumstances of time and place, were prescribed by the law with an authority, and accuracy, and punctiliousness that admitted not of the slightest deviation.

On the Institution and Intention of Sacrifice.—Sacrifice (sacrificium), among the old writers, appears to have denoted rather the ceremonies of religious worship than the victim. But its import has not been confined to this. Sometimes it designated the victim consumed on the altar; sometimes any kind of offering, whether consumed or not; and sometimes, in the sense first alluded to, the worship, rites, and solemnities employed in the offering, or in the consecration of gifts or persons to the use or service of the gods.

By the term Sacrifice, we now generally understand an offering, wholly or in part consumed upon the altar. It is not always necessary that the victim should be burnt, to constitute a sacrifice in the common acceptation of the term. Sykes observes of the heathen sacrifices, that those offered to the deities of the Ocean were cast into the sea, and it was not always required that the victim should be burnt on the altar. It was enough that it was consumed in some way, or rendered unfit for the use of the offerer. Cruden's definition, therefore, will come nearer our purpose in the term Sacrifice, as employed in this article: "A Sacrifice differs from a mere oblation in this, that in a Sacrifice there must be a real change or destruction of the thing offered, whereas an oblation is but a simple offering of a gift."

In Heb. xiii. 16, the application of the term Sacrifices to works of charity and beneficence is figurative; indicating that such works are agreeable to God, as are sacrifices, when presented not from any reliance on the mere offering, but from faith in his covenant, and a desire to please and obey him.

The history of Sacrifice, and the questions connected with it, obviously divides itself into two distinct streams; the one taking its course through the nations involved in Paganism; the other through the several dispensations of God's church and people recorded in Scripture. It must be evident, also, that each of these streams traverses fields of inquiry through which, in a work of this kind, they cannot be traced in all their windings, but only in a few principal and selected points; the principal of selection being their possessing most interest to the student or inquirer of the present generation.

Every thing tends to carry back the origin of the mere rite of Heathen sacrifice (not of course all its variations and conditions) to a point to which no profane testimony reaches, and of which only Scripture can give a satisfactory account, namely, the period when all the nations were one family and language. We must turn, then, to the Scripture account of sacrifice.

The first express Scriptural mention of it is in the case of Abel and Cain, (Gen. iv.) though the mention of the skins in which Adam and his wife were clothed has been supposed to indicate that they practiced it; as the permission to eat animal food is not recorded to have been given till after the Flood, and consequently there is no assignable reason on record, except sacrifice, for which the beasts whose skins were worn should be slain. It is occasionally mentioned during the Patriarchal history, as being offered on remarkable occasions; and under the Law it is enjoined with much ceremonial accompaniment and various adaptations to different offenses.

On these points all are agreed. But a great question has been raised upon the origin of sacrifice,—whether it was at first of Divine institution or of human invention, and afterwards adopted by God, and applied to the peculiar circumstances of the Jewish people. Instead of taking the controverted question in the order of time, and beginning with the discussion of the origin of sacrifice, it will, perhaps, be a more convenient plan for the purposes of this article, to give an outline of the different kinds of Sacrifice under the law of Moses, and then briefly notice the question as to its origin and primeval intent.

The materials of the Jewish Sacrifices were various: some offerings consisted of animals—sheep and goats, doves and pigeons, bullock, cow, or heifer.

Other offerings were called meat offerings. Of these, some were accompanied with drink offerings, and were composed of fine flour prepared with salt and oil, and kneaded into thick cakes or thin wafers. The drink offering was a libation of wine at the base of the altar. "Those meat and drink offerings," says Jennings, "were a sort of appendages to the sacrifices; they were offered along with all the burnt offerings, except of birds; and with the peace offering, Numb. xv. 3, &c., but not with the sin offerings, except that which was offered at the cleansing of a leper, Lev. xiv. 10.

"The meat offerings alone, which were not offered along with animal sacrifices, were either public or private. The public were the wave sheaf, Lev. xxiii. 10, 11; and the twelve cakes of shew bread, Lev. xxiv. 5. The private were either enjoined by Law, as that of the priest at his consecration, Lev. vi. 20, and that which the jealous husband was to offer, Numb. v. 15; or they were allowed in case of poverty, when the persons could not afford a more costly sacrifice, Lev. v. 11.

"The meat offerings were all of white flour, except that of the jealous husband, which was of barley meal, without any mixture, and the wave sheaf, which was not ground into flour; all the rest were fine wheat flour, seasoned with salt, Lev. ii. 13: Some were mixed with oil, frankincense, or both, ver. 15. Some were offered unbaked, others baked."

The principal sacrifices of the Law are classed under these four denominations:—

1. Burnt offerings or holocaust, which were burnt and entirely consumed, except the skin. These were esteemed the most excellent of all the sacrifices.

2. Sin offerings. These were not always burnt entirely as the former were. On ordinary occasions, only the fat was burnt on the altar, some of the blood put on the horns of the altar, and part poured out at the foot of it. (Lev. iv. 25, 26.) The flesh was the priest's due. (Lev. vi. 25, 26.)

On certain solemn occasions, however, they were to be entirely consumed, though not as the burnt offerings were, upon the altar, but without the camp, excepting the fat and kidneys, which were burnt on the altar.

3. Trespass offerings. These differ but little from the sin offerings, chiefly indeed in their being offered only for individuals, whereas sin offerings were sometimes used for the whole congregation. In all these three, atonement was understood; the offerer, under a sense of sin, sought reconciliation with God, and re-admission to the communion and benefits of the church.

4. Peace offerings, either of the flock or of the herd, male or female. The fat only, together with the kidneys (and if they were sheep or goats, the rump or tail), were burnt upon the altar. (Lev. iii. 3–5, 9–11.) The breast and right shoulder (called the wave breast and heave shoulder) (Lev. vii. 34) belonged to the Priests, to maintain them during their respective terms of attendance at the sanctuary. With the remainder the offerer made a feast with his friends. With these peace offerings cakes of flour mixed with oil, leavened and unleavened, were offered and became the priest's due. (Lev. vii. 12, 13.) The peace offerings were not, as the three former, offered under a notion of guilt contracted; but "the offerer was supposed," says Jennings, "to be with peace with God, and the offering was made rather in a way of thankful acknowledgement for mercies received, or as accompanying vows for the obtaining of further blessings; or as a means of preserving and continuing peace with God. Thus the peace offerings are distinguished into sacrifices of thanksgiving, votive offerings, and voluntary or free-will offerings. (Lev. vii. 11, 12, 16.) The sacrifice of thanksgiving is evidently referred to in these words of the Epistle to the Hebrews: "By him let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God." Some peace offerings were required by the Law to be offered at certain times and on particular occasions; as on the feast of Pentecost (Lev. xxiii. 19); by a Nazarite when he had accomplished his vow (Numb. vi. 14); and at the consecration of the priest. (Exod. xxix. 28.) But generally it was referred to the devotion and free-will of the people to offer these sacrifices when and how often they pleased.

The first three kinds of sacrifices were offered, as already stated, for various moral offenses and ceremonial transgressions. Some were public offerings for the use of the whole people, and others, again, private, for the offenses of particular persons.

That these sacrifices under the Law had respect, not only to the peculiar circumstances of the Jews, but also to the great Sacrifice which was to be offered for the sins of the whole world, is laid down with a clearness and decision in the Epistle to the Hebrews, which can leave no doubt on the mind of the believer in the New Testament. They were types, and as such, the sacrificial terms are applied to Christ by the inspired writers, both in that Epistle and elsewhere. But with regard to the origin of Sacrifice, whether it were, in its beginning, of divine or of human institution, there has been much controversy.

Altars.—If, with many eminent Christian writers, we maintain the divine institution of sacrifices, we must then date the origin of altars, perhaps, with the sacrifice of Abel, while the strong attestation of the divine acceptance given to that sacrifice, to the sacrifices of Noah and of Abraham; the express prescription of them to the friends of Job, as a means of propitiating the Deity; together with the systematic establishment of them by divine authority, in the law of Moses (on which occasion the forms and ceremonies of the altars were distinctly enjoined,) throw an interest around the history of these edifices connected with the highest hopes of man. The first altars were doubtless temporary and crude in their materials.

In sacred history we first read expressly of the altar of Noah, on the memorable occasion of his leaving the ark after the deluge: Abraham erected several; and Jacob consecrated, perhaps, the stone upon which he had slept at Bethel to this purpose; it is certain he returned to this place afterwards (Gen. xxxv.) for the express purpose of erecting an altar at the command of God, and this is the first occasion on which we find the building of an altar enjoined.

The first altar which Moses erected by the command of Deity was constructed of earth; those of Gideon and Manoah were respectively a rock, employed upon the emergency for that purpose. Among the Jews there were three principal altars; the altar of incense, the altar of burnt-offering, and the altar, or table, of shew-bread. These were each built of wood; the first and the last overlaid with gold; the second with brass, and all richly ornamented with the sculpture of the times.

Vows.—The Jews frequently made solemn vows of consecration of themselves, their services, their possessions, or part of their possessions, to God; and Moses recognizes this dedication in various forms, in the twenty-seventh chapter of Leviticus. A vow, in its ordinary moral and religious acceptation, denotes a solemn undertaking to fulfill certain self-imposed obligations—in case of deliverance from danger or sickness—success in any particular enterprise—or any similar benefit received.

The earliest instance of a formal vow recorded in the Old Testament, is that made by Jacob after his remarkable vision, Genesis xxviii. 20–22, by which he resolves to devote himself to God's service, and to appropriate the tenth part of his possessions to sacred purposes. Under the Jewish dispensation, vows made to God were not always so rigidly interpreted as if they admitted of no relaxation. In various cases commutations were allowed; as, for instance, a person who had devoted his house or his field to holy uses, might afterwards redeem it by a certain specified payment. The vows of children and married women were held not to be binding, if disallowed by their parents or husbands. The general regulations respecting vows under the Mosaic dispensation, are given in Leviticus, ch. xxvii. and Numbers, ch. vi. and xxx. In the New Testament, they are rarely mentioned, and no specific directions are given respecting them; but our Lord severely censures the Jews of his day for a gross violation of filial duty, in withholding subsistence from their aged and necessitous parents on the plea of previous dedication.

Jewish Feasts.—The Jewish feasts may be classed under two divisions,—the common and the sacred. Those of ordinary life were often distinguished by splendour and luxurious provision. To these there is frequent reference in the Scriptures. In the most ancient times we read of Abraham making a great feast at the weaning of Isaac. Laban did the same at the marriage of Jacob. The practice of feasting on birth-days and wedding occasions has been perpetuated even to the present age. Nor do our rural districts neglect some joyous demonstrations similar, however inferior, to those of the harvest, vintage, and sheep-shearing of the most ancient times among the Jews and other nations. It was common to ask and bestow special favours during the festivals, which were prolonged for many days; of which we have a specimen in the narrative furnished by the sacred historian of the proceedings of the court of Ahasuerus, when Esther was invited to prefer her request, and promised to have it granted, though it were to "the half of the kingdom."

Feast of Trumpets.—Every new moon, or the first day of every month, was distinguished among the Jews by its sacredness, when it was unlawful to pursue any secular business. The religious services required are mentioned in the Book of Numbers (chap. xxviii. 11–15).

The oppressors of the poor are described as saying, "When will the new moon be gone, that we may sell corn? and the Sabbath, that we may set forth wheat, making the ephah small and the shekel great . . . that we may buy the poor for silver and the needy for a pair of shoes; yea, and sell the refuse of the wheat?" The new moons were observed with particular sacrifices in addition to the daily ones, attended with the blowing of the sacred silver trumpets (Lev. xxiii. 24; Numb. x. 10).

The silver trumpets were used only by the priests in publishing the approach of festivals, and giving signals of war. The ancient trumpet does not appear to have differed much from the modern horn.

The first day, or new moon of the seventh month, Tishri, being the beginning of the Jewish civil year, was regarded above any other commencing days. Extraordinary sacrifices were then offered, and special annunciations made by trumpets; and it was set apart as a Sabbath. The meaning of these appointments was, that the people should understand that the first portions of their time ought to be consecrated to the Lord, and that all their possessions were to be devoted to His service. Being wholly ceremonial, however, these observances disappeared with the Christian dispensation. Still, the record of them may suggest to us, even in these times of spiritual illumination, the propriety of setting apart certain seasons, besides the sacred day, for solemn reminiscences and grateful celebrations.

The three principal festivals of the Jews were the Passover, the Pentecost, and the Feast of Tabernacles: the former was instituted to commemorate the signal deliverance of their nation from Egyptian bondage; the second to mark the promulgation of the law, which was at the expiration of fifty days, and the third to record, and to perpetuate, a lively recollection of their settlement in the promised land, after the inconvenient method of living, and the toilsome marches and counter-marches, to which they had been so long addicted in the wilderness. To each of these solemnities was assigned, apparently with reference to the creation of the world, the period of seven days. At these seasons an immense concourse of people was usually assembled at Jerusalem, from every direction, all clad in the attire of holiday, animated by the pleasing recollections of their past history, which the very institutions themselves were calculated to revive, and exhilarated by the sight of friends and relatives convened for the similar purpose of indulging not only an allowed, but even a prescribed and commanded festivity. These were seasons of singular satisfaction, deeply remembered, often conversed over, greatly anticipated, and repeatedly celebrated in the writings of their inspired authors—seasons when the natural overflowings of earthly affection blended with the elevating delights of a heavenly devotion.

Feast of the Passover.—The Passover was also called the Feast of unleavened bread, because during its celebration no leaven was allowed to be used in the bread eaten by the people. An account of its original institution is given in Exod. xii. 1–28. This festival lasted from the fifteenth to the twenty-first of the month Abib or Nisan, the first of the sacred year, corresponding with our April. The fourteenth day was sometimes termed the feast of unleavened bread, because on that day, before the evening, all leaven was removed from the houses, in preparation for the festival week. The chief solemnity was the sacred supper, by which it was introduced, and this was more especially denominated the Passover. Every family was required to prepare this, unless very small, when two might unite and prepare it together; nor were those persons who happened to be unconnected with families allowed to neglect it. It consisted of a whole lamb or kid, a male, of the first year, without blemish, roasted whole, and served up with unleavened bread, and a salad of bitter herbs. The victims were selected on the tenth, and slain on the evening of the fourteenth. On the first celebration, the lamb was killed at home, and its blood sprinkled on the posts of the door, but afterwards this was done at the Sanctuary, and the blood and fat appropriated to the altar (Deut. xvi. 1–7).

The people were to eat the first passover in haste, with their loins girded, their staff in their hand, and kneading troughs on their shoulders, which ceremony was intended to represent their sudden departure out of Egypt. If any of the flesh of these sacrifices was not eaten on the night of the feast, the utmost scrupulousness was observed in the removal and burning of it the next morning.

The lambs were slain in the court of the priests; and being so numerous, the principal part of the afternoon of the fourteenth day was necessarily devoted to the work. The evening sacrifice was therefore offered on that day before the middle of the afternoon. Though only one person entered with the lamb, the whole were divided into three companies, to be admitted in groups successively. When one company had entered, the gates were shut, and the owners of the lambs, or those that brought them in, assisted each other in killing them, taking off their skins, and removing the entrails and fat. The blood was then handed to the priests, to be sprinkled on the altar and poured out at the base. The common portions of fat were burned on the top. The priests stood in rows from the slaughtering places to the altar, passing the pieces and the blood from one to another, while the Levites sung continually the 113th, 114th, 115th 116th, and 117th Psalms, called the Hallel, or hymn of praise. The second and third companies having pursued the same course, the court was washed over with water. Ample directions are given in the 2d Book of Chronicles (chap. xxxv. 1–19).

The lambs having been thus prepared, were taken to the several houses where they were to be eaten, and immediately made ready for roasting by being thrust through with a wooden spit, and then placed before the fire; the commandment requiring that each should be exposed to its heat till very thoroughly roasted. Soon after dark the table was spread and surrounded by the company.

The passover might sometimes occur on the regular sabbath. The slaying of the lambs, however, was not superseded, because the work of the sanctuary was regarded as no desecration of the day. It was not allowed, however, to carry the lambs home till the sabbath was past; the people waiting for them in the courts of the temple till the approach of the second day of the week. The neglect of the passover was considered dangerous to the soul, but any unavoidable circumstance was considered a valid reason for observing it on the following month (Numb. ix. 6–13).

The Pentecost, or Feast of Weeks, or Feast of Harvest as it was also called, and fiftieth day, because being a week of weeks, or seven weeks, reckoning from the second day of the passover, comprehending a period of forty-nine days, was celebrated at the close of harvest, as a day of thanksgiving for its blessings. It lasted only one day, and was distinguished by a first-fruit offering of two loaves of the new flour, in the name of the whole congregation. This was accompanied with several sacrifices, and a great public offering of such sacrifices prescribed for the day, having no connection with this, besides the regular daily service. There were, moreover, many private free-will offerings. (Levit. xxiii. 15–20; Numbers, xxviii. 26–31; Deut. xvi. 9–12.) The Jews say it was usual to sing the hallel during the public sacrifices. It was on the day of Pentecost, when devout men from various nations were assembled at Jerusalem, that the prophesy of Joel was accomplished, and the promise of the Saviour in the miraculous effusion of the Holy Ghost, as recorded in the second chapter of the Acts.

Feast of Tabernacles.—The Feast of Tabernacles was so denominated because the people were required, during its observance, to dwell in booths, or sheds, constructed of the boughs of trees, such as were used in the journey through the wilderness. (Nehem. viii. 14–18.) It was celebrated from the 15th to the 23rd of the seventh month, Tishri; the first and the last day, as in the Passover, being regarded as more especially sacred and important. It is also called the feast of ingathering, (Exod. xxiii. 16; Levit. xxiii. 39–44; Nehem. viii. 14–18.) because of its connection with the season of vintage, and the gathering of the fruits, at the close of which it was observed. It lasted eight days; and some have thought that the people were required to attend at the Temple during the whole of the eight days. It was celebrated with extraordinary public sacrifices, of which there is an account in Numb. xxix. 12–38, and with private peace-offerings in daily abundance, as recorded in Deut. xvi. 13–15.

Fasts.—The Israelites had their fasts as well as their festivals, and these were not only regular as to the times of their observance, but assumed a character of singular humiliation and mourning. The entire day was, in these cases, spent in total abstinence, till the evening. The tenth day of the seventh month, or feast of atonement, was the only public fast-day appointed by the law; but others were afterwards introduced,—as one in the fourth, another in the fifth, and a third in the tenth month. In addition to these, they observed fasts on occasions of a particular nature, or of great importance; such as seasons of national calamity, or of great private misfortune, of which frequent mention is made in the compositions of David.

The Great Day of Atonement.—We have an account of the great day of atonement in the sixteenth chapter of Leviticus. It was the tenth day of the month, Tishri, not quite a week before the feast of tabernacles; and was to be observed not only as a sabbath, but as a day of fasting and general humiliation, on account of the sins of all the people or nation which had been committed during the year. The high-priest was directed to enter into the holy place, with a young bullock and a ram, having washed himself, and put on his linen coats, and other usual attire; then to take two kids of the goats for a sin-offering, and one ram for a burnt-offering. The bullock or sin-offering was for himself and family, probably the whole priesthood and the Levites; the ram for a burnt-offering, to signify that he and his associates were wholly consecrated to the service of God. Two goats were to be brought, for the whole congregation; one to be selected by lot for a sin-offering, the other to be set apart as a scape-goat, to be sent into the wilderness, representatively to bear away the sins of the people. The two goats were regarded as one sacrifice; one of them only being slain.

We are informed in Leviticus that Aaron killed the bullock for himself, and afterwards the goat for the people; that he first carried a censer of coals, with some incense, into the Most Holy Place, and there caused a fragrant cloud to spread over the mercy-seat and fill the apartment. He then brought the blood of the bullock and the blood of the goat and sprinkled them upon the mercy-seat, and seven times upon the floor in front of it. When he came out into the Holy Place, he applied them to the horns of the golden altar, and sprinkled them upon it seven times. Afterwards he placed his hands upon the head of the living goat, confessed over it the iniquities and transgressions of the children of Israel, and then sent it away into the wilderness. When all was over he washed himself in the Holy Place, put on his splendid dress, and offered a burnt-offering for himself and for the people, while the whole bodies of the bullock and the goat, whose blood had been carried into the sanctuary, were sent to be burned without the camp, as altogether polluted and unclean.

According to Maimonides, on this day fifteen animals were offered. "The daily, or morning and evening sacrifice, was offered as usual, besides a bullock, a ram, and seven lambs, all burnt-offerings: a goat for a sin-offering, which was eaten in the evening: then a bullock for a sin-offering, and this they burnt, and a ram for a burnt-offering: these both for the high priest. Then the ram for the consecration, which is called the people's ram. They brought also for the congregation two he-goats; the one for a sin-offering, the other for a scape-goat. Thus all the beasts offered on this great and solemn day were fifteen—the two daily sacrifices, one bullock, two rams, and seven lambs, all of these burnt-offerings. Two goats for sin-offerings; one offered without and eaten in the evening, the other offered within and burnt; and one bullock for a sin-offering for the high-priest. The service of all these fifteen beasts is offered by the high-priest only."

Religious Orders.—Several classes, or orders of religious persons among the Israelites, demand to be cursorily noticed. The most remarkable of these were the prophets, a highly gifted race of men, who addicted themselves to extreme simplicity of dress, and great austerity in their mode of living. They were ordinarily clothed in hair-cloth, or as it is called, sackcloth, a token of mourning, and adopted by them for the purpose of expressing, in a conspicuous sign, the sorrow of their minds for the transgressions of their countrymen. Thus Elijah is described as "a man clothed in a hairy garment, and girt with a girdle of leather about his loins;" and John the Baptist is represented by the historian of the New Testament as having "his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins."

Nazarites.—The Nazarites were persons who took a particular vow of abstinence, and the rule of the Rechabites was founded upon it; whose author, the son of Rechab, lived in the time of Elisha, and interdicted his children from the use of wine, and from securing to themselves temporal possessions. Hence they lived under tents, and imitated the pastoral life of the ancient patriarchal families. After the captivity we have nothing of their history. The term Nazarite signifies separated, and is commonly applied to persons who make a vow to live in a more holy manner than others, either during a certain specified number of years, or even after the pledge is given, without recantation or change. The Nazarite abstained from every kind of intoxicating liquor, "from wine and strong drink," from vinegar of wine, or vinegar of strong drink, and from grapes, whether moist or dried; he was to let his hair grow, and upon no pretext whatever to approach a dead body, though it were to render funeral honours to a father or mother. If, during the period of a vow, the Nazarite neglected any of these injunctions, the whole ceremony was to recommence. The least admissible time for this consecration was, according to some of the Jewish rabbis, thirty days; and the perpetual Nazarite whose hair had been allowed to grow for many years, might cut it at once. At the expiration of the appointed term, various sacrifices were to be offered, a particular enumeration of which is given in the sixth chapter of the Book of Numbers. After this, the priest shaved the head of the Nazarite, at the door of the tabernacle, and burnt his hair on the fire of the altar. If the person died previous to the expiration of his vow, his son was required to fulfill the time, and offer the same sacrifices. Perpetual Nazarites, like Samson, were consecrated by their parents, but there is a peculiarity attaching to him above all others of whom we read, that of being devoted, even before his birth. Similar rites were observed among the heathen, especially the Egyptians, the Greeks, and the Romans, the origin of which is unquestionably to be referred to the Jewish law.

Levites.—The Levites constituted another remarkable class of persons among the Israelites. They were the ministers of religion, and formed a particular order distinct from the other tribes. In addition to the privilege of birth, they were consecrated to their office by certain ceremonies, to which Moses alludes: "Take the Levites from among the children of Israel, and cleanse them; sprinkle water of purifying upon them, and let them shave all their flesh, and let them wash their clothes, and so make themselves clean. Then let them take a young bullock with his meat-offering, even fine flour mingled with oil, and another young bullock shalt thou take for a sin-offering. And thou shalt bring the Levites before the tabernacle of the congregation; and thou shalt gather the whole assembly of the children of Israel together; and thou shalt bring the Levites before the Lord; and the children of Israel shall put their hands upon the Levites; and Aaron shall offer the Levites before the Lord, for an offering of the children of Israel, that they may execute the service of the Lord. And the Levites shall lay their hands upon the heads of the bullocks: and thou shalt offer the one for a sin-offering, the other for a burnt-offering, unto the Lord, to make an atonement for the Levites. And thou shalt set the Levites before Aaron, and before his sons, and offer them for an offering unto the Lord. Thus shalt thou separate the Levites from among the children of Israel: and the Levites shall be mine."

Priests.—Each head or chief of the twenty-four classes into which the priests were arranged, acquired the title of the Prince of the Priests. Every week one class went up to Jerusalem to perform the priestly office, and on the sabbath-day they all performed in rotation, till the whole had served: on the solemn festivals they were all convened. The prince of the class ordered the particular family to offer the sacrifices on the given day, and at the end of the week all united in sacrificing. The different offices to be performed by each family and its respective members were determined by the lot.

Certain defects excluded from the priesthood: of those of body, the Jews calculate fifty, common to men and animals, and ninety which are peculiar to the former. The person rejected was clothed in black, and sent without the courts of the priests: he who was chosen by the authorized examiners and judges, appeared in white, and assumed his station amongst the others of his order. Many that were but partially defective in body, resided in the temple, and were employed in preparing the wood for the fire of the altar.

The high priest was decorated with a dress peculiar to himself, consisting first of the mehil, a long garment of a purple colour, which, reached down to the feet, and not made of two distinct pieces, sewed together at the shoulders and sides, but woven throughout entire. On the border of this robe were seventy-two golden bells, and a similar number of pomegranates, under which was to be seen the tunic or linen alb, a part of the dress common to all the priests, woven in an open manner, having raised work and figures in it, very fine and twisted, and reaching to the ground. The high priest also wore an ephod which was a waistcoat without sleeves. On each shoulder where this garment was fastened, was a precious stone, containing the names of the different Israelitish tribes engraven; on the right shoulder were the names of the six eldest sons of Jacob, after whom they were called, and on the left the six younger. On his breast was a square piece of stuff termed the breast-plate, or in Hebrew hoschen. It was about half a cubic in dimensions, and was constantly worn in every solemn consultation with the Most High. On the breast-plate were twelve precious stones, graven also with the patriarchal names. It contained also the urim and thummim, about which we have very little information. The former word signifies lights, and the latter truth or perfection; and both are considered by the Jews as sacred signs by which the Deity revealed his will. They seem to have been something more than merely two words on the breast-plate, and are represented as beaming forth a miraculous splendour. The high priest was also invested with a mitre, a linen band, in length sixteen cubits, and plaited on the head in several folds. Josephus says, "on the head he wears a cap, not pointed, nor extending over his whole head, but covering a little more than half of it;" so that between the mitre and the holy crown was a convenient place for the phylacteries. The holy crown was a plate of gold upon the forehead, on which was an inscription of two words: Kodesh Layhovah—"Holiness to the Lord." To preserve it in the proper position it was tied with a blue or purple lace or ribbon, drawn through two holes, one in each end, and fastened behind the head.

Scribe, the title of a certain class of law-officers and teachers amongst the Jews; there is still a class of men amongst the Jews known by this name, whose business is to write the copies of the law for the synagogues, phylacteries, mezuzzoth, &c, and whose existence throws some light upon the office of the ancient scribes. They were probably the authorized notaries or solicitors, to whose care not only the copying of the sacred books, but the drawing up of all legal documents, was intrusted, and to whom, consequently, the people applied in all cases of legal difficulty; and as the civil law was also the law of God, the transition from the office of expounders of the law to that of religious teachers, as we find them in the New Testament, was easy and natural. The Talmud uses the words "Scribes" and "Rabbies" indifferently of the same persons, and it was of course the interest of the rabbies to identify themselves with the scribes, as they thereby communicated to their office an antiquity and an authority which belonged only to the latter. But from the Talmud itself it is plain that the two offices are distinct. In the passage quoted above it is asked, "Why were the ancients called scribes?" which question plainly shows that the office of scribe was ancient, and that of rabbi a modern invention. With the scribes probably arose the oral law. The precedents and usages of the courts of law formed the first basis of tradition, and opened the door for the usurpation of the priestly office. In course of time came the pharisees and the rabbies, and they not only availed themselves of the power which the scribes had already acquired, but gradually ejected the scribes also, so that for ages the scribes have ceased to be religious teachers, and have sunk down into the more humble employment of mere scriveners.

From the New Testament it appears that, in our Lord's time, the scribes were teachers of religion and expounders of the Scriptures; for it is said, "When Jesus had ended these sayings, the people were astonished at his doctrines, for he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes." (Matt. vii. 28, 29.) And again, "Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come?" (Matt. xvii. 10.) And again, "How say the scribes that Christ is the Son of David?" (Mark xii. 35.) From all which it is evident that their authority as teachers was very great. But it is not so easy to define the precise nature of their office, nor to assign the difference between it and that of the lawyers, and the doctors of the law. Some suppose that all the three words are synonymous; and others that either the first two or the last two stand for the same office. From Luke xi. 44, however, it appears that the lawyers were not identical with the scribes. The Lord had said, "Woe, unto you, scribes and pharisees,"—"Then answered one of the lawyers, and said unto him, Master, thus saying, thou reproachest us also. And he said, Woe unto you also, ye lawyers." Here the scribes and lawyers are plainly distinguished. From Acts v. 34, where Gamaliel is called a doctor of the law, it would appear that this latter title stands for Rabbi, which always stands before Gamaliel's name in the Talmud; and that therefore scribe is to be distinguished from doctor of the law as well as from lawyer. Whatever be their faults, their learned labours have at least been useful in preserving the sacred text.

SECTION II.—DOMESTIC LIFE OF THE ISRAELITES.

The people of Israel may next be viewed in their domestic circumstances, from which the real character of a nation, no less than that of an individual, may often be most correctly deduced.

Betrothing and Marriage.—The practice of betrothing was prevalent among the Jews. This consisted in an engagement for a marriage at a future time, and was generally determined by the parents or brothers, without any consultation of the parties till they were introduced to the ceremony. It often took place in early life, and was performed at least twelve months before the marriage, either by a written document or a piece of silver given to the persons espoused, before witnesses. The woman was then regarded as in fact the wife of the man, but remained with her parents; and the engagement could not be nullified excepting by a bill of divorce. The betrothing frequently assumed the character of a mere pecuniary bargain. We have a remarkable specimen of this in the address of Shechem, respecting the daughter of Jacob, to her father and brother. "Let me find grace in your eyes, and what ye shall say unto me I will give. Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say unto me; but give me the damsel to wife." Jacob served seven years for Rachel, because he had no money to offer.

The marriage ceremonies were carefully observed. The bridegroom had young men with him to indulge in hilarity, called in the New Testament "the children of the bride-chamber." Marriages were always attended with great feasts and rejoicings. The bride wore her most splendid attire, to which there are frequent illusions in the Prophets: as for instance, in Isaiah lxi. 10, "I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels." It was customary to crown the married couple. When the ceremony was performed in the open air, which was not unfrequent, a canopy was erected supported on four posts, under which the bridegroom stationed himself. The bride, deeply veiled, was led in beside him, and a covenant in writing seems to have been subscribed by the parties (Prov. ii. 17; Mal. ii. 14;) and the near kindred of the parties solemnly blessed them. In modern times the rabbi reads the contract, and the bridegroom places a ring on the forefinger of the bride's left hand. In the evening the parties were conducted to their new abode with torches and lamps, and in great pomp. The feast lasted seven days, with the festive accompaniments of singing and music. Many guests were invited, of whom one was raised to a temporary authority, and was termed the ruler or governor of the feast. Another, nearly related to the bridegroom, acting in his name, was "the Paranymph," called the friend of the bridegroom. When the marriage was celebrated in the higher circles, the guests received magnificent garments, which were hung in a chamber through which they passed, and each robed himself before entering the banquet-hall.

The Birthright.—The first-born son inherited peculiar privileges. He received a double portion of his father's estate. (Deut. xxi. 17.) He possessed some authority, similar to that of the father over his younger brethren; at least when the father was taken away; and was regarded with some peculiar respect, as the principal representative of the family. In the family of Jacob, as the first privilege was given to Joseph, so this second one was secured to Judah, because Reuben had rendered himself unworthy of his natural right, by gross sin. (1. Chron. v. 1, 2.) Before the giving of the law, advantages of a kind yet far more important belonged to the birthright. The oldest son seems to have enjoyed a religious pre-eminence over the rest of the children, as well as a mere worldly superiority. The father of every family was its proper priest, whose business it was to offer sacrifice to God, in behalf of his whole house, as Job was accustomed to do. In case of his absence or death, this important office, we have reason to believe, fell to the first-born son. In appears moreover, that God, in the natural order of his providence and grace, distributed his benefits not without some regard to this distinction of birth; appointing an inseparable connection between them and the father's peculiar solemn blessing, while, in the established order of things, this blessing came to be considered the proper right of the first-born. Such, at least, was the method, which the Divine wisdom respected as regular, in the case of Esau and Reuben.

By virtue of their birthright, they were authorized to expect a large measure of the rich BLESSING pronounced on Abraham, to rest on each of themselves, and to be handed down continually in the line of their posterity, till it should, at last, be crowned with the accomplishment of the Great Promise—the appearance of that Seed in whom all the nations of the earth were to be blessed. Reuben lost his natural advantage in this respect by shameful wickedness; as before, Esau had sold his for a morsel of bread; thus profanely despising the rich spiritual blessings with which it was connected. The latter sought the blessing afterwards, "carefully with tears;" but he "found no place of repentance," (or change)—no possibility of altering what was done, by a change in his father. (Heb. xii. 17.) The right of the priesthood was given, by the law, to the tribe of Levi, and the religious superiority of the first-born seems to have continued no longer. (Numb. iii. 12–18.) It is easy to see, from what has been said, how the term first-born came to be used figuratively, to signify a character of highest dignity, or to denote anything of principal importance in its kind. "The first-born of the poor" are those who are pressed with exceeding poverty. (Isa. xiv. 30.) "The first-born of death," is a death of uncommon cruelty. (Job xviii. 13.) So, to express the dignity of the saints, they are called "the church of the first-born." Christ is styled the First-born of God; also, "the first-born of every creature," as being before all things—the Beginning and Head of creation; again "the first-begotten from the dead," as being the Beginning of the resurrection, and the Head of the whole family of believers, who are yet to rise.

Education.—The subject of education stands in immediate connection with that of matrimony and of children; and among the Israelites it seems to have borne a resemblance to the discipline of the Egyptians and early Greeks. Corporeal strength being in great estimation among them as a nation of soldiers, their exercises were of a nature calculated to promote this object. They appear to have been trained to lifting weights and running races: hence they were able to convey intelligence of the issue of battles with the utmost speed. Of Asahel the brother of Joab, it is said that he was as light of foot as a wild roe. The use of the bow, and other military exercises, entered of course into their educational system. With regard to the cultivation of the mind, it must be admitted they did not propose a very extensive range; for, adopting the prejudice that the study of the different languages was little meritorious, being equally in the power of slaves with those of the highest class in society, their attention was restricted chiefly to their own language, of which it may be said, that although it bears evident marks of grandeur and antiquity, it has little of the copiousness, and still less of the elegance of many other dialects. It is doubtful whether they were generally able to write, especially as learned men in Scripture are introduced under the name of scribes, as if the art of committing to writing were the profession of a separate class. With reading it was different, since they were laid under a religious obligation each one to consult for himself the oracles of God: it was their employment on the Sabbath or sacred day; and the remarkable contents of the inspired volume not only supplied ample materials, but suggested powerful motives to serious and frequent perusal. Here was contained all that the world furnished of authentic history; all that could particularly interest them in a national point of view, as being the record of those transactions in which their ancestors were busily engaged, and all that could authenticate their worship, and substantiate their illustrious descent.

Domestic Influence.—It appears that parents had a right to sell their children, and they had ordinarily so much authority, that, after using every proper method of correction, they were, in case of failure, to represent the circumstance to the elders of the city, when the magistrate was empowered to order the rebel to be stoned to death. (Deut. xxi. 18–21.) The apprehension of so melancholy an end to determined perverseness would naturally operate in a powerful manner upon the junior branches of families, and generally restrain their irregularities. It was not unusual among the Jews, in the ordinary enumeration of children, to place the name of the most endeared first in order, irrespective of birth. (See Gen. v. 32; xi. 26.)

The authority of a Jewish father, in his family, was very great. We have seen already how absolute it was in providing for the marriage of a son or daughter. When a daughter married, she passed entirely into another family, unless she happened to have no brother, in which case she became heiress of her father's estate. (Numb. xxvii. 1–9.) A son continued to live, after marriage, in his father's house; and while he did so, the father's authority still rested upon him with full weight; and, at the same time, upon the daughter-in-law, with all their children. The whole Scriptures inculcate on children, in the most solemn manner, the duty of affectionate respect and kindness toward their parents, as long as they lived. The law requires parents, on the other hand, to train up their children, with the most unceasing diligence, in the knowledge of religion and in the fear of God. (Deut. vi. 7; xi. 19.) The gospel enforces the same duty with repeated admonitions.

Music was always cultivated among the Jews with great care and assiduity, not only for religious purposes, but in domestic and social life; in fact, it has been the entertainment of all nations and at all times. In the annual pilgrimages to Jerusalem, it was employed to cheer the march, and the practice of it was not restricted to any particular class.

Musical Instruments were first invented by Jubal, the son of Lamech. "He was the father of all such as handle the harp and organ." (Gen. iv. 22.) (See Ancient Musical Instruments.)

Drums and Timbrels are also mentioned, of which there were different kinds. The Hebrew toph, which, in our English version, is interpreted by timbrel, is more probably the tambourine than the drum; of which instrument, however, it may be considered the parent. In most of the passages in which the sex of the performers can be determined, it is played by women, to whom the drum would seem but ill accommodated. Thus, it is Miriam, who "takes it in her hand" after the destruction of the host of Pharaoh, "and all the women went out with her with timbrels and with dances." (Exod. xv. 20.) In like manner the daughter of Jephthah meets her unhappy father after his ill-omened victory. (Judges xi. 34.) In the 68th Psalm they are "the damsels who are playing upon the timbrels;" and even in two other places (2 Sam. vi. 5, and 1 Chron. xiii. 8) wherein the timbrels are mentioned among the instruments, first on which "David and all the house of Israel played before the Lord", and secondly on which "David and all Israel played before God with all their might," there is no ground for disbelieving that women formed part of the musical band. Kircher, in his Musurgia Universalis, describes the toph (of which he gives an engraving), as beaten by a rod, and resembling a kettle-drum. The European drums were most probably introduced from the same quarter during the Crusades.

Dancing.—Dancing seems naturally enough connected with the subject of singing and musical instruments; and we have evidence that this was practiced among the Israelites. It was resorted to on a great variety of occasions; as those of victory, domestic joy, and religion. There were both secular and sacred dances, with accompaniments of instrumental music. The term nehitoth, which is found in the title of the fifth psalm, signifies dances or choirs of dancing women, and is derived from a root which means to dance. A remarkable instance of this nature occurs at an early period of the Jewish history. When Pharaoh and his hosts were drowned in the Red Sea, and the fugitive people of God obtained in consequence a complete deliverance from their enemies, Moses composed his celebrated song, recorded in the 15th chapter of the book of Exodus, and Miriam, his sister, appeared at the head of the women, to congratulate Israel upon this event, in responsive strains and dances, vying with the other sex in expressions of praise, and recognizing with equal joy an interposing Providence: she inspired the song, and led the dance. Moses exclaimed, "I will sing unto the Lord;" and Miriam replied with no tardy zeal, "Sing ye to the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously." At a subsequent period, David, when animated to an extraordinary act of piety, upon the ark of God being brought from the house of Obededom into the city, disarrayed himself of his royal decorations, and, substituting the lighter linen vestment of the priests, danced before the ark in holy ecstasy of spirit. The taunting language of Michael upon that occasion, which produced David's vindication of his conduct, as an act of humility and zeal, proves how little capable irreligious persons are of estimating those characteristic demonstrations of an ardent piety, for which eminent saints have been always distinguished.

From a collection of all the passages in Scripture in reference to dancing, it may be inferred:—

1. That dancing was a religious act, or an act connected with notions of religion; both in true and also in idol worship.
2. That it was practiced exclusively on joyful occasions such as national festivals or great victories.
3. That it was performed on such great occasions only by one of the sexes.
4. That it was performed usually in the day-time, in the open air, in highways, fields, and groves.
5. That men who perverted dancing from a sacred use to purposes of amusement were deemed infamous.
6. That no instances of dancing are found upon record in the Bible, in which the two sexes united in the exercise, either as an act of worship or amusement.

Lastly, that there are no instances upon record in the Bible of social dancing for amusement, except that of the "vain fellows," void of shame, alluded to by Michael; of the religious families described by Job, which produced increased impiety, and ended in destruction; and of Herodias, which terminated in the rash vow of Herod and the murder of John the Baptist.

Dancing appears to have been practiced at a very early period, and may be traced among all nations; but the promiscuous dancing of modern times does not seem to have been known among the Jews, unless we consider the reference in Job xxi. 11, 12, as some evidence of it. "They send forth their little ones like a flock, and their children to dance. They take the timbrel and harp, and rejoice at the sound of the organ. They spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave."

Salutations.—The Israelites, in common with the eastern nations, observed many civilities in their intercourse with each other. The term lord was used whenever they wished to express a marked respect. It is recorded particularly of Sarah that she applied this epithet to her venerable husband. The bowing and prostration of the body were also in use amongst them, often in Scripture termed worshipping.

The following are some of the forms of Oriental bowing and worship, to manifest different degrees of respect, according to the rank or supposed importance of the person reverenced. Upon that remarkable occasion when David, after concealing himself in the cave in the wilderness of En-gedi, and having cut off the skirts of Saul's robe privily, on going forth he cried after Saul, who turned to ascertain the person addressing him, and saw David, who "stooped with his face to the earth, and bowed himself." (1 Sam. xxiv. 20.) Eastern etiquette to this day is illustrative of this subject. When a Persian receives the visit of a superior of eminence, he crosses the open court of his house to meet him at the street-door; if the distinction of the visitor be not quite so great, he receives him at the entrance of the room; if his equal, he simply rises from his seat; if his inferior, he only makes a show of rising.

Kissing was an ordinary mode of salutation. Sometimes the Orientals kissed the beard of the person whom they intended to honour, and sometimes they kissed the ground. At the present day, eastern salutations take up a considerable time. When an Arab meets his friend, he begins, while he is yet at a distance from him, to make gestures that may express his very great satisfaction in seeing him. When he comes up to him, he grasps him by the right hand, and then brings back his own hand to his lips, in token of respect. He next proceeds to place his hand gently under the long beard of the other, and honours it with an affectionate kiss. He inquires particularly, again and again, concerning his health and the health of his family; and repeats, over and over, the best wishes for his prosperity and peace, giving thanks to God that he is permitted once more to behold his face. All this round of gestures and words is, of course, gone over by the friend too, with like formality. But they are not generally satisfied with a single exchange of this sort; they sometimes repeat as often as ten times, the whole tiresome ceremony, with little or no variation. Some such tedious modes of salutation were common also of old; so that a man might suffer very material delay in travelling, if he chanced to meet several acquaintances, and should undertake to salute each according to the custom of the country. On this account, when Elisha sent his servant Gehazi, in great haste, to the Shunammite's house, he said to him: "If thou meet any man, salute him not; and if any salute thee, answer him not again." So, when our Lord sent forth his seventy disciples, among other instructions he bade them "salute no man by the way;" meaning, that their work was too important to allow such a waste of time in the exchange of mere unmeaning ceremonies.

Dress.—In a state of innocence the first parents of our race were destitute of clothing, and their original vestment was made from the leaves of the fig-tree. Subsequently they were directed to employ the skins of animals as a covering, which is the meaning of the Hebrew term. Long before the Flood, spinning and weaving, or needle-work, were known, so as to form a rude kind of cloth; and this manufacture gradually advanced in perfection by the use of wool, cotton, and flax. This art was well understood in the time of Abraham. The byssus was a kind of silk formed out of the tuft of the pinna longa, a muscle. The beauty of the dress was considered as dependent on the colours. Blue was in the greatest estimation among the Jews, and moreover was regarded as the sacred colour. It abounded in the sacerdotal vestments, in the hangings of the Tabernacle. But others also were highly esteemed. Thus, in the wilderness, "all the women that were wise-hearted did spin with their hands, and brought what they had spun, both of blue and of purple, of scarlet and of fine linen."

The art of colouring, also, was understood. Sometimes a splendid white was produced by the skill of the fuller, and was preferred on festival days by the rich and noble. To be clothed in white was a mark of honour, and that colour has always been regarded as emblematical of purity and joy. Our Saviour promises his saints they shall be "clothed in white raiment," and that they shall "walk with him in white." When Christ was transfigured on the Mount, his raiment became "exceeding white as snow, so as no fuller on earth can white them." Kings and princes, when they appeared in state, were usually clothed in purple, a colour supplied from a shell-fish. Being very scarce, it was deemed more precious than gold. Scarlet also was worn as a mark of royalty and power.

The tunic was probably the most ancient garment, and was in truth but a sort of enlargement of the primitive dress or apron. It was fitted pretty closely to the body, and sewn together at the sides. It was worn next the skin, reaching, as first used, to the elbows, afterwards below the knees, like a shirt, with armholes and sometimes sleeves. It was made of different kinds of cloth, but most commonly of linen. It was bound with a girdle encircling the waist.

Immediately over the tunic was the upper or outer garment, called also the cloak. This was simply a piece of cloth nearly square, several feet in length and in breadth. It was wrapped round the body or tied over the shoulders, fastened with clasps or buckles. The two corners were drawn over the shoulders, so that it hung down in front, which were called its skirts or wings. The Arabs wear precisely such a garment in the present day. It was frequently used for carrying any things the wearer collected, as herbs and fruits. (2 Kings iv. 39.) The Israelites carried their kneading-troughs, when they went out of Egypt, "bound up in their clothes, upon their shoulders," and this illustrates our Lord's allusion—"Give and it shall be given unto you, good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom." The Arabs use this garment so as to expose only the right arm. The poor employed it as their bedding at night; on which account it was unlawful to keep it as a pledge after sunset. (Exod. xxii. 26, 27.) "They cause the naked to lodge without clothing." (Job xxiv. 7.) In an ampler form it was called a robe or mantle. The law required that there should be fringes or tassels on the four corners of this garment, with a blue ribbon, to remind the people of the commandments of God. (Numb. xv. 38.) The Pharisees had these made remarkably large, that their religion might be seen of men. (Matt. xxiii. 5.) These were the garments spread before our Lord on his entrance into Jerusalem. (Mat. xxi. 8.)

In winter fur dresses or skins were worn, as at present, in the East. The term rendered robe in Jonah iii. 6, is supposed to mean a fur garment; that rendered sheets (Judges xiv 12, 13) to refer to some garment worn next the skin, the same probably as the fine linen in Prov. xxxi. 24, Is. iii. 23, Mark xv. 46. The linen cloth was, it is supposed, an article of bed-clothing, which might be caught up and thrown on in haste; which explains the reference to the young man following Christ when the disciples fled.

It was common to dispense with the upper garment when engaged in any labour or service, as our Lord did when he washed the feet of his disciples, and Peter when employed in fishing. (John xiii. 4, xxi. 7.) David uncovered himself when he danced before the Lord. (2 Sam. vi. 14, 20.)

The girdle was used to carry weapons, and was therefore especially important to the soldier. When a sword was carried it was fastened to the belt. (2 Sam. xx. 8.) It was also used to carry money, or other things, as handkerchiefs, smoking materials, and professional implements. Secretaries, and writers in general, were accustomed to have an ink-horn fixed upon it. Two girdles seem to have been frequently worn; one for the tunic, the other for the upper garment.

There was a distinction between the dress of men and women in the East, though less marked than with us, and the exchange of dresses was expressely forbidden by Moses, because it was very common with the heathen, and connected with their idolatry. The ordinary dress of females was a loose, flowing outer garment, with a belt and a veil. A variety of the articles of female dress are mentioned by the Prophet Isaiah. Chap. iii. 16–23.

The veil was an important part of female dress. In early times it was not deemed essential, but in latter ages no woman of any rank could be seen in public without a veil. Veils were of various kinds. Sometimes they covered the whole body from head to foot; at other times merely the face and head, or breast. Sometimes they hung down in front only from the nose or eyes, and again spreading over the top of the head, like a cap, from the bottom of the forehead, and falling down behind. "A long piece of white muslin, embroidered at each end with coloured silks and gold, or of coloured crape ornamented with gold thread and spangles, rests upon the head, and hangs down behind nearly or quite to the ground. This is called 'tarhah;' it is the head veil, and can be drawn forward to cover the face at pleasure. This veil is always worn in the house. The riding or walking attire of an Egyptian lady is called 'tazyureh.' Whenever she leaves the house she wears a large loose gown, the sleeves of which are nearly equal in width to the whole length of the gown; it is of silk, generally of a pink, a rose, or violet colour. Next is put on the 'burko,' or face-veil, which is a long strip of white muslin, concealing the whole of the face, except the eyes, and reaching nearly to the feet. It is suspended at the top by a narrow band, which passes up the forehead, and which is sewed, as are also the two upper corners of the veil, to a band that is tied round the head. The lady then covers herself with a 'habarah,' which for a married lady is composed of two breadths of glossy black silk, each ell-wide, and three yards long (according to the height of the person), the seam running horizontally. With respect to the manner in which it is worn: a piece of narrow black riband is sewed inside the upper part, about six inches from the edge, to tie round the head."

Anciently the covering of the head was formed of cloth, fitted round it with several folds, and in a variety of forms. It was called a mitre or bonnet. The mitres of the priests were higher than others, as were those of princes.

A curious kind of head-dress, with as curious a name, the horn, was worn as an ornament by Oriental women, and by warriors and distinguished men. It was hollow, of silver, four or five inches in diameter at the base, and rising obliquely from the forehead to a point. It is still used in the East. Many passages in Scripture refer to it; such as "God shall exalt the horn of his anointed."—"He exalteth the horn of his people."—"He hath raised up a horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David." The horn is evidently significant of power and honour.

The sandal belonged to the feet, and was originally a sole of wood, or hide, fastened with thongs or straps. The fastening was called a latchet, and it was so made as to be easily slipped off. It was deemed a violation of good manners to wear a sandal in the house. Taking it off was a mark of respect both to persons and places. As the necessity of washing the feet arose from the dust and dirt of travel, from which the sandal was so imperfect a protection, the first act of hospitality was for a menial to unloose the straps and furnish a supply of water.

Having discovered or determined what was most convenient, their fashions never changed; a circumstance which is characteristic of the oriental nations even to the present day. The rich usually possessed a great accumulation of clothes; hence it was common to make presents from the wardrobe.

Cleanliness was in some degree essential to their circumstances, as well as a great refreshment. In walking they could not avoid gathering a considerable quantity of dust, wearing nothing but sandals, and hence it was requisite to wash frequently and abundantly. We read of this being practiced continually on coming into a house, sitting down to meals, and going to bed. They also addicted themselves to anointing, which consisted either of simple oil, or such as had aromatic spices infused. They applied ointments chiefly to those parts of the body which were most exposed to the atmosphere, by which means they were considerably secured against its change and inclemencies. The legal purifications eminently conduced to cleanliness.

The anointing of kings and rulers was specially prescribed. It was sometimes done privately by a prophet, to indicate that the anointed one was destined to the throne. After the establishment of the monarchy it was performed by a priest. It was also practiced to show respect, as when the woman anointed our Saviour's feet with costly ointment. The anointing of the sick was a practice of the primitive church, and this ceremony is still practiced in the East. The bodies of the dead were anointed to preserve them from corruption, as a method of embalming. (Mark xiv. 8; xvi. 1; Luke xxiii. 5.)

The Hair.—The hair of the Jews, as is the case in eastern countries generally, was almost universally of a black colour. By the men, it was always worn short, except sometimes, perhaps, by delicate and vain persons like Absalom, or by such as were under the Nazarite vow. (Numb. vi. 5.) It was common to anoint the hair, especially on festival occasions. Females, as in all other countries, wore their hair long. "The apostle Paul," says Dr. Nevin, "teaches us that this usage ought never to be abandoned: 'Doth not even nature itself teach you, that if a man have long hair, it is a shame unto him? But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her; for her hair is given her for a covering.' (1 Cor. xi. 14, 15.) The same apostle, however, was altogether opposed to the fashion of dressing up this simple ornament with an artificial glory of braided tresses and gold and costly gems: on this subject, Peter also thought it proper to leave his inspired admonition. (1 Tim. ii. 9; 1 Peter iii. 3.) Such vain decorations were very common among the Jewish ladies."

The Beard.—"Among the men," remarks the same author, "much more importance was attached to the beard. Ancient nations generally agreed in opinion on this subject. In their estimation, a long heavy beard, hanging down over the breast, was an ornament of peculiar excellency, and added no little to the dignity and respectability of any man's person. To show any contempt towards it, by plucking it, or catching hold of it, or touching it without good reason, was a most grievous insult; such as, in modern times, a man of honour, according to the worldly meaning of the phrase, would consider abundant cause for a challenge and a duel forthwith. Nobody was allowed to touch it, except for the purpose of respectfully and affectionately kissing it, as intimate friends were accustomed to do, when they met. It was, therefore, most base deceit, when Joab 'took Amasa by the beard, with the right hand, to kiss him' (or to kiss it), and then smote him with a sword, in the very act of feigned friendship. (2 Sam. xx. 9.) To shave off half the beard, as Hanun did to the messengers of David, was a provocation of the most insolent and outrageous kind; and such a disgrace did these unhappy men feel it to be, that they could not bear to show their faces in Jerusalem till a new growth of hair had covered the nakedness of their chins. (2 Sam. x. 4, 5.) To express great grief, however, it was common to tear out part of the beard, and sometimes to cut it off; at other times, sorrow was signified by neglecting to trim and dress it, and letting it grow without any care. (2 Sam. xiv. 24.) In the East, the same notions about the beard still continue. The Arabians consider it more disgraceful to have it cut off, than it is with us to be publicly whipped. They admire and envy those who have fine beards. 'Pray, do but see,' they cry, 'that beard; the very sight of it would persuade any one that he to whom it belongs is an honest man?' 'For shame of your beard!' they exclaim, when they would reprove a person for acting or speaking wrong. It is a common form of oath, 'By your beard;' or, 'By the life of your beard.' And to express the best wishes for another's welfare, they want no more significant phrase than 'May God preserve your blessed beard!' This comprehends everything."

Tents and Houses.—In the East, persons dwell either in tents or houses. The former were contrived and occupied as soon as they emerged from caves and holes of the earth. The wandering life of the shepherd was always connected with living in tents, which the Arabs prefer to this day. Jabal was the "father of such as dwell in tents and have cattle," before the Deluge, and after it the patriarchs adopted the tent residence.

Tents were of various shapes and sizes, and were formed by setting up poles in the ground, and stretching a covering of skin or cloth over them, which was fastened down by cords and pins, or stakes. If more than three poles were used, the three largest were placed in a row in the middle, and the others on each side; if only three, they were fixed up in a single row. Allusion is made to the easy enlargement of the tent by an alteration of the poles, and a further stretching out of the covering. "Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations; spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes." The covering was generally made of the strong black cloth which is formed of goat's hair. The allusion in Solomon's Song is to a number together seen pitched on the top of a hill, or at a distance, "I am black but comely as the tents of Kedar." The larger tents were divided by means of curtains into two or three apartments, and the bottom or ground was covered with mats or carpets. A small hole in the middle served as a fire-place for cooking, and the simple furniture consisted of a few vessels of shells or brass, with goat-skin bottles, and a hand-mill. Of course, the more wealthy possessed a greater supply of furniture, and their tents were often splendidly adorned.

The Arabs so pitch their tents that the entrance may face the tent of their chief, as a token of submission or dependence, and a promptness to interfere for his protection.

The tent being adapted to a wandering and migratory life, as agricultural and other pursuits occupied attention, it was superseded by the more substantial dwelling of a house. Erections of this description, however, were of very early origin, as we may be assured from the architectural display in the tower of Babel. Indeed, we have reason to believe that houses are of earlier origin than the nomadic tent; for in Genesis iv. 17, Cain is represented as having built a city in the land of Nod, which he called after the name of his son Enoch. Subsequently the primitive nomade, Jabal, invented a sort of habitation suited to the exigencies of his wandering life. The houses of the common people were mostly built of mud; stone and other materials being used chiefly by persons of a higher grade. The stone was cut into very large pieces, and the beauty of the erection was considered to arise from the manner in which the stones were cut and joined, all being even and well dressed by the level and square. They employed fragrant woods, as cedar and cypress, to wainscot the inside of the finest buildings, and out of these they made the ceiling and the pillars. Josephus has given us an ample description of the architectural magnificence of Solomon, which it may be worth while to cite. "This house," says he, speaking of the king's palace, "was a large and curious building, and was supported by many pillars, which Solomon built to contain a multitude for hearing causes and taking cognizance of suits. It was sufficiently capacious to contain a great body of men, who would come together to have their causes determined. It was a hundred cubits long, and fifty broad, and thirty high, supported by quadrangular pillars, which were all of cedar, but its roof was according to the Corinthian order, with folding doors, and their adjoining pillars of equal magnitude, each fluted with three cavities, which building was at once firm and very ornamental. There was also another house so ordered that its entire breadth was placed in the middle; it was quadrangular, and its breadth was thirty cubits, having a temple over against it, raised upon many pillars; in which temple there was a large and very glorious room, wherein the king sat in judgment. To this was joined another house, that was built for his queen. There were other smaller edifices for diet, and for sleep, after public matters were over; and these were also floored with boards of cedar."

The most remarkable part in the construction of their houses was the flat roofs, which were conveniently adapted for a variety of purposes. Sometimes they afforded a cool as well as a secure place of lodging for the night; sometimes they were used for the purpose of concealment, as when the spies of Israel were hid by Rahab (Josh. ii. 6;) sometimes they served the purpose of walking, as in the case of David when he saw Bethsheba from the roof of his palace (2 Sam. xi. 2;) sometimes for conference, as between Samuel and Saul (1 Sam. ix. 25:) sometimes for meditation and prayer, as is recorded of Peter (Acts x. 9.) The roof is covered with earth, or a kind of plaster made of coals, ashes, &c., pounded together. On the outside is a low wall, on the inside a balustrade. On these roofs grass will sometimes spring up, which however speedily withers under the power of the sun: "Let them be as the grass upon the house-tops, which withereth before it groweth up; wherewith the mower filleth not his hand."

Gates were important appendages to the houses, as means of protection, and, to save the trouble of opening the whole, doors were made in them. The wealth of Easterns is sometimes indicated by the loftiness and grandeur of their gates or outer doors; but as the gratification of such a vanity is not unfrequently attended with danger, especially under the rule of extravagant and heartless despots, the precaution is generally adopted of having the outer door or gate so constructed as to present a common-place and even mean appearance. Thus they endeavour to elude the vigilant cupidity of their prowling masters. (Prov. xvii. 19.) Another motive exists for the construction of small and inconvenient entrances to dwellings, especially within the range of Arab visitation. These sons of the desert commonly ride into houses, the doors of which they find open, if they are sufficiently capacious to admit them mounted. The gates of a city were places of great resort. In front of them were generally large spaces appropriated to business, and furnishing convenient places for meeting in private companies, or large assemblies. Walled cities were always secured by gates of wood, iron, or brass. At the gates was the seat of Justice. When Abraham bought a field of the sons of Heth, the bargain was concluded "at the gate of the city." Hence, to be "crushed in the gate," is to be utterly condemned in judgment. The term is used as significant of possession and power, "Thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies." "The gates of hell" signifies the power of hell.

Furniture.—The simplicity of their furniture is conspicuous from the narrative of the accommodation intended by the good Shunammite to be afforded by the prophet: only a bed, a table, a stool, and a candlestick. The term rendered stool indeed signifies an honourable seat, &c.; sometimes applied to a throne. The candlestick also was unquestionably designed as a token of respect, and was probably of a large description, placed upon the ground, and capable of containing two or more lamps destined to burn during the whole night.

The floors in an eastern house are covered with mats or carpets. Coarse mattresses are kept in the side of the wall, to be spread on the floor as beds at night: the poorer persons use skins. It was easy, therefore, to "take up the bed and walk." On the cushions placed along the sides, somewhat raised, it is customary to sit cross-legged, or on the floor; or to lie down, and therefore sometimes in Scripture called a bed. (Amos iii. 12.) The ancient Hebrews practiced this posture, but after the captivity the rich adopted the Persian method of lying down at table on couches. (Amos vi. 4.) In the eating room were commonly three couches or divans, the middle place of the middle one being esteemed the most honourable, and was the position to which the Pharisees aspired at the feasts.

One of the most useful articles in a Jewish dwelling was the goat-skin bottle, made by stripping off the skin of a goat or kid from the neck downward, without ripping it. The hole left by one of the forelegs, which were cut off, served as a spout, the rest being lightly sewed up. Water, milk, and wine, were kept in this way in their freshest state. Sometimes the bottles were employed to carry provisions, and when old they were liable to break or tear.

Diet.—All the expressions which we find in Scripture in reference to their eating and drinking prove that their food was plain, and generally taken in moderate quantities. They used small rolls, which were not cut, but broken. Their provision consisted of bread and wine, wheat and barley, beans, lentiles, parched corn, raisins, dried figs, honey, butter, oil, sheep, oxen, and calves. They made great use of milk, and a variety of pastry. They abstained from several kinds of food on account of the interdictions of their law. They neither partook of blood nor fat, nor swine's flesh; and many animals were refused as unclean.

Mourning was practiced by the Israelites on a variety of occasions, not only of private affliction, but of public calamity: and the general indications of it were, tearing their clothes, which they did immediately upon receiving any distressing intelligence, beating their breast, uncovering the head, and putting dust and ashes upon it, and shaving off the hair and beard. During the whole period of mourning, they were to desist from washing, or anointing themselves, or enjoying the refreshment of a change of clothes. Their faces were covered, and their feet bared, and they frequently wrapped themselves up in a mantle. It was common also to sit upon the ground, and either maintain a profound silence, or utter some mournful ditty. With all these they connected fasting, either wholly, or with the exception of a little food of the plainest description, after sunset. The usual period of observing these severities, on account of a dead person, was seven days, but for eminent persons they were persevered in for a month, as in the cases of Aaron and Moses. (Numb. xx. 29; Deut xxxiv. 8.)

After death the body was cleansed and laid out, and wrapped in linen cloth, the head being bound with a napkin. It was at length placed on a bier, and carried to the grave. The Jews used no coffin for the dead. The bier was a sort of bed, consisting of a simple frame, without covering, though sometimes it was prepared with great cost and ornament, perfumed with odours and various kinds of spices. (2. Chron. vi. 14.)

Burning the Dead was resorted to on certain extreme occasions, as when some awful calamity or plague prevailed; the obvious intention being to destroy infection. Thus, in Amos vi. 9, 10, "And it shall come to pass if there remain ten men in one house that they shall die. And a man's uncle shall take him up, and he that burneth him, to bring out the bones out of the house, and shall say unto him that is by the side of the house, Is there yet any with thee? and he shall say, no. Then shall he say, hold thy tongue; for we may not make mention of the name of the Lord."

Common people were buried: and persons of distinction embalmed, preparatory to their being placed in sepulchres: sometimes they burnt perfumes over the body of the deceased. The art of embalming was, probably, acquired in Egypt.

The deceased body was opened on the left side, its contents entirely removed, the brain drawn out through the nostrils, and the cavities filled with drugs and spices, by which the humours were absorbed, and the remains preserved from decay. The body was then anointed with a composition of myrrh and other preservatives, and kept for many days in a solution of the salt of nitre. It was, lastly, wrapped in numerous folds of linen, dipped in oil of myrrh, and besmeared with gum. Having been kept thirty, forty, or even seventy days, it was put into a coffin of sycamore wood or of stone, often resembling the human form in front, which was set up against the wall of the house; though sometimes it was placed in a tomb or family vault. It was usual to paint some resemblance of the deceased individual on the coffin, and thus a perpetual memento of his departure was exhibited in a form that lasted for years and ages.

The Sepulchre was a kind of subterraneous chamber, or closet, sometimes so ingeniously contrived, that it had doors, which turned upon hinges, and a table to lay the body upon, cut out of the same stone. It is observed by Dr. Clarke, that the immediate receptacles for embalmed bodies are relics held in veneration by the Jews, and are called soroi, constituting integral parts of mountains, "which have been chiseled with a degree of labour not to be conceived from mere description. These are monuments on which a lapse of ages effects no change; they have defied, and will defy, the attacks of time, and continue as perfect at this hour as they were in the first moment of their completion. Thus we are informed in sacred Scripture, according to the Septuagint version, that when Joseph died, 'they embalmed him, and he was put "ἐν τῇ Σόρῳ" in Egypt;' that is to say, in one of those immense mono-lithal receptacles, to which alone the ancients applied the name of Σορος; they were appropriated solely to the burial of men of principal rank; and their existence, after the expiration of three thousand years, is indisputably proved, by the appearance of one of them in the principal Pyramid of Egypt."

The sepulchres of the Jews were in general without the bounds of the cities, Jerusalem being the only exception, that privilege being granted to the royal family of David, and one or two other individuals, as a mark of peculiar respect. (2 Chron. xxiv. 16.) Private sepulchres were frequently situated in gardens, and in early times beneath the shadow of some aged and outspreading tree. It was an honour to be buried in the sepulchre of their ancestors (Gen. xlix. 29–32; 2 Sam. xix. 37;) so that, as a disgrace, wicked kings were sometimes not permitted to be buried in the tombs of their fathers. (2 Chron. xxi, 20; xxviii 27.)

In common cases sepulchres were merely dug in the ground, and hence they are sometimes called pits, and death is represented as "going down into the pit:" but those of the wealthy were prepared with greater labour. They were frequently cut in the rocks, so as to form a considerable room, roofed about and on all sides with the solid stone. The dead were placed round the sides, each in a separate niche. These excavations, or occasionally natural caves, were also sometimes divided into several chambers, and were generally entered by descending steps. The entrance was closed with stone doors, or a large flat stone against the opening. Monuments of more or less elegance were erected over the sepulchres in honour of the departed; which illustrates the language of Christ to the Pharisees, "Ye build the tombs of the prophets, and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous." They were constantly whitewashing, repairing, and beautifying them, which is referred to in the same chapter. But another reason for this practice is assigned. By the law of Moses, whoever touched the bone of a man or a grave was rendered unclean for seven days. (Numb. xix. 16.) As this defilement unfitted a person for the sanctuary, it was important that the possibility of contracting it should be prevented, especially at the seasons when multitudes resorted to the sacred festivals at Jerusalem. They therefore painted the sepulchres white, that they might be easily distinguished, and persons thus kept from a contaminating touch. This was done immediately after the rains in each spring, and just before the celebration of the passover.

SECTION III.—DISTRIBUTION OF TIME.

The distribution of time, to which all nations have found it requisite to pay some attention, was, among the ancient Israelites, a matter of peculiar importance, since, without a degree of minute regularity on this point, their various religious observances must have been neglected.

Their years were each divided, with reference to the different periods of their commencement, into civil and sacred. The former began with the new moon following the autumnal equinox, after completing the in-gathering of the fruits. This is generally imagined to have been the time of the creation of the world, and the ancient commencement of the Jewish year, till the period of their emancipation from Egyptian bondage, which, having been accomplished at the vernal equinox, appeared to them a proper reason for new dating their year, in commemoration of so wonderful a manifestation of Providence.

In addition to the common year, the Israelites had what they termed a sabbatical year, which was observed every seven years, when they were not allowed to cultivate their land; and whatever was produced spontaneously during this period was not considered as belonging to the proprietor of the soil, but the common inheritance of all. They observed also a year of jubilee at the expiration of seven sabbatical years, when there was a total suspension of agricultural pursuits; each took possession of his former inheritance, however it might have been alienated, and slaves gained their freedom. The six divisions of the natural year mentioned in Genesis viii. 22, namely,—"seed time and harvest, cold and heat, and summer and winter," were adopted by the Jews, and are observed to this day by the Arabs and other easterns. Seed time commenced in October, and ended in December; harvest included the months of April, May, and June; the cold season extended from February to April; the warm or hot season, August and September; and winter had for its season the months of December and January (See Climate).

The Hebrew week consisted of seven days, of which six were appropriated to secular employments, and the seventh, or sabbath, to religious services. The term weeks of years is occasionally used to denote seven years. Thus we find the expression, seven weeks of years, meaning forty-nine years, the interval between each jubilean year. (See also Article on Chronology, Bible Dictionary.)

SECTION IV.—ORDINARY PURSUITS OR OCCUPATIONS OF THE ISRAELITES.

The Israelites may be said to have been chiefly agriculturists, an employment to which all the ages of antiquity seem to have been most addicted, and which, while it is the most natural, may also be regarded as the most healthful of all occupations. The primogenitor of the human race, even in a paradisaical state, was directed to cultivate the soil; for, however the spontaneousness of its productions might have rendered his diligence unnecessary to its improvement, his advantage both in body and mind were undoubtedly promoted by this arrangement. The wealth of the patriarchs, which was sometimes by no means inconsiderable, consisted principally in cattle; and hence arose the solicitude they always displayed in their various migrations, to find wells and cisterns of water. They appear to have been industrious, and as the natural concomitant, simple in their mode of living. Their goats and sheep, and horned cattle, camels, and asses, shared their chief attention; and the produce of the field and of the flock supplied their table, without the refinements of a luxurious cookery. In the same manner the tribes, with little exception, were husbandmen and shepherds; and from these humble, though, in that age, by no means undignified employments, sprang their most distinguished men.

In the promised land, the Israelites possessed a soil adapted to their taste and simple habits. There were extensive plains suited to tillage and pasturage, and hills and mountains proper for the cultivation of the vine and of fruit trees. The climate also was congenial, the country being defended from the Arabian deserts by lofty mountains, and refreshed from the Mediterranean by acceptable breezes; and though the rain be seldom, it falls with a calculable regularity. The dews in the meantime, during the intensity of summer, are abundant. The Israelites had large crops of wheat and barley, productive vineyards, and plenty of oil and honey.

Their flocks were attended not only by servants, but frequently by the sons and daughters of the owner, and not uncommonly by himself. In the summer they occupied the loftier parts of the country and the mountainous districts; in the winter they sought the valleys; so that the shepherds, whose perpetual watchfulness was required, were exposed to every change of season and of weather. "In the day," says Jacob, "the drought consumed me, and the frost by night." So the shepherds were keeping watch over their flocks by night when the Saviour was announced by the angel.

From their flocks they derived, as we have intimated, ample means of subsistence and comfort. Milk, cheese, various food and raiment, were their produce. The time of sheep-shearing was alway a great occasion, when they were collected in folds, and large companies assembled and made a complete festival of several days' continuance. (2 Sam. xiii. 23.)

The plough, in ancient times, was probably very similar to that which is now used in eastern countries, but was far less complex than ours. It was easily lifted by a man with one of his hands, and was so light as to make but a trifling furrow. The ploughshare was a piece of iron fixed at the end of the shaft that lay flat. Sometimes it had but one, at other times two handles, standing nearly upright, with a slanting pole or beam at the bottom, to which the yoke was attached. The share resembled a short sword, and might easily be beaten into it. (Isaiah ii. 4; Joel iii. 10.) The management of so slight and unsteady a plough required constant attention, and illustrates the Saviour's language, Luke ix. 62.

The ground was levelled with a harrow of very rude construction. Sometimes a heavy piece of wood to level (Is. xxviii. 24, 25,) sometimes a wicker-drag, or brushwood.

The usual beasts of labour were bulls and cows, he-asses and she-asses. When a bull became restive, a hole was bored through his nostrils, and a ring of iron or twisted cord fixed in it, to which a rope was fastened to pull and manage the animal. This is referred to in the address to the King of Assyria, "Because they rage against me, and thy tumult is come up into mine ears, therefore I will put my hook in thy nose, and I will turn thee back by the way which thou camest." The yoke was fixed over the neck. The ox and ass were not allowed to be yoked together, the ox being a clean beast and the ass unclean; moreover their strength is dissimilar. The ox-goad was a pole, seven or eight feet long, having at one end a flat piece of iron for cleaning the plough, and at the other a spike for spurring on the animal. It was sometimes used as a spear in war.

Sowing was commonly begun about the end of October, but barley might be committed to the ground in January or even February. The grain became ripe soon after the latter rains were over, so that on the second day of passover a barley-sheaf was presented as an offering of the first fruits of the harvest. After this reaping commenced; first the barley, then the wheat. The time of harvest was seven weeks, from the passover till pentecost, which generally happened near the beginning of June.

The grain was then carried to the threshing-floor, in wagons or on beasts. The wagons moved only on two wheels, resembling modern carts. The threshing-floor was in the field, on a rising ground, exposed to the winds, and was beaten hard with a roller. A flail was used to thrash out the lighter grain; oxen or the threshing-machine being employed for the heavier.

The threshing-instrument was usually formed as follows: four pieces of timber were conjoined in a stout square frame, and three or four heavy rollers, with axles at each end, reaching across and turning in its opposite sides. Each of the rollers had round it three iron wheels, cut into sharp teeth, like a saw, or armed with thick pieces of the same metal protruding six inches all over the surface. Then a seat was raised over the frame for a man to direct the oxen round the floor. The front part of the machine was turned upwards, so as to pass along without becoming choked with the straw. The cart, mentioned in Isaiah xxviii. 27, 28, was only some particular form of this instrument.

The winnowing of the grain was accomplished by throwing it up before the wind with a fork or shovel: the straw being cut up by the threshing-machine, readily flew off with the chaff. The grain was then cleared with a sieve: a kind of fan was also used to drive away the straw and chaff. The straw less broken was laid up for the use of the cattle. The chaff was burned, but the wheat was stored up in granaries.

This singular people seem to have had scarcely any notions of trade, manufactures, and commerce. Their own land was adequate to their maintenance, and the tribe of Zebulon only occupied sufficient of the sea-coast to feel a temptation to traffic. In some of the arts, however, they appear to have been well skilled,—as the melting of metals, cutting and engraving precious stones, casting of figures, joining, embroidery, and the making of tapestry. Tradesmen and merchants, who make up so respectable a portion of the community in our country, were, for a long time, of almost no account in theirs; and, in fact, could not be said to have been known at all, as distinct, regular orders, in the system of society. This state of things underwent a little alteration after the time of Solomon. Tradesmen grew more numerous, and began to form, in some measure, a separate class of citizens. Commerce, also, with foreign nations became, in some degree, and especially at two or three different periods, an object of attention. It was not, however, until the time of the captivity that the character of society was very materially changed. After that event a great number of Jews became merchants, and travelled, for the purposes of traffic, into all countries. It grew common, also, to learn particular trades; and hence we find them frequently mentioned in the New Testament.

"It may be asked, how the inhabitants of the cities were employed in those times, when we suppose merchants and tradesmen to have been so few in the land. The answer is, that cities then were generally very small, and pretty much filled with husbandmen. Their small farms lay scattered over the country round, and their chief care was to attend to their cultivation. (Judg. xix. 15, 16.) Several of them belonged to the Levites, who had their particular employment in another way. Some of the larger ones, only, discovered something of the mercantile character; while a few artists might possibly be found in many, if not all. This, however, was not enough to give any importance to either kind of occupation, as forming a distinct profession in society.

"Commerce with foreign nations was not forbidden by the law of Moses; but, at the same time, it was not encouraged in the smallest degree. The reason of this was, that the Jews might be kept as far as possible from mingling with other nations, so as to avoid the danger of falling into their idolatries, and to remain a completely separate people, until the wise purposes of God should be answered. Traffic among themselves, of course, was carried on, upon a small scale, from the earliest times. Hence we hear from the first of weights and measures. Solomon ventured to go far beyond this limited usage of trade; he carried on a traffic with Egypt for horses, and sent forth a number of vessels, by the way of the Red Sea, to the distant countries of Ophir and Tarshish, which brought him in amazing wealth. After his time the Jews seem, till their captivity, to have kept up some trade with other people, though it fell far short of what was carried on while he governed the nation.

"Wheat, honey, oil, and balm, are mentioned as articles that were carried out of the country, in traffic with other nations. (Ezek. xxvii. 17.) No doubt the wine, also, which it yielded so abundantly, of the best quality, was to some considerable extent turned into profit in the same way. (2 Chron. ii. 10, 15.) In return for these and other commodities, a variety of foreign productions were introduced into the land. In the days of David and Solomon, the principal materials for the building of the temple were thus brought from the kingdom of Tyre. We read that, for this purpose, cedar and fir and and almug trees were hewed on Lebanon, and floated on great rafts to Joppa. (2 Chron. ii. 8, 16.) Part of the mountains called Lebanon belonged to Palestine itself; but it seems that the most valuable timber of the kinds just mentioned grew on that part of their long range which fell within the territories of Hiram, the Tyrian king. What the Almug or Algum trees were, cannot now be known. Vast quantities of gold, silver, brass, iron, and all manner of precious stones, were collected by David from different quarters. From Ophir and Tarshish the ships of Solomon brought gold, silver, precious stones, almug wood, ivory, apes, and peacocks. The commerce with Egypt brought in a large supply of horses and linen yarn; while great companies of camels came, time after time, loaded with every fragrant spice, from the farthest regions of Arabia,—such as cinnamon, cassia, frankincense, and myrrh. So plentiful was the introduction of foreign treasures of every sort into the country, in the days of this prosperous monarch, that he is said to have made 'silver to be in Jerusalem as stones, and cedars as the sycamore trees that were in the vale, for abundance.'

"It would be very desirable, in reading the Scriptures, to have a correct acquaintance with the systems of measures, weights, and coins, which regulated, in different ages, the ancient traffic of the East.

"Measures of Length were at first taken from various parts of the human body. So far, then, as we can determine these parts, we may make a probable guess about the length of the measure; yet it will be only probable, because such measures, though suggested at first by the parts from which they are named, become sometimes gradually settled into lengths that vary considerably from their original natural standards. Measures of this sort were the Digit, the Palm, the Span, and the Cubit.

"A Digit was the breadth of a man's finger or thumb. A Palm, called commonly a hand-breadth, was equal to four finger-breadths or digits. A Span was equal to the distance between the top of the thumb and the top of the little finger, when they were stretched as far as possible apart: it was as much as three hand-breadths. A Cubit was, as one opinion supposes, the distance between the elbow and the wrist of a man's arm; according to another, it was the length of the whole arm, or, at least, from the elbow to the knuckles. It is plain that two cubits are mentioned in Scripture, one longer than the other, as much as a hand-breadth, the great difficulty is, however, to determine which of these is the oldest and most common. (Ezek. xl. 5.) It has been, nevertheless, pretty generally agreed to reckon a cubit about a foot and a half of our measure, so as to consider four of them equal to the common height of a man. Ezekiel mentions a measure called a reed: it was equal to six cubits of the longer kind.

"In later times, other measures were introduced. The Furlong was borrowed from the Greeks: it was one hundred and twenty-five paces in length, equal to the eighth part of a Roman mile. This Mile, which is the one intended in the New Testament, being equal to eight furlongs, was, of course, made up of one thousand paces, and was about one hundred and fifty yards shorter than a common English mile. A Sabbath-day's journey was about seven furlongs; that is, a little less than a mile. This was a measure invented by the Jews, to determine precisely how far a man might go on the Lord's day, without breaking the commandment. (Ex. xvi. 29.)

"Hollow Measures were of two kinds, as they were used for liquids or for dry articles. Sometimes, however, the same measure was used for both, as we use the gallon and quart. For dry articles, the common measures, in early times, were the Cab, the Omer, the Seah, the Ephah, and the Homer: for liquids, the Hin, the Log, the Bath, and the Homer, seems to have been the most important in use.

"Measures for liquids seem to have been rated, at first, by the number of egg-shell quantities which they could hold. A Log held six egg-shells full. A Hin was equal to twelve logs, or as much as seventy-two times the quantity of a single shell. This would be about five quarts of our measure. A Bath was equal to six hins, or seven and a half of our gallons. The Homer, accordingly, which was used for liquid as well as for dry articles, contained ten baths as well as ten ephahs, and was, of course, something larger than one of our hogsheads. We are to remember that the capacities of all these ancient hollow measures are determined only according to probability.

"In the times of the New Testament, a Bushel was in use. It was the Roman bushel, which contained only a peck in English measure. The Firkin, mentioned in the account of our Saviour's first miracle, was a Greek measure, and held about as much as the ancient bath, or ephah; that is, seven and a half gallons. (John ii. 6.)

"It was a long time before men began to coin money, as is common now. Gold and and silver were very early used in selling and buying; but they were always weighed, like other articles of traffic; so that every piece, whatever its shape might be, was valued just according to its purity and its weight in the balance. In this way, we read that Abraham weighed the silver which he paid for the field of Machpelah. While this method continued, it was common for such as were employed in traffic of any kind, to carry with them a pair of balances, and different weights, in a sort of pouch or bag. These weights were generally stones. Hence the meaning of those laws which forbid divers weights in the bag, or unjust balances, becomes clear. (Lev. xix. 36; Duet. xxv. 13, 15; Prov. xvi. 11.) Wicked men sometimes carried a different set of weights with them: one class was too light, and with these they sold; the other, too heavy, and with these they bought, thus defrauding others in their dealings. 'Shall I count them pure,' the Almighty says of such, 'with the wicked balances, and with the bags of deceitful weights?'

"From this early manner of using silver and gold, we find that all the terms used in the Old Testament to signify the value of different sums of money are merely the names of common weights. The most important of these weights was the Shekel. The name itself signifies simply a weight; which shows that it was very ancient and very much in use. We are not able to know exactly what was its weight before the captivity; for, although the same name was continued long after, even down to the time of Christ, there is much reason to believe that the shekel of early times weighed less than the later one. This last weighed nearly half an ounce; the other, therefore, was probably a good deal under that weight. There was, besides the common shekel, a royal one, called 'the king's shekel,' which seems to have been considerably smaller than the other. A Gerah was the twentieth part of a shekel. (Ex. xxx. 13.) There was also a weight called the Bekah, or half-shekel. A Pound is supposed to have been equal to sixty shekels, and a Talent to three thousand. By these different weights both silver and gold were counted, and so valued according to their purity and their scarcity, as it was greater or less at different times. A shekel of silver, according to the later estimation of that weight among the Jews, would be about equal in value to our half-dollars; and so, before the captivity, must have been, in all probability, considerably below that rate.

"After the captivity, the Jews became acquainted with coins, or stamped money. The most ancient coin of which we have any knowledge was the Daric, a Persian coin, stamped by royal authority: the Drams mentioned in Ezra and Nehemiah were this kind of money. The Jews began to coin money for themselves, in the time of the Maccabees, not quite one hundred and fifty years before Christ. A Greek coin, called a Stater, was then in common use, and was supposed to be about equal in weight to the early shekel. Accordingly, when the Jews struck off their coin, called after the ancient weight, the Shekel, it was made just as heavy as the stater, though, as we have said, it is most probable that the old shekel was considerably lighter. The new shekels were coined both in silver and in gold, and some of them remain to this day. The 'piece of money' which Peter found in the mouth of a fish was one of the staters mentioned above, equal in value to a shekel of that time, and so just enough to pay the tribute money for two persons. The fourth part of a stater was equal to a Drachma, among the Grecian, and to a Denarius, or penny, among the Roman coins. This last, in the time of our Saviour, had stamped upon it the head of Cæsar. In value it was about twelve and a half cents of our money. The Roman Farthing was in value one-tenth of their penny, and not quite equal to one cent and a half among us. It was used to signify the smallest value, as the price of a couple of sparrows. A smaller piece of money, equal only to a fourth part of the last, is sometimes mentioned under the same name. The smallest of all was the Mite, two of them being equal but to one farthing of the least kind: this was the widow's offering.

"Silver and gold, anciently were far more scarce than they are now; and, of course, the same weight would be far more valuable. This ought to be remembered in reading the Scriptures." (See also Money, Bible Dictionary, page 66.)

THE TABERNACLE IN THE WILDERNESS.

So far as we have hitherto been able to ascertain the state of mankind, it appears that every nation has recognized the existence of some overruling divinity, and adopted some form of worship, for in those very few instances which might be pleaded as exceptions to this statement, it may be fairly presumed, even though it could not be satisfactorily proved, that the opportunities of observation have in those cases been few—or the persons who have given the report were either considerably disqualified, or indifferent to the inquiry—or the modes of imperfect worship sometimes adopted by newly-discovered regions have been mistaken for the ordinary observations of civil life or parts of a domestic economy, through the existing ignorance of the language, manners, dispositions, and other peculiarities of uncivilized tribes. This universal tendency to religion may not only be regarded as resulting from its early establishment among the Israelites, but in the traditions of a great part of the globe may be distinctly traced the fragments of the Jewish economy in the mutilated forms of service, and the distorted features of truth. It must ever, therefore, be an interesting pursuit to ascertain the worship of that extraordinary people, who were under the peculiar superintendence of Providence during the first ages of their existence, and whose history is so intimately connected with the great moral revolutions of the world. We are thus naturally guided to a consideration of the TABERNACLE, which was erected among them in the wilderness.

The Hebrew term properly signifies a Tent, corresponding with the Latin tabernaculum, and the Greek Σκήνη, and was originally applied to the temporary habitations of the patriarchs. Philo calls it very appropriately φορητον ιερον, "a portable temple," The Israelites had two tabernacles, the one the tabernacle of the congregation, which was appropriated to secular uses, the other the tent, or tabernacle of testimony, called also the tabernacle of the Lord, which was devoted to religious purposes.

It was during the extraordinary intercourse with God, which was accorded to Moses in the mount, that the illustrious legislator received particular orders respecting the construction of the tabernacle, with its sacred vessels, to execute which he desired the people to bring in their several offerings for materials, appointing two principal architects, Bezaleel and Aholiab, to complete the design. In six months from the commencement of the work, and on the first day of the first month, in the second year of the departure from Egypt, the erection was finished, and its whole interior miraculously occupied by a cloud of glory.

Construction of the Tabernacle.—The tabernacle consisted of an oblong square, thirty cubits in length, ten in breadth, and ten in height, having two general divisions, the holy place, and the sanctum sanctorum, or most holy, or holy of holies. The former was twenty cubits in length, and ten in width, containing the table of shew bread, the golden candlestick, and the golden altar of incense. The holy of holies, called also the sanctuary, was the same in length and breadth, namely, ten cubits, and was separated from the holy place by a veil or curtain of richly embroidered linen, suspended on four pillars of shittim wood, each overlaid with plates of gold, but having their bases of brass. This division contained the ark of the covenant. A veil of similar make, and supported in the same manner, served the purpose of a door, and separated it from the outward court. The tabernacle was enclosed on three sides, namely, the north, south, and west, by planks of shittim wood, covered with golden plates, with bases of brass, each ten cubits in height, and a cubit and a half in breadth; in number forty-eight: but so far irregularly disposed, that twenty of them were on the north, twenty on the south, and only eight on the west side; all let into one another by two tenons above and two below, and the whole compacted by two bases or cross-bars along the entire length, joined by mortises. Each had five golden rings through which were passed poles covered with gold. The east side was open, concealed only by a rich curtain: this was considered the entrance. The roof was composed of a square frame of planks or boards, resting on their bases, overspread with different kinds of coverings. The first on the inside was of fine linen, embroidered in various colours of hyacinth, purple, scarlet, and crimson; over this were coverings of goats' hair, neatly interwoven; the last consisted of sheep and badgers' skins, dyed of an azure blue or red, adapted to secure the whole from the inclemency of the seasons. These curtains were only on the sides and behind: there were none in front. The tabernacle had no window: the admission of the ordinary light being less adapted to grandeur and religious effect than artificial illumination.

An oblong court of a hundred cubits in length, and fifty in breadth, surrounded the tabernacle. This enclosure was encompassed by sixty pillars covered with silver plates, with capitals of silver and bases of brass; ten of them stood towards the west, ten towards east, twenty towards the north, and twenty towards the south, at a distance from each other of five cubits. These pillars were hung with curtains of twined linen thread, resembling net-work, which enclosed the tabernacle on all sides, with the exception of the entrance of the court, where a curtain still more splendid in its embroidery was disposed, twenty cubits wide, to correspond with the door-way, and sustained by four silver-plated pillars, included in the sixty named above, with capitals and bases of brass.

Furniture of the Tabernacle.—It was in the court, and opposite the entrance, that the altar of burnt offerings was to be seen, five cubits long, five wide and three high, placed on a base of stone work, and covered, within and without, with plates of brass. At the four corners were four projecting brass plated appendages, emphatically denominated the horns of the altar; from each of which a grate, made of brass, was suspended, fastened with four rings and four chains. On these the wood and the sacrifice were burnt, while a pan was placed below to receive the ashes. The brazen laver was a circular vessel, formed of the polished brass which served for looking-glasses. (Exod. xxxviii. 8.) It stood between the altar and tabernacle, a little to the south, and was used by the priests to wash their hands before they officiated. The general pattern of it was probably followed in the much larger one made for the temple afterwards, and called the molten or brazen sea, which was made use of by the priests for washing their feet when they were to offer sacrifice or enter the temple.

"We may here observe, that, from the obligation of the priests to wash their feet before entering the tabernacle, and for other reasons, it has been inferred that they officiated with bare feet. It is also observed, that in the enumeration of the articles of the priestly dress, sandals are not mentioned, neither does Josephus, in his account, speak of them: we believe ourselves that the priests did officiate barefoot, knowing that it was a common mark of respect in the East to uncover the feet. The Orientals throw off their slippers on all those occasions when we should take off our hats; and not only is this form of showing respect exhibited in religious observances, but in the common intercourse of life. As to the Jews it is impossible to say, unless by inference, what they did in the tabernacle; but it seems fair to conclude that they did the same as afterwards in the temple; and that they there officiated barefoot we have the concurrent testimony of various writers."

On the north side of the holy place was a table of shittim or cedar wood, overlaid with gold, two cubits in length, one in breadth, and one and a half in height. It was edged with a bordering of gold, and had a golden crown in the middle: at each end six loaves were piled up, called the shew bread, to represent the twelve tribes. This bread could be eaten by none but the priests, and was changed on every sabbath day. Opposite this table, to the south, stood the golden candlestick, having seven branches besides the middle, equally distant, and each ornamented with six flowers in the form of lilies, with knobs to the same amount, resembling apples, and bowls like almond shells disposed alternately. Each branch had a golden lamp, which was regularly kindled at night, and extinguished in the morning. The altar of incense occupied the middle spot between the table and the candlestick. It was only two cubits high, and one in length, and one in breadth: over it was a crown of gold, and it was covered with the same precious metal. The incense presented each morning and evening here was of a particular composition; the officiating priest carrying a smoking censer full of fire, which he took from the altar of burnt offerings, and having placed it on this altar of incense, withdrew. Besides these there were several other brazen vessels, which need not be particularly enumerated.

The sanctum sanctorum, or most holy place, was highly distinguished for the ark, or mercy seat, which was a chest, made of shittim wood, and overlaid with pure gold, both within and without. In length it was two cubits and a half, a cubit and a half in breadth, and the same in height. The lid which covered it was entirely of pure gold. At the extremities were two cherubim, one at each end, composed of the same mass of pure gold with the lid itself. These were represented stretching their wings, and covering the mercy-seat on high, with their faces looking towards each other. Between the cherubim "the Lord was said to dwell, for there was vouchsafed the visible manifestation of the Deity, commonly known by the name of Schechinah. It is a popular opinion that this Schechinah was a mere miraculous light, but one resting on no warrant either of Scripture or Rabbinic tradition. By Schechinah the rabbies certainly meant a person, and the comparison of Levit. xvi. 2, 'I will appear in the cloud upon the mercy-seat,' with the vision (Zech. iii. 1) which Zachariah saw of the high priest serving before the angel of the Lord, and of both with the similar appearances so frequently recorded in the law and the prophets, leads to the conclusion that the high priest also beheld the Lord revealed in human form."

As to the contents of the ark, it has generally been supposed to have been appropriated to the law, or tables of the convenant, and St. Paul seems to imply it contained also the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded. (Heb. ix. 4.) Some, however, have interpreted the expression to signify near, not in, or within the ark. It has been said, that it is most probable, since Moses only mentions the volume of the law, that, in the times of Moses and of Solomon this only was deposited in the ark, but that Aaron's rod and the golden pot of manna were afterwards introduced. But in support of the interpretation of the Apostolic phraseology, as indicating only their being placed near the ark, it has been stated—1. That the same word Mitzad is used where it is said that the Philistines sent back the ark with an offering of jewels of gold, put in a coffer by the side of it, where it is certain the word must be understood of the outside, not of the inside; 2. The ark was not large enough to hold the volume of the whole law of Moses, with the other things placed in it; 3. The design of laying up the original volume of the law in the temple was, that it might be reserved as the authentic copy by which all others were to be corrected, and consequently it must be so placed that access might be had to it on all occasions requiring it, which could not have been done, if it had been put within the ark, and shut up there by the cover of the mercy-seat over it, which was not to be removed; 4. When Hilkiah, the high priest, in the time of Joshua, found the copy of the law in the temple, nothing is said of the ark, nor is it there mentioned as taken from thence, but as found elsewhere in the temple.

Speaking of the tabernacle in general, Calmet observes, "This tent was, as it were, the dwelling of the God of Israel, who was considered as residing in the midst of the camp. Round about it were encamped the tribes, Judah, Zebulun, and Issachar to the east; Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manasseh to the west; Dan, Asher, and Naphtali to the north; Reuben, Simeon, and Gad to the south. The tribe of Levi being entirely employed in sacred service, were placed all around the tabernacle; Moses and Aaron were to the east; the family of Gershon, west; that of Merari, north; and that of Kohath, south."

The cherubim are often mentioned in Scripture, and innumerable disputes have arisen respecting them among the learned, who have accommodated the derivation of the word Cherub (as of many others) to the particular rendering which they wished to assign to it. By some it has been traced to רְבִי רְבִיא, as a child; by others to רִכְבָּה, abundance of knowledge; or lastly, to רִבַּת, to grow strong. The Jewish Rabbies for the most part adopted the first notion, and described the cherubim as winged boys, in which conception they have been followed by modern painters and sculptors, from Raphael and Michael Angelo down to the veriest dauber and chipper who has been employed for a village altar-piece or tomb-stone. From Holy Writ we learn that cherubim were employed as the sentinels of Paradise when Adam was expelled from it. Moses was instructed to place cherubim on the Ark of the Covenant. They were to cover the mercy-seat, looking towards one another, with their wings extended on both sides. (Exod. xxv. 19.) Hence, as the Schechinah was wont to rest upon the mercy-seat, God is described by the Psalmists as dwelling between the cherubim (lxxxii. 2); and in more than one instance the sacred historian represents the Almighty as communing with his people from the same spot. (Exod. xxv. 22; Numb. vii. 80.) It must be owned that this description is not very particular, nor is it sufficient to enable us positively to decide upon the forms represented. The account of the cherubim with which Solomon adorned his Temple (1 Kings vi. 23), is not more precise, so that it is no wonder that the cherubim of Ezekiel (i. 2; x. 14) differ widely from this first notion. They are composed of the face of a man, the wings of an eagle, the mane of a lion, and the feet of an ox. Such is the form in which Grotius, Bochart, and Spencer, are inclined to invest the cherubim; and hence some of the commentators strenuously contend for the last of the three derivations, which implies strength, sc. of an ox. Josephus contents himself with saying that the cherubim were creatures whose exact figure was unknown to mankind; and here the question might safely be allowed to rest; nevertheless, much crude speculation has been hazarded on a subject into which Holy Writ, by its silence, appears scarcely to invite research, and from the investigation of which no profitable knowledge can ever result. Spencer has treated the subject with his customary learning, and little can be added to the matter which the reader will find in his third book de legibus Hebræorum. diss. 5; but other writers have indulged in the most wild and mystical reveries, and have fancifully traced the deepest mysteries of religion in the emblematical images of the mercy-seat. In closing these brief remarks on the form of the cherubim, we may state that whatever might have been their exact form and figure, which is rendered doubtful by the different statements of the historical and prophetic writers already quoted, they seem to have been emblematical of angels. The ark being a representation of the throne of God, the cherubim attended, like courtiers, on their sovereign's person. Their faces being opposite each other was illustrative of the general idea conveyed in Scripture of the celestial service, in which the blessed respond to each other in perpetual strains of melody and praise. Their outstretched wings evidently indicate the promptitude and activity of their movements as ministering spirits; and their eyes, fixed upon the ark, point out the reverential eagerness with which it is characteristic of them to investigate the mysteries of redemption. Maimonides ingeniously remarks, that God commanded Moses to make two cherubim, for the purpose of inculcating into the minds of men, the doctrine of the existence of the angels: "If there had been," says he, "but one cherub placed upon the ark, the Israelites would have been tempted to conceive a great error: for they might have supposed that this was the image of God, who was to be worshipped under this particular form. They might also have imagined that there only existed one angel. But the command for the formation of two cherubim, coupled with the declaration 'The Lord our God is one Lord,' put the matter beyond all question. It proves there are angels, but only one God; and precludes the belief of their being Gods, since there is but one God who created the cherubim." Saurin has a beautiful passage with reference to the angels prying into the mysteries of our religion, and in allusion to this disposal of them on the ark, which we feel strongly tempted to introduce. "The cherubim had their eyes fixed upon the ark, which shows the admiration and reverence of the angels for those mysteries typified by the ark. St. Peter alludes to this circumstance when he says, in the first chapter of his first epistle, which things the angels desire to look into. This suggests a fine idea of the Christian religion. The angels are exalted to the summit of blessedness and glory, beholding God face to face, and thus draw light and truth from their fountain. They behold his magnificence in the glory that beams on their eyes. They see his goodness in the blessings with which he loads them. They witness his justice in the punishment he inflicts upon the rebel angels. But in the midst of these attractions, in the midst of all this felicity and glory, the angels desire to witness the mysteries of our religion. They find that God is even greater on earth in those astonishing exploits which he performed for our salvation, than amidst the celestial pomp that encircles him."

THE LOCUST.

Although Palestine and the surrounding countries swarm with a great variety of insects, yet a very few species are mentioned in the Scriptures by name, and these only because they furnished the writers with fit symbols from their well-known habits.

Naturalists describe 400 species of beetles, not one of which is alluded to in the Bible, probably because they were the Egyptian sacred scarab, and also for the reason that they were omitted from the list of edible insects in the Law.

The Talmud says there are 800 varieties of locusts, only four of which are named in the Law, as fit for food. Upwards of 40 species have been recently described as frequenting Palestine, all of which are supplied with strong cutting-teeth, and have a voracious appetite, and all are, with one exception, vegetable feeders. The excepted species feeds on insects.

There are three families of locusts that are permitted as food, the types of which are the cricket, the grasshopper, and the migratory locust. The most common and destructive in the Holy Land are of this migratory character, of which there are a number of varieties, differing from each other in some particulars, such as more or less brilliant colors, which are of every hue, white, yellow, scarlet, crimson, blue, and green, and in the intervals of their visitations. The prevailing tint of the early comers is yellow.

The Hebrews had good reason for closely observing their habits, from the terrible results of their visits, and were acquainted with the singular changes they pass through in developing from the egg to the mature locust. The body of the locust increases in size, but never changes its appearance, as the caterpillar does. The three stages, are the larva, pupa, and the complete insect. They have no dormant or chrysalis state. They are voracious in every condition, from the time they first appear as little maggots and just able to creep, to the last, when they fly and are armed like mailed war-horses, as said in Jeremiah li. 14., where he refers to the teeth on the large legs of the full-grown locust, and probably, also, to the spines under its neck and abdomen.

The young locusts all jump in the same direction, seeking for food, and after feeding a few days, a period of rest ensues, when they lie still and fast. Four times they march and eat and fast, before the wings are developed. After the second time, the wings are seen growing in the shape of four buttons on the shoulders.

The eggs are deposited in the sand or dry earth, in April and May, and hatched in six to eight weeks, and in another month the wings appear and the locust is matured.

There are many Hebrew names for the locust in the Scriptures, but translators and commentators have been unable to agree on their precise meaning separately, although there is no doubt as to the general reference to the insect, and to the true locust, as appears in the character given to it in the allusions in the text.

The Hebrew word arbeh, meaning multitude, is used in describing the locusts in the plagues of Egypt. The word chargol, is translated beetle in Leviticus (xi. 22,) where it is the locust and not the beetle that is intended, for beetles are not eaten, and never were by any eastern people. The other Hebrew names for the locust are chagab (grasshopper,) gazam (palmer-worm,) saleam or sallom (bald-locust,) chasil (caterpillar,) yalak (canker-worm,) gob (green-worms,) tzelatzal (which may refer to the tsetse fly of Africa, a terrible pest, or to the cicada, a species of locust famous for its loud piercing note, which may be likened to that of the cymbal.) There is one other word, chanamel in Ps. lxxviii. 47, which has been supposed to mean the same species of insect, but the improved translation (Conant's) makes it to mean hail.

The locust is alluded to so many times, with such terse and graphic descriptions of its character and habits, that we know the Hebrews must have been very familiar with its ravages, and have had a lively sense of its dreadful power in destroying their fields and orchards.

The locust is said to be migratory, from its habit of gathering in vast numbers and flying from one section of the country to another. They come with the wind and return with it, as related in the account of the plagues of Egypt. They sometimes fly in such vast clouds as to darken the sun like a dense rain-cloud for hours at a time. When they alight on a field or orchard, every green thing vanishes: grass, leaves, twigs, flowers, even the bark of small branches, cut as clean as if nipped with the keen frost of winter, or a fire. The noise of their jaws can be heard at some distance, and when in the midst of fields covered with locusts feeding on grass or growing grain, the effect on the ear is like that of a heavy shower of rain on trees.

I have seen orchards and vineyards stripped of leaves, fruit, and the very stems peeled and made white, as described by the prophet Joel. Such an event, coming in a day, without warning, is a sudden and terrible calamity where it falls on a poor people whose main dependence is on their figs, vines, and olive orchards.

The references to these insects in the Old Testament are many and very fit in most cases, but in one instance there is an error, where the original meaning of locusts is rendered grasshoppers, which casts an unmerited reproach on the comparatively harmless insect. Grasshoppers live from year to year in the same places without doing serious damage to the grass or fruit, and the locusts are a much more apt symbol of the Bedawins, who come suddenly into a district, eat up, destroy or carry away every available thing, devastating the country like their namesakes, the locusts. Some of the Bedawins have earned in our day a reputation similar to that given them in the time when the spies reported that there were giants in Palestine, meaning not giants in stature, but colossal ruffians, like the notorious Abu Gosh, who was a terror to all travellers between Joppa and Jerusalem, in spite of the Turkish soldiers, and the present Sheikh, Goblan, the Leopard of the Belka, who enforces a tribute from every one who passes the Jordan into his dominions, not even excepting the Turkish Government.

The prophet Joel must have studied the habits of the locust, for he uses them fitly as a symbol of the most dreaded judgments for evil-doing. When in their midst at noon, and they are jumping, all in the same general direction, as it is their habit to do, the noise made by them is like that of a prairie fire. It is a rushing, roaring, clicking sound, multiplied myriads of times, filling the ears with its multitude as their numbers do the eyes—for the swarms are sometimes so vast that the eye cannot determine their limits.

They cannot fly in the cool of the evening, nor against or even with a cold wind. The hot sun is necessary to warm them to action in flight. In the evening at sunset they alight and begin to feed. The young locusts —called canker-worms in Joel and Nahum—march before their wings are matured, and climb walls, enter houses by doors and windows like thieves, as they did in the plagues of Egypt, and they even gnaw the wood-work of the rooms.

They cannot fly against a wind, and only come into Palestine with the east or south-east wind, which brings them from the desert, their native place. As they come with the wind, they go away with it. A circular eddy or column of wind always forms in the Jordan valley during the heat of the day, when the down or south current of air meets the up or north current, and these eddies whirl the locusts about in a helpless condition, forming vast heaps; and when the disabled insects are dropped by the failing breeze into the Jordan, the rush and strife of the fish for them is exciting. When an army of locusts is on the march and meets the Jordan, the locusts jump along into the water without the least hesitation, until the fish become gorged with the abundance of the supply, and great numbers of the insects float down stream towards the Dead Sea.

LOCUST.

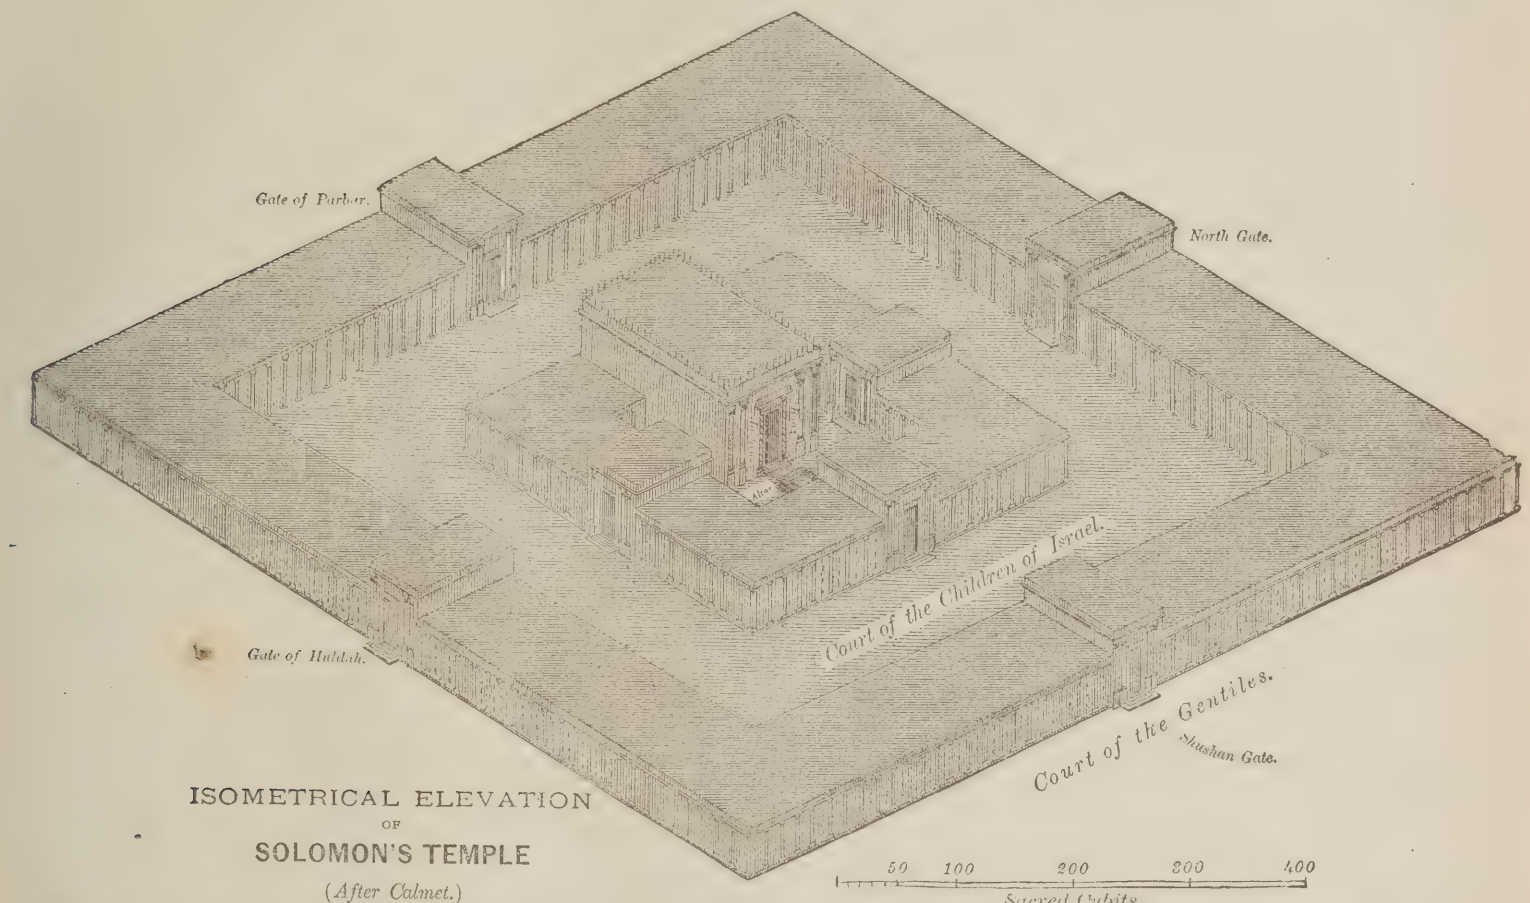
When on a march, if a locust is injured so it cannot jump, the others quietly eat him. They follow each other, jumping, not walking, keeping in rows or bands where the ground permits, or scattered evenly over the whole surface if in a smooth field. They will turn out for a man on either side, closing again after passing him, but will climb up trees, and after stripping them, drop off the ends of the twigs and go on with the stream. It is difficult to catch them when the sun is hot, but in the cool of the evening or morning they are sluggish from cold, and may be gathered in heaps.

A severe storm of wind drives them into heaps or windrows, like raked hay, and they have been seen in the Hauran after a cold west wind-storm heaped in a row five feet high and several miles in length. If the wind blows for a day or more, preventing their flight, the locusts die and the odor from their decaying bodies infects the air for many days.

Those who have read from time to time of the fearful ravages of locusts in our western states, especially in Kansas and Missouri, have had illustrations of many of the texts of Scripture nearer home than Palestine. How terrible their devastation is we have learned from the published accounts, and from the lips of some of our friends who have been driven from their homes. The loss and suffering in this section was so great that the U. S. Government and citizens in the eastern part of the country contributed largely to the aid of the people in these States during the spring of 1874–5.

They speak of them in the same terms as are used by the people in Palestine, and admit their utter inability to contend with them, turn them aside or make any impression on their numbers. Only one difference is noticeable in their accounts, no one in the west has the habit of eating the locusts, while they are a welcome delicacy everywhere in the east.

They are dried in the sun, or over a fire in a pan, and eaten with honey or butter and honey. Sugar is used also with butter to season them. The first time I tasted fried locust I thought it was crisp dough or meal, flavored with fish. They are as palatable as shrimps,



Large numbers are gathered, dried, their heads and wings picked off, and their bodies powdered and put up in bags or earthen jars. Men, birds, animals of all kinds, except camels, perhaps, fish and insects eat them. Camels will eat them if mixed with other food.

There is no reason why the story of John the Baptist eating locusts and honey should not be understood simply as it is written. Any traveller who spends a few days among the Bedawins will be prepared to accept the whole story,—locusts, honey and the camel's hair cloak. (*By A. L. Rawson. THE TEMPLE OF SOLOMON

AND

HISTORY OF THE JEWISH WORSHIP.

ISOMETRICAL ELEVATION
OF SOLOMON'S TEMPLE
(After Calmet.)

THE Temple of King Solomon was built upon a ground-plot of six hundred cubits square. It was enclosed within a wall of six cubits in height, and six in breadth, and contained several distinct buildings, surrounded with cloisters, and supported by pillars of marble. Here was the court of the Gentiles, of the width of fifty cubits, adorned in a similar manner, which was separated from the court of the Israelites by a wall of five hundred cubits square. The court was a hundred cubits, paved with variously-colored marble. It had four gates, one at each quarter, to each of which was an ascent of seven steps. The separation of this court from the court of the priests was accomplished by a wall of two hundred cubits square, the court of the priests being a hundred cubits, surrounded with cloisters, and apartments where they lived. This court had only three gates, each with eight steps: there was no gate to the west. All these courts were unenclosed at the top, but the cloisters afforded a sufficient shelter.

Opposite to the gate of the priests' court, in the court of the Israelites, was placed a throne for the king, to furnish him with accommodation whenever he came to the temple. The court of the priests contained the altar of burnt-offerings, with ten brazen lavers and a sea of brass, supported by twelve oxen. On the west side of the altar of burnt-offerings was an ascent of twelve steps to the temple, properly so called, which was formed of the porch, the sanctuary, and the holy of holies. The porch was twelve cubits in length, and twenty in breadth, having at the entrance the two celebrated pillars, Jachin and Boaz. The width of the gate was fourteen feet.

The sanctuary, or nave, was forty cubits in length, and twenty in breadth. In this part stood the altar of incense, and here was the table of shew bread. It had ten golden candlesticks. The holy of holies was a square of twenty cubits, having the ark of the covenant, in which were deposited the two tables of stone, graven with the ten commandments and with four cherubim.

Josephus states, that about the temple and against the walls, thirty small houses or cells were constructed, which served the purpose of so many buttresses, as well as ornaments; for there were three stories of these cells, one above another, the second being narrower than the first, and the third than the second, so that their roofs and balustrades, being within each other, made three different terraces, on which a person might walk round the temple. These little houses were ceiled, and their walls wainscoted with cedar, and embellished with carving and fret-work overlaid with gold. Laury observes, that the temple itself, strictly so called, had two stories, of which the upper was raised quite above these little houses and their roofs, for their roofs reached no higher than the top of the first story. The second story, which had no building adjoining to its side, made a large room over the sanctuary and the holy of holies, of equal dimensions with them; and it is no improbable opinion, that this was the upper chamber in which the Holy Ghost was pleased to descend upon the apostles in a visible manner. This upper room was appropriated to the pious laity, as a place for them to come and pay their devotions; and therefore it seems very likely that the apostles were here, with other devout persons, while the temple was full of Jews of all nations, who were come to celebrate the feast of the Pentecost, and that the persons below, hearing the noise which was occasioned by the shaking of the place, ran up to see the cause of it, and, to their great surprise, found the apostles distinguished from the other Jews about them, both by "the cloven tongues which sat upon each of them," and by the several different languages which they spake.

The foundation of the temple was begun at the bottom of the mount, to render it more secure; so that the sides were three hundred and thirty-three cubits, or six hundred and eight feet, in height, before they were raised to the level of the temple; and this afforded a most magnificent prospect to the city. The stones of this foundation, says Josephus, were not only of the largest size, but hard and firm enough to endure all weathers, and be proof against the worm. Besides this, they were so mortised into one another, and so wedged into the rock, that the strength and curiosity of the basis was not less admirable than the intended superstructure, and the one was every way answerable to the other.

The sacred vessels of gold and silver were so numerous, that they brought back five thousand four hundred, even at their return from the captivity, which were deposited in treasuries. There were also "holy chambers" (Ezek. xliv. 19) for the sacerdotal habits, and store-houses, in which the offerings for the support of the priests and Levites, widows and orphans, were preserved. Other places were appropriated to wine and oil for the libations, salt for the sacrifices, and materials for the shew bread. There were, besides, eating-rooms for the priests and guards of the Levites, lodgings for the musicians, and other rooms for different purposes, especially a hall for the council of seventy elders.

Sacrifices were enjoined upon every solemn festival, of which some accounts have been given in previous chapters, but to the principal of which it may be proper in this place to make a brief and connected reference.

On the first day or the great festival of Passover, was to be offered a burnt sacrifice of two young bullocks, one ram, and seven lambs of the first year, with some other offerings of an inferior description: on the second day, besides the usual sacrifices, a sheaf of the first fruit of that year's harvest; and previous to the offering of the first sheaf, no corn was to be eaten. The first and last days were observed as sabbaths, with the sole exception that victuals might be dressed on the first day. The sacrifices appointed at the opening of the feast of Pentecost were, two loaves of the first ripe wheat, seven lambs of the first year, one young bullock, two rams for a burnt-offering, and the usual meat and drink-offerings; a kid for a sin-offering, and two lambs for a peace-offering. The sacrifices peculiar to the feast of Tabernacles were, on the first day, thirteen bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of a year old, all without blemish, and offered in a burnt-offering, with the customary meat and drink-offerings, formed of a certain quantity of flour mingled with oil and wine: a kid for a sin-offering, in the name of all Israel; and the usual morning and evening sacrifices. On the second day they offered twelve bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs, with flour and wine, and a kid as before. The same offerings were continued on the five succeeding days, excepting that the number diminished by one bullock every day. On the last day, which was the most solemn, they only presented one bullock, one ram, and seven lambs, besides a goat for a sin-offering, and the usual and voluntary sacrifices. The first fruits of things of later growth were now brought, which were occasionally so plentiful, that it became necessary to extend the period of observing the feast to one more day. Particular sacrifices were also prescribed for other festivals, as the feast of the Trumpets and the New Moon. Besides the presentations just mentioned, were some others, as the daily sacrifices, when four lambs were offered, two in the morning, and two in the evening: all of the first year and without blemish. Wine and flour mixed with oil, were also presented for a meat and a drink offering. This was termed a continual sacrifice, as nothing was allowed to interrupt its regularity.

The peace-offerings were to be voluntary, there being no obligation but of a general nature. The victim was to be brought to the door of the tabernacle, when the votary laid his hands upon it, and killed it: the priest immediately taking some of the blood, and sprinkling it upon the altar and round about, poured the remainder upon the ground. The fat, the kidneys, and the rump, if a sheep or lamb, were then burnt upon the altar; the breast and shoulders belonged to the priest, and the rest to the owner, who was allowed to dress and eat it. These offerings were either votal, supplicatory, or eucharistical. The meat and drink-offerings accompanied the burnt-offerings of every festival, the daily and all sacrifices made with fire, and consisted of a certain portion of wine, oil, and fine flour, to every beast that was sacrificed.

The offerings for cleansing were on various accounts. The person who committed a trespass knowingly or ignorantly, was to bring his offering to the door of the tabernacle. It was to be a bullock, or goat, for a priest; a goat, sheep, kid, or lamb, for a layman. Should it happen that the individual was too poor to afford either, he was permitted to bring a couple of pigeons, or turtle-doves, or a small quantity of flour. The person having then laid his hands upon this victim's head, confessing the sin, offered it up, and the priest taking up some of the blood with his fingers, and applying it to the horns of the altar of burnt-offerings, poured forth the remainder at the foot. Then he took the fat of the caul, kidneys, and rump, and burnt it upon the altar, praying for the offerer, and pronouncing his forgiveness. The flesh of this victim belonged wholly to the priest. Another ceremony was added for legal impurities, such as touching anything unclean, &c., namely, the ashes of the red heifer, reserved for the purpose. The high priest was to be careful that it was without spot or blemish, and had never been yoked. It was carried out of the camp, and there killed, when he made a seven-fold aspersion of the blood with his fingers towards the sanctuary; it was then thrown into a large fire with its skin, entrails, and a bundle of cedar wood, hyssop, and scarlet, and burnt to ashes; which ashes being laid up for use, all the persons who assisted in the service were unclean until the evening. A person who contracted such pollution as to make him unclean seven days, was to be sprinkled with water, into which some of these ashes had been thrown, on the third and seventh day. If not sprinkled on the third day, he was not considered clean till the tenth. Besides these, were some other offerings for cleansing in particular cases,—such as two pigeons to be presented by a woman after child-birth, or of flour and oil, if unable to bring a lamb: and two sparrows by the leper after his cure. In these cases, one of the birds was a substitute for a lamb, for a burnt-offering, and the other for a sin-offering: wherein the priest sprinkled the blood upon the person or house seven times.

The offerings of the first fruits were required not only of the nation at large, on the great festivals before mentioned, but of every individual who had fields, orchards, and vineyards. The time and quantity are not precisely stated. When the person coming to offer arrived at the court of the priests, the Levites sang the thirtieth psalm, when the votary confessed in these words: "I do this day make a public acknowledgment before the Lord your God, that I am entered into the good land, which he sware unto our fathers that he would give us." At the time the priest assisted him to take the basket from his shoulders, and he closed his confession, while it was yet suspended, in the words prescribed by Moses, "A Syrian ready to perish was my father, and he went down to Egypt, and sojourned there with a few," &c. The basket was then placed by the side of the altar, and he offered the burnt-offering and peace-offering; then proceeded to feast with his acquaintances on his share of the peace and meat-offerings. The offerings of the first-born, related to the first-born of men, of cattle, and of the fruits of the earth. Of the former, they were redeemed at the age of thirty, for five shekels, when they were presented to the priest, and the mother offered the sacrifice of her purification. The first-born of clean animals could not be redeemed, but were brought to the tabernacle, or temple, and killed, the blood being poured forth at the foot of the altar, the fat burnt on it, and the flesh given to the priest. If it had any natural defect, it could not be sacrificed. If it were an unclean beast, it might be redeemed, or with five shekels, or its neck might be broken by the owner. With regard to vegetable products, the fruit of the new planted tree was not to be gathered during the first three years: on the fourth its productions were the Lord's, and they belonged to the priest, from whom, however, the owner might redeem it at a proper price. Afterwards, it was wholly for his own use. There were four species of tythes;—those belonging to the tribe of Levi, which all attached to that tribe might eat, men and women, clean and unclean; the tenths of these tythes, assigned to the priests;—a second tenth, which a layman was required to appropriate, or exchange it for an equivalent in money, with an addition of a fifth part above the value, which was to be brought to Jerusalem to make a feast with for his friends, and the priests, and Levites; and a tythe to be reserved every year, and consumed in feasts at home, to which the Levites, the poor, the fatherless, the widows, and the strangers were to be expressly invited.

There is one solemnity which has already been introduced to notice, but the mention of which we cannot with propriety omit in this place—it is the day of atonement or expiation. It was a day of fasting, humiliation, and confession, and was instituted principally to expiate the sins of the nation for the preceding year. This solemnity commenced on the evening of the ninth day of the seventh month, and continued till the ensuing evening; an interval wherein the people of Israel scrupulously, and under pain of excommunication, abstained from every description both of labor and of pleasure, and held a solemn convocation to offer a peculiar sacrifice by fire for their transgressions. On this day only throughout the year, the high priest entered into the holy of holies; for which service he prepared himself by various previous abstinences, and wore a particular kind of dress. As soon as he entered, it was his business to present a young bullock for a sin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering, on his own account and for his whole family, confessing their and his own sins. He then received from the heads of the assembly two kids for a sin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering, for the whole congregation. Two goats being placed before the tabernacle, the high priest cast lots to determine which should be sacrificed and which dismissed, and to the latter the term of scape-goat was applied. Taking his censer in one hand, and a quantity of fine incense in the other, to fill the place with the smoke so as to conceal the mercy-seat, he proceeded into the holy of holies; and having placed the censer on the altar, he withdrew and dipped his finger in the blood of the bullock which had been offered, and sprinkled it towards the mercy-seat seven times eastward. He then killed the goat for a sin-offering on account of the people, and sprinkled the mercy-seat with its blood; by which aspersions the tabernacle was purified from all the stain incurred by standing amongst a guilty people.

The goat which had escaped was now brought to the high priest, when, laying his hands upon its head, he confessed both his own sins and those of the people, and immediately afterwards delivered up the scape-goat to a person appointed to take it and set it adrift in a desert place. These ceremonies being completed, the high priest thoroughly washed himself, and having put on the ephod, mitre, breast-plate, and the other priestly garments, offered a burnt-offering of a ram for himself, and another for the people. The assistants, together with the man who had carried away the scape-goat, were deemed unclean till they had bathed and washed themselves. On this same day, the high priest gave the solemn blessing prescribed by Moses, and pronounced the mysterious name of Jehovah. When he withdrew from the most holy place, he walked backwards, keeping his face towards the mercy-seat, and bending towards the earth. All the rest of the day was occupied in prayers and self-denying services.

On the return of the Jews from their captivity, the foundation of a second temple was laid, under the direction of Zerubbabel. The work, however, was suspended for fifteen years soon after its commencement; for which delay God reproved the people by the prophets Haggai and Zechariah. It was then renewed and finished, B. C. 515. When the foundations were laid, the old men who had seen the temple of Solomon are said to have wept profusely at seeing the inferior glory of this edifice; for there was no cloud of glory, no fire from heaven to kindle the sacrifice upon the altar, no Schechinah to blaze forth in the most holy place between the cherubim. The Jews say there was the absence of five important things—the Ark, the Urim and Thummim, the fire from heaven, the Schechinah, and the spirit of prophecy. There was, however, an inward glory, that far surpassed the outward; the presence of him who was "God manifest in the flesh," and who, instead of costly magnificence, bestowed spiritual blessings.

The second temple was rebuilt by Herod, called the Great, who, to pacify a nation disgusted with his cruelties, demolished the building of Zerubbabel in order to erect a more splendid structure. They were reluctant at this avowed intention from feelings of suspicion, but the costly preparations for the edifice removed their scruples; and it was begun seventeen years before the coming of Christ, but not completed till long afterwards.

PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION OF THE COUNTRY,—MOUNTAINS, WILDERNESS, DESERT, PLAINS, RIVERS, LAKES, WADYS, THE DEAD SEA, AND THE RIVER JORDAN, CLIMATE, &c.

BY REV. DR. COX.

CANAAN.

OUR object is to compare the Land and the Book and by an examination of the topography of Palestine to illustrate the histories of Scripture. Should any doubt exist in the mind as to the sacred histories, it must be dispelled by the minute agreement traced between the Holy Writ and the Physical Geography; "no fable however devised," no myth or legend of a later age could have adapted itself so precisely to the topographical details of the country. The scenes here described are from actual observations by the most recent scientific explorers of various nations within the present century and from the most authentic works on record.

> "Those holy fields,
> Over whose acres walked those blessed feet
> Which fourteen hundred years ago were nailed,
> For our advantage, on the bitter cross."

Circumstances have contributed to affix a great variety of names to the country in which the Israelites settled. Its most ancient, and, perhaps, even still, its most frequent appellation, is that of Canaan, derived from the grandson of Noah, of that name, whose posterity were its inhabitants. Palestine is another title derived from the Philistines, whom the Greeks and the Romans called Palestines, who occupied that part of the land which bordered on the sea-coasts, and were long the scourge of their Hebrew neighbours. After Canaan had been conquered by the Jews under Joshua, it was portioned out in twelve parts among eleven of the tribes descended from Jacob. From the tribe of Judah, the most important of the twelve, which continued after the dispersion and dwelt in the richest quarter, it obtained the epithet Judæa, after the period of the return from the Babylonish captivity. It has also been termed the Land of Israel, obviously from that people having subdued it, and the Land of promise, with reference to the remarkable promise of God to Abraham, which assigned this territory as in fee-simple to the descendants of that illustrious patriarch. It has derived the most honourable appellation of the Holy land, or the "cradle of the human race," from its having become, by the instituted worship of God, his peculiar dwelling; and from its having been subsequently distinguished by the residence, actions, miracles, sufferings, and personal triumphs of the "holy child Jesus." The mighty scenes which have been transacted within the limits of the Holy Land country, are such as could derive no additional glory from any circumstance of an exterior nature, and would render even a barren wilderness, or a solitary rock, of more real consideration than the most extensive region upon the page of history.

The northern boundary of this celebrated country was formed by the mountains of Antilibanus, or the province of Phœnicia; on the south was Idumæa, having on the line of separation also a ridge of mountains; on the east, the lake Asphaltites, the river Jordan, the sea of Tiberias, and the Samochonite lake; on the west, the Mediterranean sea. The extent has been variously computed, and if we reckon the utmost, it must appear comparatively small, when we recollect the descriptions we have of its population and natural opulence. These, however, are partly attributable to the care with which it was cultivated, and partly to the extraordinary blessing of Heaven upon the soil; for the general aspect of the country presents only barren hills with small intervening valleys. Palæstina, or Syria Palæstina, was sometimes considered by the ancients as a part of Phœnice, which extended from Orthosias, near the mouth of the Eleutherus, in lat. 34° 42′ N. to Pelusium, or rather Gaza, lat. 31° 26′, N. excluding the desert between Syria and Egypt, and a distance of nearly 200 geographical miles, while Palestine Proper, which may be considered as reaching from Sidon, in lat. 33° 34′ N. to Gaza, is only 2° 8′, or 128 geographical miles in length, and not more than 105 geographical miles in its greatest breadth.

Profane writers corroborate the Mosaic account of its fertility. Hecatæus, an author of the time of Ptolemy I., mentions it as an excellent and fruitful province, well peopled. Pliny celebrates the course of the river Jordan, the palm trees, and other productions. Some ancient writers, however, as Strabo, for instance, and some modern travellers, have expressed an opposite opinion, and even poured contempt upon this land, as full of barren mountains and woods; but if this testimony may be considered as enhancing the almost miracle of its natural capacities to sustain a large population, it does not contradict the fact of its extraordinary fertility in particular places; and even some of the writers themselves, especially Jerome, while he descants upon its rocky character in general, and upon the frequency of the drought that prevails there, remarks also upon its productiveness. The Jewish legislator gives a detailed account of its fruits, and its oil, wine, and other produce; it is said to have exceeded all other countries. So rich was the soil, that it required no manure to force or to sustain its vigor. The corn was both excellent in quality, and abundant in quantity.

Under the Roman domination Palestine was subdivided into six parts, three on the Western and as many on the Eastern side of the Jordan; the former being Galilæa, Samaria, and Judæa; the latter Ituræa, Peræa, and Moabitis. To the South and East of these was Idumæa, a mountainous, and, for the most part, desert country, long hostile, and at last only imperfectly subdued by the Jewish kings. The Canaanites and their neighbours in Moab and Edom (Idumæa) were small, independent, pastoral communities, probably subject to a patriarchal monarchy. They seem to have successfully resisted the Israelites as long as they preserved that federal union by which they had previously maintained their independence; in some cases the Jews, in others the Canaanites, were driven into the mountains, while their adversaries occupied the valleys; but when the Jewish power was consolidated by the vigour and enterprise of David, the Philistines and other Canaanites to the West of the Jordan were on one hand humbled, if not reduced to a state of dependence, and the mountaineers to the East of that river, in Moab, Ammon, and Edom, were on the other hand, either completely subdued, or so far disabled as never afterwards to become formidable to the Jews.

I.—GALILEE.

Galilee, the northernmost of the subdivisions established under the Asamonean kings, and continued under the Romans, received its name probably from its being on the confines; Galíl signifying, according to Kimkhí, on Joshua, "a boundary." It extends from the southern border of Phœnice to the southern extremity of the Lake of Gennesareth, or Sea of Galilee. Accho, or Ptolemais, the 'Akkà of the Arabs, the Acri of the modern Italians, and the Acre of English writers, was so near the confines as to be sometimes assigned to the territory of Tyre, and sometimes to Galilee. It is a sea-port town, thirty miles below Tyre, and eight north of Mount Carmel. It was in the territory assigned to the tribe of Asher, the key of Syria, standing on an angular promontory jutting into the sea, and very strongly fortified. One of its northern districts was called Cabul (Kabúl) by Hiram, King of Tyre, to whom it was given by Solomon. (1 Kings ix. 13.) Cæsarea Philippi was in the northern part of Galilee, near Mount Hermon. Anciently it was called Paneas, from a grotto sacred to Pan; a name now preserved in the modern appellation Bâniâs. It is enbosomed among mountains, and it stands upon a platform, or terrace, a hundred feet above an extensive plain. The ancient city was surrounded by water, and defended on all sides by natural ravines, except on the east. At present the plain towards the north-west, west and south-west, is covered with columns, capitals, and foundations, bearing testimony to its ancient size and magnificence. Near this place, were the easternmost sources of the Jordan. This is, no doubt, the source visited by Burckhardt, and supposed by him to give rise to one of the tributaries of the Jordan. It is very near Bâniyâs (Paneas). But this was supposed by the ancients to be the issue of a subterranean outlet from a small lake called Phiăla, 120

stadia (15 miles) north-east of Paneas, afterwards called Cæsarea Philippi. Its most ancient name was Dan. (Gen. xiv. 14.) The river passing by it is at this day called Dan on the spot. Its position on the northern boundary of the Jewish territory is evident from the proverbial expression, "from Dan to Beersheba." The Jordan, at a small distance below Paneas, passes through a larger lake called Haúleh, the ancient Samachonitis and after running 120 stadia (15 miles) further, enters the Lake of Gennesareth (i. e. the Vale or Nazareth), otherwise called the Sea of Galilee, or Lake of Tiberias (now Tabariyeh), from a Roman town on its western side. After issuing from that lake, it flows nearly south, a very circuitous course, with a very rapid descent, till it enters the Lake Asphaltites, or Dead Sea, (Bahr Zoghar, or Lút.)

The principal tributaries to the Jordan come from the Eastern mountains, and are, 1. The Hieromax, a corruption of Yarmúk (the Hebrew name still preserved by the Arabs), which rises in Auranitis (Haúran) and flows into the Jordan, about four geographical miles from the southernmost point of the lake of Tiberias. 2. The Jabbok (Yabók, now Zerká), which separated the Amorites from the Gileadites. 3. Jazer, (Yá'-zer, Josh. xxi. 39), now Nahr Sír, probably from the Greek Jaser, i. e. Yasír, as pronounced in the middle ages. Into the Lake Asphaltites flowed, 4. the Arnon (Zerká Mo'în) a stream formed by a number of mountain torrents, whence the expression used in Scripture, "the stream of the brooks." It separated Moab from Edom. On the western side, the principal affluents of the Jordan are, 1. the river Sichem (Wádí-l-Mujeddeh), probably the brook Cherith. (1 Kings xvii. 15.) 2. A stream from Mount Ephraim (El Beïdán); and, 3. the river of Jericho (El Kalíl).

On the coast, Achzib (Akzíb, Josh. xix. 29), or Ecchippa, nine miles north of Accho (Judg. i. 38), though within the limits of the tribe of Asher, was still possessed by the Canaanites, as were most, if not all, the cities on the coast: the Israelites being a pastoral people, not disposed to venture on the sea, and withheld, as it appears, by Providence, from establishing themselves in places where they would have been drawn into a commerce with idolatrous and distant nations. Ptolemais, under the name of Acé, was made a Roman colony under the Emperor Claudius. Very near to it the river Belus (Rahmán or No'mán), which rises in Mount Carmel, enters the sea; the sand of that stream was considered as particularly useful in the manufacture of glass.

Lower Galilee, which lay between Mount Carmel and the Lake of Gennesareth, contained a small portion of the tribe of Naphtali, the whole of Zebulon, and the northern confines of Issachar. It was separated by the lake from Gadara and Gaulonitis (now Jaulán). The lake was anciently called the Sea of Chinnereth (Numb. xxxiv. 11), from a town of that name, probably the same as Gennesareth, of which remains can be traced near Meniyeh at the north-western extremity of the lake, or, if Jerome be right, the same as Tiberias. This place was called Gennēsar, and by the Greeks the country round it Gennesaritis. From Tiberias on its south-west side it was called the Sea of Tiberias; and the Sea of Galilee is another name by which it is frequently mentioned in the New Testament. "Its width," says Josephus (iii. 35), "is 40 stadia, (five miles,) and its length 140 (17½ miles)." Pliny makes it one mile broader and a mile and a half shorter. In shape it is nearly oval. Its water, which is fresh and drinkable, abounds with fish. The aromatic reed and rush, and the balsam of Judæa, mentioned by Strabo as the produce of its fertile shores, have not been found there in modern times, unless the Calamus aromaticus here named be the well-known aquatic plant: the balsam was probably a species of amyris successfully cultivated, but not indigenous, in Judea. There were two cities bearing the name Bethsaida (house of hunting or fishing); one was a city near the desert of the same name in Galilee, on the western shore of the lake Gennesareth. It was the city in which Andrew and Peter followed their trade as fishermen. It was also the native place of Philip. Bethsaida frequently witnessed the miracles, and heard the preaching of our Saviour; and the stubborn unbelief of its inhabitants drew down from him a bitter denunciation of woe. (Matt. xi. 21.) The other town of the same name was on the east bank of Jordan, near which was the wilderness of Bethsaida. There were two Canas in Galilee, —one in the tribe of Asher, near Sidon; the other so remarkable as the place where our Saviour's first miracle was performed, near the northern extremity of the lake, a few miles west of Julias, (Betharamphtha, improved by Herod the Tetrarch, and named in honour of the wife of Tiberius,) close to the entrance of the Jordan, and about 17 or 18 miles north-east of Tiberias. According to Dr. Robinson, the place called Kep Kenna, six miles north-east of Nazareth, is not the spot where stood Cana of Galilee, as most travellers imagine, but that which is now called Kâna-el-Jelil, about seven miles north of Nazareth. Capernaum, (Kafa Nahúm,) on the borders of Zebulon and Naphtali, was probably near the present Tell Húm, on the edge of the lake, two or three miles west of the entrance of the Jordan. This city was about twenty miles north-east from Cana, where Christ often resided, and performed some of his most wonderful miracles. Its exact site, as we have intimated, is uncertain, though it was once the metropolis of Galilee. Dr. Wilson supposes it to have been at the head of the lake, about five miles west of the Jordan, where extensive ruins are found. Dr. Robinson considers it to have been on the spot now called Khan Minyeh, near the fountain called Ain-el-Tîn, north of Tiberias, and where, midway of the coast, the hills retire in a kind of arch, and form a small triangular plain, four miles in length, and two in breadth, and is the ancient land of Genesareth.

Near to Capernaum, and south of Mount Tabor, was the city of Nain, (Beauh), remarkable as the scene of one of our Saviour's most wonderful miracles. (Luke vii. 11–15.) It is now a Turkish village. About two miles from Capernaum, and near Cana, was Chorazin, (Matt. xi. 21,) the precise location of which is now unknown. The low-land alongside the lake from the entrance of the Jordan to Tiberias, about four miles long and two and a half broad, was called the Land of Gennesar, or Gennesareth, and celebrated for its fertility and the mildness of its climate. Not four miles to the south of Tiberias, on the shore of the lake, was Tarichææ, or Tarichæa, (El Meláhah,) from its salt fish, a well fortified and populous city, having upwards of 38,000 inhabitants when taken by Vespasian. Tiberias, (now Tabariyeh,) the last city on the western side of the lake, and in the most fertile part of its shore, was built by Herod the Tetrarch, and so named in honour of his patron the Emperor Tiberius. Jerome says that it was anciently called Chenereth; the Talmud calls it Rakkath. (Josh. xix. 35.)

Tiberias was once famed as a seat of Jewish learning. It is now the rendezvous of Jewish devotees, who flock thither (it being one of the four holy cities) in order to pass their days in praying for their own salvation, and that of their brethren, who remain in worldly pursuits. It has long been celebrated for its hot baths, one of which is too hot to bear the hand in it. The water issues from the ground, and the taste is exceedingly salt and bitter, and has a strong smell of sulphur. The city of Tiberias is nearly encircled with mountains, and is seated on the margin of the lake, which bears the same name. Herod Antipas, it is believed, erected the city on the site of an obscure town or village named Cinnereth, which formerly had given its name to the lake. (Joshua xix. 35.) The Talmud, however, states, as already mentioned, that the town of Rakkath originally occupied its site. "Neither of these identifications," says Dr. Kitto, "seems to us open to much objection, although there appears no means of deciding which of them is entitled to preference." The name of Tiberias is frequently found in history; "it was the scene of some of the most memorable events recorded by Josephus, and was, next to Sepphoris, the most considerable city of Galilee. It had a university, and, after the fall of Jerusalem, was the residence of Jewish patriarchs, rabbins, and learned men, till the fourth century; after which it gradually declined till it was taken by the Saracens under Omar, in the seventh century. But from its reputed sanctity, and the celebrity of its baths, it continued to flourish, and is mentioned in an itinerary of the eighth century, cited by Reland, as containing many churches and synagogues." The present town is called Tabariyeh or Tūbariyeh; it is walled, and of considerable magnitude, but overspread with ruins from the earthquake which, in 1837, destroyed so many of its inhabitants. Before the occurrence of that fearful calamity, the population was estimated at about 4000, but at present half that number is about the maximum. Tiberias is one of the four holy cities of the Talmud, the others being Safed, Hebron, and Jerusalem.

Nazareth, now known by the name of Nassarah, or Nasarah, is from 50 to 70 miles north of Jerusalem, six or seven west-north-west of Mount Tabor, fifteen from the sea of Tiberias, near the parallel of its southern extremity, and north of the plain of Esdraelon, at the head of a valley which runs up from it. On all sides it is surrounded by hills of considerable elevation, in the midst of which it lies embosomed. It was anciently distinguished for its extreme wickedness: but can never cease to be celebrated as a place which gave an appellation to the Saviour as "Jesus of Nazareth," and where he spent thirty years of his life.

We cannot forbear quoting the language of Dr. Robinson. "Seating myself in the shade of the Wely, I remained for some hours upon this spot, lost in the contemplation of the wide prospect, and of the events connected with the scenes around. In the village below, the Saviour of the world had passed his childhood; and although we have few particulars of his life during those early years, yet there are certain features of nature which meet our eyes now just as they once met his.

"He must often have visited the fountain near which we had pitched our tents; his feet must frequently have wandered over the adjacent hills; and his eyes doubtless have gazed upon the splendid prospect from this very spot. Here the Prince of Peace looked down upon the great plain, where the din of battles so oft had rolled, and the garments of the warrior had been dyed in blood; and he looked out, too, upon the sea over which the swift ships were to bear the tidings of his salvation to nations and to continents then unknown. How has the moral aspect of things been changed! Battles and bloodshed have indeed not ceased to desolate this unhappy country, and gross darkness now covers the people; but from this region a light went forth which has enlightened the world, and unveiled new climes; and now the rays of that light begin to be reflected back from distant isles and continents, to illuminate anew the darkened land where it first sprang up."

Five miles south-east of Sepphoris is Mount Tabor, (now Jebel Tur,) a lofty, pap-shaped, insulated mountain, 30 stadia (nearly four miles) in height, almost inaccessible on its north side, and having a level summit of 26 stadia (three miles,) anciently surrounded by a wall. It was, according to the Jews, 10 miles south-west of Capernaum. Near the base of this mountain, on its north-western side, are the sources of Kishon (Kaïsún, or Nahr-el-Mokatta',) and two miles southward, in the direction of Endor (Handúreh) was Na'ím (Naïn, Luke viii. 11.) Endor was in the tribe of Manasseh, four miles south of Tabor; and rather more than two miles west of Endor was Shunem (Sonna, or Sunem,) the site of which can still be traced. Shunem was a town in the tribe of Issachar, and seated on an eminence at the west end of Little Hermon, three miles north of Jezreel. It is associated with several important incidents of Jewish history. (1 Sam. xxviii. 4; 1 Kings i. 3; 2 Kings viii. 1–6.) It was the place where Elisha often tarried, and where he performed an extraordinary miracle. (2 Kings iv. 8–37.) It was also called Sulem, and was, according to Jerome, five miles south-west of Tabor, and four miles from Zain. A very strong city in this neighbourhood, named Jotapata, was entirely ruined by Vespasian. Japha, a very populous and powerful village, was very near it. Gabara and Gischala seem to have been near the southern borders of Galilee. Legio (now El Lejjún, Abú-Hedá) was near Aphek; Taanach (Jos. xvii. 11) north-west of Shúnem; Megiddo, near it and the river Kishon: and Gath Hepher (2 Kings xiv. 25) in Zabulon, called by the Greeks Diocæsarea, two miles from Sepphoris, was venerated on account of the sepulchre of the prophet Jonah. The stronghold called Zabulon, on the western borders, was not very far from Ptolemaïs, or Accho (now Acri.) Mount Carmel projects into the sea between Ace (Accho or Acri) and the tower of Strato (Turris Stratonis,) afterwards Cæsarea Palæstina, now Kaïsáriyeh; half way between which and Mount Carmel was Dora. The cape terminating Mount Carmel was 120 stadia (fifteen miles) south-west of Ptolemais (Accho,) and that chain of mountains was woody, and abounded in game. At Ecbatana, a town on its flank, Cambyses died, and thus literally fulfilled the oracle, which declared that he should die at a place so named. Mount Hermon (Ps. lxxxiv. 13) is perhaps Jebel Da'í, to the east of Endor, and south-east of Tabor; but this is not the lofty mountain mentioned by the Psalmist. The "Brook," or torrent, "Kishon," which flows into the sea near Hepher (Haïfá) and the Belus or Nu'mán, which discharges its waters near Accho, are the principal streams in Galilee mentioned by the ancients.

The Great Plain lay between Galilee and Samaria, and was therefore sometimes included in the one, and sometimes in the other. It follows the course of the Kishon (Nahr el Mokatta',) which rises in Mount Gilboa (Jilbó'), a continuation of Carmel, approaching the Jordan near Bethshan (Baisan, Scythopolis.) This plain is terminated westwards by the outskirts of Carmel, through which the river forces its way to the sea near Hepha (Haïfá.) That river was perhaps the common boundary of Galilee and Samaria. Asōchis, occasionally mentioned by Josephus, was in this part of Lower Galilee.

II.—SAMARIA.

Samaria extended from the village of Ginæa (Jenín) to the district of Acrobatene, and consisted, like the rest of Palestine, of mountains intersected by fertile valleys. Its capital, Samaria, the city from which this central province of the land of Canaan derived its name, was built on a hill situated about forty miles north from Jerusalem, and not far north-west from Nablouse (Shechem.) It was purchased from Shemer (whence its name,) named Shomerem after its possession, and fortified (1 Kings xvi. 24) by Omri king of Israel, B.C. 928. It withstood two sieges by Benhadad, king of Syria, and was utterly destroyed by Shalmanezer, king of Assyria, in the reign of Hoshea, after a siege of three years. (2 Kings xvii. 1–6.) This overthrow had been foretold by the prophet Micah (i. 6,) and took place 210 years after its foundation (B.C. 718.) The Cuthæan colonists, established there by the Assyrian kings, restored it so completely that it was a very strong city when taken and destroyed by John Hyrcanus (B.C. 131.) It was rebuilt by Gabinius, præfect of Syria (B.C. 58,) and much enlarged by Herod the Great, who called it Sebaste (Augusta,) in honour of Augustus (B.C. 24,) who had given him the city. He surrounded it with a wall 20 stadia (2½ miles) in circumference, and settled 1000 inhabitants in it. The ruins indicate its former magnificence, though now it is an insignificant village. The situation of Samaria is extremely fine, and strong by nature. It is on a hill, surrounded by a broad deep valley, which is encompassed by four other hills, cultivated in terraces to the top, and, like the valley, sown with grain, and planted with fig and olive trees. It exhibits the ruins of an ancient convent. Tirzah (1 Kings xvi. 23) was the capital before the time of Omri. Three or four miles south-east of Samaria was Sichem (Sicisma, Sychem, or Sychar, now Nábulus,) one of the oldest cities of Canaan. The name Sychar is Syriac, signifying drunkenness and falsehood, applied to it as a stigma by the Jews. It is known also by the name of Neapolis, but is now called Nablouse or Naplouse. It lies northerly from Jerusalem, at the distance of between 35 and 40 miles, between Mount Ebal on the north and Gerizim on the south. Shechem, or Sichem, which was placed on a gentle declivity, as its name implies, was destroyed by Abimelech (Judg. ix. 45,) rebuilt by Jeroboam (1 Kings xii. 25,) and restored by the Romans under the name of Neapolis, changed by the Arabs into Nábulus. It lies between two hills: Ebal one mile north-east, and Garizim (Jebel Hesan) one mile and a half south-west. On the latter stood the famous Temple intended to rival that at Jerusalem, built by Sanballat, in the time of Alexander (B.C. 331,) and destroyed by John Hyrcanus 200 years afterwards. Mamortha, or Morthia, was one of the names of Sichem. Here Jeroboam fixed his royal residence, when he drew away the Ten Tribes from Rehoboam, and set up the kingdom of Israel. (1 Kings xii. 25.) This city is associated with memorable events of the patriarchal ages. (Gen. xlix. 29–32: l. 13; Josh. xxiv. 1–32: Judg. ix. 46–49.) It belonged to the tribe of Ephraim. It is, moreōver, distinguished as the place of one of our Lord's most interesting discourses, the result of which was the conversion of several of the Samaritans. (John iv. 4–42.)

The modern town consists chiefly of two long streets parallel to the valley. The approach from the hills is extremely fine. It appears embosomed in the most beautiful bowers, half concealed by luxuriant gardens and stately groves of trees encircling the vale in which it stands. A mile from it, to the east, is the sepulchre of Joseph, in the parcel of ground given by Jacob to his son, and 300 paces south-east is Jacob's well, a perpendicular shaft, 75 feet in depth, and 9 in diameter, sunk in the solid rock, and still containing water. Its population is, according to Mr. Buckingham, about 10,000, who are chiefly Mohammedans. Dr. Clarke speaks of it as affording one of the finest views in the Holy Land. Another royal residence of Jeroboam's successors was Jezreel (near Maximianopolis, anciently Hadad Rimmon,) in the tribe of Manasseh, and on the borders of Issachar, in an extensive plain named from it. Bethshean (Judg. i. 27,) whence the tribe of Manasseh did not expel the Canaanites, afterwards Scythopolis, now Bísán or Baïsan, near a stream bearing its name, and flowing into the Jordan about two miles north-east of it, was the first city south of Galilee. It was the largest of the ten united under the name of Decapolis. El Baïsan or Beysan is a ruin exhibiting many traces of a high antiquity. The situation of this town was on the west of Jordan, 25 miles south of the sea of Tiberias. Anciently it seems to have belonged to the Philistines, who exposed the body of Saul on its walls after his defeat and death at the battle of Gilboa. (1 Sam. xxxi. 10.) On the Jordan, eight miles south of it, was Ænon, near Salim (Mezár,) where John baptized (Hieron. de loc. Ebraïc;) and half way between them, Succoth (Sûkkót.) Tappuah, or En Tappuah (the Spring of Tappuah,) on the confines of Manasseh, but belonging to Ephraim, was near this part of the Jordan. (Josh. xviii. 8.) Taanath Shiloh (Josh. xvi. 6,) in the tribe of Manasseh, was ten miles east of Sichem on the way down to that river (Jerome.)

On the coast, Dor (Josh. xvii. 11,) in the half tribe of Manasseh, was a few miles north of the mouth of the Cherseus, the boundary of Phœnice, according to Ptolemy, seven geographical miles south of the tower of Strato, which was an artificial harbour, adorned and named by Herod, Cæsarea, in honour of Augustus, now Kaïsáriyeh. It was constituted the first Flavian colony by Vespasian, and is said by Pliny and Ptolemy to be the northern boundary of Palestine, 189 miles from the confines of Arabia; but the sacred writers speak of Palestine as reaching to the borders of Tyre. After the destruction of Jerusalem, when Judea became a Roman province, this city became the capital of Palestine, as Antioch was head of Syria. Apollonia, probably a Macedonian settlement, now Arsuf, was near the mouth of a stream called El Hadr, rather more than 15 geographical miles south of Cæsarēa. It was one of the towns fortified by Gabinius. Joppa, (in Hebrew Yáphó, now Yáfá) was 17 geographical miles further south, near a bend in the line of coast. Though possessing merely an insecure roadstead, it was anciently, as now, the port of Jerusalem. According to the Greek mythologists, it was the royal abode of Cepheus before the Deluge; the rings on the neighbouring rock, moreover, and the bones of a sea-monster on the shore, were shown as monuments of the delivery of Andromeda by Perseus. It is doubtful whether it lay within the tribe of Dan, but it was probably on its northern border. (Josh. xix. 46.)

Joppa is situated between Cæsarea and Gaza. It stands on a rocky, oblong hill, the houses and streets rising one above another in tiers, 30 or 40 miles north-west of Jerusalem. To this place Jonah repaired in his vain attempt to escape the presence of the Lord. It was remarkable as the residence of Cornelius, the first Gentile convert to whom Peter was sent. In later times it became distinguished in the history of the crusaders, and most recently in the Egyptian expedition of Napoleon Bonaparte. Sharon (Sarōnas,) the plain between Cæsarea and Joppa, but nearer to the latter, is now called the Vale of Ramleh. At its south-eastern extremity was Lydda (Lúd in Hebrew, now Ludd, called by the Greeks Diospolis,) on the confines of Judea and Samaria. Ramathaïm Zophim (i. e. the two Ramahs of the Zóphs,) in Mount Ephraim, only two or three miles west by south of Lydda, was called Ramleh by the Arabs, a name corrupted by the Crusaders into Rámula. Rama was a small town six miles north of Jerusalem, on the way to Bethel, and a short distance west of Gibeah, where the Jews assembled after the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuzaradan (Jer. xl. 1,) to take their departure as captives in a foreign land. Near this place Rachel was buried. It is now called er-Râm. Ramathaim-Zophim was the place of Samuel's birth, residence, and burial, and where he anointed Saul as king. Rama or Ramathaim, or Ramathaim-Zophim of the Old is thought by many to be the Arimathea of the New Testament, the residence of Joseph, who begged the body of Jesus. Mount Ephraim ran in a north-eastern direction from the point of Rámula towards the Jordan near Neapolis (Sichem, now Nábulus.) Gezer, or Gazer (now Jazur,) in the tribe of Ephraim, on the borders of Ashdod (Azotus,) and a few miles east by south of Joppa, was a very strong fortress. Antipatris (now El Borj) was built by Herod on the site of Caphar Zaba, 150 stadia north of Joppa. (Josh. xiii. 23.) (Beth-Hórón,) the upper and lower built by Sherah, granddaughter of Ephraim (1 Chron. vii. 24,) was about nine geographical miles east of Lydda, and 100 stadia (12½ miles) north-west of Jerusalem. (Josh. xx. 4.) It was near the northern boundary of the tribe of Benjamin (Josh. xviii. 13,) a mile or two north-west of the present Beït el Mahásin. Beththar, where the False Messiah, Ben Cozba, was slain in the 18th year of Hadrian (A.D. 135,) has been confounded with Beth-Horon; but its ruins are probably those four or five miles east of the Móyet el timsán, just below Arsuf. Five or six miles north-west of Antipatris (El Borj) was Galgúlis, opposite to the modern Kakun. Michmethch, on the south border of Manasseh and the northern boundary of Ephraim, was in sight of Shechem, probably a few miles to the west, near the modern Ajeneïd. Dothan and Thebez, where Abimelech was killed (Judg. ix. 50,) lay probably 10 or 12 miles north-east of Shechem. Dothan, it may be further observed, was situated near Jezreel, about 12 miles north of Samaria, at a narrow pass in the mountains of Gilboa. It is memorable as the place where Joseph's brethren sold him, and where the Syrian troops attempted to seize Elisha. (2 Kings vi. 13–23.)

Between the western territory of the tribe of Manasseh and the southern boundary of Issachar, was Mount Gilboa, now Jilbo', running from north-east to south-west, and joining Carmel at its western extremity. Their highest ridges near Zara'ein (Jezreel) appeared to be separated only by a depression from Mount Hermon. Archi, celebrated as the birth-place of Hushai, the friend of David, lay on the southern border of Ephraim, between Bethel and Beth-horon the nether. Luz, afterwards called Beth-el, from Jacob's miraculous dream (Gen. xxviii. 19), was on the southern side of Ephraim, near the boundary which separated it from Benjamin. (Josh. xviii. 13.) According to Eusebius and Jerome it was 12 Roman miles north of Jerusalem (10 geographical miles, according to Berghaus), and about two miles west of the road to Neapolis (Shechem).

Bethel, now in ruins, is known by the name of Beyteen; it is situated east of a line running from Shechem to Jerusalem, and at about an equal distance from each, according to Eusebius. It was the residence of a Canaanite king, and the Ephraimites to whom it was assigned in the division of the land. The tabernacle was long stationed in this place, and Jeroboam fixed a golden calf there, from which circumstance Amos called it Beth-aven, "the house of idolatry." (1 Kings xii. 28–33.) "Coming to Bethel," was the proverbial expression for idolatry. About a mile south by east was Michmash, overlooking the Vale of Ajalon, and between two or three miles eastward was Beeroth, now El bir (the well), with a bridge over the Nahr-el-fareh, a stream which rises at the western end of that valley and runs into the Jordan to the north-west of Bethabara. Bethaven appears to have been two or three miles north-east of Beeroth; and five or six south-west of Ai (Josh. vii. 2), called Angai in the Septuagint. About 12 miles nearly due north of it was Acrabata (Akrabath, Mishnah, v. 2), the capital of the south-eastern district of Samaria. This seems to be the Acrabim of Eusebius. Within the limits of Ephraim also was Shiloh, where "the Oracle of God" was delivered for more than three hundred years. It was probably about 15 geographical miles north-east of Bethel, and about 2 miles east of Lebonah (Khan Leban), 12 miles south of Neapolis (Nabulus). Shiloh, now called Seilun or Siloun, was about 10 miles south of Shechem, and 25 north of Jerusalem. Here Joshua erected the tabernacle, and divided the land of promise by lot. It was the place where Samuel began to prophesy, and where Abijah lived.

III.—JUDÆA—JERUSALEM.

Judæa, the third division of Palestine west of the Jordan, a name frequently used by ancient and modern writers with greater latitude as synonymous with Palestine, which was itself often put for the whole of Syria, comprehended the small tribes of Dan and Benjamin, and the large ones of Judah and Simeon, together with the coast occupied by the Philistines and the barren mountains of Edom (Idumæa), which had been at length conquered by David. Its capital was JERUSALEM (Ierushalaïm, Hierosolyma). It is called Salem, and was the abode of Melchizedek in the time of Abraham (Jer. xiv. 18), but was afterwards named Jebus, the people of which were the Jebusites, one of the seven nations of Canaan. Whence the term Jeru was derived is uncertain. Some suppose it from Jewish possession; others from Jarah foundation. If from the former, the whole word signifies "the possession of peace," that is, a peaceful possession; if the latter, "the dwelling of peace." "Many writers," says Lynch, "have undertaken to describe the first sight of Jerusalem; but all that I have read conveys but a faint idea of the reality. There is a gloomy grandeur in the scene which language cannot paint." Its citadel, first taken by David, received the name of Jerusalem at an earlier period. (Josh. x. 1.) It was on the confines of Benjamin and Judah, and therefore assigned to each of those tribes. After its final destruction by Titus, a new city, called Ælia Capitolina, was raised by Hadrian on part of its site; that town, which afterwards recovered its ancient name, is called by the Arabs, El Kods, or Beït el Makdes (the House of Sanctuary). Its position, in 31° 47′ 47″ N. and 35° 11′ 39″ E. was determined by the indefatigable but unfortunate traveller, Dr. Seetzen. The boundaries of the ancient city, which, it seems, can still be traced, may be considered as settling many disputed points respecting the distribution of its different parts, and the position of Mount Sion with respect to Acra and the Temple.

The earliest reference to the site is probably under the apellation of "the Land of Moriah," whither Abraham was commanded to go to present Isaac as a burnt-offering, when it is believed the patriarch trod the very ground of the future city. It is in the midst of the central chain of mountains which runs north and south through Palestine, on the boundary line between the tribes of Benjamin and Judah, 33 miles from the sea, and 24 from the Jordan, and about the same distance north of Hebron. It occupies an irregular promontory amidst a confused mass of rocks and hills. The promontory begins at upwards of a mile from the city to the north-west, at the head of the valleys of Jehoshaphat and Gihon.

On the entrance of the tribes to Canaan, it is introduced to us at once as a royal city (Josh. x.), at which time its known history commences, when it was in possession of the Jebusites. In the first united opposition of the Canaanites against Israel, the leader was Adonizedek, its king. Joshua does not appear ever to have assailed it, and the capture of it by the tribe of Judah (Judg. i. 8), was either partial or temporary. The stronghold, known afterwards as Zion, continued in the hands of its former possessors. The Jebusites still dwelt among the children of Judah and Benjamin, and Jebus, situated on their boundary line, was still referred to as a "city of the stranger, that is not of the children of Israel" (Judg. xix. 12), and seems to have remained for four houndred years under the same rule to the time of the kings. This is not the proper place to recite its history, but we may just add in the words of the author of the Biblical Cyclopædia: "Seventeen times has Jerusalem been taken and pillaged: millions of men have been slaughtered within its walls. No other city has experienced such a fate. This protracted and almost supernatural punishment betokens unexampled guilt."

In its most flourishing state it appears to have had the form of an irregular oblong, occupying the summits of four hills. Sion on the south, Moriah on the east, Acra, in the centre, and Bezetha on the north-west side; Acra being considerably lower than Sion, though naturally higher than Moriah, was lowered and levelled by Simon the Asamonean Prince, in order to make the temple more conspicuous. He also filled up the hollow called Cheesemaker's Valley, which separated Mount Sion from Acra, so that it is now scarcely perceptible. Beyond Acra was Bezetha or Cænopolis (i. e. the New City), opposite to the Antonian Tower at the north-west corner of the court of the Temple, but separated from it by a deep artificial foss. Mount Sion alone was inhabited at first; Acra was afterwards added, under the Asmonean kings. Bezetha, the walls of which were begun by Herod Agrippa in the time of Claudius (A. D. 42–55), but finished after his death by the Jews, to the height of 20 cubits (50 feet). "The whole city was bounded by deep and precipitous ravines," says Josephus, "where it was not protected by strong walls. It was built on two hills (Sion and Acra) facing each other and separated by a valley, towards which the houses descended on each side. The hill which bore the upper city was much higher and straighter lengthways than the other; and, on account of its strength, was called a fortress by David, father of Solomon, first builder of the Temple, and is called the Upper Market or Forum by us." The other hill, on which the lower city stood, was in the shape of the waning moon, and was called Acra (summit). Opposite to it there was a third hill, naturally lower, and formerly separated from the other by a deep ravine; but it was filled up by the Asmonean kings, who wished to connect the temple with the city, and also lower the summit of Acra that the Temple might overlook it.

The northern wall of the oldest city (Sion) passed eastwards from the Hippic Tower, by the paved gallery or portico and the senate house, to the western gate of the Temple; from the same point westwards it passed by Bethso to the gate of the Essenes, where it turned southwards above the Spring of Siloam, and thence bending towards the east as far as the Pool of Solomon, and passing by a place called Ophlas, terminated at the eastern gate of the Temple." This account places Mount Sion to the south-west of the Temple, and Bezetha to the west and north-west of it; but the precise position of the reservoirs mentioned in Scripture, which were both within and without the city, is not so easily determined. The position of Golgotha is also doubtful, though the arguments against its identity with the site of the church over the Holy Sepulchre, so urgently put by a late learned and estimable traveller, are by no means convincing, when carefully weighed and compared with the clear statements of Josephus. Without relying too much on local tradition, as only sixty years intervened between the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus and its re-establishment under the name of Ælia by Hadrian, it is not probable that it should have been in the interval so entirely deserted, especially by Christians, as to cause the position of Calvary, the Temple and Mount Sion, spots so memorable, to be entirely lost sight of. A careful examination of the traces of the ancient walls would, it may be hoped, go far towards removing the doubts which have thus arisen as to the places where the great events recorded in Scripture occurred.

The dearth of water in Jerusalem is great: Siloam at the south-east angle of the ancient city, near the valley of the Tyropœon, was the only perennial spring possessed by the inhabitants. There is now also a reservoir or pool near the south-west angle of the ancient city, which may be the Pool of Gihon (1 Kings i. 33,) where Solomon was anointed. Kidron, the only stream near the city, commonly called the Brook Kidron (2 Chron. xxix. 16,) or Cedron (John xviii. 1,) is a deep and rugged ravine, through which a torrent descends to the Dead Sea after continued rains. It marks the eastern side of the city, which is separated by it from the Mount of Olives. Between it and Acra, to the north-east of Mount Sion, was Ophel, in or near which was the Xystus, or paved portico, which connected Mount Sion with Moria. On the southern and south-eastern side of the city was the valley of Ben Hinnom (Josh. xv. 8,) through which runs another torrent, now called the Brook Gihon, perhaps the water mentioned in the 1st Book of Kings (i. 45.) A reservoir adjoining the north-eastern angle of the area in which the Temple stood is supposed to have been the Pool of Bethesda (Beïth Hesdá, i. e. the House of Mercy, John v. 2,) and is the Struthium or Sparrow's Pool of Josephus.

"Modern Jerusalem, as to general form, may be called a square, or rather a rhomboid; the north-east and south-west angles are acute, and the north-west and south-east are obtuse. The east wall is nearly straight the whole length. On the north and south sides the wall makes a bend outwardly, and on the west side it makes an inward bend, so that it would not be very inaccurate to call the city a heptagon. There are likewise many little irregularities in the wall.

"Near the bend on the west side is Jaffa gate, called also the gate of Bethlehem, and the Pilgrim's gate, and Bab el Khaleel (the gate of the beloved, i. e. Abraham). On the south side is the gate of Sion, called also the gate of David. On the east side, near the Pool of Bethesda, is the gate of Stephen, called likewise the sheep-gate. On the north side is Damascus gate. These four are the principal gates of the city, and are always open from morning till sunset. There are two other small gates, which are opened only occasionally.

"Maundrell measured the city, and judged it to be two miles and a half in circumference. According to Josephus it was thirty-three furlongs, or four miles and one-eighth, in circumference before Titus destroyed it. The present walls were rebuilt in the 16th century, and vary from thirty to seventy feet in height, according to the inequalities of the ground. They are about ten feet thick at the base, narrowing to the top. The stones are evidently of different eras. Some massive pieces near the south-eastern angle, bear marks of great antiquity. Mount Zion was then included; and the city seems, from his description, to have extended further north than it does now."

Two or three scenes in the immediate vicinity of Jerusalem demand especial notice. "All the time not appropriated to duty," says Lieut. Lynch, "was spent in visiting over and over again the interesting localities in and around Jerusalem. Above all others, the spot least doubted, and very far from the least hallowed, was the garden of Gethsemane. It is enclosed by a high stone wall, and when we saw it the trees were in blossom, the clover upon the ground in bloom, and altogether, in its aspect, and its associations, was better calculated than any place I know to soothe a troubled spirit.

"Eight venerable trees, isolated from the smaller and less imposing ones which skirt the base of the Mount of Olives, form a consecrated grove. High above, on either hand, towers a lofty mountain, with the deep yawning chasm of Jehoshaphat between them. Crowning one of them is Jerusalem, a living city; on the slope of the other is the great Jewish cemetery, a city of the dead. Each tree in this grove, cankered and gnarled and furrowed by age, yet beautiful and impressive in its decay, is a living monument of the affecting scenes that have taken place beneath and around it. The olive perpetuates itself, and from the root of the dying parent stem the young tree springs into existence. These trees are accounted a thousand years old. Under those of the preceding growth, therefore, the Saviour was wont to rest; and one of the present may mark the very spot where he knelt and prayed, and wept. No cavilling doubts can find entrance here. The geographical boundaries are too distinct and clear for an instant's hesitation."

Lieut. Lynch thus continues his descriptions: "On the same step, and a little below Gethsemane, facing the city, are the reputed tombs of Absolom, Zachariah, St. James, and Jehoshaphat, the last giving its name to the valley. Some of them are hewn bodily from the rock, and the whole form a remarkable group. That of Absolom in particular, from its peculiar tint, as well as from its style of architecture, reminded us of the descriptions of the sepulchral monuments of Petra. It is eight feet square, surmounted by a rounded pyramid, and there are six semi-columns to each face, which are of the same mass with the body of the sepulchre. The tomb of Zachariah is also hewn square from the rock, and its four sides form a pyramid. The tomb of Jehoshaphat has a handsomely carved door; and a portico with four columns indicates the sepulchre where St. James, the apostle concealed himself." (See Jerusalem, page 53 Bible Dictionary.)

The Mount of Olives, separated by the deep ravine of Cedron from the eastern side of the city, is three-quarters of a mile distant. On its south-eastern declivity was the tract called Bethphage, and near it Bethany, on a rugged shelf of the mountain, (nearly two miles) from Jerusalem (John xi. 18,) on the road to Jericho (Mark xi. 1.) Bethany is in itself a poor village, but rich in beautiful associations in Scripture history. It is about two miles from Jerusalem, on the south-east declivity of the Mount of Olives. Bethany was the frequent resort of the Saviour of the world in his days, and the scene of some of the most interesting events of his life. There Lazarus and his sisters resided. On the north side of the city, at the distance of seven stadia, was Scopus, called Tsophim by the Jews, an elevation separated from Jarusalem by a low tract. It is in the tribe of Benjamin.

Jericho was one of the oldest cities of the Holy Land; it was situated in the tribe of Benjamin, and was next in size to Jerusalem. Immediately after the entrance into Canaan, it was miraculously subdued, when the inhabitants were all exterminated, excepting Rahab and her family. (Josh. ii. 6.) Joshua pronounced a fearful curse upon whoever should rebuild it, which was executed 520 years afterwards, upon Hiel. (1 Kings xxi. 34.) Before this time, and almost immediately after the death of Joshua, reference is made to it under the name of the city of Palm-trees, which was captured by Eglon, king of Moab. (Judg. iii. 13.) In the time of Elijah and Elisha it became a school of the prophets, and the residence of Elisha. In this vicinity Elisha miraculously healed the waters, and here subsequently our Lord restored two blind men, when he lodged with Zaccheus. Herod the Great built a castle, and died there. At present it is reduced to a wretched hamlet, called Rihah or Rah. Some believe, however, that this is two or three miles or more from the site of the ancient city. The extraordinary fertility of this well-watered and wide valley, to which the mountains slope gradually, its lofty palms, many houses, and splendid palace, with the far-famed balsam garden, rendered it as famous among the ancients as its connection with many miracles recorded in sacred history have made it an object of veneration to the moderns. Gilgal (Galgala) was 10 stadia (1¼ miles) to the south-east. Aï or Ghaï (Josh. vii. viii.) was near Beth-Aven (on the Nahr-el-fareh,) to the east of Bethel. Achor was a place between Aï and Jericho, where Achan was stoned. Gophna (Ophni, Jos. xviii. 24: now Aïn Yebneh,) 15 miles from Jerusalem, on the road to Neapolis, was the capital of a district under the Asmonean kings, about six geographical miles north of Gibeah of Saul, now Jibiá. To the west was the valley of Ajalon, and on the heights on the other side of it, to the north-west, Michmash.

The village of Ajalon, which was in the tribe of Dan, lay between Jerusalem and Ekron, and was distinguished for the miracle of Joshua. Addida (Mark xiii. 13) appears to have been near the modern Genzaleh, south-east of Lydda. Ono, and Modim, the birth-place of the Maccabees, on the western confines of Benjamin, were very near Lydda. Nob is supposed to have been south by west of Ramleh; Emmaus, north-west of Jerusalem, the present Karyet el 'Aneb; Gibeon, three miles eastwards; and very near it Adummim, now Hatrún. Gibeon was situated on the summit of a hill in Benjamin; it was a city of considerable extent, inhabited by Hivites, between five and seven miles from Jerusalem. At the close of David's reign, the sanctuary was there. Near to it was a pool, probably "the great waters," where Abner was defeated by Joab (Jer. xli. 12;) and "a great stone," that is, a monumental pillar. In Josephus it is called Gabaon, now El Jîb. There was the wilderness of Gibeon, and the valley of Gibeon, celebrated for the victory over five allied kings, and for the miracle performed there by Joshua. (Josh. x. 12.) Aphek was a city east of Jerusalem, on the borders of Judah. Anathoth, a sacerdotal city of the tribe of Benjamin, and the birth-place of Jeremiah, was about a mile south-east of Gibeon, and four miles nearly due north of Jerusalem. Ephrata, or Bethlehem of Judah, still retaining its ancient name, was 35 stadia south-east of the capital, and about the same distance north-west of Tekōa. Bethlehem (called also Bethlehem-Judah, to distinguish it from another Bethlehem in Zebulon, and Bethlehem Ephratah, the fruitful, and its inhabitants Ephrathites—Gen. xlviii. 7; Mic. v. 2) was the scene of the Book of Ruth, the birth-place of David, and, above all, of "the Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." Its situation is about six miles a little west from south of Jerusalem, on an eminence overlooking Tekōa, nine miles distant to the south, and in the midst of a very fertile district.

Tekōa was the native place of Amos, whence the desert along the coast of the Lake Asphaltites was named. The whole of that tract, as far as the Red Sea, was an uninterrupted waste in the time of Jerome. North-east of Tekōa, on the shores of the lake, is Merjúk, the ancient Masada; and north-west of Tekōa was the Herodeum, a splendid town and fortress, built by Herod in memory of the victory which placed him on the throne (B. C. 37,) 60 stadia (7½ miles) from Jerusalem. It appears to have been previously called Bethulia. Bethsur (Beïth súr, now Beït Summár) and Bezek (Beït sánï) were on the road from Tekōa to Hebron (El Khalíl,) 22 miles south by east from Jerusalem (Eusebius:) Aristobulias lay three or four miles to the east of that road. Hebron, originally called Kirjath-Arba, or the city of Arba, on account of a giant of that name (Josh. xiv. 15,) and by Moses called Mamre, was situated among mountains, about 20 miles south of Jerusalem, and at an equal distance north-east of Beersheba. It is still known as the flourishing town of Habroun, or El Khalíl, that is, "the friend of the beloved;" or, according to Mr. Fisk, the American missionary, Haleel of Khaleel-Rahmâm, "the beloved of the merciful." It is one of the oldest cities in the world, and was built seven years before Zoan in Egypt. (Numb. xiii. 22.)

Hebron is associated with some of the most interesting passages in sacred history—as the Valley of Eshcol (Numb. xiii. 24, 25;) the Vale of Hebron, once the residence of Jacob (Gen. xxxvii. 14;) Abraham's dwelling, and his family burying-place (Gen. xiii. 18; xxiii. 2, 3, 19; xxv. 10.) On the conquest of Canaan it was assigned to Caleb (Numb. xiii. 30–33,) though finally a city of refuge, and among the possessions of the priests (Josh. xx. 9; xxi. 11, 13.) It was the residence of David till Jerusalem was made the capital, and here he was anointed king (2 Sam. ii. 1–11;) but at the time of the revolt it was among the cities of Judah (2 Chron. xi. 10.) It was the head-quarters of Absolom's rebellion (2 Sam. xv.,) and here Abner was assassinated by Joab (2 Sam. iii. 27.) Some have supposed that Zacharias and Elizabeth lived there, and that it was the birth-place of John the Baptist. The plain and grove of Mamre was east, and the cave of Machpelah south of Hebron; and Debir or Kiryath Sephir four or five miles west by south, to the north-west of which was Telaim. A small stream flows into the Lake Asphaltites, nearly due east of Hebron, by a place now called 'Aïn jeddí, probably the ancient Engadi or Engaddi Zoará (Tsó'ar in Hebrew,) anciently called Hazezon-Tamar (2 Chron. xx. 2,) still marked by ruins, called Zo'ará by the Arabs, a few miles north-west of the southern extremity of the lake. Engedi (or Hazezon-Tamar) was a town 30 miles south-east of Jerusalem, and west of the southern extremity of the Dead Sea, over which its rocks and cliffs tower aloft. It is situated in a fertile district of palms and vineyards, to which it gives its name. The word signifies "Fountain of the Kid;" and the present Arab designation of Ain Jidy, or Jeddi, has the same meaning.

Zíf and Karmel, a very few miles south-east of Hebron, still mark the places mentioned by those names in Scripture. The Lake Asphaltites, or Asphaltitis, according to recent travellers, is about 40 geographical miles from north to south, and 10 geographical miles in the broadest part from east to west. If Zo'ará mark the site of the ancient Zoar, Sodom must have been the part of the lake nearest to it, since Lot reached Zoar in the intervals between the dawn and sunrise (Gen. xix. 15, 23,) scarcely more than half an hour in that latitude.

On the western side of Judah, Baala or Kirjath-jearim (Josh. xv. 9,) the city of the Gibeonites, was nine miles on the road to Lydda. Beth-shemesh was a city of Judah on the borders of Dan, 30 miles south-west of Jerusalem, and sometimes called Irshemesh, where the ark was sent by the Philistines, when a number were swept off by pestilence for looking into it. (1 Sam. vi. 12–20.) It was the scene of a terrible battle between Israel and Judah. (2 Kings xiv. 11–13.) Bethshemesh, which was 12 miles on the way from Eleutheropolis to Nicopolis (Emmaus,) was about midway between the latter place and Jerusalem, and three miles due south of Emmaus was Timneh. Eleutheropolis, a considerable town under the Christian emperors, 16 miles west-south-west of Jerusalem. Makkeda, where Joshua buried the five kings alive in a cave (Josh. x. 16, 18,) was eight miles east of Eleutheropolis and two or three miles due south of it was Ziklag. Ashtemoh, or Esthemo, in the mountains of Judah, was about as far east of Ziklag. These places were in the extensive district of Judah, called Daróm (Daromas,) or the South. Gedor, or Gederoth (Gedrus,) was about five miles north-west of Eleutheropolis. Jarmuth was four miles and Eshtaol three miles nearly due north of that town. Moreshath, the birth-place of Micah, was about two miles by north-west north of Esthaol.

Juttah, now Yattah, is very near Karmel (Carmelia) and Zíf, a few miles south-east of Hebron. Beersheba, in the tribe of Simeon, still retains its ancient name, and its ruins are found at about 27 miles south-west of Hebron. Beersheba, which signifies "well of the oath" (Gen. xxi. 31,) was originally the name of a well, near which Abraham, and after him Isaac, who was born there, resided. It was 20 miles or upwards south of Hebron, at the southern extremity of Canaan, and afterwards became a place of considerable importance. Near the supposed site of it modern travellers have found wells of water, and they have discovered the remains of an extensive village. Robinson mentions two wells, 55 rods distant from each other; one 12 feet in diameter, and 44½ feet deep; the other 5 feet in diameter, and 42 deep, surrounded by drinking-troughs of stone, and containing excellent water. "Here, then," he exclaims, "is the place where the patriarchs Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob dwelt! Here Abraham dug, perhaps, this very well, and journeyed from hence with Isaac to Mount Moriah to offer him up there in sacrifice. From this place Jacob fled to Padan-aram, after acquiring the birthright and blessing belonging to his brother; and here, too, he sacrificed to the Lord on setting off to meet his son Joseph in Egypt. Here Samuel made his sons judges. Here was the border of Palestine Proper, which extended from Dan (on the extreme north) to Beersheba. (Gen. xxi. 31; xxii. 19; xxvi. 23; xxviii. 10; xlvi. 1; 1 Sam. viii. 2; 1 Kings xix. 3; 2 Sam. xvii. 11.) Over these smiling hills the flocks of the patriarchs once roved by thousands, where now we found only a few camels, asses, and goats."

The Jews were plainly not designed by the Almighty to be a maritime people; nor till the time of Herod, perhaps, were they permanently possessed of any part of the coast south of Mount Carmel. The original inhabitants of the country were Philistines, they, with the Caphtorim, were descended from the Casluhim, children of Ham, and at an early period expelled the Hivites, descendents of Canaan, from these tracts (Gen. ii. 23;) they occupied the low-lands along the Mediterranean, from the confines of Egypt to the northern boundary of Judah, and formed five confederate States, named from their chief cities, 'Azzah or Gaza (now Ghazzah,) which may be said to consist of three villages: that in the centre, being the castle, now in ruins, commands a very extensive view over the sea about a mile distant, and over the adjoining country, which being there flat, and in some places covered with palm-groves, recalls the scenery peculiar to Egypt. Many fragments of marble give evidence of its former grandeur. Notwithstanding its productive soil and advantageous position, its population at the close of the last century was reduced to 2000 souls. Cotton, cloths, and soap, were then its principal manufactures, and being the place of transit between Egypt and Syria, a considerable traffic was maintained there by the transit of caravans. 'Askalón ('Askalán,) a "fenced city," and capital of the five Philistine lordships, was situated 12 miles south of Gaza, on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean, and 37 miles from Jerusalem. It was the birth-place of Herod the Great.

Ashdód, called by the Greeks Azotus, lay on the Mediterranean, 15 or 20 miles north of Gaza, between Askalon and Ekron. It is built on the summit of a hill, and contained the temple of Dagon, in which the Philistines placed the ark. Ashdód, (Esdúd) is now celebrated for its scorpions. Gath, which was their capital, was included in the territory of Dan, and is celebrated as the birth-place of Goliath. It was thirty-two miles west from Jerusalem, and appears to have been revived at the time of the destruction of the first temple (B.C. 588.) It was probably not far from Ashdod and Ekron. Ekron, at the northern extremity of the land of the Philistines (Josh. xiii. 3,) was also on the confines of Judah and Dan (1 Sam. vi. 17; Josh. xix. 43;) its site it is supposed, is covered by the present village of Akri, four miles to the south of Ramleh, north-west of Gath, and north of Ashdod. Joshua assigned it to the tribe of Judah. The ark was sent thither by the Philistines after Dagon had fallen before it, and thence returned home. (See article on Palestine, page 75 Bible Dictionary.)

IV.—THE COUNTRY EAST OF THE JORDAN.

The whole tract east of the Jordan, from Arnon (Mo'jeb) to Argob, in the northern part of Bashan, was anciently called Gilead, a name subsequently restricted to a particular part of it. (Deut. iii. 12.) From Aroer (Ará'ír) on the Arnon, to the middle of Mount Gilead, as far as the Jabbok (Deut. iii. 16,) the territory of Sihon, King of the Amorites, the whole was assigned to Reuben and Gad; the remainder of Mount Gilead and Bashan, the kingdom of Og, was given to the half tribe of Manasseh. The mountainous country of the Ammonites was separated from Moab by the river Arnon, and from the Amorites by a stream now called Zerká Ma'ín, and its northern boundary was the Jabbok, which separated it from Bashan. The lower mountains on the west, and the valley of the Jordan, which probably formed the territory subsequently called Peræa by the Greeks, were also occupied by the Amorites. The territory of the Ammonites, which had been "given to the children of Lot" (Deut. ii. 19,) was never possessed by the Israelites.

The town of Paneas was called Cæsarea Philippi, from Philip the Tetrarch, who gave it that name in honour of Augustus. Ituræa derived its name from Itur or Jetur, son of Ishmael (1 Chron. i. 31,) and its inhabitants were, on the first establisment of the Israelites in Canaan, continually at war with their neighbours, the half tribe of Manasseh. (1 Chron. v. 19.) They were famous archers and genuine Arabs, dreaded on account of their predatory habits. Gilead seems to have been the mountainous tract between the Yarmúk of the Jews and Arabs, the Hieromax of the Greeks and the Jabbok, now the Zerká or Blue River. To the south of that stream was the country of Reuben and Gad, the Peræa of the Greeks, larger than Galilee, and extending lengthwise from Machærus, on the Bagiras (Zirká ma'ín,) near Mount Nebo, to Pella, near the Jabbok; breadthwise from the Jordan to Philadelphia. The ruggedness and height of its mountains rendered them unproductive; but its valleys, and particularly that of the Jordan, enjoyed the warmth and produced the fruits of tropical climates.

The numerous remains of antiquity still existing in this part of Syria, and the many ancient names still preserved by its inhabitants, who are, as they probably always were, of Nabathæan, i. e. Canaanite origin, and still speak the language of their forefathers, present a large field for geographical and historical inquiry.

A deep interest has been awakened in Europe and America on the subject of exploration in the Holy Land, it is expected that further important discoveries will be made east of the Jordan.

PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY OF PALESTINE.

I.—MOUNTAINS.

Among the celebrated mountains of Palestine we may particularly specify the Lebanons, or the Libanus and Antilibanus, situated on the northern side. The Libanus or Lebanon consists of four ridges of mountains, rising one above another, of which the first and third are the most habitable and fertile; the last is excessively cold, and covered with almost eternal snow. Libanus and Antilibanus are, in fact, two ridges; the former name is applied to the western, the latter to the eastern. Between these ridges is Cœle-Syria, or the valley of Lebanon. (Josh. xi. 17.)

The parallelism of the two great chains of Syrian mountains from the southern bank of the Orontes, opposite Antioch, as far as the Lake of Tiberias, which makes the interval between them a large valley or defile, caused that part of the country to be called Cœle-Syria "the hollow Syria," a name applied differently by different writers, some extending it to the whole of this valley or series of valleys; others, and particularly Strabo, restricting it to the valley between Libanus and Antilibanus properly so-called; each beginning at a small distance from the sea, and extending to the mountains on the borders of the Desert near Damascus. The Scriptures, it may be observed, make no distinction between the parallel chains, but call them both by the same name, Lebanon.

Some of the eastern and north-eastern branches of Lebanon were denominated Hermon, Sion, and Amana. The cedars at present are chiefly at the base of one mountain, about four hundred in number, and covering a space of three-quarters of a mile in circumference. Those of the largest growth are twelve in number, rising towards the summit. Some of them are nearly a hundred feet high, and forty feet in girth. A different temperature prevails in different parts; whence the beautiful description of the Arabian poets—"the Sannim bears winter on his head, spring upon his shoulders, and autumn in his bosom, while summer lies sleeping at his feet." The wine of Lebanon is still celebrated. Moses refers to that "goodly land and Lebanon."

Mount Gilead, or the mountains of Gilead, constitute a ridge which rises six miles south of the Jabbok, and extends five or six miles from east to west. The modern name is Djeland. There was a tree in Gilead, the gum of which possessed medicinal properties, and hence called the balm of Gilead. Strabo refers to a field near Jericho which was full of such balsam trees. The fluid that issues, when the bark is cut, by drops, soon coagulates, and has a pungent taste and odoriferous scent.

Gilboa is a ridge of mountains west of the plain of Jordan, and south-east of the plain of Esdraelon, memorable as the field of battle on which Saul and his three sons fell. The present designation is Djebel Gilbo.

Hermon is a mountain branching off south-east from Anti-Lebanon, and running between Damascus and the sea of Tiberias, called by the Sidonians Sirion, by the Amorites Shenir and Sison. Its present name is Jebel-es-Sheikh, and it is the loftiest of all the summits of Lebanon, being about 12,000 feet in height. Hermon is covered on its summit with a crown of snow. Jerome says that its snow was formerly conveyed to Tyre and Sidon, to be used in cooling liquors. It was once celebrated for a temple, much resorted to by the sons of superstition. "Whatever is lovely," says a traveller, "in mountain, plain,, marsh, and lake, is before the eye, and with surprising distinctness. Old Jebel-es-Sheikh, like a venerable Turk, with his head wrapped in a snowy turban, sits yonder on his throne in the sky, surveying with imperturbable dignity the fair lands below; and all around, east, west, north, south, mountain meets mountain to guard and gaze upon the lovely vale of Huleh. What a constellation of venerable names! Lebanon and Hermon, Bashan and Gilead, Moab and Judah, Samaria and Galilee! There, too, is the vast plain of Cœle-Syria, Upper and Lower, studded with trees, clothed with flocks, and dotted with Arab tents; and there the charming Huleh, with its hundred streams, glittering like silver lace, on robes of green, and its thousand pools sparkling in the morning sun!"

Mount Tabor, is on the northern border of the plain of Esdraelon, 50 miles north from Jerusalem, and six from Nazareth, and in shape resembles a cone with the apex cut off. It is described by Dr. Wilson as "standing apart in its own nobility, and, like nature's own pyramid, not commemorative of death, but instinct with life, and clothed with luxuriant verdure to its very summits." The prospect from the top is described as of the most enchanting kind. The Mediterranean, the plains of Esdraelon and Galilee, Carmel, the heights of Samaria and Gilboa, the sea of Tiberias, and the peaks of Lebanon, are all in view. Its greatest glory, however, is derived from its having been, as is generally believed, the mount of the Saviour's transfiguration.

Mount Carmel is situated on the coast, and extends eastward to the plain of Jezreel, and to Cæsarea on the south. Its height, according to Schubert, is 1300 feet. A city has likewise been built upon it. It is in shape a flattened cone, and is the most beautiful mountain in Palestine, rising about 1500 or 2000 feet above the sea-coast. The name it has obtained seems derived from its fertility, the word in Hebrew signifying the vine of God, and is generally used in Scripture to denote any very fruitful spot. As the residence of the prophet Elijah, who is believed to have dwelt in one of its caves, it has acquired great celebrity.

Olivet, or the Mount of Olives, is situated within about a mile of Jerusalem, and is a ridge 700 feet in height, having apparently, as seen from the west, three summits extending from north to south: from the central part our Saviour ascended. The one towards the north is the most lofty, and is usually called the mount of Galilee; the other towards the south of the middle ridge is called the mount of Corruption or Offence.

Mount Calvary, or Golgotha, stood anciently within the walls of the metropolis, and was appropriated as the spot for the execution of criminals. It was, in fact, not properly a mountain, nor even a hill, but a small elevation or rising ground.

Mount Moriah, on which the temple was built, stood in the south-eastern direction from Calvary, and is thought to have been the place where Abraham went to sacrifice Isaac, his beloved son.

Mount Gihon was west of the city, and nearer Calvary. In this place Solomon was anointed king by the prophet Nathan and the high priest Zadock.

Besides these, were Ebal, Gerizzim, Sion, the mountains of the Desert in the south, the mountains of Ephraim and of the Philistines in the west, and the central cluster spoken of in Scripture as the mountains of Judea.

Mount Hor is situated about half-way between the Dead and the Red Seas, on the borders of Idumæa. It is called Jabel Haroun or Aaron's Mount, as the place of Aaron's burial, whose tomb is pointed out on the summit. It rises above the other mountains of Seir.

A north-eastern branch of Lebanon is also called Mount Hor, and was part of the boundary of the land of Israel on the north.

The term Mount Seir, or Mountains of Seir, was applied indefinitely to that range of mountains which extends from the southern extremity of the Dead Sea to the Gulf of Akaba, and is now called Djebel Shera and Hasma. It forms one of the natural divisions of the country.

II.—WILDERNESSES, DESERTS, AND PLAINS.

In the Scriptures we find frequent mention of wildernesses and deserts. Of these there were two kinds: namely, plains of barren sand, where scarcely the most scanty herbage is to be found, and mountainous tracts of country, thinly inhabited, pervaded frequently by a considerable growth of vegetable productions, with supplies of water, and adapted to the pasturing of cattle, Such were the wildernesses of Judah and of Judæa, where John lived and preached. One of the dreariest of these lay between the Mount of Olives and the Plains of Jericho, which, for its numerous robberies, was called "the Bloody way." The principal tracts comprehended in these designations were, the wildernesses of Jericho, Judah, Engedi, Ziphmaon, Beer-sheba, Tekōa, Gibeon, and Bethaven.

Between the central ridge of mountains and the valley of the Jordan there is a desert a hundred miles in length, and from fifteen to twenty in breadth. It abounds in naked limestone hills, separated from each other by deep winding valleys and narrow stony gullies. The southern portion especially is rent in every direction by ravines, opening to view tremendous gorges along the eastern part of the desert, bounded by high precipitous walls. Excepting a few olives and pomegranates in the neighbourhood of Jericho, a village in the valley of Jordan, and a few shrubs here and there, with small patches of green along the western shore of the Dead Sea, the whole district presents a scene of desolation.

III.—RIVERS, LAKES, AND WADYS.

The Jordan.—The principal river of the Holy Land is the Jordan, the other streams being scarcely worthy of such a term. The primary source of this river is a fountain just above Hasbeiya, twenty miles above Bainas or Cæsarea Philippi, and the ancient idolatrous city of Dan. It divides Judea; its course is chiefly southward by west. After proceeding a few miles it runs through the Samochonite lake, then enters on the north side of the sea of Tiberias, and issues again near the city on the south side, and at length falls into the lake Asphaltites. It is deep, its waters turbid, and its general course is rapid.

Until within a few years there were only two instances of Europeans having traversed the entire valley of the Jordan: namely, that of St. Wilibald, first bishop of Aichstädt, who went as a pilgrim in the seventh century; and that of Baldwin I. king of Jerusalem, who was accompanied in his journey by a small body of knights, during the period of the crusades. So late as 1806, the immediate neighbourhood of the southern extremity of the Dead Sea remained utterly unknown. Burckhardt disclosed the districts of Edom and Sinai in 1812. Ulrich Jasper Seetzen, in 1806, discovered the true sources of the Jordan, the eastern districts of its valley, and the whole eastern coast-line of the Dead Sea, penetrating towards the southern end of that sea or lake into the salt valley of Zoar, and reaching the boundary of the Brook of Willows, or Sared, which was once forded by Moses with the children of Israel, when proceeding from Mount Sinai, near the Red to the Dead Sea, where he first stood on Moabitish ground. Seetzen could only effect his purpose under the protection of several independent chieftains of the Bedawin robbers who had partaken of bread and salt with him in their tents, and were consequently bound to afford him defence. He was only able to gain his point by proceeding on foot, in a tattered garment, with a beggar's staff in his hand, divesting himself of valuables of every kind, and carrying a skin of flour or water for his subsistence. He advanced upon his former steps in a second journey in 1807, and hesitated not to be alone for weeks in the most dreary wildernesses. This adventurous traveller at length was sacrificed by some murderous and unknown hand while exploring Southern Arabia.

The British Board of Ordnance engaged Lieutenant Symonds, R. N., in 1841, to undertake a triangulation and determining of the levels of the lake of Tiberias, and the course of the Jordan down to the Dead Sea, and to sound its depths. In 1847, the actual navigation of the river was undertaken by Lieutenant Molyneux. At first his success was but partial. During eight days, and within the distance of about thirty leagues, he had to struggle against the rocks, shoals, and rapids, which were all but impracticable, as well as the Bedawins haunting the banks. From these he escaped by night, and by a quick retreat, to the oasis of Jericho. In a few days, however, he collected fresh forces, and in September embarked once more, and entered the Dead Sea, on whose fearful waves he was tossed by a violent gale for two days; but reaching the northern shore, whence he had set out a short time before, he sunk under fatigue and exhaustion. One year afterwards the third expedition was undertaken, and conducted with admirable success, by the United States Government; a vessel having been fitted out for the purpose, and placed under the command and scientific direction of Lieutenants Lynch and Dale, to whom we are indebted for very valuable and complete information respecting the Jordan, the Dead Sea, and their respective vicinities.

The general course of the river is south, meandering 200 miles, but in a direct line only about 60, to the Dead Sea. Its waters are sometimes turbid, sometimes clear, its flow quick, six or eight feet in depth, but at certain seasons fordable, in some places. It has, moreover, 27 considerable rapids. The channel is deeply embedded in opposite terraces, running nearly parallel, at the distance of from three to five miles, presenting sometimes precipitous banks, forming the commencement of conical hills and rocks, which rise irregularly and in confusion. Between these the river rushes through endless contortions, as if struggling to get free from its appointed limits. It proceeds more slowly towards the end of its course, but turns and twists towards every point of the compass within a short distance.

The Dead Sea, called also the East Sea, the Sea of the Plain, the Sea of Lot, and Asphaltites, is about 40 or 50 miles long, varying with the season as the quantity of water is discharged into it, and from six to eight miles wide. The northern part is very deep—1300 feet. By a projection from the eastern shore on the south, it is contracted into two miles of breadth. South of this the water is shallow, and in the middle of summer is left a marsh. The whole valley of the Jordan is many feet below the Mediterranean Sea. In the basin of the Dead Sea it reaches the lowest level, which is 1282 feet below the Mediterranean, and 1410 below the level of the Red Sea. It has no outlet. The waters south of the Dead Sea flow northward into it from some distance, which shows that the sea occupied its present bed before the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, unless the entire surface of the country has been changed by volcanic action, which appearances render probable. The shores on the east side are formed by perpendicular cliffs, rising into ragged splintered points, sometimes receding a little from the sea, and at other times jutting into it, and varying in height from 1600 to 2800 feet. The western shore preserves a general outline of about 400 feet lower. The evaporation is excessively great in summer, from the intensity of the heat in so confined a basin, and the waters are extremely saline, and pervaded by various infusions bitter and nauseous. No living thing is found in them, though no deadly miasma arises, as was formerly supposed. The water is transparent, of a dull green colour, and very dense and buoyant: in fact a person cannot sink. The specific gravity of the water is found to be a degree of density unknown.

Analysis gives the following results:—

Chloride of Magnesium	145.8971
" " Calcium	31.0746
" " Sodium (common salt)	78.5537
" " Potassium	6.5860
Bromide of Potassium	1.3741
Sulphate of Lime	0.7012
	264.1867
Water	735.8133
	1000.0000

It will thus be seen that one-fourth parts of the water of the Dead Sea consists of various salts. Hence its nauseous, bitter taste and its extraordinary density. The full meaning of the analysis will be perceived when it is remembered that salt water from the ocean contains less than four per cent. of salts and more than ninety-six per cent. of pure fresh water.

The attempt to navigate this sea proved fatal to the Irish traveller, Costigan, in 1835, to Lieutenant Molyneux in 1847; and Lieutenant Dale, U. S. N., who died in Palestine from exposure and fatigue in 1848.

On the southern side is the salt mountain of Usdum (Sodom,) rugged and worn, which Dr. Robinson has described as a ridge, varying from 100 to 150 feet in height, covered with layers of chalky limestone or marl, so as to present chiefly the appearance of common earth or rock; yet the mass of salt very often breaks out, and appears on the sides in precipices 40 or 50 feet high, and several hundred feet in length, pure crystallized fossil salt. "The very stones beneath our feet were pure salt. This continued to be the character of the mountain throughout its whole length, a distance of five geographical miles."

The most remarkable discovery in this region is the pillar of salt which is described as conspicuous on this extraordinary mountain, consisting of a lofty round pillar, apparently detached from the general mass, at the head of a deep, narrow, and abrupt chasm. The pillar is of salt, capped with carbonate of lime, cylindrical in front, and pyramidal behind. The upper or rounded part is about 40 feet high, resting on a kind of oval pedestal, from 40 to 60 feet above the level of the sea. It slightly decreases in size upwards, crumbles at the top, and is one entire mass of crystallization. A prop, or buttress, connects it with the mountain behind, and the whole is covered with debris of a light stone colour. Its peculiar shape is attributable to the action of the winter rains.

The bottom of the Dead Sea consists of two submerged plains, an elevated and a depressed one, the former averaging thirteen hundred feet below the surface, the latter thirteen. Through the largest and deepest and northern one, is a ravine corresponding with the bed of the Jordan. "It is a curious fact," says Lieut. Maury, "that the distance from the top to the bottom or the Dead Sea should measure the height of its banks, the elevation of the Mediterranean, and the difference of level between the bottom of the two seas, and that the depth of the Dead Sea should be also an exact multiple of the height of Jerusalem above it."

Major Wilson of the Royal Engineers in a recent work says, that the American Government Expedition, in 1848, under Lieutenant Lynch, U. S. N., who descended the Jordan in two boats, and spent a considerable time in making an accurate survey of the Dead Sea, to this Expedition we owed, until quite recently, most of our knowledge of the Jordan Valley: but during the years from 1868–1874 a complete survey of this part of the country has been made for the Palestine Exploration Fund, by Capt. Warren, R. E., and Lieutenant Conder, R. E.

The Waters of Merom, Lake Huleh, or, as it is now called, Bahr-El-Huleh, is a marshy lake about twelve miles from Tiberias, in the northern part of Judea, through which the Jordan flows.

The Lake of Gennesareth (in the Old Testament the Sea of Chinnereth,) called also the Sea of Galilee, and the Sea of Tiberias, is ever memorable and illustrious as the scene of our Saviour's frequent visits and miracles. It is about ten miles south of the former, and the Jordan flows with it. The Jews say "God loved that sea more than all other seas in the world:" nor is the sentiment without some echo in the Christian mind. Its waters are clear and pure. It produces five kinds of fish, all good, namely, "The Musht, Abu Bût, Huffâfah, Abu Kísher, and Bŭrbût. The last, from some superstitious idea, is not eaten by the Jews. The musht, about one foot long, and four or five inches wide, resembles the sole. Burckhardt mentions one called Binni, like the carp." The lake is about twelve miles long and six broad. It has its bed in a valley distinguished by great beauty and fertility, and is surrounded by lofty hills. "The position of this lake, embosomed deep in the midst of higher tracts of country, exposes it, as a matter of course, to gusts of wind, and, in winter, to tempests. One such storm is recorded during the course of our Lord's ministry. In the other instance, when Jesus followed his disciples, walking on the waters, it is only said the wind was contrary, and, as John adds, great."

The other rivers or brooks are principally the Jarmach, in the country of the Gergesenes, rising from the mountains of Gilead; Kirmion, near Damascus, called also Abana; Pharphar, which flows from Mount Hermon; Kishon, which was in the tribes of Issachar and Zebulon; Arnon, originating in the mountains of Arnon, and running into the Dead Sea; and Jabok, which falls into the Jordan. Though most of the streams of Palestine are dignified with the name of rivers, there are few among them, as has already been observed, that deserve the name. They are chiefly brooks which flow towards the Mediterranean on the one side, or towards the Jordan on the other. They are called Wadys, an Arabic word, which signifies both the vale itself and the water that runs through it.

The general deficiency of water led to the construction of wells and cisterns, usually having a small round opening at the top. These were very general in the cities, and the remains of many are still observable along the ancient roads. Large reservoirs, or tanks of water, were built in great towns, for public use, such as in Jerusalem, Hebron, Gibeon, and many other places, which are now commonly seen in ruins; but, as Robinson remarks, these are the least doubtful vestiges of antiquity in all Palestine; for, amongst the present race of inhabitants, such works are utterly unknown.

IV.—CLIMATE.

The year was divided at an early period into six seasons, each consisting of two months. They are distinctly mentioned in the promise of God to Noah, as "seed-time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter." (Gen. viii. 22.) The Arabs now make the same distinctions.

The harvest began near the commencement of our April, and ended in the former part of the month of June. In general the temperature during that period is agreeable, but afterwards increases to an unpleasant degree. Summer followed with intense heat, so that it was common to sleep on the tops of houses in the open air. This is the time of fruits, which lasted two months. The hot season began in the early part of October; after the middle the heat gradually diminished. Seed-time lasted from the first part of October to the first part of December. During this time the weather is frequently cloudy and rainy. Towards the end of it the snow begins to fall upon the mountains. Next to this succeeds winter, when snow frequently falls, but this only a few hours, excepting on the tops of the mountains. The north winds are cold, and thin ice is formed, but soon melts away under the powerful beams of the sun. Thunder, lightning, and rain, often occur. The brooks are filled, and torrents flow like rivers along the country. The cold season extended from the first half of February to the first half of April. Thunder-storms frequently occur, with heavy rain and hail during that period. Then the indications of approaching spring soon present themselves in the budding trees, which are speedily covered with foliage, the fields with grain, and the gardens with flowers. Though it is called the cold season, the weather is progressively warm, and sometimes in its advance considerably hot.

During the months of May, June, July, and August, there is no rain; the only moisture is from the dews, which, however, as a providential compensation, fall most plentifully. In the early part of October a rain of three or four days' continuance descends, by which the ground is prepared for ploughing and sowing. About twenty days of unclouded weather ensue, when the rains return. The heavy showers with which the rainy season commenced were called the former or early rains; the rain that fell in the spring, just before the harvest, was called the latter rain. Commencing at the beginning of April, it brought forward the crops to their perfection. The weather is extremely various throughout the winter. When the sky was red in the evening, it was deemed a sign of fair weather on the following day, but this appearance in the morning led to the anticipation of rain. (Comp. Matt. xvi. 2, 3.) A cloud rising from the west gave warning of rain. (Luke xii. 54.)

In conclusion we may observe, that the soil and climate of Syria vary greatly in different districts, but are on the whole salubrious and productive. In the valleys, the heat and luxuriance of a tropical region are experienced, while the shelving terraces and summits of the mountains present at the same season the mildness and vegetation of spring, or the ice and snow of winter. In the interior of Syria, the want of water is often severely felt, as the beds of the mountain torrents are often dry in the hot season; but wherever the stream is permanent, particularly in the valley of the Jordan, the soil is abundantly productive. In Palestine and much of the southern part of Syria, there is little wood; but the cedars and forests of Lebanon have been famous almost ever since the days of Solomon; and there is no want of timber in the upper branches of the same chain, between Acri and Aleppo. RECENT EXPLORATIONS IN BIBLE LANDS.

BY PROF. A. L. RAWSON.

Entered, according to Act of Congress, in the year 1875, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.

"So he (Joshua) sent men to measure the country, and sent with them some geometricians, who could not easily fail of knowing the truth." (Josephus, Ant. v. 1, 21.)

During the twenty-five years just past, students of the Bible have been inquiring, can a connexion be traced between the scenery, the geography, the climate, the productions, and the manners and customs of Bible-lands and the Scripture text, that the one will explain the other?

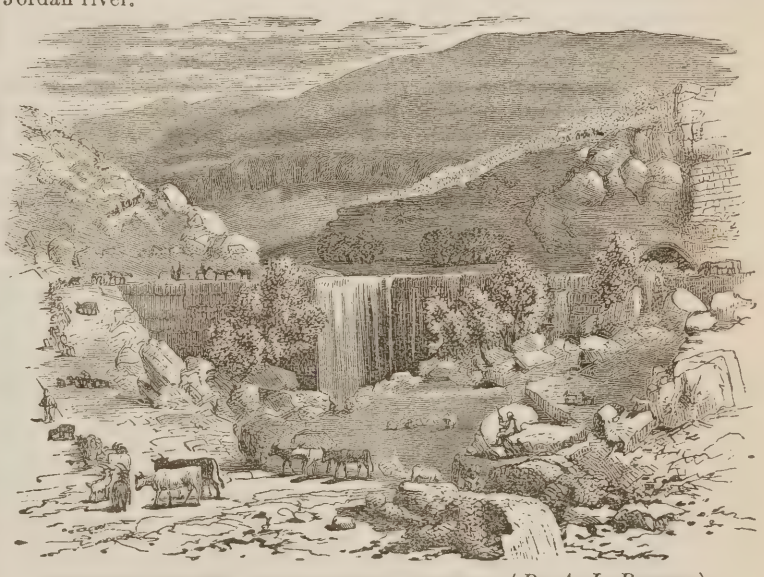
Dr. Edward Robinson, of New York, after fifteen years special study, made his first journey in Palestine in 1838, "that he might see with his eyes rather than learn from the pages of others." He was accompanied by Dr. Eli Smith, a resident American missionary, at Beirut, and a ripe Arabic scholar, familiar with the manners and customs of the natives. They gathered materials for a Biblical Geography.

They made a second journey in 1852, with other assistants, and the Biblical Researches—the result of the two journeys, and the digest of the knowledge and experience of the two most learned men of the day on the subject—became a standard, and although it has been partly superseded by subsequent researches, it is still a great storehouse of valuable materials.

Burckhardt had travelled east of the Jordan in 1812, and given invaluable information on that almost inaccessible region, which has not yet been entirely superseded.

The difficulties in the way of the single traveller, or of a company engaged in sight-seeing, are so great, as nearly to prevent a careful inspection of sites, or a correct location of them. And, although painstaking and accurate, yet the absence of special training, for forming habits of observation, and the short time spent in each place, render the best work of this kind, unreliable in most instances. The need of a scientific survey by experienced men, has, therefore, long been felt; this was begun a few years since, and is now nearly completed. The first scientific expedition of modern times sent to spy out the land of Canaan, was led by Lieutenant Lynch, (afterwards Commodore Lynch, U. S. N.,) in 1848, and its results have since been the standard for the region of the Jordan and the Dead Sea.

In 1858, Barclay's "City of the Great King" was published, chiefly relating to Jerusalem, exhausting the subject down to that date. In 1859, Rev. W. M. Thomson's "The Land and the Book" was published, popularizing the illustration of the Bible, from the natural scenery and products of Palestine, and the manners and customs of its people. In 1865, Fergusson's, Paine's, and Dr. Newmann's books on the sites of the Temple of Solomon and the Holy Sepulchre, and in 1867, Smith's Bible Dictionary summed up all previous knowledge in Biblical Geography and Topography. A better acquaintance with the country is showing the great value of the Jewish writings in the Talmud in exposition of the Bible text. One of the best modern Hebrew works on this subject is that published by Rabbi Joseph Schwartz in 1845.



The Count de Vogüé has written a work on the churches of the Holy Land, Madden and De Saulcy on its coins, Mills on the Samaritans, Renan on Phœnicia, and many other authors on special subjects, until the literature on the various topics furnished by the country forms a large library, not only in the English, but also from the independent works of others, in the German, French, Dutch, Greek, Russian and Arabic languages. The motive that gave a fresh stimulus to the work, that has been recently done, was furnished in 1864, by the desire of Miss Burdett Coutts (now Lady Coutts,) to furnish the City of Jerusalem with fresh clean water. To this end she advanced $2,500 to make the Ordnance Survey of the city, (see Dictionary, pages 53 and 56,) and it was made by Major Wilson, R. E. Mohammedan prejudice then prevented, as it does now prevent, the carrying out of the works by Christians for the water supply, and Jerusalem from the beautiful city that it was when the Psalmist described it, has become one of the most unhealthy, from its mountain-heaps of rubbish and want of water. Probably nearly every source of water, tank, cistern, and aqueduct, in or around the city have been found and described. The only fountains remaining undiscovered are those mentioned as having been stopped by Hezekiah. Following this enterprise, chiefly through the exertions of Mr. George Grove, the Palestine Exploration Fund Society was formed in 1865. Excavations were begun under Captain Warren, R. E., in 1867, and continued for three years, during which time he also made surveys in the Desert and Mount Sinai, and on both sides of the Jordan river. The Ordnance Survey of the Peninsula of Sinai was made by Major Wilson in 1868, and the journey on the route of the Exode by Palmer and Drake, was made in 1871. On this foot-journey they visited and described a great number of Biblical sites, four of which were unknown before, including the city of Eboda which is near and similar to the rock-hewn city of Petra. Mr. Drake and R. F. Burton made the journeys described in "Unexplored Syria" in the same year.

The French Geographical Society sent out Captains Miculet and Derrien in 1870, who surveyed a part of Phœnicia and a part of the Holy Land, when the war with Prussia stopped the work.

The Fund Society resolved to begin the triangulation of the country in 1871, and sent out their first company under Captain Stewart, R. E. The interpreter and naturalist to the expedition was C. F. T. Drake, the artist, scholar, and traveller. The work to be done was to collect native names and traditions, excavate at supposed ancient sites, make meteorological observations, take notes on geology, botany, and zoology, make plans of architectural remains, and careful surveys for a complete map of the Holy Land, with topographical details, on a scale of an inch to the mile. The work was begun near Ramleh, in the plain of Sharon. Captain Stewart's health failing he was succeeded after his return to England by Lieutenant C. R. Conder, R. E., who is the present leader, with Captain Armstrong and Sergeant Black, assistants, besides eight assistant natives.

The American Palestine Exploration Society was formed in 1870, to cooperate with the English society, and sent out its first surveying party in 1872. It consisted of Lieutenant E. Z. Steever, Jr., U. S. A., chief; Prof. J. A. Paine, archæologist and naturalist; Rev. A. A. Haines and W. G. Ballantine assistants; G. Subbet, native interpreter; Shafateer, native assistant botanist; M. B. Ward, Usef Abood, muleteers, and Usef Moushreck. There was "an advisory committee" of gentlemen residing in Beirut.

Their work was to be similar to that of the English party. When the survey on the east of the Jordan is completed, the work of the two parties is to be united, to form one map of the entire country on both sides of the Jordan river.

SPRINGS OF MOSES, UNDER MOUNT PISGAH. (By A. L. Rawson.)

The archæologist, Prof. J. A. Paine, had been in Robert College, Constantinople as a professor. His first work in Syria was the discovery of some inscriptions at the Dog river, near Beirut, on the rocks beside the old and the new roads over the promontory south of the river's mouth. These correct a page in history. The lower road is the work not of the Romans but of the Phœnicians. Antoninus built the part along the river side, between the ford and the bridge. On a stone in this river-wall is readable the name and all the titles of Antoninus or Caracalla. The higher road is the work of the Egyptians. The Egyptian tablets with their figures and inscriptions have been published. The use of the ancient Greek letters in the Phœnician inscriptions at the Dog river and on the Moabite stone proves that the Greeks borrowed their entire alphabet of 22 letters from the east. The American party began their field-work in Moab in the vicinity of Heshbon, and a part of the result has been published in the "Third Statement" of the Society. The survey covers about 500 square miles of territory, south of Heshbon and east of the Dead Sea, including the site of Mount Pisgah, and the Springs of Moses. (See Engraving.)

A large botanical collection was made in April and May, and is described in their "statement," through the assistance of the botanists of the Kew Herbarium, England, and of Prof. Asa Gray, LL.D. of Cambridge, Mass. A number of Arabic names are recorded and some few places indentified with Scripture sites. The second party left New York in June, 1875, to continue the survey in Moab and Gilead. Lieut. Steever is succeeded by Col. J. C. Lane, chief, Rev. Selah Merrill is Archæologist, R. Meyer and Mr. Treat assistant engineers. Their instruments are new and the most important were constructed here expressly for their use. There are also French, German and Russian societies at work in Palestine with the best scientific appliances of men and materials.

The Russians are careful in selecting men for their consulates, especially at the important posts of Jerusalem and Joppa, who are well trained in the schools and in the field, and who have made some mark in the world of letters. It was the Russians who recognized the value and bought the sculptured head of Hadrian last year in Jerusalem.

The English Fund Society have had their men at work in the field about three and a half years, and have had recently besides the chief, Lieutenant Conder, Captain Anderson, Corporal Armstrong, Sergeant Black, Mr. Drake (who died June 23d 1874), and Mr. Clermont Ganneau. The local committee in Jerusalem is the British Consul, Mr. Moore, and the Honorary Secretary and Physician, Dr. Chaplin. The published results of their work fill two volumes, "The Recovery of Jerusalem," and "Our Work in Palestine," extracts from which are to be found in this DICTIONARY. The map is not promised complete before 1877. Some parts of it have been published from time to time as illustrations to the Quarterly Report, and in other works.

The work of the survey of Palestine is peculiar. Greece, Italy, Asia Minor, Egypt and other countries have their ruined cities and isolated temples, which are sometimes a day's journey apart one from another, but Palestine has ruins of cities, temples, and other works thickly scattered over every square mile of the country. The remains of one empire are heaped upon those of another preceding one. Canaanite, Phœnician, Hebrew, Egyptian, Assyrian, Greek, Roman, Christian, Saracen, and Turk have built works that have crumbled away or been pulled down to be rebuilt or covered over. The decay of empires, the storm of conquest, the fury of barbaric irruption, the raids of Bedawins, the oppressive exactions of a foreign tyrannical government, and the sharp, selfish, intolerant hate of religious sects, tell the story of change, decay, ruin, and desolation which broods over Palestine above all other countries. It is a nation of ruins. What the Grecian army destroyed, the Grecian artists restored and improved; so also did the Roman, but when the Saracens came they, like the locust, destroyed but did not restore.

Fine sculptures are daily burned into lime, as at Tel-Hum, where the ruined synagogue in size and ornamentation when sketched by me in 1853 was one of the most extensive and interesting remains of Hebrew art in Palestine. Major Wilson planned what was left of it in 1866, and last year I found that the lime-burners had nearly finished their work. There are few very ancient structures in the Holy Land. Ancient materials are in abundance, but found rebuilt into middle-age or modern structures.

The Herod family are found to have been industrious and prodigal builders of temples, theatres, palaces, walls, aqueducts and roads. Their most notable works were a pagan temple, at Cæsarea, the remains of which were found close to the Christian cathedral; castles at Bethshan, the Samaritan temple on Gerizim, the third temple at Jerusalem, the palace and castle at Machærus, the rock-hewn rooms at Arak-el-Emir, and the fortified cities of Sepphoris and Tiberias, and his tomb at Fureïdis.

Of remains of the ages before that of the Herods there are, as yet very few identified. The foundation-walls of the temple area at Jerusalem are assigned to Hiram's builders, because of the Phœnician marks found on the stones as guides to the workmen in placing them in the wall, and, also for the marginal draft called a bevil. Similar Phœnician work is found at Hebron, Solomon's Pools, Paneas, Baalbek, and many other places. The works uncovered at the Bishops' School for Orphans on Mount Zion, are believed to have been ancient in David's time, since the Jebusites held it as a stronghold against the Hebrews, from the time of Joshua until David took it,—a period of about four hundred years. The so-called Tombs of the Kings, north of the city of Jerusalem, are, probably, no older than the age of the Herods. There are many undoubted ancient tombs of Hebrew excavation, as for instance, the tombs of the Maccabees at Modin, (now called El Meydeh,) described by Josephus. The tomb of Hamarath in the Hauran, is a specimen of the influence of Greek art on native ideas in the time of the Herods, and another example occurs in the curious temple of Siah, near Canatha. The custom of rebuilding from old materials has obscured the identity of all antique buildings in Jerusalem, except the temple area foundations, and the lower part of the so-called David's Tower, near the Jaffa Gate. The city everywhere inside the walls, with very few exceptions, has risen on its accumulations of rubbish, until the present surface is from ten to sixty feet above the original rock on which David and Solomon walked, and probably thirty feet above the soil on which the Saviour stood. The altar Ed, mentioned in Joshua xxii. 34, is identified as the present Kurn Surtabeh in the Jordan valley. There are a few rude stone monuments, said to belong to the "stone age," or a very early period of the history of man. Three groups are described, and we have seen in Palestine, Sinai and Arabia no less than fifteen. One near Jerusalem, north, is called Kabur beni Israelim, and another eastward is not named.

The usual estimate of the extreme antiquity of ruins in Palestine, is exaggerated. The antiquities must be searched out among the modern works, and carefully distinguished as Saracenic, Crusader's, Hebraic, Phœnician, or older. The traces of purely Jewish art are hardly worth mention. They were originally dwellers in tents, their holy place was under a tent until Solomon built the temple, and their instincts led them to avoid architecture as well as sculpture, and all other arts, unless music is admitted an exception.

The life and theology were simple; complications in either were borrowed from or imported by other people The works of others than the Hebrews, therefore, form the greater part of the history of Palestine. The Phœnicians built strong places, but as to ornament, no remains have been discovered, except in sepulchral monuments above or below the surface. The only Phœnician tomb yet found south of Tyre, is at Athlit. Descriptions of their skill we have in the account of the building of Solomon's Temple and in Homer and other ancient writers.

The Assyrians left no art works beside the monuments in memory of their barbaric raids, and very few of them. The Greeks and Romans filled the country with works of all kinds,—temples, theatres, aqueducts, castles, palaces, city walls, and paved roads. They built cities in every part of the land.

One of the most interesting remains of the first century A. D. is the site of Bether, south-west of Jerusalem, where Barcochab led the Jews in their last revolt against the Romans. The place is naturally strong and, artificially, must have been against slings and bows almost impregnable. The age of Justinian was one of activity in building, the remains being found throughout the country, as the two great convents of St. John and of Gilgal in the Jordan Valley, and the Convent Castle (Dayr Kalaah.) The Crusaders built magnificent castles on every strong point, well cut limestone or basalt, some of which were beautifully finished within. The finest now remaining is at Athlit, where the pilgrims first landed in Palestine in the twelfth century. The remains are of great masses of masonry, strong bastioned walls, great vaults running the whole length across the town, groined roofs, sculptured capitals, and give a hint of the grandeur of the work in its best days. The most skilful military architects and engineers of Europe, and the resources of prosperous nations must have been employed. One other noble specimen of their work was a church, and is now a mosk, at Ramleh. Christian buildings of every kind were very numerous in the Hauran.

Saracenic work everywhere is distinguished by its use of small size stones cemented with a material that is now much harder than the stone, and by the peculiar form of the arches. The work of the Mohammedans in the Hauran was of a better class. When the new map of Palestine is published the reader will be able to see at a glance the position of remains of the different ages, and the great number of sites examined by the survey. The observations on the climate and physical character of the country have been constant and are satisfactory. The new map will also show the present extent of vegetation,—groves, gardens, orchards, olive-yards, and vineyards. A large oak forest has been found on the plain of Sharon, undescribed before, and a great number of stunted palm-trees in the Jordan valley, near Bethshan. The general conclusion is that the seasons, rainfall, and vegetation now closely resemble those of the Bible times. Remains of a much more extensive area of cultivation are found in every district, more numerous among the hills, where abandoned terraces, wine and olive presses and vineyard walls and towers indicate occupation in former times.

In geology the work has been extensive and minute. An examination of less than a half of the country has yielded more than 4,000 names of places, which will furnish material for the archæologist in Biblical illustration of the several ages of the history of Palestine, for it appears that every conquering people gave peculiar names to their cities, which, wherever they have been preserved, show the presence at those places of the different peoples.

Of inscriptions not a great number have been found, and the only ones of the age of Joshua, or before the age of the Herods, are those of the Levitical city of Gezer, marking its boundaries and naming the city as Gezer, and the famous Moabite stone found at Dibon, in Moab, giving an account of events about the time of Omri, King of Israel. The inscribed stone from Herod's (third Solomon's) Temple contained a warning to strangers not to pass inside the balustrade of the temple-court.

There have been several localities identified with lost Scripture sites, among them are the Springs of Enon, the scene of John the Baptist's work; the Rock Oreb, and the Wine-Press of Zeeb, where Gideon killed the chiefs of the Midianites, who were the Bedawins of that age. A heretofore unknown city, supposed to be the ruins of Sozuza, have been found ten miles west from Shechem. It was once the seat of a bishopric, and a strong-place, with all the belongings of a well-built town.

The survey has made it possible to follow the steps of Abraham, and to look, as he and Lot did, over the distant plain of the Jordan, from the height between Bethel and Ai. To follow David in all his wanderings, except that in the case of the cave of Adullam, two or three sites answer to the text, in size, accessibility, defensible position, and habitability. Nearly every place mentioned in the accounts of the Saviour, and of the Apostles can now be described. Some uncertainty remains over the question of the site of Capernaum, which can only be ascertained by some ancient local inscription giving its name, being found on one of the several sites now advocated by different persons as the true Capernaum. The same may be said as regards the sites of the Temple of Solomon and of the Holy Sepulchre and of Calvary. At present those sites seem to have been hopelessly lost.

Several corrections of the Hebrew text of the Old Testament, or of our King James' version of it, have been suggested by the survey. The word translated forest in 1 Samuel xxi. 5, means city, and a ruin of the same name is found in the proper locality. In chapter xxvi. of the same book, the Hebrew word Choresh is translated wood, and should not be translated, as it is a name, and still known, attached to a ruin near Ziph.

The route of the Exode can be followed almost exactly through the first and the last years, leaving thirty-eight years of the wandering a blank, as it is in the Pentateuch. The site of Kadesh still bears the same name written in Arabic, with only the necessary variation required by the language. This is also true of nearly all of the Bible names throughout the country. The only exceptions, being such names as have been translated into Arabic, or more ancient Greek, or Latin, when a reverse translation restores the original Hebrew name. Wherever the survey has worked, on either side of the Jordan, new places and names have been found answering the requirements of Bible text, and confirming the truth of the record as far as geography can sustain the sacred history.

BETHLEHEM.—Foremost among the renowned places of the world since the Saviour's birth has been this little place. Neither history nor tradition has ever lost sight of it. As the traveler climbs the terraced ascent which leads to it from the Mar Saba road, or passes along the winding way from the Holy City, memories of many Christmas Days fill his heart and overflow from his eyes. He thinks of the Jewish mother who so many years ago came up with her husband and the great crowd of travelers to that little village, and "found no room in the inn." On the eastern brow of the ridge on which Bethlehem stands is a great convent, looking stern and lowering like some ancient castle. The pile of buildings is enormous, and is composed of the Church of the Nativity, with the three convents, Latin, Greek and Armenian, on its north-eastern, south-eastern and south-western sides. From here the traveler can look down upon the actual scenes of Scripture stories familiar to him from childhood. Yonder are the fields where the blushing Ruth gleaned barley and walked with her mother-in-law, Naomi; not far off Jacob buried his beloved wife Rachel, "in the way to Ephrath, which is Bethlehem." Under these starry skies David tended his flocks, and defended them from the lion and the bear or from human robbers. And in the adjoining fields the shepherds heard the angels celebrating the birth of the little Child whose cradle was a manger and whose attendants the beasts of the stall. And over those hills had come strange, foreign-looking men speaking an unknown tongue, guided by a single star which stopped and pointed with silver finger to where the young Child lay.

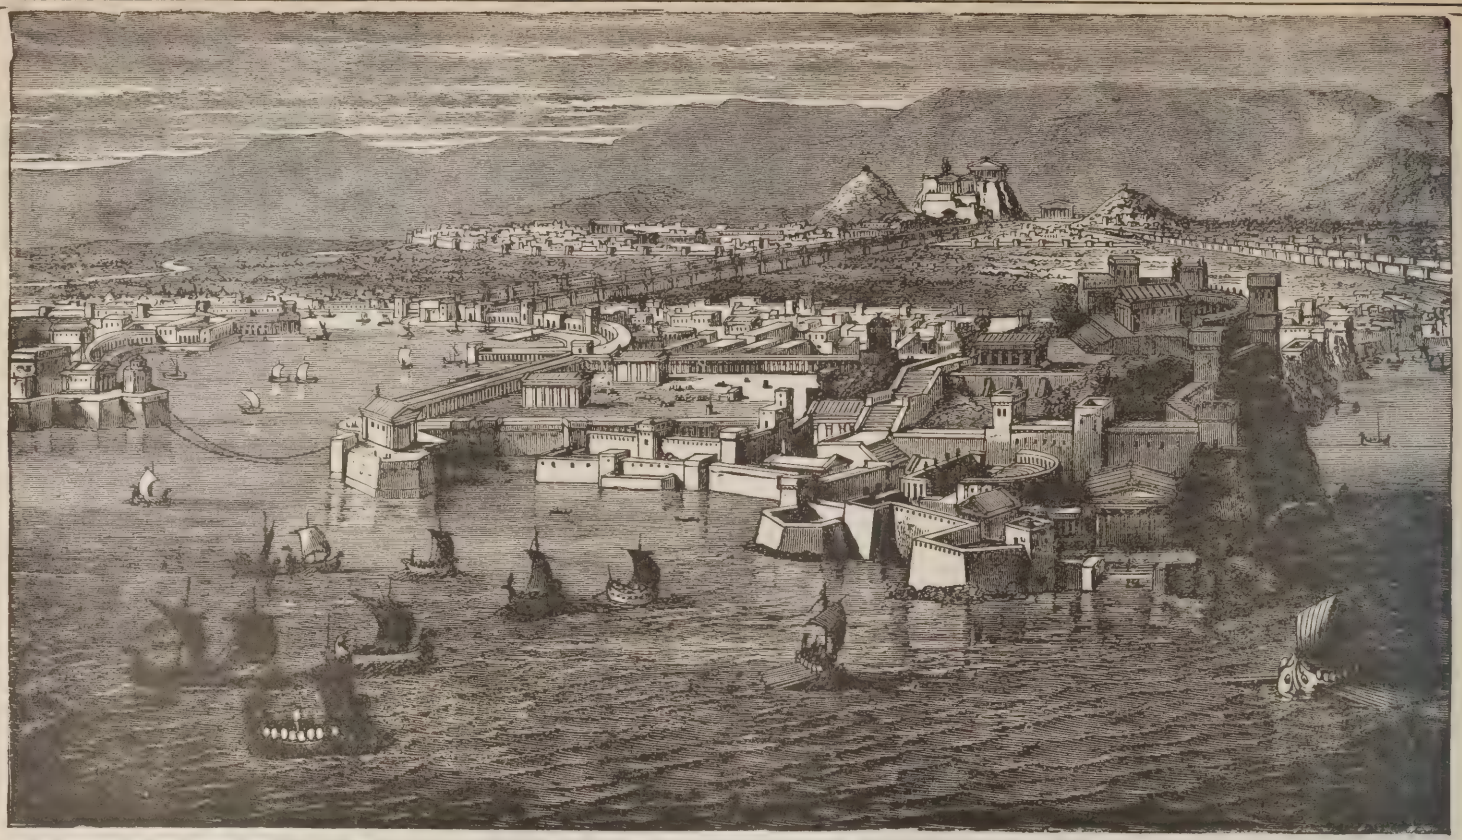
They had found their rightful King, and they worship him and present gifts of gold and frankincense and myrrh. No town mentioned in the Bible has gathered around itself so many associations.

The present inhabitants of the place are said to be three or four thousand in number, and to be all Christians. They live by the cultivation of their fields and by selling relics, coins and rare specimens of antiquity.

JERUSALEM.—It is strange to think of the early history of Jerusalem, and to call to mind for how many years the place was a heathen fortress before the "chosen people" took possession of it and dedicated it to the Lord. After David was proclaimed king over all Israel he made an expedition against Jerusalem, which was then called Jebus, because inhabited by Jebusites, the decendants of a son of Canaan. Upon the ruins of the Jebusite castle David erected his palace and called it "the city of David." Thirty-seven years later, Solomon laid the foundations of the temple on the opposite hill of Moriah, on the "threshing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite," and Jerusalem thus became the sacred and civil capital of the Jewish nation. But the vices of royalty soon divided the kingdom; all the tribes but two revolted from the rule of Rehoboam, son of Solomon, and elected Jeroboam, an Ephraimite, as their ruler. Omri, the fifth from Jeroboam, built Samaria, which was thenceforth the capital of Israel. The kingdom of Judah survived that of Israel one hundred and thirty-three years, and then it, too, fell before an Eastern monarch, Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, who destroyed Solomon's temple and carried off its sacred vessels, and took many of the Jews captive to Babylon.

After the capture of Babylon by Cyrus the captives were sent back to their own city, which they began to rebuild, and also the temple. Herod the Great, of Idumean origin, obtained the title of king of Judea from Rome in the year B. C. 38. During his reign the last temple was mostly built, though not completed till some time after his death. Not a stone of this temple now remains, and its very site is a matter of dispute, it having been destroyed by Titus for years after the Crucifixion.

NAZARETH.—This place is interesting from having been the spot where the childhood and manhood of the Saviour were passed before he entered upon his ministerial work. Yet, strangely enough, there remain no authentic records of the early life of Jesus. After his conversation with the doctors in the temple at Jerusalem, we are told that he went with his parents to Nazareth, and was subject unto them. Luke 2 : 41–52. And the fact that the veil of silence or oblivion is thrown over these early years of our Lord should be a source of great comfort to all Christian parents, because it teaches that the childhood of the Saviour was easily and naturally developed, as that of their own children should be, under the quiet influences of careful home-training—"first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear." The village is on the side of a hill, as we are reminded upon reading Luke 4 : 29. The present population of the town is about four thousand, and its locality is undoubtedly the same as in our Saviour's time. The view from the hills behind the town is one of surpassing loveliness, taking in the plain of Esdraelon, the snowy head of Hermon, the long dark ridge of Carmel, and in the dim distance the whitening crest of the Mediterranean Sea.

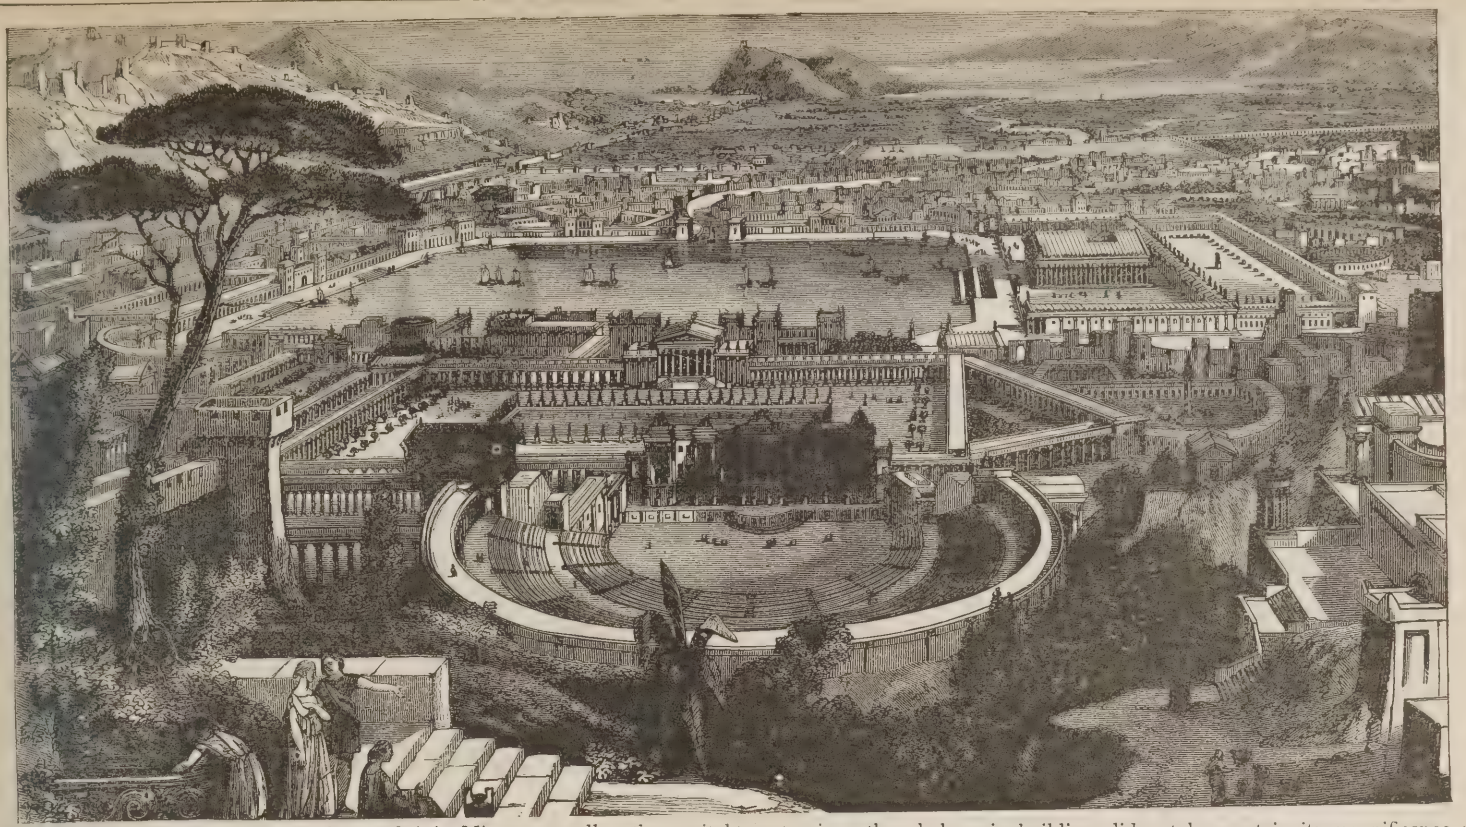


ROME.—The Eternal City is a place of crumbling palaces. The Seven Hills themselves have mouldered into one mass of ruin. The concussions of war, time and barbarism have leveled the old landmarks with which we are familiar in the pages of Livy, Tacitus and Virgil: they have bereaved not only the Palatine of its splendor, but the Tarpeian of its height. We descend, not ascend, to the Pantheon; and in a few damp, dreary and subterranean dungeons we survey the only relics of the gigantic palace of the Cæsars, the "Domus Aurea," the wonder of the ancient world.

But Rome, even in its ruins, still has a history. One may read the records of twenty-five hundred years in all these crumbling monuments. Stand upon the Capitol, and yonder you see the hills on which Hannibal encamped. Through those gates victorious legions marched. The Forum, where great Cæsar fell and Cicero fulminated against Cataline, is before us. There runs the Appian Way, once trodden by the feet of a prisoner from Jerusalem who was to win for his Master a nobler victory, and for himself a more imperishable crown, than Romans ever knew. And there stretches the vast Campagna, desolate and sad, peopled with funereal hollows, a vision that falls dead upon the heart. But a better day is dawning for Rome and Italy, when Protestant civilization shall wave her magic wand, and call forth the city from her ashes, and clothe her, the modern Cinderella, with new and lasting beauty.

THESSALONICA (Acts 27 : 2).—This was the capital of one of the prætorial districts of Macedonia. This city was named after Thessalonice, wife of Cassander, who founded the city on the site of the ancient Thermæ. It was once the principal city of the second division of Macedonia, styled by some writers the metropolis. Its situation was important, on what is now the Gulf of Salonichi (which is also the modern name of the city), at the mouth of the river Echedorus. The queen from whom it took its name is said to have been murdered by her own son, Antipater. Thessalonica was situated 267 miles east from Apollonia, 66 miles from Amphipolis, 89 from Philippi and 433 west from Byzantium.

In the time of the apostle Paul a great many Jews were residents of the city, and also a large number of Christians, converts from the Jewish population. At this time Jews are said to be very numerous in the town, possessing much influence, but yet very exclusive. At the north-eastern extremity of the bay rises a steep hill on which the present city is laid out, and, like most Eastern towns, the exterior is more prepossessing than the interior. It is not rich in antiquities, but there are the remains of triumphal arches erected to Augustus and Constantine, and also of the ancient hippodrome. The ancient walls are nearly entire, and are five or six miles in circuit. The present population is about sixty thousand.



ATHENS.—As Paul stood on Mars' Hill in Athens a grand scene lay before him on either side. Standing with his face to the north, the long walls of the city would be behind him, and the harbor of the Piræus on one side and that of Phalerum on the other. Not far off in the sea lay the island of Salamis, immortalized as the spot near which Athenian valor chastised Asiatic pride and achieved the liberty of Greece. On the right hand of the apostle stood the hill called the Pnyx, where Demosthenes and other famous orators had captivated and inspired multitudes. Just before him lay the crowded city, studded in every part with monuments sacred to religion or patriotism, the brightest achievements of artistic skill. On his left might be seen the Academy, with its groves, walls, fountains, temples, altars and statues. And near by, on the hill of the Acropolis, were clustered such monuments of art and memorials of the national religion as the world has never seen before or since. On Mars' Hill itself there also stood the temple of the Furies, the court-house of the council, and other national and commemorative edifices. Here, then, as in the time of Demosthenes, with the sky of Attica above, the monuments of wealth and art on every side, and the sea glistening in the distance, Paul stood almost in the very footprints of the orator of Greece, and delivered before the sages of Athens his unrivaled discourse.

GATES AT NICÆA (now ISNIK) in BITHYNIA

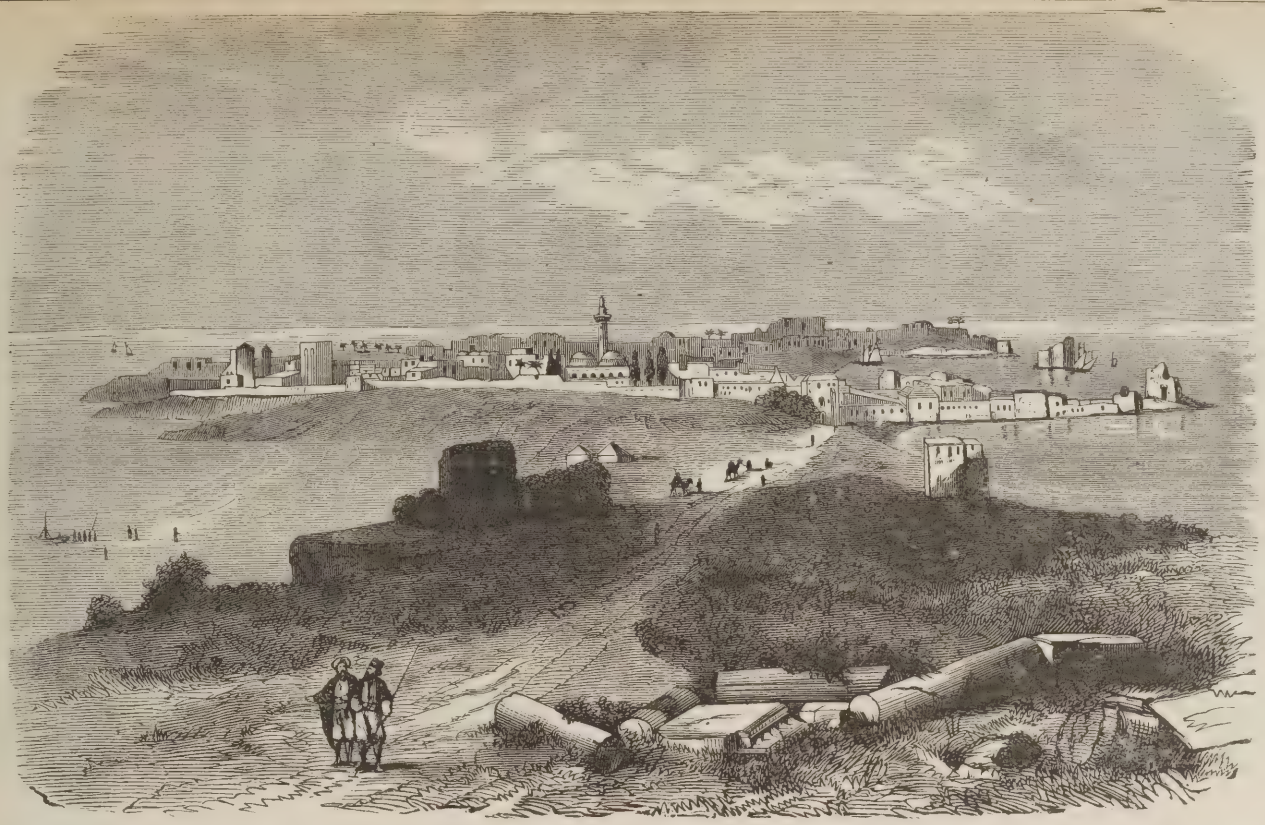
GATES AT NICÆA.—Nice, whose ancient name was Nicæa, was formerly an important city of Bithynia in Asia Minor, of which some ruins still remain. It is famed in ecclesiastical history as having been the seat of the first general council of the Church, which met in the year 325, convoked by Constantine the Great for the purpose of settling the Arian controversy. More than three hundred bishops assembled, called from all parts of the civilized world wherever Christianity had penetrated. After a protracted debate, Arius was condemned as heretical, and the council established the confession of faith known as the Nicene Creed, in which, contrary to the tenets of Arius and his party, and in accordance with the belief of the majority of Christendom, the deity of Christ is plainly set forth. This same council also debated the question of celebrating Easter on the same day throughout the world, as the custom of the Eastern and Western churches in regard to it had differed.

An attempt was made at this council to enact a canon enforcing the celibacy of the clergy, but it was defeated. The modern town, called Isnick, contains a few hundred houses, inhabited mostly by Jews, who are engaged in the manufacturing of earthenware and in selling silks, camel's hair and other costly and choice fabrics.

EPHESUS.—This was the chief city of Asia Minor, as well as the capital of the province of Asia. Its natural advantages were very great, and these were largely developed in the time of the New Testament history. The fame of its commercial enterprise was world-wide, and the beauty of its celebrated temple, dedicated to the goddess Artemis, or Diana, evoked the wonder and praise of all beholders. For the construction of this temple the most renowned architects were employed; its foundations were laid with the utmost care; the very purest marble of a dazzling whiteness was obtained from Mount Prion; and the Greek cities throughout Asia vied with each other in helping on the work. But this great masterpiece, though long in building, did not long retain its magnificence and beauty. The fanatical Erostratus applied the torch to it on Alexander's birth night, and thus made himself immortal, while its maker's name has not survived. The temple was, however, rebuilt, and in a more sumptuous manner; and in the time of St. Paul the sale of images of its goddess Diana was very extensive and lucrative. Acts 19:24. Travelers visiting the shrine would not depart without some memorial. The size of the temple, as given by the best authorities, was, in length 425 feet, breadth 320 feet, with columns 60 feet high. The number of columns was 127, each the gift of a king, and 37 of them were adorned and ornamented.

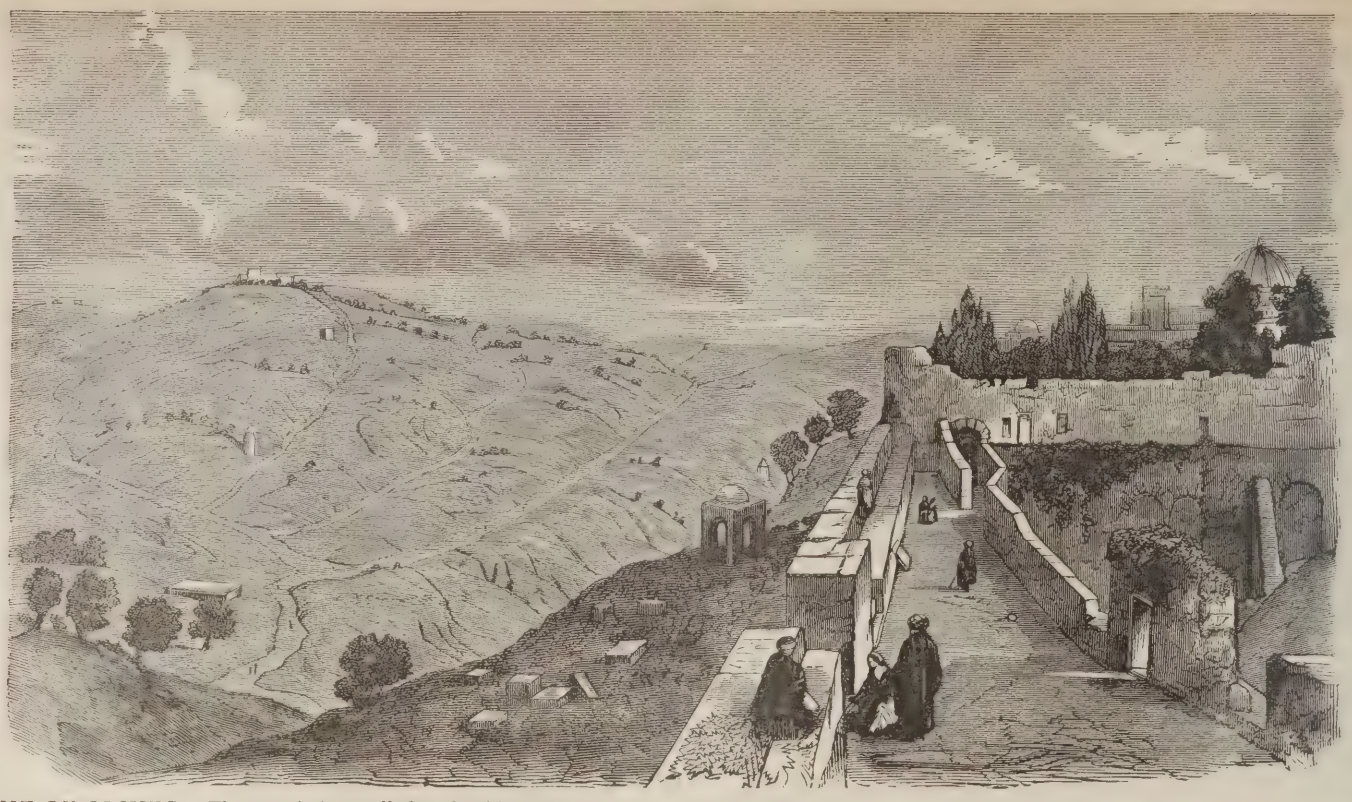
THE APPIAN WAY.—This was the largest, the oldest and the most frequented of the roads by which the city of Rome was reached. It approached the city from the south, and every step of the way was memorable from the monuments erected to commemorate the dead of many generations. Here were the sepulchres of the Scipios, the Furii, the Manilii, the Servilii, Calatini and Marcelli. Near the gate of the city were the twin temples of Honor and Virtue, vowed by the great Marcellus for his conquest of Syracuse. From the steps of these temples the populace had greeted Cicero on his return from exile.

On entering Rome the road becomes a street, and houses, before interspersed between monuments and temples, become more dense and continuous, though the avenue is still broad, spacious, magnificently paved, and fitted for the grand military processions with which the emperors were accustomed to delight the populace. Upon this "queen of roads," as the Via Appia was termed, the apostle Paul walked, a captive, to the imperial city. And while of the many thousand generals and orators and statesmen who trod that way at the same time that he entered Rome not a trace remains, the poor captive, "of bodily presence weak and in speech contemptible," has left a name more enduring than the city's proudest monuments to mere earthly heroes, and an influence co-extensive with the human race.



DAMASCUS.—There is a story told of Mohammed, that on his first visit to Damascus, when the city in all its verdant loveliness burst upon his sight, he turned away, refusing to enter it, saying that "as there was but one paradise, he was resolved not to have his in this world." Travelers are almost unanimous in speaking of the tranquillizing effect of its quiet loveliness. It is one of the most ancient cities of the ancient world, going back to the time when the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. Josephus tells us that Uz, the son of Aram, was its founder, but his authority for this statement is not forthcoming. After the dispersion at Babel it is quite probable that some of the wanderers found their way to the banks of the river Abana, and so established a city on one of the most enticing spots of that country. In Abraham's time, nearly forty centuries ago, the city was a flourishing place. The two rivers, Abana and Pharpar, are so beautiful and the cause of so much cleanliness and verdure that one can hardly wonder at the preference which the leper Naaman expressed for them. 2 Kings 5 : 12. Damascus has undergone many changes of government, and flourished more or less under each dynasty. Neither Persian despotism nor Grecian anarchy, Roman patronage nor Moslem misrule, have been able wholly to destroy its prestige among ancien capitals.

The Presbyterian Church of America is doing a very successful Christian : educational work in this city.



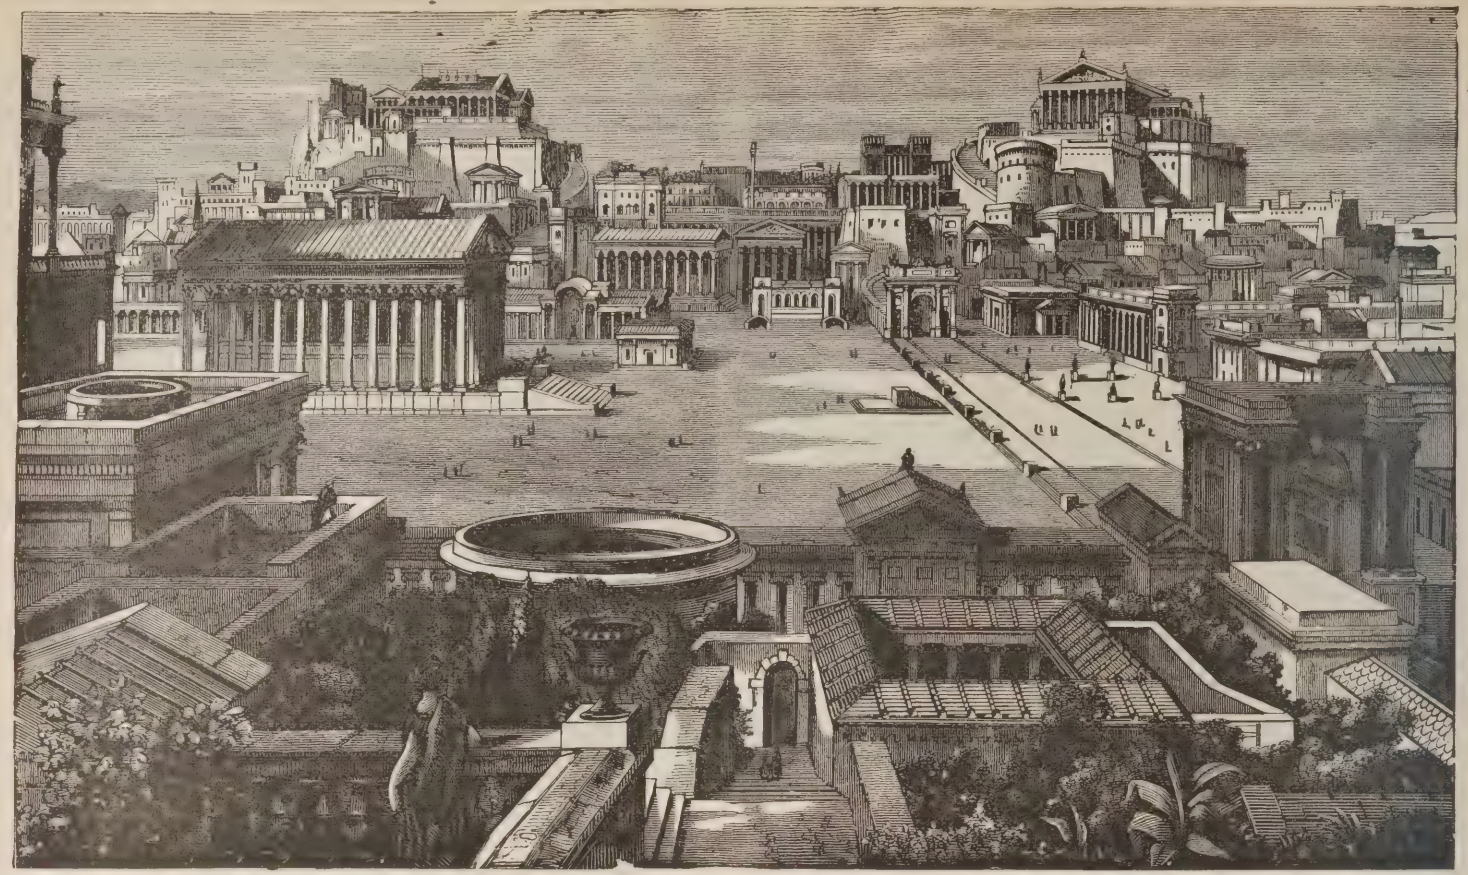
MOUNT HERMON.—The basin of the Lake of Galilee is bounded on the north by a chain of hills, dividing it from a still more northern valley known as the valley of Merom, in which is the small lake of Merom. This valley is totally surrounded, but toward the north it is closed by the peaks of a lofty mountain, which is the concluding elevation of a long chain of hills descending from the north, here at the southern extremity reaching their greatest height, and there abruptly terminating and overhanging the valley of Merom. This chain of hills is known to us by the name of Lebanon, and this southern loftiest spur of the range is Hermon. Upon this mountain was the scene of the Saviour's transfiguration. Mark 9 : 2, 3. Its crest is generally covered with snow, making it a prominent landmark. The view from its summit is one of the most beautiful in the Holy Land. One can trace the outline of the Lake of Galilee, the valley of the Jordan, the heights of Tabor and Carmel, the positions of Nazareth and Samaria. Then toward the west the shores of the Mediterranean would be visible, and the coast of Tyre and Sidon. This mountain was a perpetual symbol of beauty and fertility to the surrounding country: "His fruit shall shake like Lebanon." Among the deep yearnings which filled the heart of the Hebrew lawgiver was the one distinct longing for the goodly mountain, even Lebanon.

TYRE—or, according to its ancient name, Tzur—was built upon a promontory jutting out of the Phœnician plain, and also on a rugged seagirt rock. It has been almost impossible to ascertain its ancient topography. According to the best authorities, the city was originally founded on the rocky island, then gradually spread along the shores of the mainland. When the city was destroyed by the armies of Alexander, he gave the name of Palæ-Tyrus, or ancient Tyre, to the ruins, in order to distinguish them from the new city, which he built partly on the island and partly on the causeway which joined it to the shore. The ancient city fully deserves the beautiful description of the prophet and poet. Ezek. 27 : 3–26. Like a stately ship with her "masts of cedar" and her "sails of purple and fine linen," she sat upon the sunny sea; but now, like that same ship with tattered sails and scattered masts, she lies upon the shore, at once a terror and a warning to all who trust in mere material greatness and prosperity, and forget the Giver of every good and perfect gift. No contrast could be greater than that between the city in its pride and power and in its decay and desolation; and its present condition is a wonderful illustration of the divine power of prophecy which was given to the Hebrew seer, enabling him to foretell, as in the face of all past and present experience, the dissolution of the mighty Phœnician power.

CAPERNAUM signifies the "field of repentance" or "city of comfort." This city, with those of Chorazin and Bethsaida, was situated upon the shore of the Sea of Galilee, and yet so completely have all these cities been destroyed that it is impossible to determine their respective sites with any degree of exactness. It was to Capernaum that our Saviour came after leaving Nazareth. It was called "his own city." Matt. 9 : 1. Here he began to preach, and here many of his most noted miracles were performed. The people were astonished at his teaching; still, upon the mass of them his gracious words and loving deeds were thrown away; they preferred darkness rather than light. And these words of comfort give place to words of condemnation: "Thou, Capernaum, that art exalted to heaven, shall be thrust down to hell." Luke 10 : 15. Involved in one common fate with Chorazin and Bethsaida, among its neglected ruins no sounds are heard, no vestiges of life are seen, utter desolation prevails. A solemn warning is this deserted city to all who despise gospel privileges and neglect the great salvation.

MOUNT OF OLIVES.—The associations called up by this name are among the most sacred and pleasing connected with our Saviour's history. The "mount" is so intimately concerned with his private life that we read of it and look at it with feelings of deepest interest and affection. Here he sat with his disciples, and told them of the wondrous events which were yet to come—of the destruction of the Holy City, of the sufferings, persecutions and final triumph of his followers. Matt. 24. Here he narrated the parables of the ten virgins and the five talents. Matt. 25. Here he was accustomed to retire each evening for meditation and prayer, and rest of body when weary and harassed by the labors and trials of the day. And here he came on the night of his betrayal to utter that wonderful heart-breaking prayer: "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt." And when the cup had been drained, and death and the grave had been conquered, he led his disciples out again over Olivet, as far as to Bethany, and after a parting blessing ascended to heaven. Luke 24: 50, 51. This mountain is situated immediately beyond the Kedron, on the east of, or, as it is expressed in the Bible, "before," Jerusalem. It was open ground for the dwellers in the city for any purpose, either pleasure or wor ship, and doubtless had its name from the abundance of olives which grew upon it

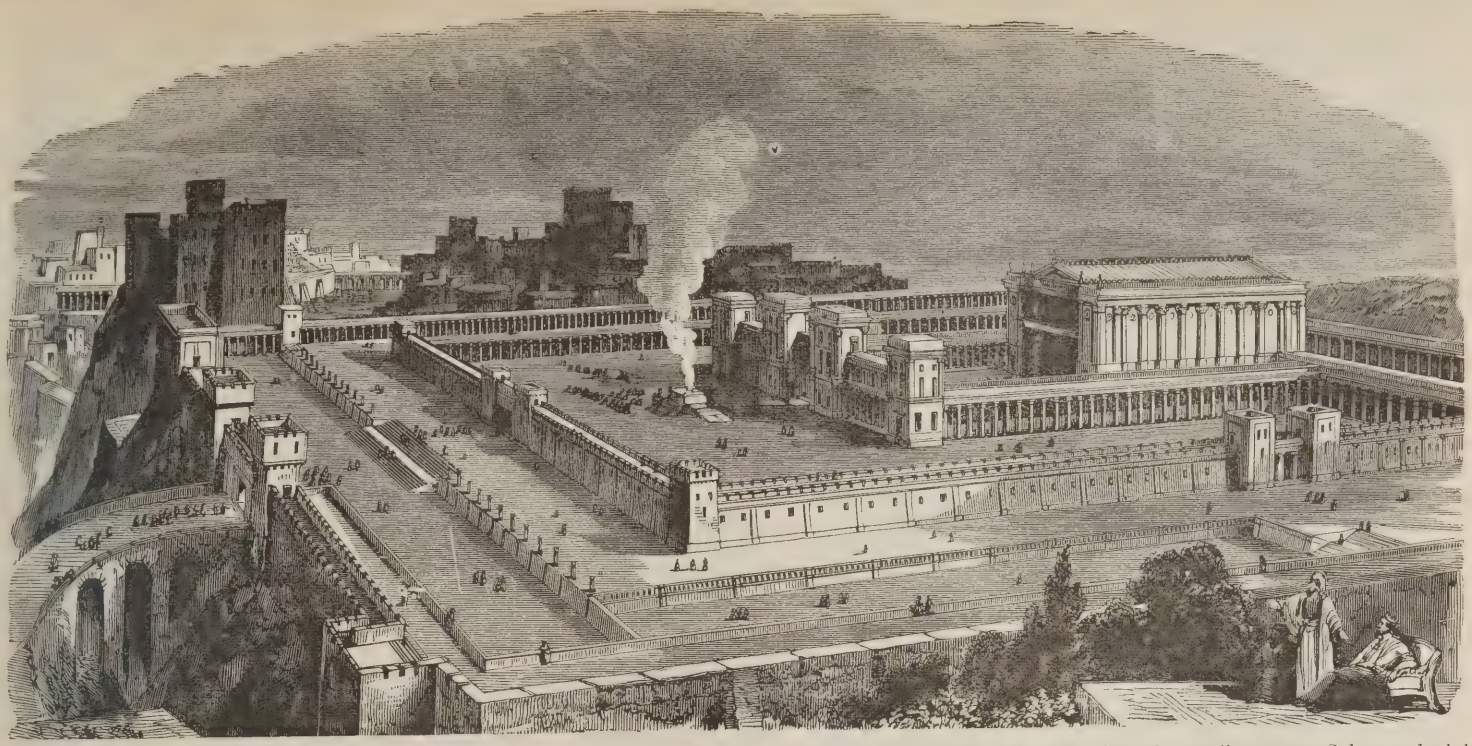
WAY TO JERICHO.—"A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves." Luke 10: 30. How instinctively does the parable of the good Samaritan come into our mind as we think of this city! And though nearly nineteen centuries have passed since our Lord taught us the beautiful story, the circumstances which gave rise to it in his day, and the details of the story, can be witnessed even now in that country. The journey to Jericho from Jerusalem is literally a "going down" over a rough, rugged road. In the Saviour's time, Palestine, in its mountain-passes, was infested by robbers, as Josephus informs us; and on this road in particular it was necessary at one period to station a Roman guard. In consequence of its many dangers it became known as the "road of blood." To this day travelers are not permitted to traverse it without an escort well mounted and armed. The Jericho of the prophet's and the Jericho of Herod's time are not the same, though only a mile and a half apart. The former was the city to which Joshua sent the spies who were hidden by Rahab (Josh. 2.), and the same city was destroyed by the Israelites after a siege of seven days; five centuries afterward it was rebuilt, and a school of prophets clustered there.



CORINTH (Acts 18: 1)—This was a renowned and voluptuous city of Greece, about twenty-five miles west of Athens, in which Paul resided a year and a half, and where he founded the church to which he afterward addressed two of his Epistles. Situated on the isthmus that separates the Ægean from the Ionian Sea, and possessing singular advantages for commerce, as it was a mart for the exchange of Asiatic and Italian goods, it became celebrated for its wealth and magnificence, as well as the learning and ingenuity of its inhabitants.

The splendor of its arts and its architecture was almost incredible. But whilst commerce made its people wealthy, it made them also luxurious and licentious. More than a century and a half before St. Paul visited Corinth the old city had been destroyed by Julius Cæsar, but it was rebuilt, and again it became the centre of commercial traffic, and was an important position for the preaching and spreading of the gospel. The new city was, however, more distinguished than the old, by being more devoted to art, literature and philosophy; and we find that the great tendency of the Corinthian converts was to speculation upon matters of faith, and to value their intellectual gifts and acquirements more than the grace of charity. Preaching Christ crucified was to many of them a stumbling-block, and to more of them foolishness, while to the faithful it was the power of God and the wisdom of God.

CANA OF GALILEE.—It would be a pleasant thing if one were able to identify this scene of our Saviour's first miracle with the certainty which attaches to such places as Bethlehem and Jerusalem and Nazareth. There is something so human, something which appeals so strikingly to the element of joy in man's nature, when we find the Lord of all presiding at a marriage feast, that we feel instinctively what a comfort it would be to stand upon the spot where "the conscious water saw its God and blushed"! And yet this is not permitted to us, for authorities differ as to the exact site of Cana—some inclining to a village of that name situated in a corner of the basin of Sepphorieh, and others to a town somewhat nearer Nazareth.



If we remember that the Holy Family dwelt at Nazareth, this fact might help to decide us in favor of the Cana which was nearest their home. According to a long-received opinion, it is a small village about fifteen miles north-west of Tiberias and six miles north-east of Nazareth. This village is now called Kefr Kenna, and is under the government of a Turkish officer. Of course, as far as the Scripture narrative goes, there is nothing decisive, except as to the fact of the gracious miracle which the Saviour performed, by which he meant to teach that our heavenly Father keeps all his best things in reserve for those who love him. Another town of the same name (Kanah) belonged to the tribes of Asher, and seems to have been near Sidon.

THE ETERNAL CITY.—Rome, in all her magnificence and splendor, bursts on our view from an eminence in its vicinity, bringing within the scope of vision Jupiter Tonans; the Temple of Concord (Opimius, by massacres and executions, cut off the most active of his opponents, and then, in piety and in imitation of Camillus, built a temple to Concord); the Roman Forum, from whose infernal cauldron boiled forth, for a thousand years, every turbulent passion of the human mind; Jupiter Stator; Temple to Antoninus and Faustina; Temple of Peace; Arch of Constantine, a memorable instance and record of the instability of human power and uncertainty of triumphal honors. The Arch of Titus, with all its tumultuous reminiscences respecting the destruction of Jerusalem and dispersion of God's chosen people, is one of the most exciting objects of contemplation in the Roman Forum. The Palatine Hill, so long the throne of the haughty Cæsars, whose imperial rescripts and mandates moved the mighty engine of the Roman empire; the Pantheon, the "pride of Rome;" the Appian Way, where the beauteous Zenobia, queen of the East, fainting under fetters and chains of gold which required a slave for their support, was forced to walk before the magnificent chariot of the victor Aurelian, which was drawn by four elephants and followed by the most illustrious of the senate, the people and the army.

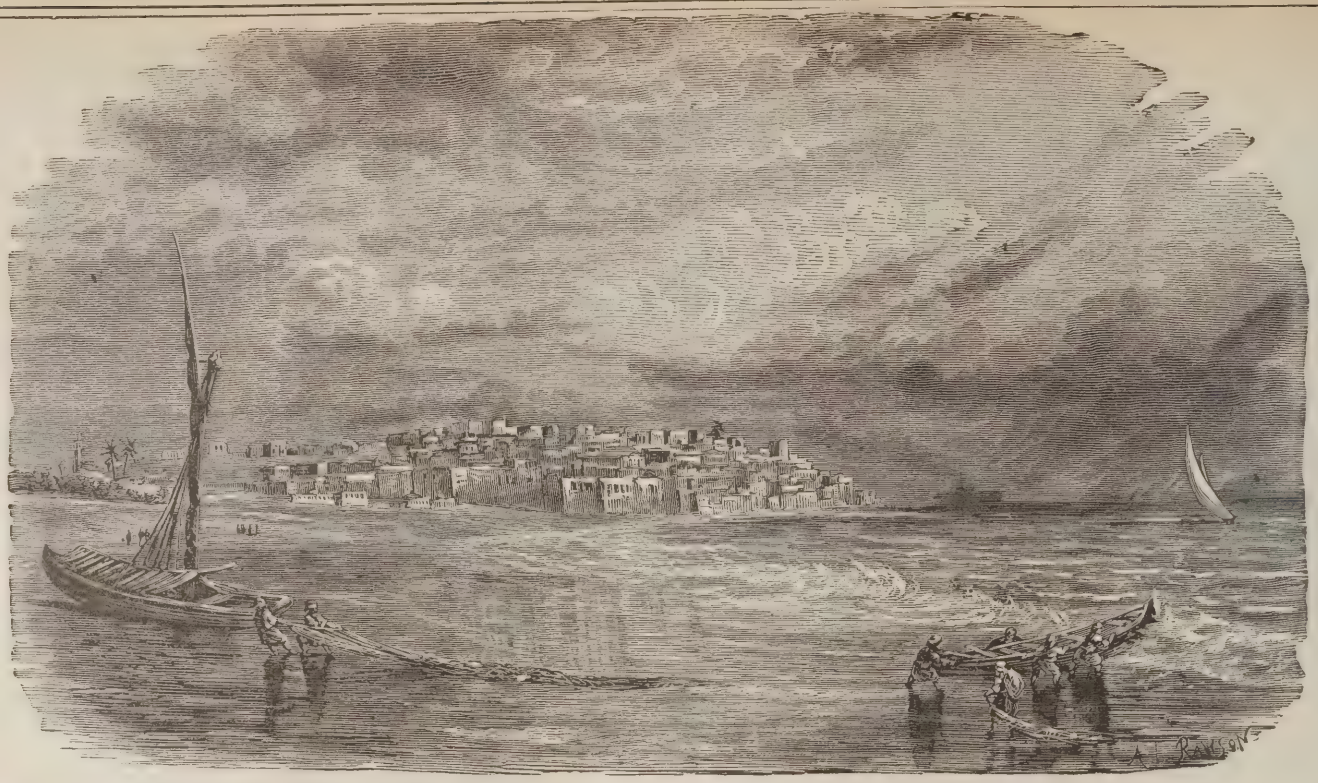
JEZREEL.—The plain of Esdraelon is one of the most fertile in all Palestine, though at this day its cultivation is very much neglected and the district itself almost void of inhabitants. The most prominent village in this vicinity is Jezreel, though its modern name is Zerin. It is a miserable place at the present time, containing not more than twenty or thirty houses of a tumble-down character. Yet upon this spot once stood the magnificent palace of King Ahab and the queenly murderess, Jezebel, and three successive monarchies reigned here. We are instinctively reminded of that tale of robbery and bloodshed when the king meanly coveted Naboth's vineyard, which lay in the plain below the palace-crowned height, and when the crafty and cruel queen bribed the witnesses to accuse Nabot of blasphemy, and he was stoned to death. Ahab gets the vineyard, but he find Elijah the prophet at the gate, who prophesies the destruction of his house and the death of himself and his queen. 1 Kings 21. And even now, as the traveler looks down the valley of Jezreel eastward to the Jordan, he sees the road along which Jehu drove so furiously, and coming to the palace commanded Jezebel to be thrown headlong from the window. It is done, and the dogs devour her body after it has been trampled by the hoofs of Jehu's horses. And to this day multitudes of dogs prowl around the place, as if haunted by the memories of ancient bloodshed.

THE SECOND TEMPLE.—The ancient temple of Jerusalem, erected by King Solomon, excelled all the other buildings of the city in its extent and splendor and the sacred interest attached to it. David first planned its construction, encouraged thereto by the prophet Nathan, but the warrior-king was forced to leave its actual execution to his son and successor, the wise Solomon. The materials, however, were all collected in David's time, and four years after his death the grand work was begun, and in seven years completed. On Mount Moriah, where so many years before Abraham showed his wonderful faith in God by the offering of Isaac, and where in later times the angel of the Lord had stood when Jerusalem was threatened with destruction from the pestilence, was Solomon doubtless directed to lay the foundations. But this magnificent structure, after standing 423 years, was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, who carried the Jews away into captivity. After the return of the Jews from Babylon the second temple was begun, in the year B. C. 534, and dedicated nineteen years afterward. When the foundations of the temple were laid "the people," writes Ezra, "shouted for joy; but many of the Levites who had seen the first house wept with a loud voice." This building suffered much for two centuries before the Christian era, but was rebuilt with great splendor in Herod the Great's time.

BETHANY ("House of dates. Mark 11 : 1).—A village on the south-east side of the Mount of Olives, about two miles from Jerusalem. It was the residence of Lazarus and his sisters. John 11 : 1. Christ often resorted thither, especially during the last few days of his ministry, and it was the scene of the most interesting events of his life. "And he left them, and went out of the city into Bethany; and he lodged there." Matt. 21 : 17. "And Jesus entered into Jerusalem, and into the temple; and when he had looked round about upon all things, and now the eventide was come, he went out unto Bethany with the twelve." Mark 11 : 11. "And being in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper, as he sat at meat there came a woman, having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard, very precious; and she brake the box, and poured it on his head." Mark 14 : 3. Bethany is now called El Azariyêh, the "city of Lazarus." It is in a hollow surrounded with olive, almond, pomegranate, oak and carob trees. The buildings are ruinous and wretched. The house where Lazarus dwelt is pointed out as a square tower, very ancient.

WALLS OF JERICHO (Num. 22 : 1).—Jericho, one of the oldest cities in the Holy Land, was situated in the tribe of Benjamin, about twenty miles from Jerusalem and two from the river Jordan. This or some place in its vicinity is called "the city of palm trees" (Deut. 34 : 3), perhaps from the abundant growth of palm trees in that neighborhood. The word Jericho may be from Jerah, the moon, and the worship of the moon may have prevailed there.

This city, which was next in size to Jerusalem, was besieged and subdued by the Israelites immediately after the passage of the Jordan, and after it had been reconnoitered by the Jewish spies. The siege was conducted under the divine direction, and at a given signal, by the immediate interposition of miraculous power, the walls fell flat to the earth, probably destroying many lives and throwing the citizens into universal consternation. The Israelites marched directly to the heart of the city, and, obedient to the express commands of God, they put to death every living creature except Rahab and her family, because she had hid the two men sent as spies from the camp of Israel. The city was then set on fire; everything in it, except the vessels of gold, silver, brass and iron which were previously removed, was burnt to ashes, and the very site of it was cursed, verifying God's holy will.



LEBANON FROM THE SEA.—In the central ridge of Lebanon there is a vast recess some eight miles in diameter. In its centre, on a group of little knolls, stands the grove of cedars. Stately and solitary, with not another tree or bush in sight, they are monarchs of all they survey, "kings of the vegetable world," so called. Solomon's great wisdom was bounded in its height, on the one side, by "the cedar tree that is in Lebanon." Seen from a distance, they cause a feeling of disappointment, looking like specks on the mountain-side. But as one stands among them, and gazes at the graceful forms of the younger trees with their fan-like branches, and contrasts them with the immense gnarled trunks of the older members of the family—when one thinks of the generations of men who have stood in their shade, the pilgrims who have come from the ends of the earth to pray at their feet—the most sacred feelings of the heart are aroused. The vandalism of visitors, however, would seem to predominate over the more pious feelings. Everywhere on the branches and trunks of the trees the mark of the spoiler is seen. It might seem as if all the jackknives of the world had been cutting and carving on Lebanon; and as the natives find a good supply of firewood here, it would not be safe to prophesy a long continuance for these sacred trees. The balsamic odor of these cedars is alluded to in Hos. 14 : 6; Sol. Song 4 : 11.

JORDAN VALLEY.—The beautiful valley of the Jordan is from four to six (and some say ten) miles wide. The average breadth of the current, as given by different travelers, varies from sixty to one hundred feet. It is, however, very rapid, and rolls a vast body of water into the Dead Sea. The waters of the Jordan are turbid, but when drawn off become clear and bright, pleasant to the taste, and remarkable for the length of time during which they will retain their freshness. Its real source is now said to be the fountain Hasbany, which bubbles up from the bottom of a shallowish pool. The little streamlet has first a flow of about three miles through the valley, then for six or seven it rushes through a dark defile and loses itself in a marsh. The length of the marsh is not short of ten miles, and the termination of the increased volume of waters is in the Lake Huleh. In its course it has received two or three considerable streams, such as the Banias and tell, ere it expands into Lake Merom; its length is nearly 160 miles. "Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him." Matt. 3: 13.

MOUNT CALVARY ("skull," called Golgotha).—"And when they were come to the place which is called Calvary, there they crucified him, and the malefactors, one on the right hand and the other on the left." Luke 13: 33. "And he, bearing his cross, went forth into a place called the place of a skull, which is called in the Hebrew, Gólgotha." John 19: 17. "And Pilate wrote a title, and put it on the cross. And the writing was, JESUS OF NAZARETH THE KING OF THE JEWS." John 19: 19. Calvary was the name given to a slight elevation north of the ancient city of Jerusalem, perhaps half a mile distant from the temple. This hill is nearly a bare rock, and probably has not changed its shape for many centuries. The spot now so called is within the walls of the modern city. It was called Golgotha, or "the place of a skull," either from its shape, or from the circumstance that it was the usual place of executing criminals. The first of these opinions is the more likely. A splendid church has been built over the supposed site of the cross and the sepulchre. The building is vast and irregular, as it is intended to cover so many important scenes and events. The scenes of Calvary, as detailed by the evangelists, are full of interest to every genuine disciple.

JOPPA.—This place is famous in New Testament history as being the residence of Simon the tanner, in whose house by the seaside Peter tarried many days. On the flat roof of the house, overlooking the western sea where its white waves fret against the rocks and shoals of the narrow harbor, the apostle saw that wonderful vision which taught him not to call any man "common or unclean," but to believe that the gates of the kingdom of heaven were open to the nations far beyond the sea upon which he was gazing. Here, too, dwelt Dorcas, "full of good works and almsdeeds," whose death the disciples bewailed so bitterly, and who was miraculously restored to life by the apostle. This place is traditionally the oldest city in the world, for Pliny says it existed before the Flood, and even historically it is a place of very great antiquity. Its modern name is Jaffa, or Yaffa, and it is situated on a sandy promontory jutting out from the eastern coast of the Mediterranean Sea, being chiefly remarkable for its trade in fruit, and for being a point where travelers disembark to pursue their journey inland to Jerusalem. It has, in reality, no respectable harbor, and many a time steamers have to pass it without being able to land mails or passengers. It is a town the view of which is best appreciated at a distance, so far as pleasure is concerned. It contains from four to five thousand inhabitants, of which seven hundred are Christians.
